Mr. ASHURST. On Saturday, Mr. President, I was uncertain as to whether this appropriation was intended to be a gratuity out of the Treasury or out of certain Indian funds. I have since learned that it is not to be appropriated out of Indian funds, but ought to be simply a gratuity. Therefore I am very heartily in favor of the amendment to the amendment which has been proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is in the Montana items, on pages 34, 35, 36, and part of 37—passed over at the request of Mr. MYERS.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, before we take up the Montana items I should like at this time to offer an amendment on page 27, after the numerals in line 17. I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, line 17, after the numerals "$10,000," it is proposed to insert the following:

Including the construction and equipment of necessary buildings on lands set aside by the State of Florida by act of its legislature for the perpetual use of said Indians: Provided, That the $8,000 appropriated by the act of March 2, 1917 (39 Stats. L., p. 976), for the relief, civilization, and education of the Seminole Indians in Florida, or such part thereof as may be available for the purpose, may also be used for construction or equipment of necessary buildings on the lands aforesaid.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in explanation of that amendment I wish, first, to say that it does not increase the appropriation, but is simply designed to make it available. I will ask the Secretary to read a short justification in support of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

JUSTIFICATION.

In order properly to carry out the intent of Congress for the relief, civilization, and education of the Seminole Indians in Florida certain school and agency buildings are absolutely essential.

The Comptroller of the Treasury has decided (copy of decision attached) that no existing appropriation can legally be used for such buildings on land the title to which is in the State of Florida without specific authorization by Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I wonder if the chairman of the committee will not be willing now to submit what I understand to be a committee amendment on page 71, in the items relating to appropriations for South Dakota?

Mr. ASHURST. I think I know something concerning the amendment, and, so far as I now know, I am very heartily in favor of it; but I rather think it will not be in order until the committee amendments have been disposed of.

Mr. STERLING. I am simply suggesting that the committee now propose the amendment before taking up the other amendment, which I understand may take considerable time.

Mr. ASHURST. Does the Senator refer to the proposed amendment on page 71?

Mr. STERLING. Yes, sir.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator have his amendment read?

Mr. STERLING. Yes; I send it to the desk and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 71, at the end of line 6, it is proposed to insert the following:

That the sum of $2,801.50, being the unexpended balance of the sum of $5,000 appropriated by the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917," approved May 18, 1916, as a proportionate share of the cost of constructing a wagon road or highway through the Standing Rock Indian Reservation in Corson County, S. Dak., be, and the same is hereby, reappropriated for the purpose of such construction: Provided, That such sum shall be available until expended, and that the same shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in such manner and at such times as he may deem proper in the employment of Indian labor for the construction of such highway, and that the same shall be reimbursable from the Standing Rock Reservation 3 per cent fund under the act of February 14, 1913 (37 Stat. L., p. 675).

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the committee has reported the amendment and authorized the chairman or some other member of the committee to offer it as a committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota offer the amendment?

Mr. STERLING. I understand it is offered as a committee amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. It is.

Mr. STERLING. It is offered as a committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRONNA. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to an amendment on page 80, which was authorized by the committee on Saturday. I refer to an amendment to come in on page 80, line 2, to provide a small per capita payment to the Menominee Indians. I think the Senator from Arizona has the amendment, and I should like to have it disposed of.

Mr. ASHURST. It is true, as the Senator from North Dakota says, that the Committee on Indian Affairs held a meeting and authorized the chairman of the committee or some other member thereof to propose as a committee amendment the following: After the word "Tribe," in line 2, page 80, strike out the colon and insert a comma and the following:

A per capita payment of $50 to be made immediately after the passage of this act to each member of said tribe and the remainder of the share of each Indian to be deposited to his or her credit.

Mr. President, if that amendment should be adopted, then the language of the entire provision respecting the withdrawal of Menominee funds would be the same as in last year's bill. I now offer the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 80, line 2, after the word "Tribe," it is proposed to insert:

A per capita payment of $50 to be made immediately after the passage of this act to each member of said tribe and the remainder of the share of each Indian to be deposited to his or her credit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. On page 66, after line 4, I propose an amendment, and I send to the desk a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in support of it. It provides for adding $15,000 out of the Chickasaw funds to the school at Tishomingo.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is it a committee amendment?

Mr. OWEN. No; I thought the committee amendments had been disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendments are first in order and have not been disposed of. The Senator will please withhold his amendment for a few moments. The Secretary will state the next committee amendment passed over.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is in the North Carolina items, all of lines 6 to 25, on page 43, and lines 1 to 4, on page 44.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, are we now to proceed with the North Carolina items? If so, I should like to know why were the Montana items passed over?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair misunderstood the request of the Senator from Arizona. Without objection, the Montana items will be considered next.

The SECRETARY. The items referred to are on pages 34, 35, 36, and part of 37.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gore	Kirby	Nugent
Bankhead	Gronna	Knox	Overman
Beckham	Hale	Lodge	Owen
Borah	Henderson	McCumber	Page
Chamberlain	James	McKellar	Phelan
Colt	Johnson, Cal.	McNary	Poindexter
Curtis	Johnson, S. Dak.	Martin	Reed
Fall	Jones, Wash.	Myers	Robinson
Fletcher	Kellogg	Nelson	Shafroth
Frelinghuysen	Kendrick	New	Sheppard
Gallinger	King	Norris	Sherman

Smith, Ariz.	Swanson	Vardaman	Williams
Smith, Ga.	Thomas	Wadsworth	Wolcott
Smoot	Tillman	Walsh
Sterling	Trammell	Warren
Sutherland	Underwood	Watson

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Secretary will state the next committee amendment passed over.

The SECRETARY. The first amendment in the Montana items is, on page 35, after line 10, to strike out:

For continuing construction of the irrigation systems on the Flathead Indian Reservation, in Montana, $750,000 (reimbursable), which shall be immediately available and remain available until expended.

And insert:

For continuing construction, maintenance, and operation of the irrigation systems on the Flathead Indian Reservation, in Montana, $250,000 (reimbursable), which shall be immediately available and remain available until expended.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out "$250,000," in line 17, page 35, and inserting "$500,000," and upon that I wish to be heard.

As the reading of the committee amendment discloses, it is intended to be the annual appropriation for the continuation of the work on the Flathead reclamation project, on the Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana. The appropriation for that purpose for the year 1916 was $750,000; the appropriation for the year 1917 again was $750,000, and for the appropriation this year the department made an estimate again of $750,000. That amount was put in the bill by the House Committee on Indian Affairs, in which this bill originated, and which reported the bill to the House, and the House passed the bill with that amount in it—$750,000. It came to the Senate, and the Senate committee reduced the amount to $250,000, and I wish to state what I consider some very urgent and cogent reasons why the amount should be increased at least to $500,000. I earnestly ask the attention of the Senators who are present to the reasons which I shall state. I will try not to make my remarks occupy an undue length of time. I simply want to cover the ground as well as I can without consuming too much time, and to state my reasons and urge the Senate to regard them favorably.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. I yield, with pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. For the purpose of acquainting myself with the facts in this case, I will ask the Senator how much money has been expended on this project up to the present time?

Mr. MYERS. I will tell the Senator; I have the figures here.

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator has not the figures at hand I can give them to the Senator.

Mr. MYERS. I have them right here. If I am not correct, I would be glad to be corrected by the Senator from Kansas. There has been appropriated for this project, up to this time, according to the latest report of the Reclamation Service, the sum of $3,318,372. Has the Senator any further question to ask?

Mr. GALLINGER. One further question. How large an area is it in contemplation to irrigate?

Mr. MYERS. About 140,000 acres.

Mr. GALLINGER. And how much has been irrigated up to the present time, if the Senator pleases?

Mr. MYERS. About 80,000 acres have been put under the project and are ready for irrigation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Do the Indians control that or are white people interested in it to some extent?

Mr. MYERS. Neither one controls it. It is divided between Indians and whites, the Indians having allotted to them a little more of the area than is occupied by the white homesteaders; but, of course, it is controlled by Congress and the Reclamation Service.

Mr. GALLINGER. The matter that has always interested me—and therefore I have taken occasion to ask Senators like the Senator from Montana who know about these things, whereas I do not claim to know much about them——

Mr. MYERS. I am always glad to afford any information I can.

Mr. GALLINGER (continuing). Is the question as to how much development the Indians are showing in the matter of agriculture.

Mr. MYERS. They are developing slowly and steadily; some of them are taking to farming. A few Indians are taking hold of it successfully and in good manner. More are leasing their land. A large proportion of them, I admit, have not yet put it to use. If they will not farm, however, that should not be allowed to hold back the project and work an injustice to the innocent white homesteaders.

Mr. GALLINGER. I gleaned from some source, a little while ago, the suggestion that the white men were leasing these lands from the Indians——

Mr. MYERS. They are, to some extent.

Mr. GALLINGER (continuing). And getting the benefit of the irrigation.

Mr. MYERS. The lands of the Indians are subject to lease, and some of them have been leased and in that way cultivated and put to a useful purpose. More of their lands have been leased than have been farmed by the Indians themselves, I believe the facts show. However, if whites lease Indian lands, they cultivate them, put them to a useful purpose, and the Indians get the rentals.

Mr. GALLINGER. I thank the Senator for answering my question.

Mr. MYERS. I am glad to afford any information possible.

Mr. President, I contend that this is a subject which is vitally connected with our successful prosecution of the great war in which we are engaged. It was so regarded by members of the House Committee on Indian Affairs. It is so regarded by the Interior Department and the Indian Bureau, both of which concurred in recommending an appropriation of $750,000 for the project for the coming year. I insist most earnestly that it is vitally connected with and is a vital factor in the prosecution of this most tremendous undertaking of our national existence, the great war which we are waging in Europe. I shall try to show this beyond any doubt. These are most momentous times; this is a most important subject. Everything connected with the prosecution of this war is of boundless importance to the American people; and I shall try to show to the Senate that this proposition is connected most intimately with the successful prosecution of the war.

I shall try not to be too long. I shall try to be reasonably concise in my remarks; and I would like to have the earnest and careful attention of such Senators as are in the Chamber to the reasons which I shall submit, because I believe I can talk some reason to you and give you some facts and figures; I believe I can talk some sense to you, and that, if you will listen, what I may say will be bound to commend itself to your favorable consideration.

As I said, the departmental estimate for this purpose was $750,000 again this year, just as it was last year and the year before. I have no doub, that most of the Senators are well acquainted with the way in which these estimates are made. Of course, all of those who serve on committees which handle appropriation bills are thoroughly familiar with the procedure through which these appropriations pass in order to get before Congress; but for the benefit of those not on such committees and who have not given particular attention to the subject, I want to give a brief résumé of the history of such an appropriation as this.

These appropriations for governmental purposes must originate with the appropriate department of the Government; that is, in order to stand any chance of favorable consideration at the hands of Congress it is almost absolutely necessary for such a matter to have an estimate of a department back of it. The way this annual appropriation is handled is this:

The Reclamation Service makes out an estimate of what it will need for this project for the ensuing fiscal year—what it ought to have in order to reasonably prosecute the work. Then, when the Reclamation Service makes out that estimate and asks for what it wants and thinks it ought to have, the figures are submitted to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, because this is on an Indian reservation and comes under his direct supervision. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs and his assistant take the figures furnished by the Reclamation Service, and if they think they are justifiable they approve them; if not, they cut them down and say that only a part of the sum asked should be appropriated. They make their recommendation to the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary of the Interior then passes on the figures furnished by the Indian Bureau, and he has the privilege of paring them down and saying that too much has been asked. The Secretary of the Interior when he makes up his annual estimate of what his department should have for the different branches of its work makes his formal estimate and sends it to the Secretary of the Treasury. The latter official must have it in his hands immediately after the 15th of October. According to law, the Secretary of the Interior must make his estimate not later than the 15th day of October, and he sends it to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. MYERS. With pleasure.

Mr. OWEN. Did the Reclamation Service call for $750,000?

Mr. MYERS. It did.

Mr. OWEN. Did the Commissioner of Indian Affairs ask for that sum?

Mr. MYERS. He did.

Mr. OWEN. Did the Secretary of the Interior estimate for it?

Mr. MYERS. He did. I am going to go right down the line and show who has asked for this.

The Secretary of the Interior turns his estimate in to the Secretary of the Treasury. The latter official takes all the estimates of all the departments and puts them together, and has the privilege of pruning, revising, and readjusting them. He can cut out any item or reduce any estimate as he may see fit. He puts them all together, when in shape to suit him, and sends them to the Speaker of the House of Representatives by the first Monday in December. The Speaker segregates the estimates and sends each of them to the appropriate committee, which, under the rules of the House, has the privilege of passing on it. This particular appropriation he sends to the chairman of the House Committee on Indian Affairs. The chairman of that committee lays it before the committee. The House committee decides whether or not it will put in the bill the amount asked. Then, of course, the bill is framed and introduced by the chairman of the committee and referred back to the committee, and the committee considers it and reports it out to the House.

Those are the steps that an appropriation of this kind has to go through, and the facts in this case are these——

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana further yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. MYERS. I do, with pleasure.

Mr. OWEN. Did the Indian Affairs Committee consider this item in the House?

Mr. MYERS. Yes.

Mr. OWEN. Did they approve it?

Mr. MYERS. They did.

Mr. OWEN. Why is it now reduced?

Mr. MYERS. I will get to that in a minute.

Mr. OWEN. That is what I want to know.

Mr. MYERS. It seems to me to have been the result of a very sudden spasm of unjust and unaccountable economy. That is all I can say about it. The members of the committee themselves, I suppose, can give their reasons, but this particular appropriation has now had this career:

Last August the Chief of the Reclamation Service made out a statement to the Indian Bureau, saying that for this project he needed and wanted and ought to have for the coming year the sum of $750,000. The Commissioner and the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs took that application for that amount of money and put their stamp of approval on it, and said that this project ought to have, for the coming year, $750,000. They passed it on to the Secretary of the Interior. He reviewed it and put the stamp of his approval on it, and said that he wanted this project for the coming year to have $750,000, just as it did last year and the year before. He put that amount in his estimate. He sent it to the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury had the power of reducing it if he thought it too much. He virtually put the stamp of his approval on it by passing it on to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, with the recommendation that $750,000 be allowed. The Speaker sent it to the House Committee on Indian Affairs. That committee considered it and approved the sum and put into the bill $750,000, just what had been asked by all of the departmental officials. The bill was reported out of committee to the House, and the House passed the bill with $750,000 in it.

Thus, what have we up to this time? We have the Reclamation Service, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of the Treasury, the House Committee on Indian Affairs, and the House of Representatives all granting $750,000 this year for this project. It came to the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, before which I had the honor of presenting it, and after much debate and deliberation that committee reduced the amount to $250,000.

I can not understand why it did so, except that it appears to me to have been on account of a sudden and unexplainable streak of economy—the plea to reduce all appropriations to as low a figure as possible. This sudden streak of economy on the part of the Senate committee was very surprising to me, because every agency of the Government which up to that time had passed on the item had recommended $750,000.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. MYERS. I yield, with pleasure.

Mr. OWEN. Can not the Senator state what were the reasons alleged?

Mr. MYERS. Yes.

Mr. OWEN. And what the answer is to those alleged reasons?

Mr. MYERS. Yes; with pleasure.

In the first place, a lot of what I call disgruntled Indians came down here and appeared before the committee and made a fight on the appropriation; said it was not fair to the Indians and said the Indians did not want it; and I say they stated to the committee a lot of things that were not true. They said that the large majority of white homesteaders did not want this project to go ahead and that all of the Indians wanted it abandoned. There were no homesteaders here to speak from their viewpoint. None were heard, except by petition. A lot of telegrams and petitions for the appropriation and remonstrances against the statements of the Indians were received and presented to the committee. The Indians were here in person, however, claiming to represent all of the Indians on the reservation and opposing the appropriation.

Furthermore, some of the members of the committee contended that on account of the war in which we are engaged all reclamation projects should be cut down to the very lowest possible figure. The contention was advanced that they all should be cut down to just simply the amount of money necessary to keep the canals, the ditches, and the construction work heretofore done from deteriorating and going backward, just to keep the status as it is now and keep things intact, and to do no more construction work until the war is over; and then, some of them said, resume construction work after the war.

That is diametrically opposed to the idea of the Indian Bureau, the Interior Department, the House Committee on Indian Affairs, and the House of Representatives. I think we are in greater need than ever before of a liberal appropriation for a project of this kind. We have on our hands the most gigantic undertaking that has ever confronted any people on the face of the earth since the beginning of time, and that is the winning of this awful war against the central powers of Europe; and we not only need men and munitions with which to win that war, but we need food supplies for our own people, for our soldiers in Europe, and for the soldiers of our associates in this war, who are fighting our battles with us. We must have food for the winning of this war. To undertake to fight this war without an adequate supply of food would be just as futile and useless as to undertake to fight it without an adequate supply of ammunition.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. MYERS. With pleasure.

Mr. KING. Apropos of the last observation submitted by the Senator from Montana, I want to suggest this thought to him, which, however, is in opposition to the position which he is now taking:

My information is that in the West—and I know it is true in my State—large areas that heretofore have been cultivated, and upon which agricultural crops have been grown in great abundance, will not be planted this year; and, of course, if the war is continued next year, will not be planted then, because of the scarcity of labor. It looks as if we will be compelled to take from the agricultural districts of the United States not thousands but hundreds of thousands and millions of men. I am inclined to think that the Senators to-day, if they had the opportunity, would vote for drafting at the earliest possible moment from two to five million more men. Now, if more men are taken—and they will be—there will be more fields uncultivated, unplowed; and it occurred to me as a member of the committee, and it occurs to me now, notwithstanding the able argument of the Senator, that it would be unwise to attempt to bring larger areas of land under cultivation now, because if we do get them so they are susceptible of cultivation we will not have the labor for the growing of crops.

I repeat, in my own State I know that there are large tracts of land that heretofore have yielded abundantly that will not be put into crops at all this year. Labor was so scarce last year that we could not gather all the crops that we grew. In the State of Idaho hundreds of thousands of bushels of potatoes rotted in the ground because there was no labor with which to dig potatoes. It seems to me that it would be unwise to divert the small amount of labor that we now have from absolutely imperative employment and put it upon unfinished projects—projects which can not be completed under one, two, or three years, and in the case of which, if completed, there will be no labor to devote to the irrigation of the land and the growing of crops.

Mr. MYERS. What would the Senator do? Does he think that the less land that is put in crops the better?

Mr. KING. No.

Mr. MYERS. What would he do—just submit without an effort to a decreased area of cultivation?

Mr. KING. No. If the Senator will pardon me, I think that the land now under cultivation will be more than we can take care of, and that any augmentation of the acreage will not increase the crops, and it will take from the fields of labor men that could be advantageously employed in things that are imperatively required to work upon reservoirs and canals which it will take years to complete, and in the case of which, when completed, there will be no men to till the soil until long after this war is over.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, the information which the Senator gives about his State, according to my understanding, does not apply to Montana. The advices that I get from Montana are that the people there are preparing to put a larger area in crops than they did last year, a larger area than ever before; and the people on the Flathead Reservation, under this reclamation project, are planning and intending, if they can get water, to put in larger crops than ever before. The people there are desperately in earnest. They are willing for the women and the children to go into the fields and help raise crops with which to fight our battles in Europe if they can only get water to put on the land.

As far as the cultivation of crops is concerned, I realize that the scarcity of labor, as the Senator from Utah says, is a serious factor; but, in my opinion, we will have to resort to many things in this country before this war is over which we do not now seriously contemplate. In my opinion, before this war is over women will have to go into the fields and do the work of men, just as women by the thousands in industrial enterprises and factories and shops and on railroads in Great Britain are now doing the work of men. We will have to send women and children into the fields in order to raise crops in this country. We will have, possibly, to take young men out of college, and boys out of school, in order to till the soil and raise the crops in order that those who fight for us may have food, and may continue to fight, and fight effectively.

A gentleman who arrived in Washington the other day told me that as he was coming through the State of Ohio he saw, as he looked from the car window, a man plowing in a field, breaking up a field with a double team and plow, and right behind him, following him, was a woman with another team and plow, turning under just as much soil as was the man. I do not believe that the people of Ohio are more patriotic or energetic or determined than the people of the rest of the country upon an average. I hope not. I am sure they are no more so than the people of Montana; and we must raise the food. We must produce the food in some way. Before the close of the war we may have to conscript people to work in the fields. I believe that it probably will be a long war, lasting several years yet, and that we shall need to bring under cultivation many acres that are not now cultivated in order to supply our troops and those of our associates with adequate food supplies.

I want to give utterance now, in a systematic way, to a few facts about this project.

It was authorized and started by act of Congress about nine years ago. The Flathead Indian Reservation was thrown open to allotment to Indians and to settlement by homesteaders on the unallotted land about 10 or 11 years ago. The Indians were given the first choice of the land. They were allowed to take their allotments first, thus giving them the choice of the land, which I think was right. Then the balance which was not taken by them in their allotments was thrown open to a form of homestead entry—sale really at the appraised value of the land; most of it at not less than $1 nor more than $7 per acre on 10 years' time, and that time has since been extended to 20 years. The reclamation project, putting water on the land by the Reclamation Service, was authorized and work began about nine years ago, and it should have been completed long ago. It would have been economy, wisdom, and business sense to have completed it long ago.

The irrigable area of this reservation comprises about 140,000 acres. About four-sevenths of it is comprised of Indian allotments. The other three-sevenths was thrown open to sale and entry to homesteaders. Thus the Indians have a little more than half of the irrigable land. There have been about 47,500 acres entered by homesteaders. The Indian allotments amount to 81,375 acres. There are 11,000 acres of State land and 900 acres of privately owned land. There has been up to this time water provided for 80,300 acres. The area yet to be covered by water is 59,700 acres. Thus about four-sevenths of the land has been covered by water—that is, water has been provided for it—and about three-sevenths of the area must yet be provided with water. Therefore the project is a little more than half completed. Of the 80,300 acres for which water has been provided the officials of the Reclamation Service state that about fifty or sixty thousand acres are Indian allotments. The water was put on the Indian allotments first, so the Indians could have no ground for complaining that the project was being finished for the benefit of the white settlers in preference to the Indians.

The intention, the idea of the Reclamation Service, was to provide water for the Indians first, and give them the first opportunity; and, as I said in response to a question by the esteemed Senator from New Hampshire a little while ago, the Indians are slow about taking up actual cultivation of the land. As a rule, they are not farmers. They must be educated up to the point of farming and cultivating their land. They are slow about it, but each year they are taking more and more to it. Some of them are cultivating their lands now. Others are leasing their lands to men who do cultivate them; and the hope and belief is that year by year more Indians will become actual farmers, and thus become self-supporting and valuable citizens and contribute to the support of their Government.

When the project was thrown open it was divided into irrigable and nonirrigable land. Some of it was not suitable for irrigation. It was on high bench lands and hillsides where water could not be easily put, and it was more suitable for grazing. There the units of allotment to the Indians are 160 acres. The irrigable part of the project, down in the lowlands, which it is intended to cover with water, or which have already been covered with water, was divided into units which average something more than 40 acres. They run from 40 to 80 acres, according to the nature of the land and the location. The Indians were allowed to take their allotments either of irrigable land or of grazing and nonirrigable land. They were allowed their choice. Some took grazing land, and they will not be subjected to one cent of cost on account of the project. Other Indians took irrigable land, and of course will have their lands covered by water and will have their share of the cost of the project charged to their land.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRAMMELL in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. OWEN. Will it interrupt the Senator if I ask how many acres were actually cultivated last year?

Mr. MYERS. Eighteen thousand two hundred and forty acres under the project.

Mr. OWEN. Eighteen thousand acres that could be supplied with water?

Mr. MYERS. Yes; 18,240 acres were supplied with water and cultivated by irrigation.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. MYERS. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Oklahoma asked the Senator from Montana how many acres were cultivated. The Senator answered, as I understood him, that there were 18,000 under the project——

Mr. MYERS. Cultivated. I say 18,240 acres were irrigated and cultivated.

Mr. KING. Were there crops raised upon that 18,240 acres?

Mr. MYERS. Yes; the report of the Reclamation Service so shows.

Mr. KING. I know one reservation in my State in which the Indians are interested and the Government flowed a large amount of water primarily for the purpose of holding title, because, as the Senator knows, unless they use the water they may lose it by abandonment or alleged abandonment. I know that in the instance to which I referred the land was not cultivated. Water was just scattered over the land.

Mr. MYERS. That is not the case here.

Mr. KING. I was wondering if this is in actual cultivation.

Mr. MYERS. It is.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. MYERS. I yield, with pleasure.

Mr. CURTIS. I know the Senator has no desire to make a misstatement. The records show that for the year 1917 only 969 acres were farmed by the Indians.

Mr. MYERS. I have not stated how many acres were farmed by the Indians. I gave the total.

Mr. CURTIS. I want to give the total, as the Senator made a mistake about the amount farmed.

In 1917 only 1,700 acres were farmed by lessees. According to a list furnished me by the department only 2,548 acres were farmed by white settlers.

There was an increase of acreage cultivated after the last report, as testified to by the Chief of the Reclamation Service.

Mr. MYERS. I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to the nineteenth line on page 370 of the sixteenth annual report of the Reclamation Service for 1916 and 1917, which says:

Area under water rental application, season of 1917, to June 30, 18,240 acres.

I have the authority of the Reclamation Service in its official report, and that is all I can give.

Mr. CURTIS. I hold in my hand the statement sent to me by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and furnished as I was informed by the Reclamation Service. This was sent me during the hearings on the Indian bill. Here is the sheet. I do not know which is right.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. MYERS. With pleasure.

Mr. KING. I think there is a good deal of distinction between water under rental and land actually cultivated. I can conceive that individuals might rent water for 100 acres or a thousand acres and actually cultivate only a few acres. The statement read by the Senator from Montana, from the report now in his hands, indicated water rental rather than land actually cultivated. So the Senator from Montana may be right and the Senator from Kansas may be right, the latter stating that only two or three thousand acres, possibly 4,000 acres, were cultivated, and the Senator from Montana stating that there were 18,000 acres of water rental.

Mr. MYERS. Does the Senator from Utah think in the hard times that have existed on this project, with settlers struggling with might and main to make ends meet and to make payments on their lands, they would pay rental for water on land that was not used? Does the Senator think that is reasonable?

Mr. KING. Perhaps the same plan or an analogous one is pursued here as that in the case to which I referred in the State of Utah. I know upon Indian lands a large number of white people went and a man would actually farm only a few acres but would turn water out upon a large area. Doubtless he paid a small rental for the water.

Mr. MYERS. That was not the case here. Mr. Bien, of the Reclamation Service, who was before the Senate committee, testified, according to my recollection, that 18,000 acres were actually cultivated. I think I can find it in his testimony. It is on page 318 of the Senate hearings on this bill. Mr. Morris Bien, of the Reclamation Service, testified as follows:

On account of the large spread of the project, and also because of the first policy adopted by Congress to reach the land of the Indians, the work was quite scattered. The idea was to reach as many of the Indian allotments as possible, so that a large territory was covered for the purpose of delivering water to those Indian lands where the owners desired to irrigate. So there has been invested a considerable sum of money, amounting to somewhere in the neighborhood of two million and a half dollars, to get the water to places where it could be used. The result has been a gradual increase in the area that could be irrigated from the system as constructed.

In 1910 and 1911 we began with 10,000 acres to which water could be furnished. That increased from year to year until now over 80,000 acres can be furnished with water from the existing system.

Senator MYERS. You say 80,000 acres can be furnished now?

Mr. BIEN. Yes, sir—80,300 acres. In the annual report of the Reclamation Service that has just been issued, on page 373, there is a statement of the acreage irrigated each year. That began with 2,191 acres—

I ask the Senator to observe this testimony. He says here:

there is a statement of the land irrigated each year. That began with 2,191 acres and increased to 6,400 acres in 1914; then it diminished in 1915 and 1916 to between 3,000 and a fraction the first year, 1915, and 4,000 or a ittle more in 1916.

Senator NUGENT. Six thousand four hundred when?

Mr. BIEN. Six thousand four hundred and sixteen in 1914. For 1917 our annual report, which has just been issued, made an estimate from the appearances early that year as 4,200 acres, due to the fact that up to that time the applications for water were coming in very slowly. However, as the season advanced, the rainfall which was expected did not materialize, the streams were very dry, and the people rushed in to get water, so that nearly 16,000 acres were brought under irrigation.

Senator CURTIS. When was that?

Mr. BIEN. Last year: in the middle of the year.

Senator CURTIS. In the middle of 1917?

Mr. BIEN. Yes, sir.

Senator CURTIS. How many thousand acres did you say?

Mr. BIEN. Nearly 16,000.

Senator GRONNA. Do you mean by that that they were under cultivation?

Mr. BIEN. Under irrigated cultivation, and crops being raised. That was actual acreage for which we had crop reports.

I ask the Senator's attention to that. By the middle of the growing season of 1917, Mr. Bien says 16,000 acres were under irrigated cultivation on which crops were being raised; that that was the actual acreage for which he had crop reports. That is as strong testimony as I can give. I can not give any better. The official reports of the Reclamation Service show that in 1916 the area under the project under actual irrigation and cultivation was 4,373 acres, and that in 1917 it leaped to 18,240 acres, showing a tremendous increase, thus showing the increased interest in and the growing success of the project. As I have said, the most of that area, by far the greater part of it, was cultivated by white homesteaders. The Indians have the more land under water, but they do not take to farming so readily, but their interest is increasing. With 18,240 acres actually cultivated last year, as against 4,373 the year before, I am assured there will be an equal increase this year if the work will only be allowed to go on. I am assured that the white homesteaders will put in crops every acre of their land under water and will cultivate far more than was cultivated last year.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure to my colleague.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Kansas whether the figures he has given the Senate can be made to harmonize with the testimony of Mr. Bien?

Mr. CURTIS. I understood that the explanation was made in this way: The figures were for the year 1917. After the war was declared the Commissioner of Indian Affairs got busy and secured leases on two or three thousand more acres during the summer and fall. I asked Mr. Bien to explain the difference, and my recollection is that that was the explanation—that the land was leased after the middle of 1917, and these reports are supposed to be made about June 1. These figures, however, were presented while the bill was being considered by the Senate committee. I asked for an official report, and I have here the official report I received in response to my request.

Mr. MYERS. I have read here Mr. Bien's testimony before the committee, which says that up to the middle of the crop season for 1917 there were 16,000 acres under irrigated cultivation for which the reclamation officials had crop reports. I have read from the official report of the Reclamation Service for 1916–17, which says the total area for the season 1917 under water-rental applications was 18,240 acres. So, if there was water used or paid for on any area of land which was not actually used on the land, as the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] seems to think might have been the case, it could only have been the difference between 18,240 acres and 16,000 acres for which Mr. Bien said they had crop reports. This is the official report, and that is all that I can go by. I will resume the data which I was giving.

There has been appropriated up to this time for the project the sum of $3,318,372. About four-sevenths of the project has been completed; about three-sevenths remains to be completed. To complete the project there will have to be expended yet about $2,750,000, quite a little less than has already been expended. To expend the $2,750,000 necessary to complete the project at the rate of $250,000 a year would take 11 years, when they have been working already about 9 years on the project. That would make a total of 20 years to put water on this land. How manifestly and grossly unjust that would be to the settlers, the homesteaders, who, with their families, were induced by the Government to go there and enter that land and put in their time and services and labor and expend their earnings and savings, their all, under the expectation, a reasonable expectation, that the Government would complete this project within a reasonable time! They bought the land at the Government's figures; they paid the appraised price for the land; they went there and put improvements on the land; they put in their time and labor preparing it for cultivation. Their families put in their services. They undertook to make their homes there. The land is practically worthless without irrigation. The most of it will not raise enough for seed for the next year without irrigation.

These people were invited to come there from the East and other sections of the country and to buy this land at the Government's own price, expecting to be able to cultivate the land and make money out of the land with which to pay for the land. They can not do that until water is put on the land, and they had a right to expect that water would be put on the land within a reasonable time. Yet at the present rate of procedure it will be 20 years that those people will be required to starve and struggle in the hope of establishing their homes and reclaiming farms on which they can make a living for their families. Yet if the appropriation should be continued at the rate of $750,000 a year, the rate which was established year before last, it would take only a little over three years—between three and four years—to complete this project.

I wish to refer a little to some history of the project. When this land was thrown open, it was advertised and made known by the Government that the land was arid land and that it would only produce crops successfully by irrigation. It was advertised and made known that the Government would start a reclamation project there and would put water on the land, and on those terms people were induced to go there and buy the land and undertake to cultivate it and make homes on it. They went there at the express invitation of the Government, on those terms and conditions. Yet for about seven years the Government doled out annual appropriations of $200,000, $250,000, and $300,000, the last sum being the largest that was appropriated any year during the first seven years, I believe. It was going at a rate that would have taken 40 years to complete the project.

But year before last, in 1916, the Indian Bureau and the Interior Department seemed at last to awaken to the just needs of the homesteaders that water be put on the land more expeditiously. The Interior Department made an estimate and recommended for that year an appropriation of $750,000 and the poor homesteaders took heart; they thought they saw the light of a better day coming, when the project would be pushed more speedily to completion. In 1917 their hearts were again gladdened by an appropriation of $750,000, and they took stronger hope and felt and believed that in three or four years more the project would be completed and water would be put on all the land and then they would know what the expense would be of putting water on the land, what the construction charges would be, and what would be the amount of the lien on their lands. They felt they could go to work with renewed hope and energy and complete payment on their homes and become useful citizens and help to support their Government.

But, greatly to their chagrin and disappointment, the Senate committee now takes a step backward and goes back to the old rate of about $250,000 a year, which, as I said, will yet take 11 years more to complete this project, and the homesteaders are desperately disheartened and discouraged, and naturally so.

I claim that there is no business sense in proceeding at that rate to complete this project. If a man is going to build a business block that is to cost $40,000, there would be no business sense or judgment in putting $500 a year into the building and taking 80 years to complete it. He would rush it to completion as rapidly as he could, even if he had to borrow the money with which to do it, in order that the building might be occupied or rented, and might bring in some revenue and serve the purpose for which it was erected.

I claim that the same business principles apply to this project, and unless we go ahead with due diligence and complete the project within a reasonable time, I claim we are doing a gross injustice to the white homesteaders and as well to the Indians on the reservation.

The plan of the project is that the Indians are allotted a certain amount of land per capita. Then the rest of the land is sold to homestead entrymen. They are to pay the appraised price. That price goes to the Indians. The whites pay for putting the water on their land—the white mans' land—in addition to the price of the land. The money realized from the sale of the land is to go to the Indians. Now, the homesteaders can not pay for their land, they can not meet their payments, until they can make it out of the land. They can not make it out of the land until water is put on the land, and the longer this is delayed the longer the Indians are going to be kept out of their money.

If the water is speedily put on the land, so the homesteaders can raise crops on their land, the sooner they can pay for their land and the Indians will get their money the sooner. It would be justice to both homesteaders and Indians to complete the project as soon as possible, in order that the homesteaders may pay for their lands and the Indians may get their money the sooner.

I claim there is no justification for killing this project by a slow process of strangulation. It should be either rushed rapidly to completion or totally abandoned. Now, an appropriation of $250,000 per year is doing neither. It is not doing justice to anybody. It is not rushing the project speedily to completion and it is not killing it; it is just drawing out the agony, extending the suspense, and preventing the homesteaders from being able to make a living and paying for their land, and it is keeping the Indians out of their money. Furthermore, the overhead expense is far greater when construction proceeds slowly than when it is rapid.

Something was said before the committee about the project being unfair to the Indians. I thought that was all settled. The first few years after this project was started the principal opposition came from the Indian Bureau, on the ground that the provisions of the law were not fair to the Indians, in that the law held the lands of the Indians for the cost of putting the water on the white man's land. There was a show of reason in that contention, and the Indian Bureau held back the project for a long time by refusing to make liberal estimates for the construction work. But we finally got that all adjusted. We adopted, about three years ago, an amendment to the law which overcame every objection which the Indian Bureau had, and we adopted further amendments to the law year before last which I thought overcame every objection which had been advanced by any member of the committee or by the Indians themselves. The way the law now is, those Indians who have grazing lands—nonirrigable lands—above the project can not have their lands held at all for one cent of the cost of this project. Their lands are free from the cost of the project. As to the lands which are under the project, the cost of putting the water on the land of the Indians is a lien on the land of the Indians and the cost of putting water on the land of the white homesteaders is a lien on the land of the white homesteaders. I consider that entirely fair, and under the terms of the law as it now exists there is no possibility by which any Indian having land under this project could lose his land or have it taken away from him for the cost of putting water even on his own land. The cost of putting water on the lands of the whites must be paid for by the whites in annual installments covering a period of not to exceed 20 years from the time that they entered the land. They pay for putting the water on their land. The cost of putting the water on the land of the Indian allotments which are under the project becomes, it is true, a lien on the Indian land, but there is no provision of law for enforcing it or taking the land away from the Indians.

The lien on Indian land can only be enforced in this way: The Indians are to get large amounts of money from the sale of land to homesteaders and from the sale of the timber and from grazing permits and leasing. All that money goes into the tribal funds of the Indians, and in time there will be a large amount of money to the credit of the Indians, and in time it will be proper to distribute that money to the Indians as they become competent to manage their affairs. Then when an Indian who has an irrigated piece of land becomes competent and wants his share of the tribal fund the cost of putting the water on his land will be held out of his share. For instance, if the cost of putting the water on his land is $2,000 and there is $4,000 coming to him there will be $2,000 held out on account of the lien and $2,000 in cash will be paid to him.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask the Senator if he knows what the policy is going to be toward those Indians to whom patents in fee have just been issued, whether there will be any attempt to enforce the lien against their land now that a patent in fee has been issued?

Mr. MYERS. There is no provision in the law for taking their land away from them. There is a lien on it for the cost of putting the water on it. If they sell their land, the man who buys it must pay to the Government the cost of putting the water on the land and the balance to the Indian, and when an Indian's share of the tribal funds is to be turned over to him the cost of putting the water on the land is to be held out and, of course, the balance is to be paid to him.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator said the cost of the project was a lien on the land if the Indian sold the land on which a patent in fee had been issued.

Mr. MYERS. I understand so. When sold somebody should pay for putting the water on it.

Mr. CURTIS. Does the Senator contend that the Government has a right to put a lien on that Indian allotment?

Mr. MYERS. I understand that the law so provides; but there is no provision for taking the land away from the Indian.

Mr. President, I contend that unless Congress makes larger appropriations than this bill provides for this project, and pushes it to a speedy conclusion, it will not be keeping faith with the homesteaders. Those men were invited to go there, and they have paid their filing fees to the Government. Some of them have made one, two, three, or more payments on their land, and the United States has their money right now. It has in its Treasury their money, which it has taken away from them on the assurance that water would be put on their land; and it was a reasonable conclusion that it would be put on the land within a reasonable time and that the project would be pushed to completion with all due diligence.

Now, would we be treating those people right if we dallied along with this matter and dragged it out over 11 years more, making 20 years, all told, for the completion of the project? I claim that it would be a violation of good faith on the part of the Government with its citizens who have entered that land.

It is true that there was something said in the committee about the necessity of reducing expenditures during war time; that we should stop these appropriations during the war; but I say the fact that we are engaged in war is no excuse for the United States Government treating its citizens unfairly or dishonestly; it is no excuse for the United States Government refusing to discharge its just obligations. Would anybody argue that an individual should not pay his debts or discharge his just obligations because the country is at war? No; that would be an absurd claim; and the same principle should apply to the United States Government. Individuals owe obligations and debts, and they are required to pay them, war or no war. The United States Government owes obligations to these homesteaders, and it should discharge them, whether we are at war or not.

I want to show the feeling of the homesteaders there to some extent: I have received a great number of telegrams, letters, and petitions from homesteaders and other people under this project urging and praying that Congress make at least the usual appropriation of $750,000 for this project. Most of these came to hand after the committee had acted and after the bill had been ordered reported out; some of them were produced before the committee and put into the hearings, but only a few of them; most of them were received after the committee had acted. Here is one which is addressed to the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs. It was received too late to be presented to the committee, but it states so conservatively, so concisely, and so reasonably the claims of the homesteaders on the project that I will read it and consider it as addressed to the Senate as well as to the Committee on Indian Affairs. It is as follows:

To the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned, residents of the Flathead Reservation, Mont., being both white and Indian, also of mixed blood, holding homesteads and allotments, and resident professional and business men of Ronan, Mont., on said reservation, would respectfully protest against any change in policy on the part of the Senate respecting the completion of the Flathead irrigation system, and urge that the amount of money necesssary for the completion and extension of same for the year 1918 be not less than $750,000.

In support of this protest we desire to call your attention to certain pertinent facts in connection therewith, to wit:

1. That those who came here and homesteaded the land described and known as farm units, the same being lands under the surveys of the said reclamation project, were given to understand by and on the part of the United States that said homesteads were to be irrigated by said system, and, as many of said farm units comprise only 40 acres, and the vast majority being of only 80 acres, a great injustice would result should said project be now abandoned or even temporarily retarded. The good faith of the Government with the homesteader is at stake.

2. The past year has demonstrated for all time to come that no assurance can be placed on the ability of the farmer to successfully grow crops unless his lands be under said irrigation system, as all crops not irrigated during 1917, except isolated fields of winter wheat, were practically total failures, and that irrigated fields gave profitable yields of grains and grasses.

3. That the value of the lands depends upon the acreages which are or can be irrigated. The farm units and the allotments under the system find a ready market at a price per acre entirely unexpected by even the most optimistic, while, on the other hand, homesteads and allotments not susceptible to irrigation have little or no market value.

4. That in so far as so much money has been heretofore expended in the construction of said system, and the same being so nearly completed, the remaining additional cost should not be allowed to practically render worthless all that has been expended. This part alone should be a sufficient reason for continuing the work and the appropriation of the sum of $750,000 for the current year.

5. Indian allotments have increased in value in the same ratio as farm units, while it is a fact that many of them are still in the virgin state, unplowed and untilled. Sales of such lands held by and under authority of the Indian Bureau will fully corroborate this statement. Therefore the mere statement of a few discontented souls should have no weight as against the record facts referred to under this subdivision.

6. The paid agents of Victor J. Evans, the Washington attorney of certain Flathead Indians and a few Indians with allotments adjacent to the Mission Range of mountains, which some years do not need irrigation, are responsible for all the agitation against the completion of said irrigation system. Were it not for the mercenary reasons attached to their efforts there would not have been nor would there be any Indian delegates appearing before your committee endeavoring to destroy the real reason for all the prosperity this reservation now enjoys or is to enjoy in the years to come.

7. To stop now means that your committee would destroy 90 per cent of our chances to produce annually millions of bushels of wheat, an article the United States at this time stands in dire need of. It means that we will not be permitted to do our share in winning the war, whether it be won this year or some years to come.

Therefore we pray you to keep faith with our people, help us to aid you in winning the war, give us the money to complete the project, and we will do our share.

I received many such petitions which came too late to be presented to the committee, as well as many letters and telegrams on the same subject which were too late. Many of them were heartrending in the extreme, showing the dire need and desperation of these people—the trouble in their souls—growing out of the efforts to retard them in their desire to get what is their right and due from the Government which they are loyally supporting. The petition which I have read was signed by large numbers of homesteaders. I received one petition signed by scores of Indian allottees. It was read before the committee and put into the hearings.

Indian as well as white homesteaders are pleading and praying and urging that Congress proceed in the way in which it started out year before last for a speedy completion of this project. I will say that until last year there never had been a particle of opposition to this project from the Indians. Last year the first opposition from the Indians that was ever heard of cropped out and made itself known. Up to that time I had traveled often over the project; I had met delegations of Indians and many individual Indians, and not one Indian up to the year before last had ever raised his voice or uttered a syllable against this project and its speedy completion. On the contrary, delegations of Flathead Indians had met me at Missoula, Mont; they had waited on me time after time and year after year and had urged that I procure the speedy completion of this project. They seemed to understand it; they said they could not get their money until the white man could pay for his land; and that the white man could not pay for his land until he got water on it and could raise crops.

All this talk about the white homesteaders not wanting the water, being opposed to it, is nonsense; it is untruthful; there is not a word of truth in it. I have traveled extensively over that project, and I know that the white homesteaders who have not yet had water put on their lands are in the direst distress and are begging and urging and pleading and praying for the early completion of the project.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield merely for a question?

Mr. MYERS. With pleasure.

Mr. KING. If the project is not completed and the appropriation provided by the committee is expended, will it not properly take care of the settlers out there, give them all the water they require, and enable them to obtain title to their lands and make their homes, as they would do if the project were completed?

Mr. MYERS. No; not at all. They can not make a living there unless they can get water on the land. They will starve. It is pathetic to go there and see a man who has been starving and struggling for nine years on a piece of land without water on it.

Mr. KING. I understood, if the Senator will pardon me, that water was available there for 80,000 acres of land.

Mr. MYERS. Yes; out of 140,000 acres, and mostly on Indian allottments.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator from Montana state that there are more than 80,000 acres actually taken up by settlers?

Mr. MYERS. Practically all of the 140,000 acres are allotted to Indians or taken by homesteaders. I doubt if there is a tract to-day subject to homestead entry that is not taken. Many homesteaders have not yet had water put on their lands, because the Indians were given preference.

Mr. KING. And are settlers there?

Mr. MYERS. The settlers are mostly there, and most of them have been waiting for nine long years, hoping against hope that their Government would keep its word with them; that it would do justice by them, and would give them just and fair treatment. There are only about 80,000 acres for which water has been provided, and there are 60,000 acres for which water has not been provided. There are scores and scores of homesteaders who have tracts of land on which water has not been placed, but who have been waiting for water for nine long years, who are in desperate straits.

Some of them have been compelled to abandon their homesteads and walk out and carry their possessions on their backs, nail up their shacks and houses, and to nail up with them every hope they ever had of fair dealing from their Government, and go out into the world and hunt jobs at day's labor. Some of those men put $5,000 into their homesteads—all they had—and invested on the faith of the promise that their Government, after taking their money, would put water on the land in order that they might make a living. It has not yet been done, as to some, and they have lost their $5,000, all they had in the world, their lifetime savings. I repeat, they have put as much as $5,000 into dwelling houses, barns, and fences, and into the ploughing of land, and into teams and implements, and improvements, and yet they find that their Government has broken faith with them and turned them out into the cold world without a dollar.

Some of them have had to go to work, to hire out for day's wages to dig ditches, to work on railroads and the construction of dams nearby and on water-power plants, and at anything they could get to do in order to make a living. Some have had to leave the country altogether, and their whereabouts are now unknown.

Referring to the Indians, I say that up to year before last there was never heard from them a word against this project; but year before last a man of Indian mixed blood, one George Wasson, from Oregon, who is not a Flathead Indian and has no allotment there, who has not one iota of interest in the Flathead Tribe or in the Flathead project, and has no right to any interest there, appeared down here on the ground—mind you, a man from Oregon, not even a Flathead, who has no right or interest on the Flathead Indian Reservation—came down here with about 8 or 10 Flathead Indians, whose expenses were all paid down here. Most of them were old, decrepit chiefs, who knew nothing about irrigation or farming. I think there were 8 or 10 of them, all told, with Wasson, whom I consider a mischief maker and meddler in this matter, for he has no interest in it. They appeared before the committee and made a terrific assault on this project. They said that the land was better off without water than with it; that much of the land was too wet and needed draining instead of irrigating, and that the people on the project did not generally want water put on the land. It was disclosed in the course of the hearing that Wasson and all the others who were down here had had their expenses paid to come by one Victor J. Evans, an attorney of Washington; that Wasson was in his employ; that he had been hired by Evans, and had spent three months on the Flathead Reservation working up opposition to the project.

But that year they arrived here too late; they miscalculated their time; the bill had been reported to the Senate with $750,000 in it for the project. It passed the Senate, and the project got that amount last year.

This year there appeared another delegation of Indians—about six or eight of them—led by Wasson, who admitted under examination that he was still in the employ of Victor J. Evans, and again they opposed any appropriation for the project. From the time that Wasson appeared here year before last dates all the opposition from the Indians to this project. I do not think it is a legitimate opposition.

I will hurry on and will not speak much longer. I do not wish to tire the Senators. I will read another communication which was sent to me from people of the Flathead project, which sets forth some additional facts:

CONDITIONS ON FLATHEAD PROJECT.

In the year 1917, 20 per cent of the 80,000 acres under ditch was irrigated and possibly 5 per cent more, or 25 per cent in all, would have been irrigated if a full water supply had been available.

On the project there are four tracts, aggregating approximately 23,000 acres, on which construction was started last year, but which, because of the great increase of labor and material, it was impossible to complete. Crops in these districts were a total failure without irrigation. If money is available for construction early this spring, water can be made available for all of this land very early in the crop season. The districts are Moiese, Little Bitter Root Valley, Horte, and Valley View, and a small tract near Tabor.

In the past few months the project office has received petitions and delegations representing about 7,500 acres of land asking for irrigation on their lands because farming without irrigation was a failure. These delegations represented three widely different areas on which no construction has been done.

There were 567 farms irrigated in 1917, comprising a total of 16,000 acres, an average of 28 acres apiece. One hundred and thirty-two more applied for water. As stated above, more water would have been used had it been available, and this increase would have consisted in an increase in the amount irrigated by each farmer as well as supplying these other applicants. Additional construction will make more water available, and this construction waits on additional appropriation.

Two-thirds of the work done last year was on the aforementioned tracts on which work was not completed, and therefore two-thirds of the amount spent last year will have gone for naught unless more money is appropriated.

In Polson seepage conditions, while improving, are not satisfactory and considerable detriment has been caused to the town. A new appropriation will furnish additional money to remove this blemish.

Mr. President, we are engaged in the most desperate war of all history. We must have food for the conduct of this war. I do not care how we are to get it; I do not care how we are to get the supply of labor; we must have the labor and we must have the food. If the women have to quit their households, if the young men have to quit the colleges, and the boys and girls have to quit the schools, we have to have labor on the farms and we have to raise crops or else we can not win this war. I say that Germany already has the war half won. She has won her way halfway to victory. When the war opened there was powerful opposition to Germany both on the east and the west. Every vestige of opposition on the east has been removed and conquered; there is not one shred of it left. The opposition remaining is on the western side, and Germany is making the most superhuman, the most supreme, the most powerful and determined effort that ever was made by any set of people on God's earth to win the remaining half of the war by the most terrific onslaught on our forces on the western front, and the outlook to-day is serious.

The administration says we must have food; all who know conditions say we must have food. The settlers on this project are willing to put their women and children to work and raise more food if you will only give them the water for which they are begging and pleading and praying day and night. Here is a chance to increase the food production of the country by millions of bushels of wheat this very year of our Lord nineteen hundred and eighteen. Give these people an appropriation of at least $500,000 and they will respond nobly and loyally, I know, with a largely increased crop of food products. They are willing; they are ready; they have everything but the water. Will you give them the water? If so, they will increase our food crop this year; they will increase it next year; they will increase it each and every year until this war shall have been won, as it must be won beyond any doubt and at all hazards.

I do not believe that the benefit of the increased food production would be confined to this year; I do not believe this war is going to be ended in a day nor in a year; I believe it will continue several years, probably as many as five years, and we will need the wheat that can be grown on every acre of this land which is capable of producing crops. If only the water can be supplied, that will be done. In this connection I will read an editorial from the Washington Post under date of Wednesday, February 27, 1918:

INCREASED FOOD PRODUCTION NECESSARY.

It is a serious question whether the United States Government is not neglecting one of the most important precautions that could be taken by a nation at war—the adequate production of food.

The war is to go on. Germany's increased strength resulting from the betrayal of Russia by the bolsheviki means that the enemy will not make peace on any terms acceptable to the allies. Chancellor von Hertling's speech in the Reichstag this week was the most cynical utterance yet made by the German populicides. Under the thin coating of phrases regarding universal peace principles appears the ravenous and murderous policy that is working its will in Russia. Only the other day the German Emperor declared in so many words that peace would not come until Germany's enemies acknowledged Germany's victory.

Since it is not in the nature of the French, British, or American peoples to submit to the loss of liberty, the war will go to the bitter end. One side or the other must succumb to the fatal hammering of war.

The enemy is not in such sore stress for food as he has been. There is a great scarcity, but not a famine, and the prospect of obtaining essential food from Russia is solidifying into a certainty. The blockade of Germary does not starve the enemy now that he has conquered fertile regions and forced the native populations to perform agricultural labor.

The actual status of affairs at the beginning of 1918 is that Germany has improved her food prospects, while the food prospects of the allies have not improved. A comparatively slight increase of wheat acreage has been planted in the United States, but this is more than offset by the steady diminution of food production in France and England in spite of the heroic efforts of the populations, particularly the women.

There is no occasion for despondency in scrutinizing this situation, provided the Governments concerned take prompt and adequate measures to increase production. Nature is not against them. There is an abundance of land and an abundance of muscle, at any rate in the United States. The territory owned and temporarily controlled by the central empires, counting all the newly gained Russian territory, is less than one-third of the area of the United States. The potential productivity of that part of Europe under the black flag and the potential productivity of the United States, acre for acre and man for man, presents a comparison vastly in favor of the United States.

But there is a great difference between potential and actual productivity. Under the German system the enemy territories occupied by the Hun are cultivated by slave and prisoner labor under conditions more arduous than Americans have ever dreamed of.

There is frequently a willingness to neglect or disguise this bedrock truth: that the world is running short of food and will face famine conditions in a year or two as things are going. What is gained by neglecting this truth? What miracle is expected to happen? Is the enemy to change his nature and forego his advantage? If not, it is suicidal folly for the allied nations to ignore the food conditions and fail to improve them. The civilized world would cut a sorry figure, indeed, if, after several more years of heroic fighting it should pass under the black flag because of its failure to raise enough food to maintain resistance.

Increased production of food is the urgent necessity. Mere conservation of what is on hand and in sight is not enough. More acres must go under the plow and more harvest hands must be provided. Tractors should be liberally employed. The schools throughout the United States should lend their capable boys and girls to the farms to aid in the raising and harvesting of the crops There should be an organized transfer of suitable manhood and womanhood from the cities to the farms during this spring and summer.

This problem has been barely considered by the Government. Congress has neglected it. Yet it underlies all the other problems of the war. There will be no arms for soldiers, nor will soldiers go to Europe, nor will ships be built to carry them if the United States does not produce sufficient food.

Can you resist that appeal for food for our cause? There is sound sense in that article; and here are people on the Flathead Reservation ready and willing to produce more food if you will only keep your promise to them, only give them water and enable them to do so.

I read another editorial from the Washington Post of Tuesday, March 19, 1918:

FOOD CONDITIONS IN FRANCE.

In his address at Baltimore last night M. Andre Tardieu, French high commissioner, revealed many important facts which Americans should know. Whether the enemy is comforted by these facts or not, it is absolutely necessary that the people of the United States should not deceive themselves as to conditions in France. The first step toward giving effective aid is to know that aid is imperatively needed.

France has always been a heavy consumer of wheat. The consumption before the war was about 700,000 tons per month. It has now been cut to about 530,000 tons, a reduction of about 25 per cent. The ration of soldiers at the front has actually been cut down, although the heaviest cut has been made, of course, in the civilian ration. The French soldier now gets 21 ounces of bread instead of the 25 ounces he received at the beginning of the year. The civilian ration has been cut from the normal consumption of about 30 ounces to only 10 ounces.

In order to make even these rations available France has been compelled to stop brewing in order to save barley and to stop feeding of cereals to animals. This has resulted in a loss of 50 per cent of the horses and a large reduction in the number of cattle. Pastry making, fancy bread, confectionery, sandwiches, and all fancy uses of cereals have been absolutely suppressed.

Because of the shortage of cereals the French people have been compelled to kill off their cattle, and this has forced the consumption of meat instead of wheat to a large extent. In the meantime the consumption of other foods, such as sugar, rice, vegetables, oils, and fats, has been reduced by dire necessity.

This drastic food régime has been borne with fortitude by the French people at a time when they have mobilized 7,000,000 men out of a population of 35,000,000 and have suffered a loss of nearly 1,000,000 men killed and 1,000,000 maimed.

Do Americans realize the full force of this information from the French commissioner? Do the citizens of this country individually feel that they are doing everything that in their duty lies to aid the lion-hearted ally that now holds two-thirds of the western front? Is each American thinking of the help that he might be giving to some heroic French soldier at the front or an equally heroic French woman doing a man's work in France?

France needs no cargoes of faith or courage from the New World. She needs no messages telling her to do her duty. She is not in need of sermons on patriotism. But she does need food. If Americans are heart and soul in this war, they will not see the army and people of France go hungry while there is food in the United States to share with them.

There must be fresh efforts in producing, saving, and transporting food to France. Americans must strive to picture the real conditions. They must sweep aside imaginary visions of easy victories over an intimidated and broken-down foe and face the brutal fact that America and France, with their allies, are fighting for life against a terrible enemy. France is on the burning line, side by side with the British nation, fighting with dauntless courage. American soldiers are joining them in rapidly increasing numbers. All of these fighters must be fed and equipped. The civilian populations that supply the armies must be fed.

The United States is not doing its full duty in the production and delivery of food to the allies. More acres should be planted and more strict methods of saving should be adopted forthwith. By the convoy system fewer vessels laden with food are lost than heretofore, which is a most encouraging factor. There is fair assurance that every vessel carrying food will arrive in France or England.

There must be more vessels carrying food. It is the vital necessity of the situation, the trumpet call to every individual citizen of the United States. Every person can help, either by planting or by saving. Not to help is to incur terrible risk now and hereafter.

Can Senators resist that touching plea to produce more food and thereby respond to the distressing cry of our noble associate in this war—France—for more food for her soldiers? Is it in your hearts not to hearken to that pitiful, soul-stirring plea for more food for the gallant French soldiers?

It was said some time ago that the motto of this war on our part should be "Ships, ships, ships." I would add to it "Food, food, food." Here is an appeal that I do not think should be denied or resisted by anybody who has the welfare of his country at heart. It is in your power to respond to this appeal, to provide an increased production of food by voting a liberal appropriation to this object and thus heartening and encouraging the people of the Flathead project to put in every acre available, every acre for which water is supplied, and to raise the biggest crop that they have ever raised in the history of the project. They are ready to do their share. Will you do your share?

As I have said, the Indian Bureau, the Reclamation Service, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of the Treasury, the House Indian Affairs Committee, and the House of Representatives have all asked for $750,000 for this project for this year. The Senate committee allowed only $250,000. I have made a motion to increase that amount to just $500,000. I have not made my motion to increase it to the amount originally asked for by all departments of the Government that are concerned—$750,000. I ask just to split the difference between what the Senate committee gave and what the House of Representatives gave. The House of Representatives gave $750,000. The Senate committee gave $250,000. I ask you, in the name of the suffering people on this project, in the name of American citizenship, in the name of our associates who are fighting in France for our lives and rights, in the name of all of this, just to go half way, just to split the difference and give this project $500,000 this year. I believe it is a most reasonable request, a most just one. I believe that it ought to be granted. I believe there are good reasons for it; and if you have listened to my arguments and appeals I believe you will see that there is reason and justice in them.

I have nothing to say against the committee. I have much to say against its action, but nothing against the members of the committee. Doubtless the committee did what it thought was right; but I have presented to you facts, figures, arguments, and reasons which I believe ought to be persuasive and ought to convince you that the committee did not take the right view of the matter. Therefore I certainly hope that the Senate will sustain my motion to raise this amount to $500,000. It ought to be $750,000. That pace was set year before last. There was every reason to hope and believe that it would be kept up until the project was completed; but I do ask you, in the name of justice, right, and the cause of our country, to give $500,000 for this purpose. I urge that you do that much. I urge that my motion be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I inquire if the chairman of the committee expects to get a final vote on the bill this evening?

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, Mr. President, there is no hope of getting a final vote on the bill this evening, because there are other contested items.

Mr. WALSH. Then, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that these items may go over until to-morrow. I should like very much to have a vote on them and also to address the Senate very briefly on them, but I feel obliged to leave the Chamber now. I had supposed that possibly we would get a vote before this time.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. ASHURST. If no other Senator wishes to discuss the bill or any of the amendments relating to it now, I feel constrained to move to adjourn.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the request, Mr. President.

Mr. ASHURST. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 26, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 25, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Bend low, O God, our Heavenly Father, and throw Thy protecting arms about us. Hold us close to Thee, lest we forget, in the terrible crisis through which the world is passing, the past, which is replete with the evidence that Thy providence has shaped and guided the destiny of men and of nations, and ever led them on to larger, grander civilization; that our faith and confidence in Thee may not be diminished one jot or tittle, for Thou dost live and reign, and time will vindicate Thy wisdom, power, and goodness.

Hear us, comfort, uphold, and sustain us, in this hour of trial, in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, March 23, 1918, was read and approved.

HOUSE RENTS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to read a short letter to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to read a short letter to the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I should have said that I do not desire to read any names nor the location of the premises referred to. This letter is dated March 22, and is addressed to me:

DEAR SIR: The other day in speaking in the House you were reported in the papers to have cited the "Blank" case, but there was one feature of the case which I believe you did not mention and perhaps you did not know.

The facts as related here in the neighborhood are said to be: The former tenant was paying $40 per month. He was ousted, and the house furnished and rented to 16 girls, 2 in a room, at $10.50 each per month. That much I guess you already know, but the joke of the matter is that Mr. "Blank," or some one, has a sign on the front door naming the place the Merah, which, you will observe, is backward—the Harem. I wonder—Oh, well, what's the use? You go ahead and wonder.

I can vouch for the sign. I saw it not an hour ago. The rest is hearsay.

I don't want my name known, because I am a civil-service employee and mustn't talk.

Sincerely, yours, ——— ———.

This letter is signed, giving the street and number where the writer resides.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 117) amending the act of July 2, 1909, governing the holding of civil-service examinations.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 121. An act to prevent the desecration of the flag of the United States, and to provide punishment therefor;

S. 3528. An act authorizing the President during the existing war to sell war supplies, materials, and equipment heretofore or hereafter purchased, acquired, or manufactured by the United States;

S. 3693. An act to prescribe the personnel of the Army Nurse Corps, the qualifications for appointment and the method of appointment therein, the pay, allowances, and leave of absence of members of said corps, and the conditions under which they may be retired;

S. 3863. An act to provide quarters or commutation thereof to commissioned officers in certain cases;

S. 3980. An act to prevent interference with the use of homing pigeons by the United States, to provide a penalty for such interference, and for other purposes;

S. 988. An act providing for the payment of certain interest on items 1 and 4 of the judgment of the Court of Claims of May 18, 1905, in favor of the Cherokee Nation;

S. 3803. An act authorizing the President during the existing emergency to sell supplies, materials, equipment, or other property heretofore or hereafter purchased, acquired, or manufactured by the United States in connection with or incidental to the prosecution of the war;

S. 3801. An act to amend section 8 of "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917;

S. 3736. An act to provide for the payment of six months' pay to the widow, children, or other designated dependent relatives of any officer and enlisted man of the Regular Army whose death results from wounds or disease not the result of his own misconduct;

S. 4166. An act to amend section 3 of an act of Congress approved February 23, 1887 (vol. 24, Stats. L., ch. 210, p. 409), entitled "An act to provide for the execution of the provisions of article 2 of the treaty concluded between the United States of America and the Emperor of China on the 17th day of November, 1880, and proclaimed by the President of the United States on the 5th day of October, 1881";

S. 3691. An act to provide for reimbursement of actual expenses or flat per diem for enlisted men of the Army traveling on duty under competent orders; and

S. 3982. An act to suspend certain restrictions on the purchase and distribution of military stores and supplies, and for other purposes.

ADDITIONAL SECRETARIES OF WAR.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9352) creating two additional Secretaries of War, and that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and request a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 9352) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for an Assistant Secretary of War, approved March 5, 1890, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. I ask unanimous consent that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. DENT, Mr. FIELDS, and Mr. KAHN.

WITHDRAWAL OF A MOTION.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the motion previously made by me to discharge the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures from further consideration of House bill 2878.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to withdraw the motion previously made by him to discharge the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures from further consideration of House bill 2878. Is there objection?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire of the gentleman why he introduced the resolution? It stirred up considerable of a muss.

Mr. TILSON. The bill is all right. It should be considered by the gentleman's committee, which should not be discharged from consideration of it. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the motion, although I do not anticipate that there is any danger of the motion being granted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

OREGON AND CALIFORNIA GRANT LANDS OPEN TO ENTRY.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. In 1916 Congress enacted legislation disposing of certain lands which were formerly a part of the Oregon and California land grant in Oregon. Since that time many Members of the House have inquired of me when these lands would be listed for entry. The act of June 6, 1916 (39 Stats., 218) required the Department of the Interior to make the necessary examinations to determine the agricultural areas and to cruise the timber on the land. They have completed now a large proportion of that work. On March 23, last Saturday, the department opened 300,000 acres of this land to homestead entry. Filings may be made beginning on the 20th of April and ending on the 25th of May. Persons interested may obtain, after April 5, from the land office at Roseburg, Oreg., a description of the particular areas so opened and the regulations under which the land may be entered. All entries will be considered to have been made simultaneously, and those living near the land will not have any advantage of anyone living at some distance from the land. If two or more persons make entry for the same tract, a drawing will be held to determine which one shall be entitled to the tract.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing the statement furnished me by the Interior Department.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. These lands are to be entered at what price?

Mr. HAWLEY. At the price stated in the act, the basic price of $2.50 an acre, but all they need to pay at first is 50 cents per acre and the ordinary filing fees.

Mr. CANNON. What are these lands worth for the timber?

Mr. HAWLEY. These are agricultural lands, not timber lands.

Mr. CANNON. Agricultural lands?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; 300,000 acres of agricultural lands.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Office of the Secretary, March 23, 1918.

Secretary Lane, of the Department of the Interior, has just approved regulations opening to entry under the homestead laws, as modified by the act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat., 218), about 300,000 acres of land classified as agricultural, situated principally in Jackson and Josephine Counties in southern Oregon. These lands are a portion of what are commonly known as the Oregon and California Railroad land grants, title to which was resumed by the Government under the act of June 9, 1916. The agricultural lands opened to entry at this time are by no means all of the agricultural lands in the grant. Additional agricultural lands in the grant will be restored to entry from time to time as the classifications are completed.

The classification as agricultural does not necessarily imply that the lands are suitable for the plow. The law under which the classification was made directed that such lands be separated into three classes: First, those valuable for power sites; second, timber lands, including those containing 300,000 feet, board measure, of timber to a tract of 40 acres; third, agricultural lands, those not falling within either of the other two classes. Large areas so restored are covered with brush or varying quantities of timber less than 300,000 feet, board measure, to the 40-acre subdivisions, and some are valuable only for grazing.

Applications to enter any of the lands thus restored may be filed by any duly qualified person for a unit of 160 acres or less in the United States land office at Roseburg, Oreg., at any time during the period beginning April 29 and ending May 25. All applications filed during this period will be considered as filed simultaneously. Persons filing at or near the end of the period will have the same opportunity as those who file at the beginning. In case of conflicting applications for the same land, a drawing will be held on May 28 to determine the successful applicants.

Applications to enter must be sworn to before the register or receiver of the United States land office at Roseburg, Oreg., or before a United States commissioner or judge or clerk of a court of record within the county in which the land is situated. Each application must be accompanied by the required land-office fees, together with an amount equal to 50 cents per acre to apply on the total purchase price of $2.50 per acre, the balance of $2 to be paid at time of final proof. Applicants must personally examine the land.

Any person who served for more than 90 days in the United States Army or Navy during the Civil War, Spanish-American War, or the Philippine insurrection, and was honorably discharged, may file a soldier's or sailor's declaratory statement through an attorney in fact on the ground and make his application to enter within six months thereafter, but such declaratory statement must be accompanied by the fee of $3 and the installment of purchase price required of other applicants.

A pamphlet containing the regulations and a list of the lands, with a brief description thereof, will be mailed after April 5 to those requesting same from the register and receiver of the United States land office at Roseburg, Oreg.

Mr. RUCKER. Can the gentleman give us approximately the value of these lands for agricultural purposes? Can he give us some idea of the value?

Mr. HAWLEY. If a tract of 160 acres contains less than 1,200,000 feet of timber, board measure, it is classed as agricultural land. Doubtless there will be a number of quarter sections which have nearly the limit of timber upon them, and such lands will have an agricultural value when the timber is removed. The timber also covers only a portion of each quarter section. The other quarter sections will be agricultural lands, and some of the land will be very valuable for agriculture and some will not be so valuable. It varies so much from locality to locality that it is impossible to make any statement as to average values.

ALIENS NOT QUALIFIED VOTERS IN OREGON.

While I am on my feet I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter from the Hon. George M. Brown, attorney general of Oregon, replying to a statement made on the floor of the House to the effect that aliens may vote in the State of Oregon and quoting the statute in regard to the matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the opinion of the attorney general on the subject stated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

STATE OF OREGON,
LEGAL DEPARTMENT,
Salem, March 12, 1918.

Hon. W. C. HAWLEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have observed a press dispatch of the 11th instant from Washington to the effect that enemy aliens would be denied the right to vote for President, Vice President, Senators, or Representatives in the 10 States where they now enjoy that privilege under provisions of a bill introduced to-day by Representative FLOOD, of Virginia, chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee. The article states that "after declaring intention to become citizens aliens may vote in Alabama, Arkansas, Indiana, Kansas, Michigan, Missouri, Oregon, South Dakota, and Texas."

This is an error so far as applied to the State of Oregon, and an error that I have been called upon to correct a number of times since the declaration of war.

Section 2 of article 2 of the constitution of the State of Oregon was submitted to the people of this State at the election held November 13, 1914, and was amended to read as follows:

"In all elections not otherwise provided for by this constitution every citizen of the United States, of the age of 21 years and upward, who shall have resided in the State during the six months immediately preceding such election shall be entitled to vote."

There were 164,897 votes cast for the article as amended and 39,847 against.

Prior to that time section 2 of article 2 of the constitution, before it was amended, extending the right of suffrage to women, read as follows:

"In all elections not otherwise provided for by this constitution every white male citizen of the United States, of the age 21 years and upward, who shall have resided in the State during the six months immediately preceding such election, and every white male of foreign birth, of the age of 21 years and upward, who shall have resided in the United States one year and shall have resided in this State during the six months immediately preceding such election and shall have declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States one year preceding such election, conformably to the laws of the United States on the subject of naturalization, shall be entitled to vote at all elections authorized by law."

At the election of November 5, 1912, said section was amended so as to admit of woman's suffrage, and read as follows:

"In all elections not otherwise provided for by this constitution every citizen of the United States, of the age of 21 years and upward, who shall have resided in the State during the six months immediately preceding such election, and every person of foreign birth of the age of 21 years and upward, who shall have resided in this State during the six months immediately preceding such election and shall have declared his or her intention to become a citizen of the United States one year preceding such election, conformably to the laws of the United States on the subject of naturalization, shall be entitled to vote at all elections authorized by law."

Very truly, yours,

GEO. M. BROWN,
Attorney General.

HOUSE RENT IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, I hand to the Clerk's desk a letter, with my answer thereto, to be read in my time for the benefit of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read, without objection.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

I wish to file the following answer to a charge of cruel behavior as a "would-be profiteer" preferred against me by Chairman JOHNSON on the floor of the House yesterday, said charge based on a communication he had received from a former tenant of mine.

In the first place, let me state that the house in question is 521 Rock Creek Church Road: that it is the only house I own in the District of Columbia; that it was built for my own private home; and that I occupied it until I had occasion to leave the city, at which time I stored my furniture and placed my house on the market for rent. Mr. De Pue rented my house unfurnished in April, 1915, at a time when there was but little demand for houses, and he only paid me $40 per month for a nine-room, semidetached house, with all the latest modern improvements, a house which I could not build to sell to-day under $9,000. Mr. De Pue had the advantage of this low rent for a period of over two and one-half years at this price. When the situation for houses became acute I was persuaded by Mrs. E. L. Hollis, of New York City, to furnish my house in such a manner as to comfortably accommodate 14 to 16 ladies. The house is now occupied by the following ladies:

These ladies inform me that they are paying the rent on a cooperative basis at an average cost of $10.71 each per month, and they further inform me that their salaries are $1,100 and $1,200 a year each. They have also expressed their willingness and their desire to be interviewed on this matter as to the fairness of the rental charges, and I rest my case on the testimony they may give.

In regard to the charges made by Mr. De Pue, I will state that when I decided to make the change I gave Mr. De Pue the regular 30-day notice, upon receipt of which he came to my office and in the presence of a witness made certain threatening and abusive statements to the effect that he would not move; that he had employed a good attorney; and that he was sure I would not get him out under six months; and that he would give me all the trouble he could. He made no mention of any old lady or any member of his family who was not able to move.

Finally, in defense of these charges preferred against me, I respectfully urge that you have a committee appointed to interview these ladies, and I am willing to abide by their testimony.

I was born in a log cabin in the mountains of old Virginia. I have been actively engaged in general contracting and building in this city for the past 14 years; and until this time I have never been accused of any transaction that was not fair and legitimate.

I think the above a fair example of what can be done under my plan of fixing rent on a per capita basis, and no hardship would be experienced by anyone.

Respectfully submitted.

GUY S. ZEPP.

MARCH 22, 1918.

Mr. GUY S. ZEPP,
Southern Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have your circular letter (without date) relative to the letter written to Mr. JOHNSON by Mr. De Pue.

I have seen the De Pue letter, and it contains four principal statements, as follows:

First. That he had rented your house at $40 a month;
Second. That you put him out, demanding more rent;
Third. That his invalid mother was put out with him; and Fourth. That you increased the rent from $40 a month to $140 a month.

Now, in your circular letter you admit all that Mr. De Pue says in his letter, except that you did not know that Mr. De Pue had an invalid mother in the house.

However, your lack of knowledge of that fact does not contradict the remaining fact that he did so have an invalid mother.

In your circular letter you say there are now 14 ladies in the house, and that the rental is divided equally among them and that each pays $10.71 per month. Fourteen ladies paying $10.71 each makes a total of $149.94 per month. Therefore the statement of Mr. De Pue understates the rental you are charging rather than overstating it, and the fact is thereby admitted by you that you have increased the rent of the house from $40 a month to $149.94 a month.

You place your emphasis upon your assertion that the house was built for your own use. From that it seems you feel that you should charge working girls more for the honor of living in a house built for yourself than if it had been built for somebody else.

In your communication you take $9,000 as the value upon which you base your rentals, while, on the other hand, the house and land are valued at $4,668.30 for taxable purposes. Therefore you value the property for rental purposes at almost double its value for taxable purposes. At the rate for which you are now renting the property the rent for three and three-fourths years would pay for house at the value at which you are giving it in to the assessor for taxable purposes.

In view of these facts, I am compelled to entertain the opinion that you have driven a hard bargain with the working girls who are now occupying your house.

Very truly, yours,

WM. J. CARY.

DELIVERY OF SOLDIERS' MAIL TO FRANCE.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, on Friday I brought to the attention of the House, not for the first time, the delays in the Postal Service to our soldiers in France. In this morning's mail comes rather an interesting illustration of the condition to which I referred. I hold in my hand two envelopes, both addressed to a major general commanding one of the divisions of the American Expeditionary Forces. One of them was postmarked in Washington December 13, and the other was postmarked in Washington December 31. Both were delivered to the addressee in France on February 24. In one case the time in transit was 73 days, and in the other case the time in transit was 52 days. The letter which transmitted the envelopes back to me required just 28 days in transit; so that the slower of the two round trips consumed 101 days from Washington back to Washington. Civilians are able to get a reply to their letters in 35 days for the round trip. Why should it take three times as long to a major general or to a private in the American Expeditionary Forces?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein a letter from the adjutant general of the State of New York showing the enlistments in our State National Guard.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INCREASED PAY FOR POSTAL EMPLOYEES.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9414) granting increased compensation to certain officials, employees, and laborers in the Post Office Department and Postal Service, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9414, with Mr. CARAWAY in the chair.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, is there an amendment pending?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending; yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I was about to inquire if the motion was not on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX].

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COX].

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, can we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. COX: Amend by striking out the following language, line 1, page 2: "after the passage of this act," and insert the words "during the fiscal year, 1919."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, is this subject to amendment at this stage?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. CANNON. Then I would like to make the pro forma amendment and be heard for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt that the pay of the postal employees ought to be increased, and I stand ready to vote for an increase. I have not had the privilege of listening to the debate upon this bill, for I have been otherwise engaged on a conference by the order of the House, so that I have not kept up with the debate. I just asked a gentleman what would be the cost of this increase, and he said from forty to fifty million dollars. I asked how many of the civil employees there were outside of the Postal Service, and he said 265,000 as against 145,000 in the Postal Service. I then asked, so far as the increase in salaries was concerned, how this bill corresponded with the other increases that we have made from time to time from one fiscal year to another. If I understood him correctly he said about double. I have not had the opportunity to investigate to see whether the increase ought to be made as reported by the Post Office Committee; but I want to say that I have a large number of these employees in my district—not as many as in the great cities, but I have a district that is 150 miles long and 25 to 30 miles wide. I think it has more railroad trackage in it than any district in the United States. There are many cities in it; one is hardly ever out of sight of an elevator stack, and it is very thoroughly organized into rural-carrier districts. I have nothing to say against the Government employees. No doubt they are worthy and perform good service. It is true that under the present wage the increased cost of living is felt very much, and in God's chancery they ought to have an increase in their pay. I am not going to discuss the question of whether this is too much or whether it is too little. I notice an amendment was agreed to in committee in effect striking out the provision that this increase was to be paid until the close of the war and that an amendment was accepted striking out the words "during the war" and inserting the word "hereafter," so as to make it permanent law.

I am going to vote against that amendment in the House, because if we make this permanent law after the war all along the line for these civil employees—and there is double the number of them outside of the postal employees—we will make a very great increase. You may say that the increase in the cost of living is because of the decrease in the purchasing power of money. In many cases money does not buy half what it did buy before, and I think probably one might well say that there has been an average advance in the cost of living of probably 20 to 25 per cent. That is not a close estimate. What is going to happen when the war closes? Congress will be in session, though I am afraid that I shall not be here—not that I have no desire for further service in Congress, but from present conditions I fear this war is going to last so long that the probabilities are three to one that I shall have crossed over and joined the great majority before its close. Now, when it is over, let us not fool ourselves. We will come back under normal conditions, competing with the world in production. We will come back to 70-cent wheat, instead of $2.50 wheat. We will come back to 7 and 8 cent a pound cotton, instead of 30 cents a pound for short staple and 40 cents for long staple. We will come back to 30 and 40 cent corn, and other things in proportion. We will come back to all the necessities of life greatly reduced in price. Now, if that is so, if I am correct about it——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes additional.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the close of five minutes, to be occupied by the gentleman from Illinois, that all debate close on this amendment.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. MADDEN. I move that all debate close on this amendment at the end of five minutes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I desire to offer a preferential amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the unanimous consent should first be disposed of. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin that the gentleman from Illinois have five minutes additional? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that at the end of five minutes all debate on the pending amendment close.

Mr. MOON. Let the gentleman from Illinois complete his speech first.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, now it will be a pretty serious matter. The committee, of which I am a member, now has a conference report that will come up for consideration, and the authorizations and appropriations in that conference report are substantially a billion one or two hundred millions—I am not exactly accurate. That can be stated a little later. Mind you, this is a deficiency for this fiscal year ending the 30th of June next, and there is another deficiency bill to follow. We are financing our allies. We are raising and preparing an Army and a Navy. Oh, none of us can conceive of the extraordinary expenditures we are making and will continue to make until this war closes. Now, as near as I can find from a little consultation, I think that this bill makes sufficient increases. It classifies the service and provides for promotions and all that kind of thing, and I believe we ought not to set an example now of taking a departure from the course which we have heretofore followed.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman know how much the bill would cost the Government, as it is now prepared, up to the 30th day of June, 1919?

Mr. CANNON. I do not——

Mr. COX. I have those figures.

Mr. CANNON. I asked a gentleman who is pretty well informed, and he said certainly from forty to fifty million dollars.

Mr. COX. I have the figures prepared by Mr. KOONS, of the Post Office Department, whom I regard as one of the best-informed men on this question, and he figures out it will cost $60,000,000 to pay this bill up to the 30th day of June, 1919. Now, another question: Does the gentleman know how much it will cost if we will pay the Post Office employees on the identical basis that we pay all Government employees as fixed in the legislative bill?

Mr. CANNON. No; I do not.

Mr. COX. As prepared for me by the Post Office Department this morning, up to June 30, 1919, it would cost $18,613,150. The difference between that figure and $60,000,000 if this bill becomes a law as it is now prepared.

Mr. CANNON. I have made up my mind not to be bound by it; but I apprehend I shall vote for this bill, provided the amendment of my good friend and colleague, for whom I have great respect, inserting the word "hereafter" is not agreed to when we come into the House. Gentlemen may say the postal employees will fight us unless we vote to made this permanent law. I do not believe the postal employees desire any greater per cent of increase than other employees of the Government receive.

Then when the day comes and all products go down from 25 to 50 per cent—agricultural products cut in half—Congress will take care of that when the time comes. I have passed through the period of the Civil War. My God, I recollect what a revolution there was when corn went down to 15 and 20 cents a bushel and the populists abounded and demagogues abounded, and, if you will allow me the expression, hell was to pay and no pitch hot. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MOON and Mr. AUSTIN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move to close debate on this amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I thought I had been recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman later.

Mr. AUSTIN. The trouble is that recognition of the gentleman from Tennessee cuts me off now.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move as an amendment to that, that debate close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia moves to amend the motion offered by the gentleman from Tennessee by making it 10 minutes.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, the question occurs on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee that debate on this amendment do now close.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. COX: Amend by striking out the following language in line 1, page 2: "After the passage of this act," and insert "during the fiscal year 1919."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. COX. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 98.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], a member of the committee, offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 7, after the word "grade," insert the following:

"Provided, That on the passage of this act clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service who are in grades 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, under the act of March 2, 1907, as amended, shall pass automatically from such grades and the salaries they receive thereunder to the new grades 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, respectively, with the salaries provided for such grades in this act.

"Provided further, That all promotions of both clerks and carriers shall be made at the beginning of the quarter following the expiration of one year's service in the next lower grade."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word in explanation of this.

Under the classification act of 1907 it was provided that there should be six grades. The first grade was $600, the second $800, the third grade $900, the fourth grade $1,000, the fifth grade $1,100, and the sixth $1,200. In 1913 the Congress amended the act by the elimination of the first grade, cutting out the $600 compensation. That left but five grades. The first of the five grades under the law as amended would be grade 2, but everybody has understood grade 2 to mean grade 1, the entrance grade. And in the preparation of the legislation so far it has always been understood that the man in what is legally called the second grade, but technically the first grade, was in the first grade; that when we created the new grades and the new compensations it was always understood that the man in what we understood to be grade 1 would pass to grade 1, with a $900 salary instead of $800 salary; the man in grade 2 would pass from $900 to $1,000 salary; the man in grade 4 would pass to grade 3 in the new compensation salary; and the man in grade 5 would pass to grade 4; and the man in grade 6 would pass to grade 5, so that there would be a $200 increase for the man in the $800 grade, a $200 increase for the man in the $900 grade, a $200 increase for the man in the $1,000 grade, and a $200 increase for the man in the $1,100 grade, and a $200 increase for the man in the $1,200 grade. That would leave one grade for which we make no provision except that we fix the salary. Under the present law that has been the practice. We began by leaving the top grade out of consideration, except in so far as the Congress appropriated money for it from time to time, and to-day we are appropriating for 85 per cent of the men in the grade below the sixth grade. And so this amendment that I propose will give the men a uniform increase of $200 in their compensation, no matter what grade they are in.

And we leave for the Congress the right to appropriate for such percentage of the men in the next lowest grade to the highest grade, namely, the sixth grade, as they may think proper from time to time. I think this is what everybody understood we were trying to do. If we do the thing that the provision already adopted would provide, the last promotion would mean a $300 advance. And the Post Office Department and a great many men outside of the Post Office Department think that that would impose too large a burden upon the Treasury. And in talking with the men who are interested, and most vitally interested, in this subject, they agree that this amendment will cure the opposition, deal fairly with the question, give the men what they expected to get, and certainly do in this bill what I expected I was doing from the beginning.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. SNYDER. I do not understand all this talk about grades, but what I would like to know is this: A carrier in my town now gets $1,200——

Mr. MADDEN. And will get $1,400 if this bill becomes the law.

Mr. SNYDER. Will in the future get $1,400?

Mr. MADDEN. And later on will get $1,500.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Why not make it permanent?

Mr. MADDEN. It is supposed to be.

Mr. HAMLIN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question simply for information, as I do not know of anybody better from whom to make the inquiry than the gentleman from Illinois. Here you have a first grade with salary at $1,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir. The man that gets $800. That goes up to $1,000.

Mr. HAMLIN. What is the present grade?

Mr. MADDEN. Eight hundred dollars. That is the second grade now, but should be classed grade 1, as the grade below was abolished in 1913.

Mr. HAMLIN. You have made one new grade?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. And that is grade 1?

Mr. MADDEN. That is grade 1. We had grade 1 under the law, but we abolished the salary connected with it in 1913.

Mr. HAMLIN. So that you have horizontally increased all of these $200 as they go from one grade to another?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAMLIN. Suppose a man is now in the fifth or sixth grade. Under the present law what grade would he be in under this bill?

Mr. MADDEN. The amendment provides that if he is in the sixth grade he goes into the fifth grade.

Mr. HAMLIN. He goes down?

Mr. MADDEN. Down in grade but up $200 per annum in salary.

Mr. HAMLIN. Suppose he draws the sixth-grade salary?

Mr. MADDEN. Under the present law he draws $1,200, and under the new bill he will be drawing $1,400.

Mr. WALSH. There is nothing to prevent the department, however, from demoting these men after they pass into the upper grades, so that they will get the salary they were getting before.

Mr. MADDEN. They can not do it.

Mr. WALSH. It is being done.

Mr. MADDEN. As a matter of discipline, of course, it is.

Mr. WALSH. Not as a matter of discipline at all.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. As I understand it, the employees pass from one grade to the other annually?

Mr. MADDEN. They pass after they have served in the grade one year if they qualify, whether it is the beginning of the year or the beginning of the quarter.

Mr. DOWELL. But they must serve where they are now under this provision?

Mr. MADDEN. They pass automatically to the new grade now if they have been in the grade long enough—one year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have two minutes more, so that I may ask him a question.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes. I desire to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may have five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MOON. If I understood the gentleman from Illinois correctly, this is a modification of the amendment that has already been adopted by the House?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOON. Now, what is the decrease involved in it?

Mr. MADDEN. It would confine the man at present in this grade to a $200 increase, whereas the amendment already adopted, if strictly construed and executed, would give him a $300 increase.

Mr. MOON. That was my understanding of the amendment and of the purpose when the gentleman spoke to me about it, but some gentlemen thought that it did not accomplish that purpose.

Mr. MADDEN. It does, absolutely.

Mr. MOON. It strikes me that it does.

Mr. MADDEN. It absolutely accomplishes the purpose.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois repeat again what he said about the $600 employee?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. In 1907 Congress classified the clerks and carriers. It made these grades. The first grade had a salary of $600, and the second a salary of $800.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, the $600——

Mr. MADDEN. In 1913 Congress modified the law by striking out the $600 grade and making $800 the entrance salary, but did not change the number of the grade.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. None of these employees now get $600?

Mr. MADDEN. No; $800 is the lowest. Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield the floor.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to understand the parliamentary situation. As I understand the purpose of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], he wishes to withdraw the amendment that was voted on the other day—the amendment that he offered—and to substitute this amendment in its place. I am not certain whether that is the purpose of the gentleman or not, but I believe it is.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to do it in the most expeditious way and least complicated, if necessary. If necessary I want to ask unanimous consent to vacate the former proceeding.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks to vacate the amendment adopted on Friday after the motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, that is the point I was trying to call to the attention of the gentleman from Illinois—to strike out and insert.

Mr. MADDEN. I move to strike out and insert.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman will be so modified, without objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I very much hope that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois will prevail. I am very glad to see the committee in a temper where it is willing to submit by unanimous consent to a proposition that looks toward some measure of economy at least. I hope the members of the committee will consider very thoughtfully certain of the amendments that have already been adopted before we reach the point at which we shall vote upon them in the House itself, because to my mind a mistake has been made in adopting certain amendments that have been proposed.

I appreciate the equities that exist; I appreciate the conditions that exist in the country, which render it not only entirely equitable but necessary to grant some increases in compensation to the employees dealt with in this measure, to the end that they may meet the high scale of prices that now exists for those things that are necessary to life. But, Mr. Chairman, it is absolutely impossible for me to understand how intelligent business men should insist upon taking a position which is abnormal economically and making that the basis for permanent legislation.

I heard the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] read the other day, when he presented his first amendment, a letter from the President of the United States, and invoked the sentiment therein expressed as being a basis for the support of that amendment which he was then proposing, when the whole tenor of that letter of the President was devoted to emphasizing the thought that conditions are to arise in the future and with which men must then deal.

Yet what are we here doing? We are fixing a scale of pay that we believe to be fair under conditions that now exist. We know that those conditions will change when the war is over. We know that there is not going to be that continuation of inflation in prices. We know that the expenses of the rural carrier and other postal employees are not going to be so great after this war is over as they are now.

I come from a district where most of the postal employees are rural carriers. Is it fair, is it right, is it good business policy, to take this abnormal condition which now exists and make that the basis of pay for all time to come, no matter what change in conditions may arise? "Oh," gentlemen say, "it can then be changed." It will not be changed. The same influences that now drive it into permanent law will prevent it from being repealed when the time shall come. Whoever heard of decreasing a Government salary?

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the equities that exist in the case of these employees. I am in sympathy with the purpose. I reported the rule from the Committee on Rules that made this in order. I should have hesitated long to support such a rule if I had thought the bill was going to be made the basis of permanent legislation.

There are some other people in the country besides the postal employees. Many interests must be considered, many sacrifices made, and all must share in these sacrifices. I have heard from the rural carriers in my district to some extent. There is not nearly so much dissatisfaction expressed among them as some gentlemen insist. I realize that there ought to be an increase, and I favor it. But I have also heard from some others in my congressional district, who have something to do with the paying of the bills. They are willing that the postal employees shall have a fair wage and a just pay at all times, but they are not willing that we should take an abnormal condition and make it the basis of permanent law. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I want to support this legislation, but I am inclined to agree with the gentleman who has just spoken [Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee] that if we start in upon this basis of making these increases permanent, we are going to arrive at a point before this Congress concludes its labors for this session where we will be astounded at the effect of this legislation upon the Treasury of the United States.

I have favored a reasonable increase for all Government employees during the present war emergency, but I doubt if these increases which have been voted into the bill can be termed "reasonable" under all the circumstances, and I doubt the wisdom of making them permanent. I do not believe it costs a letter carrier or a clerk any more to live than other Government employees in the same section of the country. I believe, as I have said, that the postal employees are entitled to an increase in their compensation. Why they should get any extraordinary increase over and above employees in other branches of the Government service I have yet to learn. There is one thing, however, that I do wish to say, in justice to the postal employees, and that is that, in my opinion, they have at the head of their establishment at the present time an official who seems to be obsessed with the idea that he is conducting the Post Office Department of this Government on the theory that it is his duty to see to it that he returns a profit to the United States as a result of his conduct of its affairs, and in many instances and in perhaps nearly every instance of radical change of policy he seems to sacrifice efficiency for economy. I have an instance in my own city where the postmaster asked for an extra carrier for his force, as this is a growing, busy city, where many of the industries are engaged for the most part on war work. Unbeknown to the postmaster some inspectors were sent to that city to make an investigation, as a result of which six of the carriers in that office had their salaries reduced from $1,200 to $1,000 each. One of them was a veteran in the service of the United States, a Civil War veteran, who had been in the post office for a great many years. Without solicitation of the postmaster, without any warning, that man's salary was cut from $1,200 to $1,000, simply in order that there might be a saving in that office which might warrant putting on an extra carrier. No opportunity was given them, I understand, to present their side of the case, as would be allowed if charges were preferred against them.

Mr. LARSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. LARSEN. Do you know whether or not that individual's efficiency for service had increased or decreased?

Mr. WALSH. I know that the inspectors reported that that individual's record for efficiency was not up to the standard, but I know he claims he was doing the same work he had been doing for a long period, and I am informed that the postmaster had made no complaint nor had any falling off in the efficiency of that carrier been brought to his attention or of any of the six men whose salaries were reduced.

Mr. LOBECK. That is what the inspectors are for, is it not; to examine the force and demote efficient men?

Mr. WALSH. It is not the intention of the legislation under which we authorize inspectors that they should go snooping around at these various offices without notifying the postmasters that they are coming, or that they are there, or the purpose of their visit, unless a charge has been made concerning the efficiency or honesty of some employee. They are not attached to the Secret Service, nor are they enforcing the espionage law.

Mr. LOBECK. They do it anyway.

Mr. WALSH. They do it under this administration all over the country.

Mr. GORDON. I should like to ask the gentleman what he understands to be the duty of an inspector? Has he got to go around with a brass band?

Mr. WALSH. Oh, no; he does not have to go around with a brass band.

Mr. GORDON. Well, what are his duties?

Mr. WALSH. I think an inspector is sent out to inspect, usually upon request filed by the postmaster, and it is only fair that the postmaster should know when the inspectors expect to arrive, and that he should be consulted, and that he should be asked as to whether a man is performing his duty in an efficient manner.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman wholly misunderstands the duties of inspectors. Inspectors are not under the orders of the postmaster.

Mr. WALSH. I do not contend that they should be.

Mr. GORDON. Why should the postmaster be notified, then?

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the gentleman that the postmaster is supposed to have some knowledge as to the manner in which the employees under his supervision are doing their work.

Mr. GORDON. Sometimes he has and sometimes he has not.

Mr. WALSH. I will say that in this instance he had, and that he protested against this reduction. It is not fair that the department should follow a policy that immediately puts a cloud on the postmaster and his office if he seeks to add to his force.

In this instance the worthy hawkshaws not only recommended demotion of these six men but also recommended abolishing a branch post office, which had been established a few years ago in the same city. That recommendation was followed only to the extent of issuing an order abolishing the branch office and then rescinding the order.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this would be a most opportune time to enact legislation looking to retirement of the superannuated employees of the Post Office Department, and it ought to be put on this law. Such a provision is of more vital importance than Government ownership of telephones here in the District, and it would save thousands of dollars to the department. The present head of the Post Office Department seeks to rule with a rod of iron, and his attitude toward his force is not such as to merit approval.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to speak on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a few observations in connection with this bill granting increased compensation to employees in the Postal Service. The difficulty with this legislation is that we fail to approach the subject of compensation for Government employees in a thoroughgoing or logical manner. This is piecemeal legislation. The complaint of the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], who spoke a few minutes ago, is to a great extent well founded. It looks at first glance as if we are trying to legislate permanently for a situation which is temporary in its character. The mistake he makes, however, is this: The permanent feature of this bill is an attempt to provide an adequate compensation. Inflated prices have reduced the purchasing value of the dollar. There has been an actual diminution of the salary of the Government employee. This bill seeks to overcome the discrepancy.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. This legislation was not originated on account of the war. It was originated long before the war, and should have been enacted before the war, and is entitled to be enacted on its merits, regardless of the war. [Applause.]

Mr. LONDON. I understand that. Will the bill accomplish the proclaimed object? I doubt it. We should, without delay, undertake legislation to secure to the men and women who work for the Government at least a minimum wage. The minimum should enable the worker to provide for himself and his family food, clothing, shelter, an opportunity for education and for recreation, to rebuild one's body. That is the minimum, and whether a man is skilled or unskilled, whether he is a bricklayer or an astronomer, he is entitled to that minimum compensation, particularly if he is in the employ of the Government.

When we take old men who are utterly incompetent, a man who has been 50 years or 40 years in the service, who has in his younger days contributed to the welfare and prosperity of the country by rendering loyal service in the particular field in which he was engaged; when we take an old veteran who has offered his life to save the Republic and we retain him in the employ of the Government solely because of his past services, we do an injustice. We do not promote efficiency. The proper way to handle that situation would be to adopt proper retirement legislation, an old-age pension system, so that the old man who has spent his entire life in the service of the community should not be thrown upon the scrap heap when he is physically incapable of continuing his work.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. What would you do with the old men in private employment who have reached the same stage of inefficiency?

Mr. LONDON. In the few minutes I have, I have set out to deal with the subject of Government employees. The Government can not afford to be a mean employer. In the relation between the Government and its employees there should be a higher standard than the standard which Carlyle designated as the standard of the dollar mark. These relations must be humanized. I know what I would do with the private employee who has been rendering useful service to the world and who has been helping to build up industries and the prosperity of the country. I would take care of him in his old age. I would not throw him into the junk heap. That was the object of the insurance resolution which I introduced and which many of you gentlemen, who did not understand, voted against, and which some of you who did understand voted against, because it was for the benefit of the people.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. Would it not be an excellent example to furnish to the private employer if the Government itself would do it?

Mr. LONDON. Of course, the Government should be the first to teach us humanity in economic relations and not rely upon the old worn-out theory of the so-called law of supply and demand and survival of the fittest, which in industry very often means the survival of the vilest scoundrels and the most shameless and conscienceless employers.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin It is true that some of the railroads of the country have taken their old employees and have placed them on the pension list.

Mr. LONDON. The difficulty with private pensions is just this: When a private corporation puts a man on the pension list, it acts upon the theory that the employee during his hours of vigor shall do everything the employer asks him to do, so that the old-age pension is held up by the private employer as a bribe, as an inducement to the employee that he should be obedient, submissive, and docile during that period of his life when he could by fighting obtain better conditions, or private pension for old age is held out as a reward for being a slave during the active age of life.

Mr. BLACK. Do I understand the gentleman to take the position of opposing the methods that some corporations have resorted to in the pensioning of employees?

Mr. LONDON. I say that the methods of employment of private corporations——

Mr. BLACK. Is the gentleman opposed to it?

Mr. LONDON. I am in favor of compulsory old-age pensions for private employees. I do not believe in charity——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes further.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONDON. A minimum wage bill and a thoroughgoing old-age pension system would go a great way to improve the situation.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Will he yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr FOCHT. I would like to ask the gentleman how he accounts for the fact that in the presence of old-age pensions in England, France, Germany, Australia, New Zealand, and even Turkey, this great munificent Nation has overlooked it?

Mr. LONDON. Because we have too many stand-pat Republicans and too many Bourbon Democrats. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt that the pending measure will pass the House by an overwhelming vote. I am heartily in favor of the bill, especially as amended, making the compensatory provisions permanent. The increases in compensation are extremely moderate, and no substantial reason can be given why these faithful employees of the Government should be compelled to make another long and protracted fight for well-merited recognition after the termination of the war. Now that the opportunity is at hand to give them justice, we should give them full justice. Only in this way, in my judgment, can we show that heretofore we meant what we said when we told them that we would do all within our power to obtain for them the fair and equitable allowances to which they are reasonably and most deservedly entitled. [Applause.]

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Chairman, I am not in favor of making a raid on the Treasury such as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] have so vividly described, but I am very much in favor of the Government doing justice to its servants and paying a living wage to its employees in the Postal Service. At this very hour we are facing a crisis that beggars description and surpasses comprehension. In order to meet it the Government is calling upon its citizens of every rank and station to make such sacrifices of money, time, and men as have never before been called for in the history of any land. The people are promptly and freely responding to the call. They are donating their time to the Government; they are lending their money to the Government; they are giving their flesh and blood to the Government to be consumed upon the altar of war. At such a time and in such circumstances, when the Government is admonishing all to be generous, it can not afford to be less than just to those who perform its most important functions and bear its heaviest loads.

This is a time when patriotism should be promoted, not suppressed. While no one provided for in the pending bill would measure his patriotism or allegiance to his country by any increase in compensation that might be granted or withheld, it is, nevertheless, a fact that the employees in the Postal Service can not continue to live on the rate of wages they are now receiving. When the laboring class, to which these most deserving employees belong, shall cease to live then allegiance and patriotism will necessarily die.

Some of those for whom we are providing in the measure before the House have received no increase in compensation since 1907; the remainder have had no advance since 1912. It is therefore apparent that the present rate of pay for postal employees was fixed under economic conditions that have long since been swept away. Since 1912 the cost of living has increased about 63 per cent; since 1907 it has increased considerably more than 63 per cent. Therefore the increase in wages provided by this bill, though large it may seem to those who oppose the measure, will scarcely offset the last five years' increase in the cost of living. To my mind, simple justice demands that the proposed relief should be speedily granted and that these worthy employees be thus enabled to live up to the present standard of life set by an entirely new order of things.

As there is absolutely no evidence before us that normal conditions, as we knew them before the war, will ever again prevail, it is my sincere hope that the House will agree to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], adopted by the committee on last Friday, making all the increases carried in the bill permanent, instead of temporary. If the present high cost of living, largely brought about by the war, should be substantially reduced upon the restoration of peace, and it should then be found that the increases allowed are excessive, Congress will still have the power of repeal and the authority to make such adjustments as good judgment may suggest and justice may require. Let us not anticipate the future by fixing a date upon which this beneficent legislation shall automatically expire. Let us rather leave to a future Congress the task of dealing with a future problem. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. REAVIS. Assuming the prewar condition will recur after this war is over and prices that obtained before the war should return, does the gentleman believe that $100 a month to a Government employee who gives all of his service and all of his time to the work of his employment is too much, even under normal conditions?

Mr. NEELY. I do not think it is enough.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I believe these employees are entitled to receive a reasonable compensation for the services rendered. These men are giving the very best part of their lives to our Government and are only receiving a small wage. It has been a number of years since the employees of the Postal Department have received an increase of pay. The cost of living during this time has been constantly increasing. We must take into consideration the fact that these employees must support their families and educate their children on the compensation received from the Government, and I submit that the present high cost of living will quickly absorb this compensation.

The rural carrier is confronted with a double expenditure. He must not only provide for his family at the present high cost, but he must pay for his own equipment and the upkeep of the same at the greatly increased cost.

The Postal Department requires a high standard of efficiency in all its branches. The people of the country want and require efficient service in this department. I believe all these employees should receive reasonable and fair pay for the faithful and efficient services they are rendering the people.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, the most noisy and boisterous speeches I have heard here for a long time have been made by those people who are denouncing this bill as a raid upon the Treasury; that we are doing something that is unfair and unwarranted. Now, I am going to support this bill, not because of the war or anything in connection with the war. I heard men say it is a shame to spend the Government's money at this time to increase salaries when men are going to the trenches at $30 a month. Why, are not the sons of those men who are working for the Government going into the trenches like the sons of anybody else? The Government employee is a man who is working for a salary, and a very stingy salary in most cases, and any man who wants to live respectably at such wages can not raise a family and do it in a respectable way, because we are not giving them suitable pay, a respectable wage.

Now, these men who work for the Government, many of them, are losing their sons who are going into the Army at a time when they are needed at home, because many who are working for the Government have little homes they are compelled to pay for to save them. Now, there is no consideration given to those people whatever, and thousands have left the Government service for the Army and we want to provide a decent wage for them when they come back. Why, some men say here, "We are in favor of the rural carrier getting more wages; we are in favor of all the employees of the postal department getting more wages but——," and they stop at that because of some reason. If there is any class of employees in the Government service that Congress is afraid of it is the rural carrier, and and I do not except the farmer, and God knows they have been well taken care of. There is no employee in the service of the Government that a Congressman will jump quicker for or they are more anxious to help than a rural carrier, and you can not deny it. With what unanimity we proceeded to increase the salary of the rural carrier. Boost it up everybody. What about the country merchant? There are a good many people doing business in the rural districts, little country merchants as well as general stores, and if there is one thing more than another that has helped put the little country merchant out of business it is the rural carrier. They have made many millionaires in our cities because of the rural free delivery, and great mail-order houses have grown up in every section of the country as a result of the rural carrier service, putting the small country merchant and the general store out of business. Let the country merchant read the proceedings here and find out how anxious this Congress is to increase the salary of the rural carrier.

The rural carrier has a chance to provide for his family on the side by raising produce in his little garden. He can also secure cheaper rent. But the city carrier or clerk has no such opportunity. The city carrier has nothing but expense from morning until night. The rural carrier has many advantages that are not to be had in the city, and here we find Members protesting about giving city postal employees a respectable wage. I know something about living conditions in the city. The poor in the big cities, and in medium-sized cities, are much worse off than the poor in the rural districts. They can not live as well at the same salary, and if they are raising a family they are ground down to the bare necessities of life.

Now, I am in favor of a respectable wage for all these people. I am not afraid of any of the powers that be. I have no post office in my district nor any postmasters to appoint, so I am free to say what I please about this situation. If there is any class of people that are entitled to a respectable wage from the Government it is the postal employees, and I make no exceptions. And I am not in favor of it because these are abnormal times. I am in favor of it because they are entitled to it. I think we are simply proceeding to give them what they earn—a respectable wage—and I want it to continue not because we are at war but after the war, because they are entitled to it and are deserving of it.

I hear so many Members here telling about the condition of the Treasury. They are frightened. Why, I heard somebody say here the other day when we talked about increasing the wages of Government clerks that the farmers did not have anybody in the gallery to show their appreciation of what was being done for the farmer. But they do not need anybody here. The farmers' interests are well looked after right on the floor of this House, and have been for some time, while those working for the Government in cities are compelled to have representatives here to obtain the recognition that they deserve.

Some idea of the conditions surrounding postal employees in the city can be gleaned from the testimony of Mrs. Frank Halas, president of the Woman's Auxiliary of the National Federation of Postal Employees, before the House Post Office Committee December 17 last. She said:

I have had Congressmen tell me that if postal clerks did not like the conditions under which they are working at the post office, let them go back to the farm. That is not an answer. You can not pack your things in a suit case and go back to the farm just because you do not like the conditions under which you are working. It takes money to pack your things and go back to the farm. Suppose some one came to the postal employees in Chicago with money and said to them, "You can all pack your suit cases and go back to the farm; here is the money to do it with"; what would be the result? Every one of those postal clerks would be arrested for conspiracy to delay the mails.

Now, is it fair, when you are trying to live, when you are nearly starving, when you can not buy the necessities for your family, when you have to see your children go to school not clothed as warmly as they might be, when they have to go without the pleasures and sometimes without the necessities that other children are enjoying—is it right—is it fair and square for a Congressman to come and say to you, "If you do not like it you can go back to the farm," knowing perfectly well all the time that if all the post-office clerks in Chicago did go back to the farm to-morrow they would land in jail for conspiracy to delay the mails?

And if they did go back to the farm, who would step in to take their places? Now, is that fair? I can not answer that question in the affirmative; I can not say it is fair.

I had a peculiar situation come up a while ago. A woman called me up and asked me to go to her house; she wanted me to hear her story, but she did not have presentable clothes to come out in. Her husband is getting $900 a year in the Chicago post office, and they have three children. Three days before each pay day—one is on the 3d and one on the 18th—that husband and wife have black coffee, without cream or sugar, and unbuttered brown bread; that is what they are living on; and I am going to ask you, as true a citizen as I am, do you think that a man can get up and cheer as lustily, living on black coffee and unbuttered brown bread, as you and I can, with three square meals a day? He can not do it. I am patriotic; but I say you are asking the impossible when you ask that.

And I say the women are smarting under the unfairness of it. Their husbands are working nights, many of them, and those women are going out and hunting up jobs for their men, going out looking for chances for their men to get out of the service. There is a shortage of help now in the Chicago post office. I have a statement here [indicating] in a newspaper quoting Mr. Galbraith, superintendent of mails in Chicago. He says:

"We have men now in all of the Chicago regiments and in camp at many different cantonments. Then we have had an unusual number of resignations of capable mail workers who have taken at higher salaries places of men who have left mercantile life in Chicago to join either the Navy, Army, or Aviation Corps."

He says there is a shortage now. He is sending out appeals for people to come in.

I was recently asked to sit on a subcommittee on women and children in Chicago, of which Mr. Boyd, who is the head of the State employment department in Chicago, was chairman. All the men in that work in Chicago know that I am the head of the women's work. They see me aged-looking and careworn at the stories I have had to hear in the last two or three years; and when the women see me on these different committees, like Mrs. Raymond Robins's, they always think of the postal clerks; they know that when I am quiet I am thinking of the postal clerks. That day I was not saying much, and Mr. Boyd was talking about the labor situation; and Mrs. Robins said to me, "What is the matter there at the post office?" Mr. Boyd said, "We are sending them men every day; there is not a shortage of men in Chicago." That was in October. He said, "We are sending them men every day. But they can not keep their men; those men are put in as substitutes at 35 cents an hour; as soon as they have been there long enough they are put on regularly at 27½ cents an hour. They are given a big scheme to study after their working hours. If it is a day shift, they work 11 hours, and the night shift works 13 hours.

Our families have to double up; two families are going into one small house; and you have again an exemplification of the old story that there is no house big enough to hold two families. There are houses in Chicago now that hold three families, so that the postal clerks can live. Some of our women are working, although they have little children to take care of, so that their husbands can have a few hours off at night.

And am I saying anything wrong; am I exaggerating in any way when I say that our women are smarting under the unfairness and the injustice of the thing? I am sure that it is all because you gentlemen do not understand. A very good friend of the postal employees said last year when I told him that our standards of living are being broken down—he said, "Don't tell me that; don't I know it." Everyone else has had his salary increased. How about our salaries, that have not been increased for 10 years? How about us? We are simply on the verge of desperation, and the men are leaving the post office; and if something is not done for them they will keep on leaving the post office every time they find an opportunity on the outside.

These are conditions that I wish to bring to the attention of the Members of this House, and I believe you will agree with me that they ought to be remedied. The Postal Department is not run for gain or profit, and with the increased postage of 3 cents on first-class letters it will more than pay double the amount of the increase of salaries provided for in this bill. What we should do, and ought to do, if we wish to do the right thing, would be to provide a suitable retirement law that would provide for old-age pensions that would insure Government employees against want in their old age after spending all of the best years of their lives in faithful and honorable service for the Government.

I hope this bill will pass with a good big majority in its favor.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am going to insist that debate shall be confined to the amendment after this.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Did I not talk on the amendment?

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that all debate on this amendment close in five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Reserving the right to object, I would like the five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee——

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. I wanted to inquire if the motion made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] was put and carried.

The CHAIRMAN. It was a mistake of the Chair. The Chair was stating a unanimous-consent request. It was a motion. The vote is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] to close general debate in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I understood the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] about 20 minutes ago made a motion to close debate in 10 minutes, and that was carried.

The CHAIRMAN. That was on another amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. There was no vote on the other amendment.

Mr. MOON. That was on the Cox amendment, which was voted on and lost. This is on the Madden amendment.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, the bill now under consideration, entitled "Granting increased compensation to certain officials, employees, and laborers in the Post Office Department and Postal Service, and for other purposes," is a great step in the right direction.

I am heartily in favor of the bill and for a long time have used every effort in having the same brought to the attention of Congress and justice done to these Government employees.

I do not think that the bill is fair, however, in that it limits the increased pay for the period of the war and for 90 days after the proclamation of peace. And for that reason I am in favor of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], which so changes the bill as to make its provisions and increases permanent legislation.

There is certainly no class of employees in the Government service who have the greater confidence of the American people than do the postal employees. They enter into closer association with our social, political, and business operations than any other class of men.

Representing as I do a district wholly within the city of Baltimore, I come in direct communication with that class of employees known as carriers and postal clerks. They are as fine a body of men as one can meet in his general social and business operations. They are always courteous and agreeable, ready and willing to do everything in their power for the benefit of the service and the convenience of the public. From them must spring in future the men and women who are to comprise a large part of the body politic of our land.

The postal clerks have not had an increase of salary for more than 10 years, and have long been protesting to the Government against the injustice done them. The letter carriers have had some increases, but they have not been in proportion to the cost of living and other expenses which they are compelled to sustain. The cost of living has increased during the last few years some 43 per cent, while the increases provided in this bill amount to only 15 or 20 per cent.

If we would have our postal employees continue the high standard which they have always maintained we must provide them with sufficient salary upon which to live and to educate and provide for their offspring and care for them in the proper manner.

The increases as provided in the bill are as follows:

Clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service shall be divided into six grades, as follows: First grade, salary $1,000; second grade, salary $1,100; third grade, salary $1,200; fourth grade, salary $1,300; fifth grade, salary $1,400; sixth grade, salary $1,500. Clerks and carriers shall be promoted successively to the sixth grade.

That hereafter the salaries of railway postal clerks shall be graded as follows: Grade 1 at $1,100; grade 2 at $1,200; grade 3 at $1,300; grade 4 at $1,400; grade 5 at $1,500; grade 6 at $1,600; grade 7 at $1,700; grade 8 at $1,800; grade 9 at $1,900; grade 10 at $2,000.

You will note from this that these salaries are not much larger than the ordinary laborer can obtain in these war times. More than 200,000 employees are affected by this bill, and they are efficient and loyal, as everyone here can certify. Upon them rests the responsibility of performing a very important part of our public service, and they are entitled to receive such compensation as will attract and hold competent men.

I realize that this bill will entail an outlay of about $30,000,000, but we must also take into consideration that this money is not taken from the pockets of the taxpayer, but is provided out of the revenue of the Postal Department. The Postal Department has for some years past had a surplus, and with the increased cost of the mail the amount provided herein will be far exceeded by the increased revenue, so that it will not be a charge upon the individual, but a charge upon the funds of the Postal Department, which is self-sustaining.

For many years this Government provided mailing facilities for second-class matter at a loss of $80,000,000 to our country. But this has been largely corrected by legislation recently enacted, so that we are now enabled to do justice to the employees instead of making this huge gift to publishers.

In creating this increase we must not only take into consideration the increased cost of living, but we must also take into consideration the fact that since the creation of the Parcel Post System a very large amount of additional work has been cast upon these employees. I have seen, and no doubt you have all seen, these men laden to their full strength with parcel-post matter, which they deliver in their respective sections of the city and country. The work has become onerous and exacting, but the efficiency of the men has been maintained and they have shown by their constancy that they are willing to do the utmost amount of work within their power and strength. While all this additional work has been cast upon them, I have yet to find one man complaining of his task. But each and every one has gone about it with continued energy, exactness, and willingness.

I realize that we should not increase salaries any more than it is necessary to do; but we must take into consideration the fact that the income of the vast majority of these men depends solely upon the work they perform and that they have no other revenue nor opportunity to earn money except that which comes through the salaries provided. Their labor is their sole capital and the only thing they have to sell.

These men have never threatened strike. They have never threatened a walkout. Their unions have never exerted undue influence upon the National Government. They have always been ready to lay their case before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and to leave it with that committee to decide what is fair and just compensation for the work performed. That committee, after a long and exhaustive hearing, taking into consideration every angle of the case, hearing men on all sides, have concluded that the salaries provided in this bill should be granted. I am therefore strongly in favor of the prompt passage of this bill so that these men may obtain what they should have had long ago.

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. MOON. What is the gentleman proposing to discuss here? He is not talking to this amendment.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I am talking about the bill in general.

Mr. MOON. That is general debate, but go ahead. I do not object.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I realize, as do we all, that the demands upon the National Government are extremely heavy during this critical period of the world war. I realize that the taxpayers of the country are contributing to the National Treasury the sums demanded of them without a murmur of complaint, but with a willingness and desire to do all that they can in the support of the National Government in this time of need and in the prosecution of this tremendous war. I realize that in the years to come the burden must rest more heavily upon the people of the country than perhaps ever in its history. Yet we must also take into consideration that it is the duty of the National Government to be just and fair with its employees, as private enterprise has been with those under its employment. As I look about me I behold that every industry of commerce and business, every manufacturing concern, even private employers and all persons needing the help of others, have increased the salaries of their men. They do it not from a desire to be generous or to dispose of their funds, but they realize that if they would have their men live and be able to perform the work devolving upon them they must have proper salaries to maintain themselves and their families and to equip their children for the work of future generations.

The National Government has not been liberal in salaries. It has obtained splendid men without very large compensation, but it has always been the desire of the Government to be fair and just, and for that reason the bill reported from the committee will become a law and will redound to the great benefit of the postal employees and naturally to the Postal Service.

No man can perform with efficiency the work before him unless he is able to be properly cared for and to care for those dependent upon him. This bill, I believe, will accomplish that end.

The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois making it permanent legislation is to my mind quite essential to this bill. It has been the history of our country that when prices advance they seldom react to their original level. In some instances or for some articles the prices may go down, but as a general rule they are maintained permanently.

I do not think that there is any Member of this House before me to-day who will contend that there is any possibility of prices reacting to such an extent that the salaries called for by this bill will not be required. It is, therefore, essential that we pass the bill with the amendment, so that the employees will know that their salaries are fixed permanently and that there will be no need of further hearings and agitation in order to maintain them at the standard established in this bill.

I sincerely hope, Mr. Chairman, that the bill with this amendment will pass and become one of the laws of the country at an early date.

I can speak in behalf of those men of my city engaged in the postal work that they will not only appreciate the justness and fairness of the legislation but that they will be, if it is possible, more energetic and more earnest in the performance of their duties than ever before. As I have said, they are a splendid body of men, always energetic, always willing, and always perform their duty in the most efficient and proper manner. They have the confidence and esteem of every class of our citizens.

The old and the young of our great metropolis wish them well. They perform their work with quietude and exactness, are always on their job, whether it be in the heat of the summer's noonday sun or among the winter's blasts. I am glad to see justice done them at last. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The vote is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. BLACK. This is an amendment as a substitute to the section. If any gentleman has anything to perfect the section, it should be offered now.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that I wanted to offer there.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCLINTIC] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MCCLINTIC: Add to section 1 the following: "Provided, That those who were performing service as motor carriers shall receive a 10 per cent increase of salary on the amount they are now receiving."

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have that amendment reported again, so that I can understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be reported again.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I have been informed by a member of the committee that the present bill under consideration does not contain any provision for the increase of the salary of those who are at this time performing service as motor carriers. I do not believe it is the intention of this House to make an unjust discrimination against any class of Government employees. I am specially pleased that the rural carriers have been granted a substantial increase. I know that the cost of living has increased in leaps and bounds, and when it is taken into consideration that the rural carrier must pay out for upkeep practically half of the amount he receives for performing this service, it can be readily seen that the increase of salary provided for in this bill is just and right.

I am sure that no Member of Congress who is posted as to the amount of expense necessary to keep up automobiles but will say that the motor carriers labor under as hard, if not harder, conditions as those who perform service as rural carriers. If you please, Mr. Chairman, the motor carrier must first take the examination under the rules and regulations of the Civil Service Commission and make an eligible grade before he can receive an appointment. He must to a certain extent be a little better qualified than some of the wagon carriers, because he must know how to operate an automobile or a Ford before he can successfully perform the duties that devolve upon him.

In many sections of the United States they have macadam roads, and those who are performing service as motor carriers have a much easier time than those in the Middle West and the extreme West, where the roads are not so good. However, it can be said that in certain sections of the East where they have macadam roads the motor carriers often have to turn aside and follow the meanderings of some byway, and consequently their duties are often very hard when weather conditions are bad. Out in the central part of the United States and the Middle West, where we have no roads to speak of except those given us by nature, when wet weather comes, and especially in the wintertime, the trials and hardships of the motor carrier are very difficult, and it makes it nearly impossible for him to perform his duty in the proper manner.

Mr. Chairman, in the last week I have received three communications stating:

We would like to give up our contract with the Government. We would like to have these two routes that were formerly consolidated for the purpose of establishing a motor route discontinued, and, instead, wagon routes be reestablished. We would like to be given employment as carriers on wagon routes instead of motor routes.

A few minutes ago I opened my mail and I noticed an appeal that came from a motor carrier living in western Oklahoma. He says:

Mr. MCCLINTIC.

DEAR FRIEND: I have resigned as motor carrier on route A, as I believe I could not carry it without buying a new car. I have had three on it already, and for this reason I have decided to quit.

Mr. MOON. What is the length of the route?

Mr. McCLINTIC. About 50 miles, I think.

Mr. MOON. Do you know what the man was getting?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I think he was getting something between $1,600 and $1,800. I could not make an authentic statement as to that.

Mr. MOON. Do you know how long it took to perform the service?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I can not give an accurate answer to your question; but, Mr. Chairman, I do know when the wet weather comes the motor carrier has to hire and pay out of his own pocket a man to go in a wagon or buggy and cover one-half of the route while he covers the other half.

Mr. MOON. That sort of a route ought to be abolished, ought it not?

Mr. McCLINTIC. There is not a person living in that section of the country who can cover the motor route in wet weather with a team in a day. Consequently when bad weather comes the motor carrier has to suffer a great deal more than the wagon carrier. I do not believe that Congress should make a discrimination against this class of service. I think if there is any one class of Government employees that is entitled to some consideration it is that class which is to-day performing this kind of service at a financial loss. From the information I have received, practically every motor carrier in the district I have the honor to represent would gladly welcome the opportunity of accepting service on a wagon route on a basis of $1,200 for a standard route and give up his position as motor carrier. This being the case, I think the United States Congress should be a little more merciful and not make a discrimination against those who are at this time rendering such splendid service while serving in this capacity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment may be adopted.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, the House of Representatives has now been considering for some days a bill which, it seems, ought to have been speedily acted upon. The proposition is to increase the salaries of postal employees from 15 to 20 per cent. The cost of living during recent years has increased from 43 to 50 per cent. Why should there be any controversy about such a bill? Who is there that can dispute the justice of the contention of the proponents of this measure?

At this very moment, when the fate of civilization is hanging in the balance, men are criticizing the Government because, as they say, it does not synchronize the great industrial agencies of this Government and throw them in the balance of this war. There are at this very minute measures of most supreme importance absolutely necessary for the successful prosecution of this war that are held up by this prolonged, and, as I submit, unnecessary, debate in the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

If you are going to pass your housing bill, which is necessary, as we are told by men upon both sides who know—necessary in the building of ships, when the cry is, "Ships, and ships, and more ships"—if we are going to take up that measure, and other measures equally vital, for God's sake let us put this one aside and bring these war bills to a vote. And there are still other measures that are pending before the committees of the House that are absolutely and vitally necessary for the prosecution of this war for which the departments of the Government are anxiously waiting before they have authority to act. And all the while the criticism goes on. Why isn't this done? Why will not officials speed up, speed up? And here we are consuming days in discussing a measure which should have come to a vote after two hours' debate. I rise here to make a plea that we come to a vote on this measure. Every man in this Chamber knows right now how he is going to vote. Further debate will accomplish nothing. Let us dispose of this bill and then take up these other measures that are supremely necessary to enable this Nation to do its part in saving civilization itself from destruction. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] press his point of order?

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe I care to make the point of order. I believe I will agree to this amendment for 10 per cent. It will cost the Government less money that way than it would under the bill as heretofore amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD) there were—ayes 46, noes 14.

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fifteen Members present, a quorum. The amenmdent is agreed to.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr RUCKER (substitute for the paragraph on page 1, beginning at line 7): That carriers in the Rural Free Delivery Service shall receive a salary not exceeding $2,200 per annum, the maximum salary to be based on the length of routes, the time required to serve them, and the number of pieces and weight of mail transported: Provided, That the minimum compensation of such carriers, payable monthly, shall be as follows: On routes of 24 miles, six times a week, $1,380 per annum, and $24 per mile per annum for each additional mile over 24 miles; on routes 22 miles and less than 24 miles, $1,152; on routes 20 miles and less than 22 miles, $1,080; on routes 18 miles and less than 20 miles, $960; on routes 16 miles and less than 18 miles, $840; on routes 14 miles and less than 16 miles, $720; on routes 12 miles and less than 14 miles, $672; on routes 10 miles and less than 12 miles, $624; on routes 8 miles and less than 10 miles, $576; on routes 6 miles and less than 8 miles, $528; on routes 4 miles and less than 6 miles, $480. A rural carrier serving one triweekly route shall be paid on the basis for a route one-half the length of the route served by him, and a carrier serving two triweekly routes shall be paid on the basis for a route one-half of the combined length of the two routes: Provided further, That rural routes on which the use of a motor vehicle would be required shall be established only when a motor vehicle can be operated thereon with reasonable regularity for 10 months in the year: And provided further, That when any route is authorized that absorbs or eliminates existing routes the carriers affected thereby shall be retained in the order of their relative efficiency.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the committee, I will say that no friend of this amendment need fear the point of order, because I do not think, with all deference to the distinguished chairman of the committee, that it is subject to a point of order.

I want to address myself particularly to those members of the committee who are friends of rural carriers, and, addressing them, I want to say that there is not a more loyal friend of the men engaged in the Rural Free Delivery Service of mail than myself. I am their pronounced and unwavering friend. My vote on this question, or on anything that pertains to this bill, or on any question pertaining to any other bill is not the result of any menace of the rural carriers in my district nor is it because of any favor that I hope to receive at their hands. Many of them are Republicans and vote wrong anyway. I do not care the snap of my finger how any of them vote. It is a mere question of what is right in the premises. They are serving our constituents, and it so happens that we are charged with the responsibility and intrusted with the power of fixing their compensation, and it is our duty to be just and fair in our treatment of them.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. MOON. Can the gentleman inform the House what would be the difference in cost between the amount to be paid under his amendment and the 10 per cent proposition which has been adopted?

Mr. RUCKER. I am going to get to that in just a moment, if the gentleman will pardon me. Let me say that the first part of the substitute which I have offered reads as follows:

That carriers in the Rural Free Delivery Service shall receive a salary not exceeding $2,200 per annum, the maximum salary to be based on the length of routes, the time required to serve them, and the number of pieces and weight of mail transported.

That provision gives latitude or flexibility and permits the Post Office Department, if it sees fit to do so in meritorious cases, to allow compensation to the rural carriers above the minimum amount which the substitute that I offer authorizes.

This substitute provides a minimum salary of exactly the same sum that is carried in the bill reported by the committee, $1,200, with 15 per cent added to it, or $1,380 per annum. It not only does that, but it goes down the line in the same ratio as to the salaries for carriers on shorter routes than 24 miles. It provides the same pay for routes in excess of 24 miles that the pending bill provides.

The pending bill is unjust in this: It provides a flat rate of pay. Where the carrier now gets $1,200 under the bill as amended, he would get 20 per cent added. Under this amendment that I offer the minimum amount that the carrier would receive is the amount written in the bill as reported by the committee, namely, $1,380. Thus the pending substitute would enable the Post Office Department under the first clause of this amendment to regulate and adjust salaries above the minimum, taking into consideration the number of miles traveled, the number of pieces of mail handled, and the weight of the mail. For instance, out of a given town two routes are established, one 24 miles long and the other 22 miles long. The man who travels over 22 miles delivers, I will assume, 3,000 pieces of mail a month, while the man who travels 24 miles delivers only 2,500 pieces of mail a month. So the man traveling the shorter distance performs the greatest service, based on the number of pieces of mail delivered. This substitute would permit the department to deal fairly with the carrier on the short route and pay him for service actually performed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would ask how much more time there is for debate on this section?

The CHAIRMAN. There is just five minutes remaining.

Mr. MOON. Some other gentlemen may want to offer an amendment.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment I want to offer.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague's time may be extended for five minutes, regardless of the agreement.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, no; I object.

Mr. RUCKER. I would like time to answer the chairman's question.

Mr. MOON. I will state that I do not control the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes, unless some one else wants the time.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the committee just fixed the time a moment ago in which to close debate. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri. Does the gentleman from Tennessee press his point of order?

Mr. MOON. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. I renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. RUCKER. I will be glad to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, it is obvious that this is not germane because the amendment that is proposed here seeks to enact legislation as to what shall be the basis of pay. At the present time the Postmaster General has full authority to determine the conditions under which the scale of pay shall be based, within the various grades, with a maximum of $1,200 and $24 per mile for extra mile. That is the existing law. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] attempts to change that law, which the Chairman will find, I believe, in the Post Office appropriation act for the fiscal year 1916, in some radical particulars. This bill does not seek to change the basis of compensation, except the maximum that may be received, and does not seek to interfere with the discretion of the Postmaster General.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is needlessly disturbing himself about interfering with the discretion of the Postmaster General. The very amendment I offered was written in the Post Office Department this morning.

Mr. STAFFORD. That does not affect the position which I take, that it is a change of law.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph for which I offer this amendment as a substitute has reference to fixing the compensation of rural delivery carriers. This substitute does that. It does no more than that, and the only reason the point of order is made by the gentleman from Wisconsin, in my judgment, is because he knows that it is a good amendment and fears that it will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the amendment offered by Mr. TAGUE and amended by Mr. BLACK and insert:

Line 13, page 2, after "$2,000," add the following:

"The Postmaster General shall classify and fix the salaries of railway postal clerks under such regulations as he may prescribe in the grades provided by law and for the purpose of organization and of establishing maximum grades to which promotions may be made successively, as hereinafter provided; he shall classify railway post offices, terminal railway post offices, and transfer offices with reference to their character and importance in three classes, with salary grades as follows:

"Class A, $1,100 to $1,400; class B, $1,400 to $1,500; and class C, $1,500 to $1,700. He may assign to the offices of division superintendents and chief clerks such postal railway clerks as may be necessary, and fix their salaries within the grades provided by law without regard to the classification of railway post offices: Provided, That upon the passage of this act railway postal clerks shall pass automatically from the grades they are in and the salaries they receive under the act of August 24, 1912, to the corresponding grade, with salaries provided for in this act."

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve a point of order.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, if there is any objection to this amendment, which is clearly in order, I am ready to withdraw it. My amendment merely clarifies the situation that was brought about on Saturday, when I offered an amendment, which was afterwards amended by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK], as to just how the amendment offered by me would operate.

Mr. FOSTER. I would inquire of the gentleman if it simply clarifies that and makes it subject to the law?

Mr. TAGUE. That is all. It makes it in accordance with the permanent law, except in so far as it changes the figures $200.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understood the original amendment offered by the gentleman and adopted on Friday, it would have compelled the department to promote every railway mail clerk regardless of the work or grade in which he is performing that work until they receive the maximum salary of $2,000. That was the original amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TAGUE. That clearly was not the intent of the amendment, although the gentleman raised that point.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is clear on its face it would have that effect. Then the gentleman from Texas offered an amendment attempting to restrict it, and now the gentleman is seeking to clarify the situation by this substitute amendment.

Mr. TAGUE. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, may I inquire what is the maximum salary a railway postal clerk will receive under the amendment now offered?

Mr. TAGUE. What grade?

Mr. STAFFORD C.

Mr. TAGUE. Not above $2,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. One gentleman says $2,000 and another says $1,700, what does the gentleman say?

Mr. TAGUE. Seventeen hundred dollars. I want to say, too, Mr. Chairman, after all has been said about the amount of increase the men in the Post Office Department are going to get under this bill that the employees of railway post-office section under this amendment will receive a raise of 16 per cent over that which they are getting at the present time. There has also been a great deal said about the raid on the Treasury and how we are swooping down to get all of this great amount of money out of the pockets of the people.

The Post Office Department is a self-sustaining body and there is no money taken out of the Treasury of the United States to pay any of these salaries. They have had a surplus every year in the Treasury of this department. I want, also, to call to the minds of the Members of this body who recall the debate on the report of the Committee on Ways and Means in the last session, that the fact was brought out then that we were presenting every year to the magazine men of this country and the newspapers of this country over $80,000,000 that was paid out of the earnings of the Post Office Department. Yet when we are asking a raise of salary and wages of men who earn this money there is an objection made and a strong one, too. Now, another question brought out here has been that this is practically a war measure, and the boys are going to the front and fighting for $30 and $40 a month. Yes; Mr. Chairman, they are going to the front—God bless and protect them—and thousands of these same young men who have answered the call to do their duty were in the service of the United States in the Post Office Department and have already gone to the front, and we are trying to help them, too. Now, I believe, Mr. Chairman, that there is no question in the minds of the people of the country that the employees in this branch of the service are entitled to a raise in their salaries. They earn the money, and the increase will not be a drain on the Treasury of the United States.

You have been told that the increases in this bill will cost more than $60,000,000, and figures already presented here show that this item of raise in railway post-office clerks' salaries will cost over $5,000,000. I submit these figures are not correct and will insert in the RECORD figures showing that the amount for compensation to railway postal clerks by an increase of $200 in each grade, based upon the number of clerks actually employed during the fiscal year of 1917, will total not more than $3,759,000. In this one item alone it shows the discrepancy of almost a million and a half. I believe a fair criticism of the figures submitted by several of the Members who have preceded me are inclined to show a somewhat similar discrepancy, and that the increase resulting from the passage of this bill will not reach the amount claimed by its opponents.

Percentage increases in salaries of railway postal clerks if $200 is granted in each grade.

	Per cent.
$200 increase in $900 grade equals	22⅔
$200 increase in $1,000 grade equals	20
$200 increase in $1,100 grade equals	18⅔
$200 increase in $1,200 grade equals	16⅔
$200 increase in $1,300 grade equals	15⅓
$200 increase in $1,400 grade equals	14⅔
$200 increase in $1,500 grade equals	13⅓
$200 increase in $1,600 grade equals	12½
$200 increase in $1,700 grade equals	11¾
$200 increase in $1,800 grade equals	11⅛
$200 increase in $1,900 grade equals	10½
$200 increase in $2,000 grade equals	10

One thousand five hundred dollars is the maximum salary of railway postal clerks; $1,600, $1,700, and $1,800 are clerks in charge.

Average daily wage of railway postal clerks in the various grades and the number in each grade, 1917.

1	$900	915	$2.50
2	1,000	80	2.88
3	1,100	771	3.09
4	1,200	4,153	3.33
5	1,300	1,624	3.61
6	1,400	851	3.88
7	1,500	7,587	4.16
8	1,600	549	4.44
9	1,700	1,872	4.72
10	1,800	413	5.00

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired. Does the gentleman from Illinois make the point of order?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not make the point of order; I withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be again reported.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, regular order; it is too late.

Mr. LARSEN. This is the regular order.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Does not the gentleman rise for recognition in connection with his amendment? And if he is recognized, he has the right to offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recalls that he promised the gentleman to recognize him to offer an amendment, which had escaped the memory of the Chair.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 7, after the word "grade," insert "Provided, That the salary of no carrier in City Delivery Service shall be advanced to a grade or receive such compensation as will permit his salary to exceed the compensation allowed to the assistant postmaster in such office."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, one minute. Am I not entitled to recognition to discuss the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The time was fixed by motion, and it has expired.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have an opportunity to explain the provisions of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes to explain the provisions of the amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry to object, but we must proceed with the consideration of this bill.

Mr. LARSEN. The gentleman will not make any time, I will promise.

Mr. MADDEN. That is all right.

Mr. LARSEN. I have a right to be heard——

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman does not make anything by making threats.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. LARSEN) there were—ayes 3, noes 22.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] A hundred and fifteen gentlemen are present, a quorum, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That assistant postmasters in first and second class post offices, departmental clerks and post-office clerks, laborers, watchmen, printers, chauffeurs, messengers, charwomen, janitors in post offices and per diem employees, and all other postal employees not enumerated in section 1 whose rate of compensation is $1,200 or less per annum shall receive 15 per cent increase in their compensation, and those receiving salaries from $1,200 to and including $1,800 shall receive an increase of 10 per cent: Provided, That substitute letter carriers and substitute clerks shall receive as their compensation 40 cents per hour: Provided further, That hereafter watchmen, messengers, and laborers in first and second class post offices shall be required to work not more than eight hours a day, and that the eight hours of service shall not extend over a longer period than 10 consecutive hours, and the schedules of duty of the watchmen, messengers, and laborers shall be regulated accordingly, and that in cases of emergency or if the needs of the service require, watchmen, messengers, and laborers in first and second class post offices may be required to work in excess of eight hours a day, and for such additional services they shall be paid extra in proportion to their salaries as fixed by law.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend section 2, page 2, line 15, by striking out the words "departmental clerks."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Amend section 2, page 2, line 15, by striking out the words "departmental clerks."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, the reason for that amendment is this: The departmental service is a distinct service from the Postal Service. This bill, in its main features, pertains to the postal and not the departmental service. Some days ago the House passed a bill in which it provided for the salaries of all clerks in the departmental service of the Post Office and, of course, the House does not want now to undertake to——

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will yield, that is provided for in the deficiency bill, is it not?

Mr. MOON. Yes; that is the bill of which I am speaking.

Mr. MADDEN. And ought not to be reenacted.

Mr. MOON. The House does not want to take up and review that matter, and the understanding was when this rule was granted, too, that the motion to strike out those words "departmental clerks" would be made.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to inquire of the gentleman whether the class "janitors in post offices," who are paid out of the sundry civil bill and receive $120 general increase provided for in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill that was passed recently, should not also be eliminated from this bill?

Mr. MOON. I think any departmental clerk or official ought to be stricken from this bill in view of the other bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am referring especially to the class in line 17, page 2, "janitors in post offices."

Mr. MOON. No; they are really under the Treasury Department.

Mr. STAFFORD. And I am directing the attention of the chairman to the fact that they are paid for out of the sundry civil appropriation bill, and, if so, they would be provided for in the general increase of $120 that was carried by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. MOON. They ought to be stricken out too.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as suggested to be amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modify the committee amendment by striking out on page 2, line 17, the words "janitors in post offices."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask my colleague a question. The reason I rose at this time was to ask this question: In the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, my colleague reminds us, there was an increase of $120 for "janitors in post offices." Is that so?

Mr. STAFFORD. There was; and to all those who were in the governmental service except those paid from the postal revenues and from the Treasury to meet the deficits arising when the postal revenues were not adequate.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, then, a janitor receiving $55 a month, which is $660 a year, under that provision in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill would receive $120 increase, which would be $780.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is correct in his mathematics.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And then under this bill he would receive 15 per cent——

Mr. STAFFORD. On $660. Of course, the inquiry that I made of the chairman was whether it was his purpose to give these employees a double increase. He says that is not his purpose.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That, Mr. Chairman, would only give them $870 if they received both increases, which is not a large salary. Indeed, it is a very inadequate salary in these times for a man and his family to live on.

Mr. MOON. Of course, this committee and the committee that brought the bill to the House have the right to legislate on that subject. But, so far as the appropriation is concerned, why, fundamentally, they do not have the right to appropriate for departmental clerks, and janitors in that department would be under the Treasury Department. I made that motion to cover departmental clerks in order to have no conflict with the other bill.

Now, I agree with my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] that these janitors are poorly paid, and ought to be well taken care of. But I thought it my duty to bring that before the House for whatever action they wanted to take.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. As I understood the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] it was to strike out "janitors in post offices."

Mr. STAFFORD. I offered no amendment. The gentleman from Tennessee offered it.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman from Wisconsin called attention to it.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I am going to change my motion again. Before we come to the question of "janitors in post offices," I ask leave to submit the other motion, and then we can take that up afterwards.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LARSEN and Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] another amendment?

Mr. MOON. No. I have no other amendment.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

Mr. MOON. I move, Mr. Chairman, that when the amendments are offered all debate on this section and amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman permit me? Will not the gentleman include in that that all amendments may be offered now, and then they may be pending to be voted on when the time comes?

Mr. MOON. The gentleman can amend my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that all debate on this section——

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, can I be heard in opposition to that?

The CHAIRMAN. When the Chair states it.

Mr. LARSEN. It is not a request for unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. It is on a motion.

Mr. LARSEN. I want to be heard in opposition to the motion.

Mr. MOON. It is not a debatable motion, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Just wait until the Chair states it.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] moves that all debate on section 2 and all amendments thereto shall close in 30 minutes. The motion is not debatable.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma, Mr. CLARK of Florida, and Mr. DALLINGER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] is recognized.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma moves to amend by inserting on page 2, line 18, after the word "employees," the words "including allowances for clerk hire at third-class post offices."

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, in reporting this bill the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads seems to have omitted from the increases the poorest paid employees in the Postal Service, to wit, the clerks at third-class post offices. The compensation of these clerks is not stationary and fixed as that of the usual Government employees. The third-class postmaster has an allowance of from $300 to $800 for clerk hire, $300 being the limit of compensation at the lowest class office and $800 at the highest office. The salaries of the third-class postmaster range from $1,000 to $1,900 per annum. This would make a maximum allowance at the low-grade third-class office for pay of postmasters and clerk hire of not exceeding $1,300, which we must admit is woefully insufficient for the subsistence of two families.

I have consulted with the First Assistant Postmaster General concerning this matter, and he agrees that these employees are about as poorly paid as any in the Postal Service and thinks that if this bill becomes a law these clerks at third-class post offices should be provided for. He has examined this amendment and says it covers the case completely.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. FOSTER. Take a case like this: Suppose in third-class post offices there is allowed for clerical hire, say, $600. Now, how would the gentleman's amendment affect that allowance?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The $600 class?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It would increase his allowance by $90, making it $690.

Mr. FOSTER. It would be $690?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSTER. Supposing you had two of them. Supposing you had $800 and paid each clerk $400?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Then each clerk would get $60 extra.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose the postmaster pays out of his own pocket, which is sometimes done, the additional amount of $200. What would be done?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That would not have any effect on it. The department does not contemplate allowance for clerk hire in the salaries paid third-class postmasters, though, as a rule, this class of postmasters do have to take care of a part of this expense from their salaries. The proposed amendment will correct that injustice to some extent and tends to give these clerks a living wage.

Mr. FOSTER. Your amendment would add 15 per cent to the amount allowed for clerk hire in third-class post offices?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, of course, you know it is optional with the Post Office Department. Heretofore they have been allowing $600, and then there would be 15 per cent. If they would allow $510 they will get just the same, would they not?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. They can not allow the lowest grade office over $300 for clerk hire.

Mr. FOSTER. But suppose it were left optional with the Post Office Department.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That would incur the same additional appropriation, and it would be the difference between tweedledee and tweedledum.

Mr. FOSTER. It is optional.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes; it is optional; but the Post Office Department can not increase them above these amounts. I am informed by the Post Office Department that they would like to have this authority if this bill passes.

Mr. FOSTER. Then they can not go above that?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. They can not go above that. It will involve an expense of $300,000 additional. The allowance now is $2,000,000, and it will increase this amount $300,000 for the poorest-paid class of employees in the service.

Mr. FOSTER. I know that these employees are usually paid very small wages.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. They are the lowest paid clerical employees in the service.

Mr. BARKLEY. The postmasters in these cases have a great many expenses of their own to bear?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes. I have an instance in my own State where a postmaster gets a salary of $1,100. His original allowance for clerk hire was $300, but that has been increased to $400, the maximum for that grade office. This aggregates the magnificent total for salary and help of $1,500. Due to the heavy work at that office it is necessary to employ two clerks, and the postmaster puts in about 10 or 12 hours per day himself. One of these clerks is paid $600 per annum and the other young lady must certainly receive as much as $400 per annum, which would only be $33 per month. This deducted from the total of $1,500 would leave the postmaster the princely sum of $500 a year, or $41.66 per month to maintain his family after working 10 hours a day.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. As I understand this bill, as it is now written, it does not provide any increase at all for clerks in third-class post offices or the postmasters themselves?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No; it does not.

Mr. RUSSELL. It provides for all other clerks in post offices, but the third class gets no increase at all?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Under the provisions of the bill as reported by the committee the fourth-class postmasters get an increase in allowance for their own salaries, but they have no allowance for clerk hire. The clerks in the first and second class offices are taken care of in section 1, but no provision whatever is made for clerks in the third-class offices, whose wages are lower than any of the others.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] make a point of order?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not; because I think it is just and fair that these men should be included.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, if we can have order for a minute, I want to say that I know the anxiety of the House to increase the salaries of everybody. Of course I appreciate the anxiety of my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] to increase the salary of that particular third-class post office, but we must remember that this comes out of the National Treasury.

I want to lay down a few propositions that are undoubtedly correct. The third-class postmaster is getting enough money now. That is the reason why he is not receiving an increase in this bill. There is no increase for the first and second classes. The lowest type of third-class postmaster is the man who gets $1,000. That salary is based upon the receipts of the office, and it is adequate for the mail matter handled. The salary increases from $1,000 to $1,900 as the office progresses in importance and work, finally ripening into a second-class office at $2,000.

Now, the department gives an allowance for these offices in accordance with the status of their work. They have the right to make an allowance up to $800, and they can make whatever allowance is necessary, so that it is a self-evident fact that that third-class postmaster does not now get anything less than he deserves in accordance with the statute that grades the salary from $1,000 to $1,900. Then, again, he gets $500 for rent, and he has $100 for light and fuel, and there is no necessity for increasing the salary of the first, second, and third class offices. There is a reason for increasing the fourth class.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word or two in relation to this amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER]. It seems to me that in view of the fact that the Post Office favors this increase of compensation there is but little force in the suggestion that it is extravagant, and unreasonable.

It is a sufficient demonstration of the merits of this amendment, that it is supported, and I understand recommended, by the Post Office Department. I gather that much from the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER]. This being so, I think that all of us can afford to vote for this amendment, viva voce.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have that amendment reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 38.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. MOON and Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 64, noes 38.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that has been on the desk for some time, and three other amendments were sent up since that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will have to call the attention of the Chair to it when he sends up an amendment. The Chair does not know what is on the desk.

Mr. LARSEN. I would like to be notified when my amendment can be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DALLINGER: Page 2, line 20, after the word "received," strike out "fifteen" and insert in lieu thereof "twenty."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, can we have that amendment read again? I think that is in the third section.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment simply does for the laborers and other employees in the city post offices what the committee has already done in regard to the rural free-delivery carriers who receive less than $1,200. The committee by amendment raised the increase in the compensation of the latter from 15 per cent to 20 per cent, and this does the same by the other postal employees.

Mr. Chairman, as I said on Friday, the question that is before this House now is not a question of raising slaries. It is simply a question of partially preventing a diminution in the actual compensation of a body of faithful Government employees. The fact that Congress for years has refused to do justice to Government employees until the time has come when it takes a large amount of money to do so is no argument against this legislation at all. As well might a man allow his bills to run until they get to be a large amount and then say that he will not pay any of them as to say that this Congress should not do justice now that this matter is before the House.

There is another consideration to which I wish to call the attention of the committee, and that is the connection between unjust compensation and poor service. Every Member of this House knows that the Postal Service of this country has been demoralized for some time. Every Member has had more or less unsatisfactory experience with his own mail. We know that the boys at the front are not hearing from home. I have letters every day from boys at the front who have been over there for months and who have never heard from their parents, although their parents have written them every other day. My colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] to-day called attention to the utterly unreasonable time that it took to get a letter to a major general over there. Now, what is the reason for this unsatisfactory postal service, both at home and abroad? One reason is because the present Postmaster General—and I am not criticizing his motive—has been trying to cut down expenses in order to show a surplus at the expense of impairing the service. He has opposed any proposition to pay the employees what they ought to have, he has refused to allow extra clerks and carriers where business has increased, and he has doubled up rural free-delivery routes and railway-mail routes until the whole postal service is demoralized. You can not overwork men and underpay them and refuse them justice and expect to get good service.

During this great emergency we should try to have the best postal service between the parents at home and the boys at the cantonments in this country. Above all, we should try to have the best possible service between the folks at home and the boys at the western front across the sea regardless of what it costs. This bill simply proposes to do partial justice to the postal employees of the United States, and I trust that this amendment, which is simply in the interest of fair play to the employees in the city offices, will be adopted just as the amendment to section 1 was adopted.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman rise to oppose the amendment?

Mr. GALLIVAN. To favor the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is anyone opposing it?

Mr. RUCKER. I am opposed to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, in opposing the pending amendment I will take this opportunity, in the first place, to say that upon mature reflection I do not believe gentlemen can get any large permanent satisfaction out of criticising a very faithful officer of this Government. I believe the Postmaster General is doing right in trying to economize, and to the extent that he does economize I justify his action and approve of his policies. Nor do I believe that the increasing of the salaries of those now engaged in the Postal Service is going to tend to give us very much more efficient service. If I correctly understood my good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] who just preceded me, he thinks that to increase a salary will tend to secure more efficient service. I doubt that. If there is a man in this whole country to-day who will render more efficient service if you will give him a 20 per cent increase than he will without it, that man ought to be kicked by a Missouri mule clear out of the service, because he is not fit to be in it. He ought to give the best and most efficient service he can or quit the job.

Mr. Chairman, I think the increase of compensation provided for in this bill is enough. So far as I am concerned, I am not going to vote for 20 per cent increase, because I think a 15 per cent increase is as much as should be provided, although I have a whole lot of Democrats in third-class offices in my district who, perhaps, would like to have me vote for this amendment. I will vote against it, because I think that is the proper vote to cast.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think that is in order, with the amendment pending.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I shall have to object.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, I understood we had 20 minutes on this section.

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty minutes. There are 17 minutes now remaining.

Mr. LARSEN. If five minutes are given to the gentleman from Massachusetts will that be taken out of the 17 minutes time?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. DYER. I ask that the gentleman have five minutes regardless of the time remaining.

Mr. MOON. You can not do that.

Mr. DYER. You can by unanimous consent.

Mr. MOON. You can not get unanimous consent.

Mr. DYER. I ask for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] may proceed for five minutes, the time not to be taken out of the allotted time. Is there objection?

Mr. MOON. There is objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee objects.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I should like to ask how I can get five minutes?

Mr. MOON. The gentleman can get it on the next section if he will talk about the section.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I should like to reply to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER], who has just spoken, and I would like to reply now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. DALLINGER) there were—ayes 22, noes 52.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL], a member of the committee, is recognized to offer an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANDALL:

On page 3, line 1, after the word "offices," insert "and railway postal clerks who perform service eight hours per day six days per week."

On page 3, line 5, insert "railway postal clerks" after the word "messengers."

On page 3, line 7, after the word "messengers," insert "railway postal clerks."

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment applies technically only to railway postal clerks who are employed in what are known as terminal railway post offices. It makes the eight-hour day uniform as to all employees who are employed in post offices, whether they are clerks, carriers, or laborers. There is a class of railway postal clerks who are employed exclusively in terminal post-office service, who have an eight-hour day, but that eight-hour day may run through the entire 24 hours. This amendment provides that they shall be employed only 8 hours out of 10 hours, the same as clerks, carriers, and laborers. It simply makes the law uniform.

Mr. SNYDER. Is it possible to do that in the Railway Mail Service?

Mr. RANDALL. It is possible in terminal railway post offices. It would not be possible on the trains, but in the post offices it is possible and should be done if clerks distributing mail side by side are to be treated uniformly. I am very well aware that railway mail clerks, especially those assigned to terminal service, are not many in number and have not a legion of champions here, like the rural-route men, the post-office clerks, and city carriers have, but I appeal to the House to do justice. This amendment costs nothing, but it gives a class of employees treatment in hours of service on a par with their associates.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RANDALL) there were—ayes 11, noes 31.

Accordingly, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, after the word "law," in line 11, page 3, the following proviso: "Provided, That all postmasters of the third class shall be allowed at least one clerk at a salary at not less than $480 per annum."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make it?

Mr. MOON. Yes; I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 24, after the word "hour," add "Provided further, That village-delivery carriers shall receive $75 per month."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that. If the gentleman just wishes to talk for a while, I will withhold the point of order.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I am in dead earnest about this. I do not care to talk about it if the point of order is going to be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 19, after the word "compensation," strike out "is $1,200 or less" and insert "is $800 or less per annum shall receive 20 per cent increase in their compensation, and those whose compensation is in excess of $800 and not more than $1,200."

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, that amendment simply increases the wages to be paid to the low-paid employees provided for in this section up to 20 per cent, from 15 per cent; that is, those that receive less than $800 per annum. It leaves those that receive over $800 and up to $1,200 at the same rate as provided in this section of the bill. There are a lot of employees in these smaller post offices who receive less than $800 a year—assistant clerks, janitors, firemen, charwomen, and employees of that kind—and this proposed amendment simply increases their pay by 20 per cent, whether they are paid by the day, month, or year. For instance, it would give the man who now receives $500, $600; the man who now receives $600, $720; and the man who now gets $800 would receive, if this amendment is adopted, $960 per year. I think we all understand by this time that these poorly paid post-office employees are entitled to an increase in compensation, and the increase asked by this amendment is a reasonable increase. The postmasters of these third-class post offices have had entailed upon them, under the law enacted by the last Congress which went into effect during the last year, a duty that I have not heard referred to by anyone who has discussed this bill. There is established in every county in the United States a central accounting post office, that must keep accounts with every post office and rural carrier in that county, and that work is entailed upon the postmaster and his chief clerk, and not one cent of extra compensation is allowed for it. On page 25 of the Postmaster General's report of this year we find the following:

Under this statute passed last year the smaller post offices, known as district offices, now obtain their postage stamps and render their accounts through a central accounting post office in each county.

I wonder if there is any reduction in the expense of the Post Office Department here in this city because of the pitching over of all this extra work onto the local postmasters. There are in the congressional district which I represent 160 post offices and 115 rural routes, and every one of these rural routes and every one of the postmasters send their accounts into and obtain all their supplies from the central office. I have been in one of these offices there at 9 and 10 and 11 o'clock at night and have found the postmaster and the chief clerk poring over the little accounts that have been sent in, letters by the dozen from postmasters calling for stamps and supplies, and so on, and not one cent of extra compensation has been allowed them for that additional work.

These postal employees are the class that ought to be taken care of. Every man who receives less than $800 a year as a postal employee is receiving less than a living wage. We have in my district 160 post offices and 115 rural routes, and many of those rural carriers receive far less than adequate pay. I will give three cases from the actual data furnished me as an example. Here is one that has to use an automobile and a two-horse team. His expenses run as high as $71.75 in a single month, leaving him less than $30 to live on. Here is another that uses a one-horse conveyance, and his expense amounted to $40 in the month of September and $34 in the month of October, showing that these men are all working for less than a living wage, remembering that these men have families to support. I appeal here for those low-paid employees receiving less than $800 a year and ask that they be granted the 20 per cent of increase.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to say that I represent a district somewhat similar to his, and there are cases there of central accounting postmasters, some of them of the fourth class, who are working 14 and 15 hours a day, and some of them are threatening to resign and will resign unless they get some relief. I want to see them treated justly, too.

Mr. ROBBINS. The clerk in the post office I refer to told me that he was going to resign because of the overwork. Another thing that has not been alluded to in this debate is this: You talk about the fact that these men are not paid, but I call attention to a large part of the population served by the rural routes that is not now being served at all, because the rural carriers are stopping, going away from their routes, and I know one route in the northern part of Westmoreland County, Pa., in my district, that is 10 miles long, and there has not been a rural mail delivery over that by a rural carrier for three months. The patrons have written me complaining that the rural carrier had abandoned the service and that all the fourth-class offices that formerly served these people had been closed when the rural service had been installed and now that the service of the carrier had ceased they had no mail delivery whatever and that they were 10 miles from a post office.

The mail is delivered there by the farmers taking turns by carrying it to the receiving boxes along the route because the rural carrier can not carry the mail at the miserable compensation that is paid by the United States Government for that service.

Let me give a few figures which were furnished me by these mail carriers to show how utterly impossible it is under present conditions for them to carry the mail at the compensation the Government pays for this service to rural carriers.

During the month of November this carrier, who uses a horse and conveyance, was compelled to give $32 for his horse feed, $4.80 for horseshoeing, and $6.50 for repairs to his buggy, or a total of $43.30, leaving him out of the $100 compensation the sum of $56.70 upon which to live and support his family.

Another carrier, who uses an automobile only, in September last he paid $24.20 for gasoline, $18 for auto tires, $11 for repairs, and $3 for oil, or a total of $56.20, leaving him the sum of $43.80 for his wages.

During November he paid $24.50 for gasoline, $21 for auto tires, $12 for repairs, and $3.10 for oil, or a total of $60.60, leaving him $39.40 upon which to live.

Take the example of another carrier, who uses both horse and wagon and automobile. In August, September, and October last, and it is a hard, mountainous route, the amount expended was $191.56, leaving him $108.44 for the three months, or $36.13 per month.

Another one who carries by auto out of Greensburg, Pa., over improved roads, under the best conditions, expends $42.17 a month, leaving him $57.83.

I might multiply these examples, because I have scores of them that were furnished me by the mail carriers, but I filed a large number of these at the time of the hearings on this bill, and they are found on pages 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17 of the hearings given in detail, which was compiled by the carriers, showing the amount received and the expenses connected with carrying the mail over the rural routes, and showing the small amount that is left in each instance to them at the end of each month upon which they must live and support their families according to the American standard of living, which is the only one that any Government employees should have.

Mr. Chairman, these men live in civilized communities; they have families; they are human beings, and they ought to be treated as such; and they ought not to be humbled in the presence of their neighbors and their children excluded from school for the want of presentable clothing or their families starved at home for the want of the necessaries of life; and it must be apparent to everyone here that a rural carrier can not support a family in a proper manner on the wages that are paid to these carriers.

Many of the rural carriers have quit summarily, and the routes are in some instances supplied temporarily and in many instances are entirely without service. Hence I make this plea not only for the carriers but for the good of the mail service and for the patrons who live in the agricultural districts and small communities of the country and who are now without mail service. I have filed protests with the Post Office Department and have always received courteous acknowledgments and pleasant promises that the matter would be investigated and given due consideration, but the Post Office Department can not reestablish this rural service unless they are enabled to pay the carriers and the men who must do the work proper, adequate, and just compensation for the service to be rendered.

These carriers can not engage in any other kind of work. The horses they use are unable to do hauling or delivery work or cultivate farms or any other labor after the hard driving required by the rural carriers, and these carriers themselves after driving 24 or 30 miles are not in condition to take up additional labor, and they should not either be expected or required to do so.

There was a time when the rural carrier could make something by carrying packages and doing small errands for the patrons along the route, but this entirely disappeared by reason of the installation of the rural parcel post over its routes. Now all packages are carried at postal rates. The carrier receives nothing for this extra service; it is all paid to the Government. Yet the package business on the rural routes is increasing enormously. The farmers not only send their products to market, which is one of the beneficial purposes of this service, but the merchant sends by parcel post commodities to his patrons in the country. This is exactly what the Government wanted to accomplish. It is a benefit to the merchant and increased benefit to the patrons of the Rural Parcel Post Service. But, Mr. Chairman, it is very burdensome on the carrier to carry these packages and the mail, for which the Governmental is paid, but for which the rural carrier receives nothing—it is now all mail matter. He is required to keep up a stronger wagon, keep a larger conveyance, and his horses and conveyances are worn out and broken down by this extra heavy traffic, for all of which the Government receives compensation, but not an extra cent has been allowed to the carrier on this account.

This amendment, with the other amendments offered, is to take care of these underpaid Government employees. Why anyone should hesitate to vote for so meritorious a proposition I can not understand. I therefore beg of you, gentlemen of the House, to adopt this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to state that Mr. MOORE of Pennsylania is very much in favor of this amendment and asked me to present it, as he was compelled to attend a committee meeting at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. ROBBINS) there were—ayes 43, noes 41.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Nineteen gentleman have arisen, not a sufficient number.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, page 2, line 24, the figures "40" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "50," and in support of that, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 24, strike out the figures "40" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "50."

Mr. JUUL. Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, part of the section which I seek to amend is as follows:

That substitute letter carriers and substitute clerks shall receive as their compensation 40 cents per hour.

If a substitute carrier or a substitute clerk worked the entire full week his pay would be approximately $19 per week, but he does not work the full week. He sits in the big post offices subject to call, and for the time he is waiting he receives nothing and the condition in some offices is such that the clerks have repeatedly come and sought to obtain leave of absence for months at a time so they might earn living wages elsewhere while the time they have to put in as substitute carriers might pass by until they could become regular. Now, we have been talking here about the war and appropriating money for the war.

I want to tell you there is something worse than war, and that is slow starvation, waiting week by week for the time to pass to know that you may receive enough money so that you can get three square meals a day, a place to sleep, and sufficient clothing to cover you; and I tell you that to-day there are not only dozens but hundreds of men who under the old pay of 35 to 40 cents an hour are unable to eat regularly. I submit to you that the United States Government, represented by you gentlemen here, ought not to want people to sit on waiting benches in the post offices of this country at a rate of nothing an hour and take the chances of making the 40 cents per hour when finally put to work. If you give them 50 cents an hour for the number of hours that they might work in a week they might make $18 a week, and I submit that you gentlemen know what an increase of 5 cents per day means when everything you buy is increased 100 per cent in many cases. I appeal to you, gentlemen, to strike out the figure "40" for these substitute carriers and clerks, and make it "50" cents. It is just, it is fair; you can afford to do it, and you ought to do it. You want nobody to serve the Government and starve while they are working and waiting. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 11, insert, at the end of the section, the following: "Provided further, That the increases herein provided shall apply only to such employees who are paid from the postal revenues and sums which may be advanced from the Treasury to meet deficiencies in postal revenues."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill providing for increases we excepted all employees paid from the postal revenues or from sums advanced from the Treasury to meet deficiencies in postal revenues. The phraseology of this section is broad enough so as to include some who are covered in the general increase of $120 to all employees. For instance, janitors in post offices are paid out of the sundry civil appropriation bill and will receive the $120 increase. Chauffeurs may be connected with the Postal Service and paid out of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. There may be per diem employees, and unquestionably the committee only desires to extend this increase to those who are paid out of the postal revenues. The purpose of the amendment is to carry that into effect.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask to have the amendment again reported.

Mr. LARSEN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia objects. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That postmasters of the fourth class shall receive the same compensation as provided by law prior to the passage of the act of Congress "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses and other purposes," approved October 3, 1917, except that they shall receive 100 per cent of the cancellations up to and including $100 quarterly.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOON: Amend section 3, line 18, page 3, by striking out the words "up to and including $100 quarterly" and insert after the word "cancellations" the words "on the first $100 or less per quarter instead of on the first $50 or less per quarter."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say, in reference to the amendment, that fourth-class postmasters—that is, postmasters who receive less than $1,000 for their services—that a great many of them do not receive more than $12, $20, or $30. Many of the offices have little or no work to do at all, and are usually adjuncts to stores or business places. Under the law now they are paid—and I read from the statute so that the gentlemen may know just what these officials get if they have overlooked it—as follows:

The compensation of postmasters of the fourth class shall be fixed upon the basis of the whole of the box rents collected at their offices and commissions upon the amount of canceled postage-due stamps and postage stamps, * * * stamped envelopes, postal cards, * * * canceled, on matter actually mailed at their offices, and on amounts received from waste paper, dead newspapers, printed matter, and twine sold, at the following rates, namely:

On the first $50 or less per quarter, 100 per cent; on the next $100 or less per quarter, 60 per cent; on the next $200 or less per quarter, 50 per cent; and on all the balance, 40 per cent; the same to be ascertained and allowed by the Auditor for the Post Office Department in the settlement of the accounts of such postmasters upon their sworn quarterly returns.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. Does this section give any relief to fourth-class offices that have been made central accounting offices—more than it does to any other fourth-class office?

Mr. MOON. Not more than any other.

Mr. LANGLEY. Why did not the committee recognize the fact that their work has been increased much more than the others and make due provision for that?

Mr. MOON. If the gentleman will wait until I get through, I will reach his question. I do not want to speak on that now.

Now, this amendment that I have offered here is to take the place of this language:

On the first $50 or less per quarter, 100 per cent.

That is what they get now, and the amendment gives them on the first $100 per quarter, 100 per cent. So it is an increase in that quarter of double the amount they are now getting. Where they receive $50 now they will get $100.

Mr. LANGLEY. But why did not the committee make some allowance in favor of the fourth-class offices that have been made central accounting offices, where their work has been nearly doubled, while the work of the others has not been?

Mr. MOON. There is a difference of opinion whether their work has been doubled or not. As a matter of fact, it is not so, as I am informed by the department.

Mr. LANGLEY. The department does not know anything about it, if it says that.

Mr. MOON. I am sure that what the gentleman knows personally about a place in Kentucky ought to control the whole country.

Mr. LANGLEY. I am not claiming to know about the whole country in this respect, but I do know of the offices in my section of Kentucky, and I am speaking for them. I know postmasters who pay part of their own salary to their clerks since this central accounting scheme came into operation. Some of them work 14 or 15 hours a day themselves in addition to the help they employ.

Mr. MOON. Is the gentleman going to ask a question or make a speech in my time?

Mr. LANGLEY. I would like to make a speech if I could.

Mr. MOON. I will let you quit right now.

Mr. LANGLEY. That is the gentleman's privilege, as he has the floor.

Mr. MOON. Now, Mr. Chairman, these fourth-class postmasters receive statements from other offices once a month, and tabulate them and send them on to Washington. It does not take two hours to do it.

Mr. RUCKER. I believe the gentleman made a statement which he did not intend to make a moment ago.

Mr. MOON. Let us see if I did.

Mr. RUCKER. That is what I am going to do if I can. I understood the gentleman to say that the amendment now pending at the Clerk's desk would double the amount that a fourth-class postmaster now receives on the first $100 of cancellation.

Mr. MOON. Oh, no. I stated it would double the amount on the first $100 received.

Mr. RUCKER. On the first $100?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. Is that right?

Mr. MOON. That is right. He now receives 100 per cent on the first $50, and under the amendment he would receive 100 per cent on the first $100.

Mr. RUCKER. What is he now receiving on the first $50?

Mr. MOON. One hundred per cent.

Mr. RUCKER. I want to see if I am not right about this. On the first $50 he gets 100 per cent, on the next $50, and not exceeding, he gets 60 per cent, which would be $30, would it not, and $30 and $50 will be $80. Now, then, under this provision on the first $100 he gets 100 per cent. Is not that $20 more than $80. It is $80 of an increase instead of $50.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RUCKER to the Moon amendment: Amend the amendment by inserting after the word "thereof" the following: "Such postmasters shall hereafter be allowed the sum of $100 per annum, payable quarterly, for rent, fuel, and light: Provided, That whenever such post offices are kept in residences or in rooms in which other business is usually conducted the postmaster may, in his discretion, make such reasonable allowance for rent, fuel, and light, not exceeding $100 per annum."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment, let me state to the committee, and I can state it in a few words, is to supply what I think ought to be supplied to fourth-class postmasters in order to enable them to perform their duty to the public with efficiency.

I do not want any gentleman here to make the mistake that is sometimes made in connection with these matters. I know there are thousands and thousands of fourth-class post offices in the United States that do not need or merit any especial legislation in their behalf. They are the little offices, sometimes kept in private residences, sometimes in storerooms, in drug stores, in grocery stores, and in dry goods stores, and so forth. They are usually solicited by the postmaster in order to help sell his goods, whatever they may be. The class of offices that I am trying to benefit by this amendment is a better or higher class of offices, those offices which in a few years in the ordinary course of affairs will become third-class offices, offices which now pay from $600 to $700, $800, or $900.

When the office becomes a third-class office the Government pays for rent and fuel and light, the rent being at the usual rental value of the property in the town. I have presented here a plain, flat proposition to allow all postmasters who maintain post offices in separate buildings separate and apart from any other business—in obedience to the will, or very probably the demand, of the community, $100 to compensate them for rent and fuel and light.

Now, mark you, the $100 will not cover it all, because $5 a month for rent is too low, and $30 for fuel for a year and $10 for light is too low. I am not trying to wholly reimburse the postmasters, but I am trying to give them $100 more than they now get, because I believe they ought to have the additional allowance and thus be encouraged to maintain a post office where the public business may be transacted.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. LANGLEY. I am in favor of the proposition of the gentleman, but I do not think it goes far enough. In addition, he does not provide especially for the class of postmasters that I referred to a moment ago—those who have an accounting office. I have an amendment that I want to offer on that point.

Mr. RUCKER. I will say to the gentleman that it has not been the policy of the Post Office Department to allow any extra pay on account of an office being made an accounting office. That applies to second and third class offices as well as fourth-class offices. The pending substitute also provides that where a post office is kept in a store building or a residence, perhaps, the Postmaster General may, in his discretion, allow a reasonable sum for rent, leaving it wholly to his discretion. However that discretion may be used it will probably be used wisely, because, in my judgment, they ought to have but little compensation. But in a nice little town where there is seven or eight hundred population, where there are two or three banks, where the cancellations amount to enough to pay the postmaster under existing law $750, for instance, I believe we ought to furnish a room for him to do business in, especially where he maintains that room. I know that all over the country little post offices are kept in that way. In my district there are a number of them.

Let me say to you that I have some very pathetic letters from postmasters of this class, one man suggesting that his salary during the last calendar year was but $750, but that the work, by reason of the parcel post, made it necessary for him to have his wife as his assistant most of the year. The total pay is $760, out of which he has to pay rent and fuel and light for the building in which he keeps his post office. I know that man well, and I know that his story is true, and he tells me he is suffering from an affliction and that he tried to save enough money to enable him to go a hospital to be treated; but he did not have the money to do it in that quarter, and in the last quarter he has been trying by the closest economy to save the amount of money necessary to defray his expenses at a hospital. Two people ought not to be required to work for the public a whole year, furnish rent free an office, furnish fuel and light for such a pitiful sum. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, how much time has the gentleman from Missouri left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, under the rule adopted by the House limiting debate, all time has expired. No; I am mistaken about that. I move to limit debate on this section to 10 minutes further.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MONTAGUE). The Chair did not catch the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MOON. I will modify that, and move, Mr. Chairman, that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be concluded in 20 minutes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MOON. I will make it 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be concluded in 20 minutes. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. THOMPSON. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FIELDS. I want to know if the Chair got the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee to make it 30 minutes?

Mr. FOSTER. I move to amend. Mr. Chairman, by making it 20 minutes.

Mr. LANGLEY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LANGLEY. I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LANGLEY. I have an amendment that I desire to offer to this section, and I want to inquire whether I would still have an opportunity?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee and make it 15 minutes.

Mr. LANGLEY. I thought the Chair had recognized me to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not recognize anybody during a division. A division is called for. The question, as the Chair understands it, is the motion to extend the time of this debate on this section and all amendments thereto by 10 minutes, making it 20 minutes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. "Thirty minutes" the gentleman from Tennessee said.

Mr. MOON. My motion was that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto should close in 30 minutes. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] moved to amend by making it 10 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. I moved to substitute 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The division is upon the original motion.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make this point of order, that all of these substitutes and amendments were out of order, because we were in the act of dividing on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already ruled that such motions are out of order.

Mr. THOMPSON. I want to find out whether the motion was 20 minutes or 30 minutes.

Mr. WALSH. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. THOMPSON. I want to find out. The gentleman can not cut me off in that way, even is he is from Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes, and on that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMPSON] demands a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 103, noes 10.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] will be adopted. I had a similar amendment in my hand which I intended to offer, and therefore I am glad to support the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri. I believe it is just and right. The Government pays for fuel and light and rent for first-class post offices, where the Government also furnishes the office and the equipment and pays all the expenses. The Government pays the expenses of second-class post offices in the same way, and it pays the expenses of third-class post offices by paying rent, fuel, and light.

The Government in practically all the places where first-class post offices are located, and in many places where the second-class post offices are located, owns a public building, and in addition to providing the building itself provides all the furnishings and equipment in the building, including fuel and light and every convenience and comfort necessary for the transaction of the public business. The postmasters, therefore, at these first-class and second-class offices are furnished all their necessary equipment, and the postmasters at the third-class offices are furnished their rent, light, and fuel, but it is very different with the postmaster at the fourth-class post office.

When it come to the fourth-class postmasters—and they are as deserving as the first, second, or third class postmasters, but they receive very different treatment at the hands of the Government, because all the conveniences that the Government can furnish are given to the first and second class post offices, and third-class post offices receive pretty fair treatment, whereas no provision is made for the fourth-class post offices at all—the fourth-class postmaster has to provide the house in which his office is located, all equipment, fuel, light, and everything else, and the remuneration he receives is in very many instances small. While others are being considered here it is time to do something for these faithful and deserving public servants. They are entitled to the allowances proposed, and I trust they will receive it. I make this appeal in the interest of justice and fair play to these postmasters of small offices. They receive but little. Give them this very reasonable allowance. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. MOON. Does this amendment which the gentleman is advocating leave it to the discretion of the Postmaster General or does the provision require the payment of this $100 a year?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The provision requires the payment of $100 a year except under certain conditions, when the post offices are in stores, residences, or things of that kind, and then it leaves it to the discretion of the Postmaster General.

Mr. STEVENSON. Where the post office is in a separate building.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Where the post office is in a separate building, the amendment gives $100 a year.

Mr. MOON. In a great many places where the salary as fixed under the law does not amount to more than $25 a year, does the gentleman think it fair that there should be an allowance of $100 a year for rent?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. No; that would be covered under the discretion given the Postmaster General, and he would have to investigate that.

Mr. MOON. Does not the gentleman think the Postmaster General ought to be allowed full discretion and control?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. This amendment, I think, gives discretion and control to the Postmaster General under the circumstances suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee, as I understood it when read by the Clerk from the desk; but where it is a separate office, and where a considerable building is required and considerable equipment has to be provided because the volume of the business makes it necessary, then it provides that this appropriation of $100 a year shall be made for rent, fuel, and lights, which would not in many cases be a sufficient sum under those circumstances; but the postmaster himself would, even then, in many cases have to pay a considerable part of his bill for rent, fuel, light, and equipment out of his own pocket, as he pays it out of his own pocket now. I say that these fourth-class postmasters are entitled to some consideration along this line, and I sincerely hope Members will give serious consideration to this amendment and vote for it in justice to these efficient and faithful servants of the Government. [Applause.]

I understand the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] will offer an amendment in reference to the situation where a fourth-class post office is also a central accounting office. That is another phase of this situation deserving attention, and I hope that matter, when presented by him, will have serious consideration.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman from Mississippi yield?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. If I have the time.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I just want to point out that the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] a few minutes ago has some force in it. Take the case of a fourth-class postmaster receiving $25 or $30 a year; he could very well undertake to build some little building in which to maintain his post office, and in that event under this amendment he would be absolutely entitled to the $100.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. No; I think he would come under the second provision of the amendment, which leaves it to the discretion of the Postmaster General. The Postmaster General would not permit a subterfuge to be resorted to, but would decide each case on its real merits.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. But that is only where the office is in a store or residence.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. If he built a little addition to his residence or store it would still be discretionary with the Postmaster General whether to make the allowance or not. I think we could safely trust the Postmaster General to take care of the Government's interest and at the same time do justice to the fourth-class postmasters under this amendment if adopted. I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. He might make it a separate building.

Mr. RUCKER. Suppose a man does want to build a little separate building. If he puts up a building that the people of the community will tolerate for a post office, he ought to have rent for it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. As suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], there are many of these offices—I think I have as many of them as any Member of this House—where the compensation does not amount to more than $30 or $40 or $50 a year. Now, to allow the postmaster $100 a year in addition for rent would be entirely out of proportion to the importance of the office, and would be an imposition on the Government.

Mr. RUCKER. Is not every one of the offices where the salary is so small maintained in a store?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Many of them are maintained in dwelling houses.

Mr. RUCKER. But a man would not go to the expense of putting up another house simply for the sake of this allowance.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes; he would to get the hundred dollars.

Mr. RUCKER. I do not think he would.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I wish to offer, but during the parliamentary wrangle which occurred a little while ago I did not get the opportunity to offer it. I desire to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be recognized after the pending amendment is disposed of.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I want to read this amendment:

Such postmasters shall hereafter be allowed the sum of $100 per annum, payable quarterly, for rent, fuel, and lights: Provided, That whenever such post offices are kept in residences or in rooms in which other business is usually conducted the Postmaster General may, in his discretion, make such reasonable allowance for rent, fuel, and light, not exceeding $100 per annum, as he deems just.

As has been intimated, if you give this $100 extra, in addition to the 100 per cent proposed by the amendment that I have offered, that will increase the salary 100 per cent on the first quarter and then will give this $100 extra, and you will not find any of these little post offices any longer in stores or residences. The man will simply build himself a little shack in the corner of his lot, which may not cost him over $20, and will draw $100 a year from the Government and get this 100 per cent increase, and it will be one of the best-paying things in the Government.

Mr. MADDEN. There are over 40,000 of these offices, and $100 a year to each one will be $4,000,000.

Mr. MOON. I do not assume to reflect on the judgment of the House in any way, but while we have made some pretty wild movements about this proposition, in my opinion none would be more shameful than the adoption of a thing like this. You gentlemen all feel that you are very strongly backed in your movement about this overwhelming increase of salaries that you propose over and above the very liberal proposition provided in the bill. I want to tell you that there are communications coming to our committee room in this hour of peril and danger to our country that are more patriotic than following the lead of the postmasters, carriers, and postal clerks. I want them to have ample compensation and no more. To-day I had a letter from a very patriotic and capable citizen who lives 8 miles from a post office. He said that the farmers in his section of the country who have sent their sons to war, but can not go themselves, feel that the expenses in the Post Office Department and all departments of the Government ought to be retrenched and the money put into munitions of war. He suggested that we wipe out the Rural Free Delivery Service entirely during the war; that the people in the country can get along without it while we are fighting the enemy; and that would save the Government $53,000,000, which would help pay the expenses of the war. He suggested that we take away five out of the seven or nine deliveries in the great cities, which would save $50,000,000 more. And you, gentlemen, in the midst of the most perilous conditions that have ever affected the world are absolutely taking the money out of the Treasury and giving an increase in salaries, not temporary but permanent, to nearly every official of this Government. I am for this bill. I reported it by direction of the committee, and I favor it, but this bill as it came from the committee has added about $25,000,000 to the salaries of the postal officials. We thought that was enough. If you persist in the amendments that have been offered and pass those now proposed, I shall be forced at the end of this bill, in order to cover the expenses that it carries, to move an appropriation of more than $50,000,000 for salaries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed five minutes.

Mr. MOON. I do not want any more time.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be permitted to answer a few questions.

Mr. MOON. I do not want any time, and all debate has been exhausted on this section, and I ask for a vote.

Mr. RUCKER. I have another amendment that I want to offer.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Alabama an amendment by way of substitute?

Mr. ALMON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that I reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to say a word. The paragraph that is under consideration is to provide an increase of compensation to fourth-class postmasters. Their present compensation is based upon the cancellations, carying in percentage according to the amount of cancellations. The amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] provides for something of an entirely different character. It provides for an allowance to these fourth-class postmasters for rent, light, and heat. Under existing law there is no authority whatsoever for paying any allowance to fourth-class postmasters for rent, light, and heat. There is, however, authority at law for making an allowance to postmasters for rent, light, and heat in the first, second, and third class offices.

The CHAIRMAN. If we have an increase of compensation by way of light and allowance for heat and rent, would that increase the compensation?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, this provision alone relates to compensation for services of fourth-class postmasters and is limited to the existing law in the way of computing it. The committee brings in an amendment that seeks to change the present basis of compensation. If you are going to carry the rule to the extent intimated by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole, then you would make in order an amendment that would provide for his living expenses. You could say that the fourth-class postmaster should receive an allowance for the support of himself, his wife, and his children, and as many other relatives as you see fit. Certainly the Chair would not hold such an amendment to be germane, and yet, following out the logic of the intimation of the Chair, that this allowance in the way of rent, light, and heat would be germane, it would follow necessarily that an allowance for his own support, for the meals that he would take in the post office, or for traveling expenses from the post office to his home, expenses of every character, would be germane. There is no allowance under existing law granted fourth-class postmasters for light, rent, and heat, and if the Chair would hold this amendment to be in order he would have to hold one granting an allowance for any character of support or maintenance of the fourth-class postmasters. The Chair would have to hold in order an allowance for fixtures and furniture, and if you were to go to the extreme you would hold in order an amendment for an allowance to authorize the postmaster to purchase the real estate on which the post office was located, or to pay him an allowance for wall paper, for carpets, for beverages, or any character of expenditure. I submit that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I submit that this is not an appropriation bill, as the gentleman argues, but is a legislative bill. Then, again, this provision seeks to increase the compensation of fourth-class postmasters and therefore is directly in harmony with the text of the paragraph reported by the committee. The text which this seeks to amend is clearly subject to a point of order, and if that is subject to a point of order, propositions to amend it are in order. I submit to the Chair that it is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, may I say a word on this point of order? I would say in reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] that this is not an appropriation bill, that this suggestion has no significance in this connection. The question of the germaneness of an amendment is a principle that applies to any other bill, as well as to an appropriation bill, and the only question in connection with the amendment under consideration is whether it is germane to the subject matter of this particular section. As to whether this section is out of order, or not, brings up another principle. It would be out of order but for the rule, but the rule makes in order the section and all germane amendments to the same. I submit that the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri goes outside of the action contemplated by the section. The section provides for an increase of compensation of fourth-class postmasters within certain limits, and in a certain prescribed manner, and it would be perfectly competent to offer germane amendments to this plan of increase and within those limits, but you can not go outside of those limits and submit a system of allowances for these fourth-class postmasters not contemplated by the original terms and purpose of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment to the amendment is not germane, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I am going to offer an amendment which even the gentleman from Tennessee will admit is in order. I move to strike out the $100 in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee and insert $150, and I want to be heard on that.

Mr. MOON. Offered where?

Mr. RUCKER. On the gentleman's amendment; I do not know where. I will ask the Clerk to read the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Moon amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RUCKER to the Moon amendment. Strike out "$100" where it appears the second time and insert in lieu thereof "$150."

Mr. MOON. What sort of a looking thing would it be when that is done?

Mr. RUCKER. I really do not know, but it will look just as well as it will with the amendment the gentleman has offered. I will tell the gentleman that. Mr. Chairman, I want to amend my motion so as to strike out the "100"——

Mr. MOON. Let us have a vote.

Mr. RUCKER. No; I am going to talk on this amendment. I want to amend the Moon amendment by striking out "100" in both places and inserting "150."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend just a moment. The figures only appear once.

Mr. RUCKER. That is the place I want the figures "100" to go out. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to present a few commonplace remarks here. A marvelous condition exists. I heard the distinguished gentleman, parliamentarian, and statesman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] on Friday prove by the record which he held in his hand that it cost a rural carrier in his district about $700 a year to equip himself. Is not that right?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is on those routes——

Mr. RUCKER. On routes near where some of these fourth-class postmasters live.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. On those routes where a man has to provide both a motor car and two horses, but not on all.

Mr. RUCKER. Seven hundred dollars necessary expense, where they only get $1,200 for doing the work; and yet the gentleman stood here and told us with pathetic eloquence that moved the House about the condition of the poor rural carrier in his district, due to the high prices prevailing everywhere; and yet when it comes to men filling other places—public servants—in order to defeat them the gentleman says that men somewhere, perhaps in Virginia, would take advantage of the phraseology of the amendment offered by me and build houses for $25 per house and rent them to the Government at $100 per year. My God, is everything high down there in Virginia, except building houses? [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, if this committee wants to defeat this amendment, why, defeat it. But I insist that it ought to be on reason and logic and not such argument as that made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], because, I tell you, where it costs $50 or more to feed a horse one month it will cost more than $25 to build a house which even the citizens of a Virginia community would permit a Virginia postmaster to maintain a post office in. It is rot to make such argument, and no one will be deceived by it, I hope. Now, I want to pay my respects to the chairman of this committee [Mr. MOON], the distinguished jurist, who asked me in what sort of condition this amendment would leave his bill. Why, my God, it can not be worse disjointed than it is now. Any kind of change would improve its appearance.

Mr. MOON. Does not the gentleman think it would rather deform a bill when he——

Mr. RUCKER. With the improvement my amendment would make, this bill as amended would make the whole country smile like the smile on the gentleman's face, that never comes off except when he occasionally gets in a colloquy with gentlemen on the other side of the aisle. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished jurist and logician who wrote this bill—presumably because, I am sure, he would not let anybody else write one of his bills, nor will he allow anybody to improve his bill—this gentleman tells the House seriously that the amendment he has offered doubles the amount that the fourth-class postmasters get on the first $100 of cancellation under existing law, and I tell him he is wrong——

Mr. MOON. I want to say this to the gentleman——

Mr. RUCKER. His amendment only provides an increase of $20 per quarter more than such postmasters now receive under existing law—an increase of $80 per year for the poorest paid of all Government employees.

Mr. MOON. The language of this bill is not exactly as it was given to the printer and is dubious, and the purpose of the amendment I offered was to make it clear that they would get not 50 per cent of the first $100 salary received, but the whole of it.

Mr. RUCKER. Does not your proposition simply give the fourth-class postmaster $20 a quarter more than he gets now?

Mr. MOON. Not by quarters. As the proposition now stands in the present law, on the first $50 collected the first quarter he would get 100 per cent; under the amendment he would get 100 per cent not on the first $50, but the first $100.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUCKER. I ask five minutes more time, because the gentleman has taken up the best half of my time in making that speech.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the gentleman has had a lot of talk this afternoon and would not permit me five minutes a moment ago.

Mr. RUCKER. I?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman is mistaken.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, before we proceed, I would like to know how much time there is left.

The CHAIRMAN. That takes all the time.

Mr. MOON. I think that would hardly be fair.

Mr. RUCKER. I will take two minutes of it. I want to be fair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question.

Mr. MOON. I have not the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Just a minute. No one has the floor. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUCKER. Gentlemen, I say to you, in plain figures, dollars and cents, the provision suggested in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] gives to fourth-class postmasters the munificent and magnificent increase of $80 a year and no more——

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Make it short.

Mr. BLACK. I want to state that it makes in all $1,900,000 a year.

Mr. RUCKER. It may do it. We are spending money by the billions. I am not talking about that. I am appealing to these gentlemen who determine the amount of pay that all the clerks of the Government shall receive. I tell you that I fear somewhere way down in the hills and mountains of Tennessee, in the beautiful resorts and luxurious homes there, I am afraid the language of the poet Longfellow is applicable. You remember the stanza of three or four lines, in which the poet says:

> The blind man is poor, and blind a poor man is.
> The former sees nobody, the latter nobody sees.

And I tell you somewhere in this land people can not or will not see the poor devil who performs the work, with his wife at his side helping him to toil and labor for the public for $600 or or $700 a year; but when it comes to the high-class fellows, who through organization make themselves felt, then even the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] sometimes responds to them. I take the side of the poor devil and, with an approving conscience, take my chances.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. RUCKER. Division, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the vote be taken again. You said "the gentleman from Tennessee."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state it again.

The vote now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a division, because I am sure many of these gentlemen did not understand it.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 73.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LANGLEY: Amend the Moon amendment by striking out the period, inserting a colon, and adding the following: "Provided, That postmasters of the fourth class whose offices have been made central accounting offices shall receive 100 per cent of the cancellations up to and including $200 quarterly."

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have already said in the colloquy with other gentlemen about all that I care to say on this subject. I desire to emphasize this point, however, and that is that these central accounting offices of the fourth class have had their work largely increased as compared with the other fourth-class post offices; and while I think all fourth-class postmasters should be allowed more under present conditions, I feel that it is only just and fair that this amendment that I have offered to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, giving special recognition to that kind of fourth-class postmasters, should be adopted in order to give them at least some extra compensation for the greatly increased amount of very onerous work that they are now doing. I want to repeat the statement that I made awhile ago, that I know of some fourth-class postmasters who are doing this central accounting work who tell me that they can not live on the amount they have left after deducting the amount they have to pay for additional clerical help, to say nothing of the double work they do themselves, and that they are going to resign unless Congress gives them some relief.

Mr. MOON. Do you desire also to increase the salaries of those in the first, second, and third class offices?

Mr. LANGLEY. O, I think they all need relief, but I am like the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER], I am for "the poor devil" first. [Laughter.] They need help the most. Moreover, the larger offices are already getting more liberal treatment, and with the aid that has already been given them in this bill they will be much better fixed than the fourth-class offices are. I want to help them all, but let us help the most needy first, and more liberally.

Mr. MOON. You are looking at the fourth-class post offices?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes; because they are nearly all of the fourth class in my district and need help the most. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Has all time expired, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. There is one minute remaining.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. That is too short a time.

Mr. MADDEN. The accounting offices in the counties referred to by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] are not fourth-class offices at all. The accounting of all the fourth-class post offices in each county is transferred either to a third-class or a second-class or a first-class office.

Mr. LANGLEY. When was that done?

Mr. MADDEN. That has been done by the order of the law passed by the Congress of the United States, and there is no necessity for this additional compensation, and it ought not to be granted. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky ought not to prevail.

Mr. FIELDS. The gentleman ought not to misinform the House.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is simply mistaken. He does not know the facts. There are five of them in my district, and many more of them in other rural sections of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I want to submit a unanimous-consent request. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes on this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MOON. The rule was fixed, Mr. Chairman. I do not like to object. The gentleman can speak on the next amendment. I think we ought to take the vote of the committee on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee objects. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY].

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LANGLEY. I do not know whether I correctly understand; and what did the Chair understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] to say?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RUCKER. I have an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RUCKER to the Moon amendment: Add at the end of the Moon amendment the following:

"Such postmasters at offices where the annual pay is not less than $500 per annum shall hereafter be allowed the sum of $100 per annum, payable quarterly, for rent, fuel, and light: Provided, That whenever such post offices are kept in residences or in rooms in which other business is usually conducted the Postmaster General may in his discretion make such reasonable allowance for rent, fuel, and light, not exceeding $100 per annum, as he deems just.

Mr. MADDEN. I make a point on that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made. The point of order is sustained. The vote recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the Postmaster General shall have authority to investigate conditions arising from contracts in the star-route and screen-wagon service, with a view to adjusting compensation, and adjust the same in cases where the facts disclose the necessity for such adjustment.

Mr. ROUSE, Mr. DOUGHTON, Mr. FIELDS, Mr. LARSEN, and Mr. MONTAGUE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROUSE], a member of the committee.

Mr. ROUSE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROUSE: Page 3, line 21, after the words "service," insert "and contracts for supplies."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves a point of order on the amendment. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROUSE] want to be heard?

Mr. ROUSE. Not on the point of order, but I want to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. ROUSE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment gives the Postmaster General the right to investigate all contracts for supplies of the Post Office Department. This section provides that he shall investigate the contracts for star-route and screen-wagon service, and it is no more than right that he should have the authority to investigate all contracts.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ROUSE. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. I would like to ask the gentleman if any contracts for the hauling of the mail between the railroads and the post office are included in star-route contracts?

Mr. ROUSE. That should be included in section 4.

Mr. HAMLIN. That is included in the screen-wagon service?

Mr. ROUSE. Yes. It should be.

Mr. HAMLIN. I know of one or two instances where the railroad station is located a mile and a half from the post office. The transportation of the mails from the station to the town is let by contracts. Would it include that?

Mr. ROUSE. That is termed "messenger service."

Mr. HAMLIN. I thought that perhaps the language used in this paragraph would not cover that.

Mr. ROUSE. It will not. The section refers to the screen-wagon and star-route service.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. ROUSE. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The word employed by the gentleman from Kentucky, as I understand, is "supplies"?

Mr. ROUSE. Yes; "supplies."

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does the gentleman think the word "supplies" covers printing contracts and contracts for paper and envelopes, and things of that kind?

Mr. ROUSE. I will say to the gentleman that is exactly the intention of my amendment.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am very much obliged to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] want to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. Chairman, from the reading of the section to which the amendment is offered, it appears that it is sought to authorize the Postmaster General to investigate conditions solely as to contracts in star-route and screen-wagon service, with a view to adjusting the compensation. That is the main purpose of this section, and I assume that another purpose is to increase the compensation if these contractors engaged in this service.

The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROUSE] introduces an entirely new character of investigation by the Postmaster General that is not in any wise connected with compensation for the service referred to in the section. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], a leading parliamentarian of this House, directed attention a moment ago to the fact that in determining germaneness to this bill, in the case of amendments that are offered, attention must be given to the subject matter of the paragraph or section under consideration, and it rests upon the Chair to determine what that subject matter is. The question before the Chair is, supposing there was a bill presented for consideration in this House, in regular order, which contained only one section—namely, section 4, vesting authority in the Postmaster General to investigate conditions solely as to one subject matter, and that related to compensation—whether it would be germane under the rules of the House, when a bill refers to but one subject matter, to introduce another subject matter which is in no wise related or akin to it.

There have been many decisions made by various occupants of the chair which have held that in order for an amendment to be germane it must be akin and related to the subject matter; that where a bill relates to but one subject matter—as with this section, and that is seeking to increase compensation—you can not introduce another amendment, even of the same kindred character. The general case cited is the case of a bill providing for the admission of one State to the Union, where it would not be germane to provide for the admission of a second State.

By this amendment the Postmaster General is to be authorized to investigate contracts of an entirely different character, contracts relating to supplies, with which compensation for service is not related. It is something apart from the purview of the section, and, with regard to the merits, the amendment would open the consideration of contracts of an entirely different character, involving many millions of dollars, which is not only indefensible, but which the rules of the House say shall not be admitted under color of germaneness when there is only one subject matter under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky want to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. ROUSE. No. If the Chair sustains the point of order I shall offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ROUSE. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROUSE: Page 3, line 20, strike out the words "conditions arising from contracts in" and insert in line 20, after the word "investigate," the words "or contracts including."

Mr. ROUSE. I think, Mr. Chairman, that will take care of all the contracts in the department, so that no point of order can be sustained.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order to that amendment. The gentleman's amendment goes further. There is nothing more fundamental in the rules and precedents of this House——

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. In a moment. There is nothing more fundamental in the rules and precedents of this House than that in a provision that relates to a single subject matter you can not offer an amendment which relates to a generality of matter.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I understood the gentleman a moment or two ago to say that the substance of this proposition was compensation.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If you adhere to compensation as being the substance of the proposition, then the question of service is an incident, and you can extend it to any sort of service or contract and the compensation for that service.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman fails to recognize that in a bill limited to one subject matter you can not introduce an amendment that will extend it to the subject in general.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman from Virginia recognizes the argument made by the gentleman from Wisconsin, namely, that he contended compensation was the substance of the proposition, and I am simply trying to hold the gentleman to his own argument. If the gentleman's argument is right, that compensation is the substance of this proposition, then I maintain that contracts for supplies are incidents. If you reverse it, then it may be that the gentleman is correct, but he thereby recedes from his own argument.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not backing down from the original proposition, because that was a different case presented than what is now presented for the consideration of the Chair. The only question was whether you could add a second matter to a provision that related to only one subject matter. Now the amendment is of a different character entirely. The amendment that is offered in the nature of a substitute provides for a generality of all contracts, and I can cite the Chair to decisions on the subject of germaneness, that where a bill relates to one single matter you can not offer an amendment general in its character to extend to all subject matters.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has my attention.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I want to suggest to the gentleman the equities of a case, with the hope that upon reconsideration he will withdraw his point of order. I am now recurring to the original proposition. It is perfectly obvious that its purpose is to give permissive authority to the Postmaster General to correct certain contracts the performance of which works manifest wrongs and inequities to one party to the contract. May I cite one instance in order to make myself clear to the gentleman?

Mr. STAFFORD. I might be influenced not to press the point of order if this matter had been investigated by the regular committee of the House, and that committee had had the matter brought before it for consideration. But here the gentleman asks me to withdraw the point of order upon a subject matter which has not been given consideration by the duly authorized committee of the House—a matter which may involve the Government in an expenditure of tens of millions of dollars. I recall one case, in connection with the contract for the manufacture of embossed envelopes, where the Postmaster General, with questionable authority of law, changed that contract, which involved the expenditure of many millions of dollars, which enabled the Postmaster General to grant increases over the contract price by providing for a quality of envelopes different than had theretofore been provided.

Mr. MONTAGUE. When the gentleman gives his illustration, will he permit me to give one?

Mr. STAFFORD. On the merits. I wish to discuss the point of order further.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I want to get the converse of the proposition in the gentleman's mind. I know of a contractor who undertook to do printing for the Government. The estimates were given to him that the printing would not exceed $80,000 for four years. Of course the mere letter of the contract gives the Government the right to require him to do 80 times $80,000 if it sees fit, but when the contract was entered into assurances were given him that $80,000 would be the maximum for four years. But because of this war the Government has demanded from him more printing in one year than he would have had to do in five years. Owing to the increased cost of labor and paper he is losing enormous sums of money, and the Government is driving him into bankruptcy. He asks that the Government may have authority to release him and not to drive him into ruin. In cases of that sort it seems to me the Postmaster General ought to have permissive authority to investigate and respond to the plain equities and justice of the case.

Mr. STAFFORD. If there is an administrative officer of the Government who is performing that character of an unconscionable practice——

Mr. MONTAGUE. The Government is adhering to the contract. It is the contract that is unconscionable.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then some remedy general in its character ought to be provided in a bill introduced and referred regularly to the proper committee.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How can we get a remedy when the gentleman interposes points of order against everything?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has been long enough in this Chamber to know that the only protection to this Government is to invoke points of order, and that the proper remedy is for the gentleman to introduce a bill and have it take the regular course and be reported upon by the department, or else there will be no protection to the Treasury in these times.

Now, on the point of order I merely wish to say——

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not yield further.

Mr. MONTAGUE. In order that the gentleman may not impute to me negligence I was going to offer an amendment somewhat similar that would have been acceptable to the entire committee. It was not my purpose——

Mr. STAFFORD. Why has not the gentleman been before the committee in the regular way?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I have been before the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the Chair will permit me——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The section under discussion deals with authority to investigate conditions arising from contracts in the star-route and screen-wagon service, a matter relating to the transportation of the mails. The amendment would seem to open it to any kind of an investigation—with relation to buildings or anything else. The Chair thinks that the amendment is not in order, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LARSEN: Page 3, line 23, after the word "adjustment," insert "Provided, That in no case shall an increase of more than 15 per cent be allowed."

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to limit the increase which the Postmaster General shall be permitted to make in existing contracts.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order at the proper time. I am one of the Members of Congress who heretofore has not taken up the time of the House, either in offering amendments or in discussing such bills or amendments as were before it. I came here with the belief that it was best for a young Member to sit and listen to the older ones for a while. I have been here for nearly a year, and I have heard a half dozen men, or perhaps a dozen, at most, who have grown old here in the service talk continually day in and day out. I have not been greatly edified by such talk. [Applause.] I regret to say some Members remind me of corn in the roasting-ear stage, the time when the grain is the largest. When the silk dies the grain begins to shrink and harden; before long the weevils are in it and it is unfit for use. Some of our Members undoubtedly came here in the roasting-ear stage. They have been shrinking ever since they came, the weevils have got into them, and I think it is time they were relegated. [Laughter.] The committee, it seems, desires to be very brief at times. The chairman of the committee, when the previous section was under consideration, made a motion that we have 20 minutes in which to discuss the section and all amendments thereto. The committee, the chairman principally, took up practically all of the 20 minutes, and other Members of the House who wanted to offer amendments and who wanted to be heard on the section were denied the privilege. Do you think that is right? I ask the membership of this House, is it right or just? [Cries of "No!"] I am here, I hope, to stay for some time. I propose to be heard on this and other matters now and hereafter. [Applause.] I have sat here, I believe, for a solid month, all put together, and have listened to speeches delivered by consent agreement by the able gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], and yet when I come before the House and ask that I may have five minutes he is the first gentleman on his feet to deny me that humble privilege.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LARSEN. No; I will not. The gentleman has been heard too much already.

Mr. MADDEN. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. LARSEN. I desire to say to the Chairman and to the members of this committee that I think I am throwing a little enlightenment on this bill, and I believe I am serving a good purpose.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I insist that the gentleman shall talk to the amendment.

Mr. LARSEN. I object to being interrupted by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not proceeding in order.

Mr. LARSEN. And I will reply to the gentleman's point of order by saying his conduct shows that he does not know what I am discussing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia will proceed in order.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman from Georgia will not get anywhere talking that way.

Mr. LARSEN. I think it is a dangerous precedent for this Congress to permit any man to be clothed with such authority as this section gives. It puts unlimited authority in the Postmaster General to investigate contracts now being performed on star routes and in screen-wagon service. It gives him authority to add any amount as compensation to such contracts he may see fit. If the Government were losing money on such contracts, no adjustment could be made. Perhaps if gentlemen of the committee, especially the able gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], had given that due consideration to the bill that it deserves he would have discovered this very grave mistake. When such a bill as this is brought before the committee, and it seeks to give unlimited power to one man, it seems to me that it should be scrutinized closely.

It should be justified by facts and circumstances, and the authority to increase compensation should be limited. My amendment provides that he shall not increase the amount beyond 15 per cent. It simply limits the amount of the increase. It is just, it is equitable. If the Postmaster General looks into these contracts and decides that they should be increased, he has the right to do it, but in no case could he increase the amount more than 15 per cent. That is about the amount of increased compensation we have granted to the employees of the Government. I expect the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] and perhaps some others will be opposed to it because it seems that it would do justice to the common people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. LARSEN. Now I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the point of order made by the gentleman to be pressed?

Mr. MOON. Oh, if the gentleman had been here a little bit longer he would have known that the point of order was not very much in earnest.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that my friend from Georgia is so outraged as he seems to be and that he has not heretofore manifested to the House his splendid ability. I know that if this committee that he criticizes could have had the benefit of his profound judgment and experience in legislation it is possible that some of these sections might have been changed very much; but I am glad to have the assurance that hereafter we shall have the benefit in this House of his ability—not discovered until the gentleman announced it himself a few moments ago.

Mr. LARSEN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MOON. No.

Mr. LARSEN. I am not surprised that the gentleman has not discovered it, for he has not discovered any feature in anything.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia, an estimable gentleman, and, as he says, a new Member, upon that ground must be overlooked and excused for some of the things that he has said and some of the reflections that he has cast. After he has been here a while he will learn, I think, that there may be some one else who knows something. A new man when he gets here thinks that there is never anyone here but himself.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman let me ask him a question.

Mr. MOON. Oh, I suppose I shall have to; yes.

Mr. LARSEN. Is it not also a fact that these old men have about made up their minds that there is nobody here but them? [Laughter.]

Mr. MOON. No.

Mr. LARSEN. Does the gentleman not think that they are suffering from the same complaint?

Mr. MOON. No.

Mr. LARSEN. Is not this the trouble with the gentleman? You older men are so jealous of your authority——

Mr. MOON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not yield further. Mr. Chairman, I want to say this, that the gentleman from Georgia does not appreciate the fact that under the rules of the House that the members of the committee have to manage this bill and any and every bill, and we do that the best we can, and I know we will be able to do better hereafter with his assistance than we have heretofore, and I am glad that we are to have him.

Mr. LARSEN. One more question, if the gentleman will permit me, and then I will be through.

Mr. MOON. Oh, no; I do not think it necessary to answer any more questions. Now, Mr. Chairman, to be serious about it I do not have any serious objection to the gentleman's amendment as far as I am concerned, but I do not think it would be a wise thing for the House to limit the Postmaster General in his discretion. Some of these contracts for an amount paid in excess of 15 per cent ought to be allowed for adjustment. Some of course ought not to be. When you give discretion to a public officer and limit it too closely then it is valueless for the public service and is valueless to the man who is seeking relief. Unquestionably some of these contracts are made where the relief asked for ought to be greater than 15 per cent; somewhere it ought to be less. I think that the House ought to vote down the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment——

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FIELDS. I desire to offer a substitute to the section. When is the proper time?

The CHAIRMAN. After the section has been perfected, then the motion to strike out and substitute will be in order.

Mr. FIELDS. I ask unanimous consent to have it read now, and that it may be pending.

Mr. BURNETT. Not in my time, I hope.

Mr. FIELDS. I do not want to cut the gentleman out of his time.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out in the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia the figures "15" and insert instead "20."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LARSEN] the figures "15" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "20."

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, that would be more in line, it seems to me, with the action of the House last week. In reply to some of the remarks of the chairman of the committee I thank the Lord, and there is not a man in this House who does not, that the committee was not allowed to manage this bill entirely last week but that the House took the bit in its own mouth and had something to say about it. Now, the committee is evidently trying to manage that part that refers to the star-route men in a manner adverse to the star-route carriers, and I hope they will find some friend on the floor of this House to look after them, if there are only a few of them. [Applause.] It is a crying shame that this committee or anybody would allow this discretion to the Postmaster General, in the face of what we know—that he tried to nullify the law in regard to the rural carriers, and did nullify it until this House passed a law directing him in terms in regard to it. We should not leave this discretion in the hands of the Postmaster General. I merely offer this amendment, Mr. Chairman, as an amendment, hoping that substitutes of other gentlemen that will come later will not be declared out of order that will fix definitely and absolutely some standard of measure, and that we will try to do justice by these men in order that they may have some sort of an increase given to them in positive terms. I say to you, gentlemen of this House, that if it is left to the Postmaster General whether these star-route men shall get an increase I very much fear that he will never give it to them. Now, I believe there are gentlemen——

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question for information?

Mr. BURNETT. Certainly.

Mr. MOON. I understand the gentleman's amendment does not take from the Postmaster General any of the discretion, but limits it to 20 per cent instead of 15 per cent, as contained in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. BURNETT. This is an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia in view of the fear that I have that other amendments giving them more may be declared out of order——

Mr. MOON. But the gentleman does not propose to take the discretion away by his amendment at all, does he?

Mr. BURNETT. In other words, that it may go to the extent of 20 per cent instead of 15 per cent. I am opposed to the limitation proposed to be fixed by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia, and by my amendment also, but if we are to have a limitation I prefer 20 per cent rather than 15 per cent.

Mr. MOON. A further question. The gentleman leaves the discretion still in the Postmaster General's hands, but he amends it so as to make it so that he may be permitted to go to 20 per cent in the amount, but suppose these friends of yours you are talking about have contracts where in order to relieve them he would have to give 30 per cent or 35 per cent, ought that discretion be left to the Postmaster General to do that?

Mr. BURNETT. No; he ought not to have any discretion at all, but some fixed rule ought to be adopted for the increase, and I hope the amendments that are adopted later on will take such discretion away from him.

Mr. MOON. A further question there. Inasmuch as this is not a salary proposition but is a contract proposition, where one contract may be made for one sum and another for another, thousands of contracts applying in different sums of money, how could you pass a law, a mandatory act, that would require the allowance of a certain amount or a certain per cent by the Postmaster General without bringing about a condition that would fit one case but not another? Would it not be impossible?

Mr. BURNETT. In regard to the discretion?

Mr. MOON. The amount of discretion in fixing the amount.

Mr. BURNETT. I am not for fixing it absolutely, and if I can have the assurance——

Mr. MOON. The point I am making is that you can not do that. It might be a proper rate in one case and may be bad in another. Some of these contracts are very valuable to the contractors, and some of them are not. You can not do that.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, that can easily be arranged by taking into consideration the increased cost and expense of carrying out each contract, and then allowing these percentages of increase to be based on those increased expenses. Now, there is a way to get at it, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me. I am not afraid of some of these subordinates of the Postmaster General not doing right, because I believe they will, but when the iron heel of the Postmaster General is placed upon these men they do not dare do what they would believe to be right. And is it equity and justice——

Mr. MOON. May I ask the gentleman a question? Is it the purpose of the gentleman to fix an amount that must be allowed to the star-route contractors?

Mr. BURNETT. Not a fixed amount. That, as the gentleman says, can not be—a fixed percentage for each carrier. But certainly there can be an allowance based upon the expense that he has incurred and the additional expense that has been incurred since the beginning of this war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] be extended one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Alabama be extended one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOON. Now, will the gentleman give me his attention for just a minute? Do you want these allowances made to the contractors or the subcontractors? You know the contractors are all making money out of these star routes, and it is the subcontractor who takes it at a much less amount than the contractor who is probably losing money. Are you for the relief of the contractor, or the subcontractor who does the work?

Mr. BURNETT. I know, Mr. Chairman, that there was a time when a man in any locality of the country could go into this bidding business, but now it is arranged so that the bidder, as I understand it, has to live along the route, and I am wanting it fixed so that the man who does the work may get the pay, whoever he may be, whether contractor or subcontractor. Now, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LARSEN], because I do not believe there ought to be any limitation; but I had rather see 20 per cent than 15 per cent if there has to be any limitation, and that was my only reason for offering my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is not in order.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Section 4 provides:

That the Postmaster General shall have authority to investigate conditions arising from contracts in the star-route and screen-wagon service with a view to adjusting compensation and adjust the same in cases where the facts disclose the necessity for such adjustment.

And the gentleman from Georgia proposes to limit that authority to 15 per cent and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] proposes to limit it to 20 per cent. The gentleman from Alabama comes up here and professes to be a friend of the star-route men, but his amendment is directly opposed to their real interest. Under this provision, if it passes and becomes a law, the Postmaster General, when he finds upon investigation that the star-route contractor is losing 50 or 100 per cent and ought to be relieved, can grant the relief; but under the provisions of the amendment he is limited in that relief to 20 per cent.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. STEENERSON. Not now.

It seems to me that the friends of the star-route carriers, of whom there are a great many in the United States, ought not to be deluded into supporting either one of those provisions. There may be cases where the loss to the star-route contractors amounts to 100 per cent, and they would go bankrupt in a short time, and the Government of the United States would not be benefited by putting them in bankruptcy, and the Postmaster General is granted, by this, authority to adjust the matter according to equity and justice. Therefore I am opposed to both the amendment and the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question? I want to ask the gentleman if he thinks the present Postmaster General will give the star-route carriers any increase under this section?

Mr. STEENERSON. The Postmaster General has requested this provision. He sent it to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and requested that he be authorized to investigate and grant the relief. The gentlemen are going off on a tangent about the Postmaster General not being willing. It is an administration matter, and I have no doubt he will exercise the authority in the interest of fairness and justice both to the contractors and the Government.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. STEENERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. LARSEN. I want to ask you this question: Do you think it would be proper to increase the compensation of the contractors on the star routes in a greater per cent than other employees? Do not you think 15 per cent is a very reasonable increase on account of the increase in the cost of living?

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not agree that you should limit it to 20 per cent or 15 per cent. I believe this provision is all right the way the committee reported it. Give the Postmaster General the power to investigate and correct any injustice there may be in the contract. There are cases where the loss exceeds 20 per cent. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer another amendment, when the right time comes, to section 4.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment already pending. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAMLIN: Page 3, line 21, after the word "routes," insert "messenger service between railway station and the post office."

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment. Before the gentleman begins I desire to move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] yield to the gentleman from Tennessee to make the motion?

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not. I suggest, however, to my friend from Tennessee that if he thinks this amendment is subject to a point of order he should make the point of order and state why. If it is subject to a point of order, I do not care to take up the time of the House in discussing the amendment.

Mr. MOON. What is your amendment?

Mr. HAMLIN. My amendment is to add "messenger service between railway stations and the post offices."

Mr. MOON. I do not object to that.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that.

Mr. HAMLIN. What is the point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. That it is adding a new activity, and that is against the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The point of order is overruled, and the gentleman from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is to take care of a service that is not included in the bill. I was not certain whether the star-route or the screen-wagon service mentioned in the section would take care of these contracts made for hauling the mail between the railway station and the post office, where the station is located outside of the town, and upon inquiry of the chairman of the committee having charge of this bill he admitted that it would not take care of that service, because that service is designated as "messenger service."

I have in mind a particular case, called to my attention this morning, where the railway station is situated about a mile and a half from the little town in which, of course, the post office is located. Now, that service of hauling the mail from the station to the town is let by contract. The complaint in this particular case is that under present conditions the party performing that service now is doing it at a loss and wants some relief.

I think that kind of service ought to be included in this section of the bill, so that the Postmaster General may have authority to adjust that kind of service just as well as the star-route or screen-wagon service. That is all there is to it. I want to provide so that in cases of this kind relief may be granted, if in the wisdom of the Postmaster General he thinks it is justified. That is all I care to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FIELDS, Mr. DOUGHTON, and Mr. MOON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] is recognized.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves——

Mr. MOON. In 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that all debate on the section and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw my substitute and offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FIELDS: Page 3, lines 19 and 20, strike out the words "shall have authority" and insert "is hereby authorized and directed."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I want to hear that amendment read again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, nearly two days have been devoted to the interests of rural carriers and clerks, but largely to the rural carriers, who have an organization throughout the country, and I am for them and have voted for their increases. But gentlemen have overlooked the fact that more than one-fourth of the carriers of United States mails in the country are star-route carriers, and they are the poorest paid men who are working for the Government of the United States in any capacity. There are 43,318 rural carriers and 11,029 star-route carriers. The star-route carriers, however, have no organization. If those 11,000 men who are carrying the mail on star routes had an organization, I will warrant you that they would receive more recognition in this bill and in this House.

We heard much in the beginning of this debate on the bill about justice, but as the hand of organized labor is withdrawn from this Chamber, the form of justice goes with it.

What are these star-route carriers getting? As I said, they are the poorest paid men in the service of the Government, and the fourth-class postmasters are the next poorest paid. Many of the star carriers are going into bankruptcy. I intend to offer an amendment before this debate closes which will authorize and direct the Postmaster General to make investigations and increase their compensation in proportion to the increase in the cost of the service since the contracts were awarded under which they operate.

What has brought about this great increase in the service that they are required to do? The parcel post. Many men are operating their routes now with two horses and a wagon, whereas at the time they took the contract the mail was carried with one horse, in an ordinary pouch, and the work performed by a boy. But because of the increase in the parcel-post matter they have been compelled to put on a team. The boy who could formerly ride the horse and carry the pouch can not handle the team. Therefore it has become necessary to hire a man and pay him a man's wage. A few days ago I received a letter from one star carrier who is getting $2 a day, and the actual cost of operating the route is $5 a day. I have a letter from another man who gets $1.80 a day, and the actual cost is $3.20 a day. These are only two out of hundreds of letters that I have received. The only difference that this bill makes with regard to star carriers is to authorize the Postmaster General to make such investigations as he cares to make and such adjustments as he may deem proper. That is a step in the right direction, but it does not go far enough. The matter should not be left to the discretion of the Postmaster General. The bill should specifically provide for an increase in the compensation of star carriers and certain fourth-class postmasters, and I hope that the substitute I shall offer later on may be adopted, which will give the star carriers an increase in proportion to the increase of the service on the routes since the contract under which the carrier is operating was awarded.

Gentlemen, it is nothing but fair and just. First, the star-route carrier performs the service for half or less than half what the rural carrier receives. Take, for instance, two routes in one county in my district. They pass over the same sort of territory. They are the same distance. I got a rural route established over one of them two or three years ago. The only difference between the one over which the rural route is operated and the one that still remains a star route is that there is an unbridged stream on the latter, and for that reason I could not secure the establishment of a rural route over it. On this one which still remains a star route there are just as many boxes as there are on the rural route. There is a box at every home. The star carrier performs the same kind of service that the rural carrier performs. He collects the mail from the office and deposits it in the boxes of the patrons of the route and collects their mail from the boxes and carries it to the post office. He receives $548 per annum, while the rural carrier on the other route receives $1,080, and many others in the star service are working for much less than the amount that is paid to the star carrier to whom I have just referred, and, as I have previously stated, the amount of mailable matter has so increased since their contracts were awarded because of the increase in parcels post and other mailable matter, due to the general increase in business, that many of them have been forced to double or more than double their facilities, and this hardship, in addition to the increase in the cost of feeding their animals, is forcing many of them into bankruptcy. Yet they are under a bonded contract from which they can not resign, while the rural carrier can resign; so, in view of these conditions, the compensation of star carriers should be increased, and I sincerely trust that the amendment that I shall offer at the proper time in the nature of a substitute will be adopted. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, in my judgment there is no more meritorious section of this bill than the one which undertakes to afford relief to these parties. I would not favor a proposition which sought to compel the Government to supplement the amount of a star-route bid to such an extent that the contractor would be guaranteed a profit. The equities of the case do not call for such a guarantee, nor is that what is proposed to be done by this section. Many of the star-route contractors are men of small means who undertook these contracts on a very narrow margin of profit. In a number of cases the margins were so close, that the contractors were in substance hiring themselves and their teams to the Government, at a very modest wage. These contracts were made one year, or more ago. Since that time we all know that great changes have occurred throughout the entire country in the items of living cost for man and beast. A very large proportion of the Members of this body represent country districts, and are familiar with the conditions I am describing. I think I am justified in appealing to these Members to confirm all that I have said with reference both to the small margin of possible profit in a large proportion of these contracts, and the plight in which the contractors now find themselves, in consequence of supervening conditions. Many of these contractors are discharging their contracts at a daily, and ruinous loss.

Mr. MONDELL. May I give my testimony on that point to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Certainly. I will be glad to hear from the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. That is true over the entire intermountain west at this time.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. With respect to these contractors the bill does not undertake to provide that the Government shall guarantee them a profit. Not at all. But it is proposed that when the Government shall have ascertained by proper inquiry that any contractor as a result of conditions that he could not anticipate, is carrying out his contract at a loss, even when exercising the utmost economy, and good judgment, a supplementary allowance may be made sufficient to save the contractor harmless, or in the exercise of further discretion by the Postmaster General that the contract may be canceled, and the route relet.

Mr. RUCKER. If a fourth-class postmaster was renting a house, and his rent was increased, why would not his condition call for the same relief?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The case suggested, is by no means analagous. I think that I have as many fourth-class postmasters in my district as any other Member of this body, and I am as anxious as anyone, to protect their just rights and secure their proper interests, but the situation of the fourth-class postmaster is very different from that of the star-route contractor. As I have said, it is not proposed that the Government shall guarantee any star-route contractor a profit, but without the relief contemplated by this bill many of these small contractors will be absolutely ruined, if held to the letter of their contracts. It is not a case of sympathy for one or more contractors who exercised poor judgment in respect of their bids. The present unhappy situation of these contractors is due to supervening conditions which they could neither anticipate, nor control.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman is well posted on this subject?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I have tried to secure the facts both as to the circumstances under which these star-route contracts were made, and the present plight of the contractors.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], a while ago, made the statement that there are no longer any fourth-class post offices that are central accounting offices. Is that correct?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am not able to answer the gentleman's question. On principle a fourth-class office ought not to be an accounting office. These offices ought to settle their accounts with an office of a higher grade, a second, or a third-class office. But some fourth-class offices, may be accounting offices. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] ought to be able to answer this inquiry.

Mr. MADDEN. I think I know that there are no fourth-class offices that are accounting offices.

Mr. LANGLEY. What do they do in a county where there is no presidential office?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. This has nothing to do with the argument that I am making.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman from Illinois is not correct, that is all.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. All that I wish to say in conclusion is that many of these little contracts for carrying star-route mail have been undertaken in good faith by men of limited means on a narrow margin of profit. As a result of supervening conditions a number of these contractors are executing their contracts at a ruinous loss. Some authority ought to be given to the Government under which a measure of relief in the way of a supplementary allowance, or a cancellation of the contracts, may be afforded to these contractors.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think the section of the bill that is under consideration gives sufficient authority?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It is to that section of the bill that I am addressing my remarks. In this connection I will say that the section ought to be amplified by an amendment that will hereafter be offered. A final word with respect to the difference between the condition of the postmasters, the rural carriers and the other postal employees, and the star-route contractors. A postmaster, or a carrier, or a clerk can at least throw up his job, and undertake something else.

Mr. RUCKER. But can not the star-route contractor do that as well?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No, he can not. He is bound by a contract which he has made with the Government, and for the fulfillment of which he has given bond and ample security. That is the essential difference between him, and the other parties mentioned. He is compellable to carry out his contract. That is the law.

Mr. ROBBINS. I have one in my district that has a five-year contract with a bond under it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Every star-route contractor is required to execute a bond with security to carry out his undertaking. Mr. Speaker, this is a highly meritorious bill which will correct hardships growing out of war conditions. It should receive the hearty support of the Members of this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DOUGHTON: Strike out all of section 4 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Postmaster General shall, as soon as practicable, investigate conditions arising from contracts in the star-route and screen-wagon service with a view to adjusting compensation in all cases where the present compensation is inequitable. Whenever the Postmaster General upon such investigation shall ascertain that any star-route contract or screen-wagon contract was entered into prior to the entrance of the United States into the war with Germany, and that the compensation agreed to be paid in said contract is at the present time inadequate, by reason of the increase in the cost of materials, labor, and maintenance of equipment employed in the performance of such contract, the Postmaster General is hereby authorized and directed, upon the request of the contractor and his bondsmen, to cancel the same or readjust the terms of said contract in such manner as to relieve the contractor from the hardships being by him suffered on account of such increased cost and expenses."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman desire me to make the point of order or to reserve it.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I would ask the gentleman to reserve the point of order.

Mr. MOON. After the gentleman has talked on it for five minutes, I shall make the point of order.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I observe that the gentleman in the first part of his amendment followed the language in the original bill. Would the gentleman be willing to modify his amendment so as to insert the amendment the committee adopted a few moments ago at my suggestion?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I have no objections to that.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be so modified.

The CHAIRMAN. As to include messengers?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes; between the railway stations and the post office.

Mr. CANNON. Does that include the railroads that have to deliver the mail?

Mr. HAMLIN. No; those stations located outside.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection it will be so modified.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, section 4 of the bill, as I understand, has for its purpose the granting of relief to the star-route carriers of the country. I think it will be admitted by all who have taken the pains to investigate that the star-route carriers are the poorest paid of any of the Government employees. They hold these contracts under a four-year contract. In other words, the contracts are awarded as the result of competitive bidding and for a term of four years. The present contracts were entered into June 30, 1916, and expire June 30, 1920.

I fear that if the language contained in the bill is adopted, it is so ambiguous and weak, that the purpose sought will not be accomplished. If I thought it would be I should not offer the substitute, but I can not see any harm in directing the Postmaster General to make this investigation. The language in section 4 authorizes him to make the investigation, while the language in my substitute directs him to do so; and if he finds on such investigation that as a matter of fact the compensation paid is unjust and inequitable, he is then directed, upon the request of the contractor and his bondsmen, to either cancel the contract and readvertise or make such adjustments as are equitable and just. I think the fairest solution of this whole matter is this, that as these services are being performed under the contract system if the contractor is not satisfied and is suffering a loss, and the contract is unjust and inequitable and a hardship is being imposed upon the carrier, then for the Government to readvertise the routes and open them up to competitive bids.

Mr. MONDELL. These contracts only have about three months to run.

Mr. MADDEN. They are pretty nearly through.

Mr. DOUGHTON. About three months? How do you figure that out? They expire June 30, 1920.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, in the gentleman's section they do.

Mr. DOUGHTON. In my section they do.

Mr. MONDELL. In my section the four-year contract expires the 1st of July next. The gentleman's substitute invites the Postmaster General to cancel these contracts. I think the Postmaster General will be very glad to accept such an invitation as the easiest way out, in which event these contractors who have been carrying mail at a heavy loss for two or three years will not be reimbursed. It occurs to me that you are not helping the contractor by suggesting to the Postmaster General that the contract be canceled.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I did not yield for a speech. I do not understand that under the bill the contractor will be reimbursed by any legislation we can enact. I am trying to prevent his sustaining further loss.

Now, gentlemen of the committee, if the routes are readvertised in the light of present conditions, why these men, if they wish, as well as others, can bid with their eyes open, and the Government and the bidder are placed upon equal terms. If the contractor is forced to carry out his contract with the present high prices for material, labor, and everything that goes to make up his equipment practically doubled in price he will, in many cases, be bankrupt. Not only is the contractor liable himself but his bondsmen are cocontractors, and if he fails, as he is doing in many instances, his bondsmen are forced to carry out the contract entered into by the contractor.

Now, gentlemen of the committee, there has been no legislation offered here during this term of Congress, in my judgment, that would come to the relief of a class of people that are standing in greater need of relief than the star-route people.

At the time these contracts were made, as a result of competitive bidding, the prices then paid were very low, not more than half the average price paid to the rural carriers for performing similar service, and entirely out of proportion to the work performed. However, had not conditions been so radically and adversely changed by the war these carriers would have no moral grievance, having entered into these contracts voluntarily, but they could not foresee the coming of the war, and consequently should not be held to a performance of the contract when in so doing it means their ruin.

These men have no organization through which they can speak and bring their troubles to the attention of the Congress as do other postal employees. However, I have received hundreds of individual letters from all sections of my State begging and appealing for relief. One man says his expenses alone are $50 per month, and he gets $28.69, which leaves him a loss of $21.31, and nothing for his own time. I have many letters showing conditions equally as disastrous as this one.

Gentlemen of the House, no class of Government employees perform a more essential service than do the star-route carriers, or services that are fraught with more difficulty. Many of them have schedules which start as early in the morning as 5 or 6 o'clock, which, as you know, is long before daylight in the winter time. Traveling at a distance of from 30 to 35 miles, and in some cases 40 miles per day, over rough roads, breaking the ice in the streams, battling with snowdrifts, and other difficulties incident to rough roads and bad weather. Then when they get to their destination are forced to wait, in some cases two or three hours, in order to make connection with some other mail before they start on their long, wearisome journey homeward. In many cases it is 8 or 9 o'clock at night before their day's work is completed.

Gentlemen, it is for this humble, honorable, underpaid, and overworked class that I lift my voice and plead, that they may be given, not a profit but simple justice and a reasonable wage for their difficult service. Unlike other postal employees, they can not throw up their jobs or resign at will, but are tied securely by heavy bonds for the faithful performance of their duties.

Of all the requests that have come or will come before this Congress for relief, none will be so meritorious as this one.

Early in this session of Congress I appeared before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and requested that the pending bill contain a section granting certain relief in some form to the star-route carriers and I appreciate the fact that the committee has written this section in the bill; and while I think it should be amended by the adoption of the substitute which I have offered, or something similar, yet I feel that in any event, when the bill is finally approved, that it will be in such form as to afford a reasonable measure of relief.

There are doubtless a few instances where the carriers are receiving a reasonable compensation, and for this reason I would not favor a percentage increase, but the Postmaster General should be authorized and directed to investigate all cases where complaint is made, and where he finds the compensation now being paid is inequitable and unjust, the contract should be canceled and the route readvertised in the light of present conditions, or an increase in the present compensation should be allowed which will be commensurate with the increase in the expense incident to the carrying out of the present contracts. Not to grant this relief in some form would, in my judgment, be nothing short of a grave crime.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired. Does the gentleman from Tennessee press his order?

Mr. MOON. The point of order is all right——

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, what is the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin want to be heard on his point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. If the Chair will indulge me for a moment. I make the point of order that the amendment offered in the nature of a substitute is not germane to the section which it seeks to amend. The language of the section presented to the committee for consideration is limited solely to authorizing the Postmaster General to investigate conditions arising out of certain contracts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin to the fact that the committee has adopted an amendment that authorized and directed him to investigate and compensate.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was not aware of that amendment having been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. It was adopted.

Mr. MOON. I would ask the Chair to have the amendment read. I do not think it went quite that far.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman suspend just a minute? The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN]——

Mr. STAFFORD. That was rejected.

Mr. HAMLIN. My amendment was not that one.

Mr. STAFFORD. That amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOON. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is in error. The gentleman from Wisconsin will proceed

Mr. STAFFORD. The amendment did not provide for compensation, but as it was rejected I will proceed with my argument. The section merely provides for investigation.

The amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina not only provides for investigation but offers virtually an amendment to the existing section directing the Postmaster General, not merely authorizing him, but directing the Postmaster General upon the request of the contractor or the surety to the contractor to cancel the contract, thereby relieving the contractor of an obligation that he now owes to the Government, a matter entirely apart from the subject matter presented to the House for consideration. The subject matter to the section before us is merely investigation, and I direct the attention of the Chair——

The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair ask attention of the gentleman to the language in line 22: "And adjust the same in cases where the facts disclose the necessity for such adjustment."

Mr. STAFFORD. Leaving it, as the Chair notices, to the discretion as to the adjustment, where in his discretion it is advisable, but in this amendment it takes away the discretion entirely and directs him to cancel the contract. The theory upon which the amendment of the committee is predicated is that there shall be an investigation and leaving it to the discretion of the Postmaster General. Here, if the Chair holds this amendment to the section in order, another amendment will be in order fixing the salary, fixing the compensation that may be paid these various star-route contractors, and certainly the Chair would not hold that an amendment fixing the compensation that may be paid to these various contractors, whether a per cent of increase or definite amount, would be in order. The amendment offered compels him to cancel the contract, virtually takes away from him discretion instead of leaving it to him to determine when the contract shall be modified, and says the contract upon the request of the contractor or the surety company shall be immediately terminated. That is not akin to the matter presented by the committee, and I call the attention of the Chair to the citation found on page 345 of the Manual on the subject of germaneness, where it says:

To a bill modifying an existing law as to one specific particular, an amendment relating to the terms of the law rather than those of the bill—

Is not germane.

This is something that relates to the terms of the contract and is not related and differs entirely from the provision carried in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina desire to be heard?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin, so anxious to criticize the language of the amendment, being in a difficult situation in his effort, after having put on his glasses, read into my amendment, or substitute, language not contained in it. The gentleman said it calls for the immediate cancellation of the contract. I do not have the amendment before me, but——

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman from North Carolina yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. If I have made a misstatement, I will yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the language of the gentleman's amendment say that the Postmaster General is hereby authorized and directed, upon the request of the contractor or the surety company, to cancel the contract?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Or readjust, certainly; or readjust, but the gentleman said "immediately," but it is not immediately. He is to investigate.

I contend, Mr. Chairman, that this substitute is germane because it relates entirely to the purpose sought to be obtained, and that is the granting of relief to star-route carriers; and, of course, so far as the contention of the gentleman from Wisconsin is concerned, "immediately" was not written into the language. It first authorizes the Postmaster General to investigate, and then if he finds these contracts are unjust and inequitable he can cancel or readjust along the lines of equity.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in that particular?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Well, the gentleman, I think——

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman desires to make a misstatement.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I am not making a misstatement, as the gentleman did when he read into my speech language I never used.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to discuss the point of order.

I am not in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], but I have an interest in the correct and proper parliamentary usage of the House, and I am very much surprised that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] should urge at length that the amendment is not in order. It is clearly in order. This is a provision for the readjustment of the star-route contracts. It is a provision taking up star-route contracts with a view to readjusting them. Congress having entered upon that sort of a procedure, can take such action as it deems wise and best in regard to star-route contracts. The amendment proposes an adjustment of compensation by relieving a contractor of any further service. That is one way of adjusting compensation. I do not care to take the time of the Chair to any great length on a matter as simple and plain as this. There can be no question but what the amendment is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is in order, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEENERSON. Under the amendment, as I understand it, relief is only granted to those contractors who made their contracts before we entered the war—a year ago. I would like to have the amendment reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again read.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. HAMLIN. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. If I understood the Clerk to report that amendment correctly, he left out the modification that the gentleman from North Carolina very kindly made—railroads and post offices.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair remembers that the amendment was modified. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] will state wherein the amendment is not right.

Mr. HAMLIN. Insert after "star route" the words "messenger service between railway station and post office." That was my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote then recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. COX. Division, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. What is the vote on?

The CHAIRMAN. It is a vote on the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina to strike out the section and substitute.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 58.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I have an additional substitute that I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has expired. The Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute of Mr. FIELDS: Strike out section 4 and substitute the following:

"SEC. 4. That the Postmaster General is hereby authorized and directed to investigate conditions arising from contracts on the star-route and screen-wagon service, and whenever it is ascertained by such investigation that there has been an increase in the amount of the mailable matter handled by such contractor in the star-route and screen-wagon service since awarding the contract under which he is at the time operating that a corresponding increase in the compensation of such contractor shall be allowed during the duration of the contract."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. FIELDS. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 9, noes 60.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the provisions of section 3 of the act of March 3, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes," providing increased compensation at the rate of 10 per cent per annum to employees who receive salaries at a rate of more than $480 and not exceeding $1,000 per annum, shall apply during the fiscal year 1918 to all watchmen, messengers, and laborers.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I shall take only a moment to explain what I understand to be the purpose and intent of section 4, the readjustment of the star-route contracts.

There have been some misleading statements in regard to that section, and I think the matter ought to be cleared up a little. Under that section as the committee wrote it, and I think the committee wrote it in good form, it becomes the duty of the Postmaster General, as it is, I understand, the desire of the Postmaster General, to investigate these star routes and make a thorough investigation, not only with regard to the increases of the amount of mail, but with regard to the increased cost of carrying the mail from any cause, and, having made these investigations and learned the facts, to adjust the compensation as he sees fit and believes is fair, just, and equitable. He can pay the contractor any additional sum he believes equitable, and which under the circumstances he believes the contractor is entitled to. Now, that is very much better than a provision inviting him to cancel.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Under this could he cancel a contract?

Mr. MONDELL. I doubt if he could; but if he can give the contractor sufficient allowances for his losses in the past, and sufficient for the future, to make his contract a reasonably paying one, that is better for the contractor in the majority of cases than to cancel the contract. At any rate, it is better than an invitation to the Postmaster General to cancel contracts that have run three years and a half already in the intermountain country. The cancellation of such contracts would be the easiest way for the Postal Department to wash its hands of all responsibility. What we want them to do is what they, I think, wish to do, make an examination and give reasonable compensation for past losses and for the future.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Take line 23, beginning with the word "where," on line 22, "where the facts disclose the necessity for such adjustment," does the gentleman think the word "necessity" there is a proper one?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not like the word "necessity." I think some other word might better have been used. Where the facts disclose that it is proper and just and equitable to do it is what it means. The necessity for adjusting the pay in order to do justice is what the word "necessity" means in such a case.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That this act shall be in force and effect from and after its passage. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

Mr. MOON. I will ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the consideration of that section be postponed until we have finished the other sections of the bill permitted to be introduced under the rule.

Mr. STEENERSON. Why not strike it out? It is absolutely useless.

Mr. MOON. I think we had better wait until we reach the close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the consideration of the section just read be postponed until the other sections of the bill permitted to be introduced under the rule shall have been disposed of. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment provided under the rule and have it read, and then I will make a motion that the committee rise. I send the amendment to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

I.

That to promote the conservation of food products and to facilitate the collection and delivery thereof from producer to consumer, and the delivery of articles necessary in the production of such food products to the producers the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to conduct experiments in the operation of motor-vehicle truck routes in the vicinity of such cities of the United States as he may select, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, and the cost of such experiments, not exceeding $300,000, may be paid by the Postmaster General out of any unexpended appropriations of the Postal Service, and the Postmaster General shall report the result of such experiments to the Congress at the earliest practicable date.

SEC. —. That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, deliver and turn over to the Postmaster General from time to time, and without charge therefor, for use in the Postal Service, such aeroplanes and automobiles, or parts thereof, as may prove to be, or as shall become, unsuitable for the purposes of the War Department; and the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to use the same, in his discretion, in the transportation of the mails and to pay the necessary expenses thereof out of the appropriation for inland transportation by steamboat or other power boat or by aeroplanes or star route.

SEC. —. That from and after the passage of this act the Postmaster General, in his discretion, may require the payment of postage on mail carried by aeroplane at not exceeding 24 cents per ounce or fraction thereof.

II——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. We are considering this bill by sections.

The Clerk is proceeding to read another section.

The CHAIRMAN. It was sent up to the desk merely to be read.

Mr. MOON. To be read as section 6.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will they be considered section by section?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that it is offered as one section.

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not believe I will consent to that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the Clerk was about proceeding to read the second section of this amendment.

Mr. MOON. It is offered as one section to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; it is offered as one section to the bill.

Mr. STEENERSON. Then there will be no opportunity to consider it section by section?

Mr. MOON. That is a section itself. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the committee do now rise. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CARAWAY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9414) granting increased compensation to certain officials, employees, and laborers in the Post Office Department and Postal Service, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ADDITIONAL SECRETARIES OF WAR.

The SPEAKER. The chair is informed that the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], who was appointed on the conference on the bill (H. R. 9352) to amend the act entitled "An act providing for an Assistant Secretary of War," approved March 5, 1890, and for other purposes, is not in town and will not be for several days. Therefore the Chair appoints Mr. ANTHONY in his place.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 9903. An act to provide for restoration to their former grades of enlisted men discharged to accept commissions, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 9571. An act to authorize the appointment of officers of the Philippine Scouts as officers in the militia or other locally created armed forces of the Philippine Islands drafted into the service of the United States, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

S. 3445. An act to authorize the payment of gun pointers and gun captains while temporarily absent from their regular stations, and for other purposes;

S. 3130. An act to amend section 1570 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

S. 3129. An act to provide for the disposition of the effects of deceased persons in the naval service;

S. 1546. An act to permit the use of certain refined products of petroleum as stores on steam vessels carrying passengers;

S. J. Res. 117. Joint resolution amending the act of July 2, 1909, governing the holding of civil-service examinations; and

S. J. Res. 104. Joint resolution authorizing the assistant to the Secretary of the Interior to sign official papers and documents.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. DAVIDSON, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for one week, on account of death in his family.

AMENDMENT OF THE WAR-RISK INSURANCE BILL.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate joint resolution 133, and ask that the House insist on its amendments and agree to the conference requested by the Senate and that the conferees be appointed.

Mr. GILLETT. What bill is that?

Mr. BARKLEY. The joint resolution amending the war-risk insurance bill, permitting insurance by prisoners.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky calls up Senate joint resolution 133 and asks that the House insist on the House amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. The Clerk will report the resolution by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution 133, authorizing the granting of insurance under the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended by the act approved October 6, 1917, on application by a person other than the person to be insured.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I assume the gentleman desires to insist on the House amendments.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the House insist on the amendments of the House and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. SIMS, Mr. RAYBURN, and Mr. WINSLOW.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 26, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Savannah River at or near Augusta, Ga., for the purpose of determining what erosion is taking place and what improvements are necessary to prevent the same in the interest of navigation; also the consideration of any proposition for cooperation on the part of local or State interests (H. Doc. No. 985); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination and survey of Suison Bay Channel, from Martinez to Antioch, Cal. (H. Doc. No. 986); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustration.

3. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of William S. Boyd v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 987); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Nelson D. Curtis v. The United States (M. Doc. No. 989); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

6. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Dicey E. Stockham, widow of David M. Stockham, deceased, v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 990); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

7. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Eva A. Ingersoll, widow of Robert G. Ingersoll, deceased, v. The United States (H. Doc. 991); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

8. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Charles A. Stocksdale, son and sole heir of Sidney A. Stocksdale, deceased, v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 992); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

9. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Margaret Eichorn, administratrix of the estate of Charles Obst, deceased, v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 993); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

10. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Jefferson Good v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 994); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

11. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of William Poe, son of William Poe, deceased, v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 995); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. WINGO, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10205) to provide for the consolidation of national banking associations, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 408), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. GLASS, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10691) to amend section 5200 of the Revised Statutes as amended, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 411), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11020) to amend and reenact sections 5136, 5137, 5139, 5147, 5172, 5200, 5222, 5230, and 5239 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, accompanied by a report (H. Rept. No. 412), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. CLARK of Florida, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8424) to provide for the purchase of additional land for the enlargement of the site of the public building at Stamford, Conn., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 409), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CROSSER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 289) to provide for the acquisition, ownership, and operation by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia of all the street railroads located in the District of Columbia, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 410), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DILL: A bill (H. R. 11017) to authorize the county of Okanogan, Wash., to construct and maintain a bridge across the Okanogan River; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HICKS: A bill (H. R. 11018) to regulate the salaries of keepers of lights and lighthouses; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11019) to increase the pay of keepers of the Coast Guard during the period of the war; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. GLASS: A bill (H. R. 11020) to amend and reenact sections 5136, 5137, 5139, 5147, 5172, 5200, 5222, 5230, and 5239 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. O'SHAUNESSY: Memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, favoring a league of nations to safeguard the peace of the world; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. STINESS: Memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, favoring a league of nations to safeguard the peace of the world; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 11021) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Potter; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, March 26, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we know that every part of human activity leads to Thy throne; that to think out the problem of life is to think back to Thee. Thou art still the ruler of the universe. Thou dost still sit in judgment upon the conduct of men. We come to Thee in the midst of the Nation's alarm, in the midst of the great crisis that is upon us, and pray Thee, O God of our fathers, Thou who didst establish us, Thou who didst give inspiration to the founders of this Government to erect a government upon the principles of Thy revealed Word, to hear us this day. Give success to our arms. Lead us to victory. May brute force and hate not prevail over justice and truth and right. Grant, we pray, that the outcome of it all shall be for the glory of Thy name and the permanent establishment of a real peace and brotherhood in all the earth. For Christ's sake. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (James M. Baker) read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D. C., March 26, 1918.

To the SENATE:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. JOSIAH O. WOLCOTT, a Senator from the State of Delaware, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

WILLARD SAULSBURY,
President pro tempore.

Mr. WOLCOTT thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer and directed the Secretary to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. THOMAS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9352) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for an Assistant Secretary of War," approved March 5, 1890, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DENT, Mr. FIELDS, and Mr. ANTHONY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 133) authorizing the granting of insurance under the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended by the act approved October 6, 1917, on application by a person other than the person to be insured, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SIMS, Mr. RAYBURN, and Mr. WINSLOW managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were thereupon signed by the Presiding Officer:

S. 1546. An act to permit the use of certain refined products of petroleum as stores on steam vessels carrying passengers;

S. 3129. An act to provide for the disposition of the effects of deceased persons in the naval service;

S. 3130. An act to amend section 1570 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

S. 3445. An act to authorize the payment of gun pointers and gun captains while temporarily absent from their regular stations, and for other purposes;

H. R. 9571. An act to authorize the appointment of officers of the Philippine Scouts as officers in the militia or other locally created armed forces of the Philippine Islands drafted into the service of the United States, and for other purposes;

H. R. 9903. An act to provide for restoration to their former grades of enlisted men discharged to accept commissions, and for other purposes;

S. J. Res. 104. Joint resolution authorizing the assistant to the Secretary of the Interior to sign official papers and documents; and

S. J. Res. 117. Joint resolution amending the act of July 2, 1909, governing the holding of civil-service examinations.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Hillsdale, Wyo., praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CURTIS presented resolutions adopted by the Kansas State Board of Agriculture, at a quarterly meeting held at Topeka, Kans., relative to the cost of production of wheat and the price the farmer receives as compared with other commodities, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a memorial of the Guilford Branch of the Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage, of Guilford, Conn., and a memorial of the Litchfield Branch of the Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage, of Litchfield, Conn., remonstrating against the adoption of a Federal suffrage amendment, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Fairfield County Medical Society, of Connecticut, praying for an advanced rank for officers of the Medical Corps of the Army, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. OWEN presented a petition of Private Soldier Post, No. 62, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Oklahoma, of Blackwell, Okla., praying for an increase of pensions to veterans of the Civil War, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to read the following telegram:

BOSTON, MASS., March 24, 1918.

Senator HENRY C. LODGE,
Senate Office Building, Washington:

Resolved, That this mass meeting, held in the Park Square Theater, Boston, March 24, call upon our two Massachusetts Senators, Mr. LODGE and Mr. WEEKS, to do all in their power to secure the support of the Republican Party in the Senate to the national suffrage amendment by urging all Republican Senators to stand solidly in favor; be it further Resolved, That this resolution be sent to the President, the Vice President, the majority and minority leaders of the Senate, and to Senators LODGE and WEEKS, with the request that Mr. WEEKS read it into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Adopted unanimously.

OLIVE MILLS BELCHES,
State Chairman Massachusetts Branch National Woman's Party.

In the absence of my colleague [Mr. WEEKS] and in his behalf, I have complied with the request of the telegram and have read it into the RECORD.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CURTIS (for Mr. FERNALD):

A bill (S. 4195) for the relief of Sarah E. Church; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 4196) granting an increase of pension to Lewis Nicholson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 4197) granting a pension to Catherine N. Wilson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 143) to permit any and all members of the military or naval forces of the United States serving in the present war to accept decorations from the Government of any of the countries concurrently engaged with the United States in the prosecution of said war; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO LEGISLATIVE, ETC., BILL.

Mr. CURTIS submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the minute and Journal clerk of the Senate from $3,000 to $3,600 per annum, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—G. W. JOHNSON.

On motion of Mr. WALSH, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill S. 2133, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, granting a pension to G. W. Johnson, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

WAR WITH GERMANY.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I have a manuscript, prepared by Dr. Henry Plumb, of Pleasanton, Kans., giving certain views as to why we are at war with Germany. I ask that the manuscript be referred to the Committee on Printing, with a view to having it printed as a public document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The matter will be referred to the Committee on Printing for action.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF WAR.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9352) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for an Assistant Secretary of War," approved March 5, 1890, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. HITCHCOCK, and Mr. WARREN conferees on the part of the Senate.

OUTPUT OF COAL.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Post of this morning published the statement which I now read. The headlines are:

"BUY COAL EARLY," PUBLIC AGAIN TOLD—PRODUCTION 500,000 TONS OFF LAST WEEK, GARFIELD SAYS.

More than half a million tons loss in coal production last week caused the Fuel Administration last night to reiterate warnings contained in the announcement of its zone distribution system that next winter's supplies of fuel should be laid in early to keep mines working to capacity. The falling off, if continued, officials said, would mean serious shortage in fuel next winter to those sections not forehanded enough to purchase in advance.

The Fuel Administration holds that having provided a normal and economical method of distributing fuel, it can not go further than its warning to consumers to purchase early in order to protect them from suffering later in the year. Accumulation of reserve fuel by the administration to fill shortages next winter is not considered either wise nor feasible.

Fuel Administrator Garfield in a letter to Senator THOMAS, who recently announced that Colorado mines were closing down because of low prices, says the committee of engineers which investigated the matter reported that the reduction in summer prices to encourage storage was made at the request of the Colorado operators' committee.

I dislike, Mr. President, to occupy unduly the time of the Senate in repeatedly calling its attention to the fuel situation in my State. If Colorado alone were interested in the problem, I should not do so, because however severe the situation might be it would only concern a very small portion of the Union.

The Colorado situation, Mr. President, according to this statement, which is assumedly from the Fuel Commissioner, is merely one of the trouble spots of a national situation and can be used perhaps as well, if not better, than any other in calling attention at this time not only to that situation but to its inevitable national consequences.

Mr. President, it is not true that the Colorado operators ever requested the commissioner to fix summer prices for their coal product. They did say that it had been their custom in years past, in order to encourage storage in the summer months, to reduce prevailing prices as an inducement to that end and that the custom would be adhered to.

The commissioner, in addition to severely cutting the established prices under which the operators were working, now deliberately informs the country that the added reduction for the summer months was made by the request of the operators.

Mr. President, I can conceive of no adequate illustration to convey the injustice of that statement. It is very much like holding up an innocent individual on the street, who, to save something, offers to make a small contribution and who is then robbed of practically all that he possesses plus an added amount upon an assumed request.

These operators under prevailing prices can and ought to encourage the storage of coal during the summer months as fully as possible, but a permanent decrease in the prices of coal supplemented by an added decrease of prices for the summer months necessarily spells suspension, if not ruin, to a very large proportion of the independent operators, and I protest with all my heart, Mr. President, against a statement emanating from official sources which tells the public that this added decrease was made by the request of the operators.

So much, Mr. President, for that phase of the statement I have read. It is a very insignificant part of it. Its most sinister feature is the acknowledgment by the commission of a present shortage of 500,000 tons per week in the output of the coal mines of the United States. That is the equivalent of 26,000,000 tons for the current year, an amount, Mr. President, appalling in its magnitude and I fear much more appalling in its inevitable consequences.

Mr. President, the situation of the United States is graver perhaps than at any other time in its history. We need every possible resource of the Nation, and we need it now, if we are to prevail in the mighty struggle in which we were forced to engage for the preservation of our institutions and the honor of the Republic.

Food will win the war, say some; others that our manufactured output will do so. Mr. President, I aver deliberately that every available resource, food, fuel, clothing, the output of our great industries, the young manhood of the Nation, all these things, Mr. President, must be summoned to the support, possibly to the defense, of the country if we are to maintain our place among the nations and preserve in all their vigor the essential institutions of freedom and of justice.

The sale of liberty bonds will win the war, say some. Mr. President, the people of the United States have responded to calls for money with an enthusiasm and a generosity without parallel in the history of nations. They will continue to do so. But that, Mr. President, will not win the war unless the vast sums so contributed shall be used frugally and efficiently and unless they be supplemented by the encouragement of industry and by the forcing of production to the last degree in all lines of human endeavor.

Mr. President, coal is the foundation of our industries. Without it we are paralyzed industrially. Without it comfort and health are both jeopardized. It is as essential to a modern civilized industrial community as the pulsation of the blood through the arteries of the human system to sustain continued physical life. We may build ships but we can not operate them without coal. Our lines of communication over the country are as perfect as any system on earth. They can not be operated without coal. Our manufactories are equipped as efficiently as those of any other nation. Their capabilities of output are almost without limitation. Yet they can not turn a wheel in the absence of a coal supply.

The patriotism of a nation can not be maintained, Mr. President, through the winter season in any country, certainly not for two successive seasons in the midst of cold and suffering, without the means of supplying artificial heat. The splendid heroism of Washington at Valley Forge and his battered men, who stood behind him during that awful test of patriotic endurance, was put to the supreme test of devotion. I doubt whether their magnificent endurance could have been duplicated for a second winter.

We have felt, Mr. President, during the past cold season in many of our communities, and particularly among the poor and the needy, the absence of that most useful and indispensable material without which the rigors of our Northern climate mean suffering, sickness, and death.

But, Mr. President, during the present and coming season, in addition to supplying our manufactories, our railways, our vessels, and our own people with coal, comes the added obligation of extending that supply to our allies if we would keep them in line another 12 months in this terrible struggle. How can we expect the Englishman at home, the Italian standing behind his last barrier and holding back the overwhelming flood of vandalism, their people looking with anxious eyes to this country for aid and for sustenance—can we expect them, Mr. President, to stand steady and hold firm if the absolute essentials of life which they must depend upon this country to furnish shall fail them?

And there is France—heroic France—whose magnificent struggle against the tides of barbarism is the wonder of the world, who has kept the fires of liberty burning upon the altars during the past three and a half weary and bloody years, whose last supply of coal is now threatened by the advancing hordes of the Kaiser. What will become of France next winter unless we can furnish them with the coal that they must have, not only to keep their industries going and to produce the munitions of war but to shield their families, their wives and children from its cold and piercing blasts.

Oh, my God, Mr. President, when I consider the tremendous demands made and that must be made upon this country, the last reservoir and the last hope of civilization, when I consider that at this hour instead of an increased production the commissioner tells the country that the shortage is 500,000 tons a week, I shudder to think what is to become of the allies and of us next winter if this shortage continues? Where will that relief come which must come if democracy is to be saved and the institutions of America preserved from destruction?

It is that feature, Mr. President, of this announcement which gives me the gravest concern. The Kaiser is thundering at the gates of Paris. His mighty legions are flushed with plunder and with victory. His insidious spy system and the dissemination of his subtle poison behind the ranks will find mighty support when the rigors of the next fall shall come if there do not come with them the absolute essentials not only to victory but to preserve the patriotism and the morale of the noncombatant population.

Patriotism, Mr. President, is a noble and uplifting impulse, but it can find no enduring place in the haunts of cold, of hunger, of misery, and of suffering. The two can not long coexist. We do not know what this strain is now. We have not yet been put to the test as have the peoples across the sea. But we know what will follow if through strain and stress the morale of our allies is broken.

Should we not, Mr. President, encourage production? Should we not at this fateful moment in history keep the cables busy with good news for those across the sea, assuring them of our redoubled efforts in their behalf and our own? Should we call "Hold the fort, for we are coming—coming 5,000,000 strong, with our treasure, our coal, and our food"? We can not do it, Mr. President, unless present matters are corrected. A shortage of 500,000 tons of coal in the month of March will, I fear, mean a much greater one in the month of April.

Mr. President, I have been criticized by some of my own people for the earnestness which I have displayed concerning the orders of the Fuel Administration and their effect upon the coal mines and operators of my own section of the State. Mr. President, there are no more patriotic people in this country than those whom I have the honor, in part, to represent upon this floor. The coal measures of Colorado exceed those of any coal section of the world. The people want to produce coal; they are begging for permission to produce it. Their miners are standing with their picks in their hands waiting for orders to use them, while here in Washington tyros are busily balancing the averages of cost and the averages of profit, then fixing prices that are suffocating to the trade and that must result in disaster.

Mr. President, this is no time for silence; no time for partisanship. I have been, Mr. President, all my life affiliated from conviction with one of the great parties of this country, but I would willingly see that party and every other party pass into oblivion rather than hesitate to speak here in protest against the menace of an admitted situation in the hope that the Nation may be aroused in some degree to the peril that confronts it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I only came into the Chamber a few minutes ago and I desire to inquire, has the Senator stated, or is he able to state, somewhere near the quantity of coal that could be produced in Colorado above the present quantity, if a wiser policy were adopted?

Mr. THOMAS. In my State, Mr. President, we produced last year 12,000,000 tons of coal. It was the purpose of the producers to increase that to 15,000,000 for 1918, as they could do and can do now, if they are permitted to make a living profit, without which, Mr. President, they can not contribute their proportion—their "bit"—to this mighty struggle.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I trust the Senator from Colorado will not think I am interrupting him with any desire to disconcert him, for I think he is suggesting one of the most important problems before the American people to-day, and I agree with him that this policy of suppressing production at this time, when production is vitally necessary, is absolute insanity.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, far be it from me to charge any undue or improper intention or to challenge the good faith of any man; I believe that those in charge of this great industry are doing what they think they ought to do; but, Mr. President, they should, like others, learn wisdom from experience, if they can learn it in no other way; and when this commission comes before the people with a cheerful statement that the shortage of coal for this week is 500,000 tons and upward, and for that reason urges all to begin the work of storage, it would seem they can not even from experience perceive the crisis which we are approaching with double speed in the coal supply during the spring and summer months of 1918.

My purpose, therefore, in speaking about it this morning as earnestly as I can is, if possible, to call public attention to this critical prospect, to the end that the people may speak with mighty protest for its avoidance.

Mr. President, I want nothing but good for my country. I am unable to see a silver lining upon the clouds that veil the immediate horizon from our view. I know that, however dark it is, if this mighty people will gird their loins about, resolve that nothing shall prevent the accomplishment of their purpose in this war, inspired by the spirit which animated their fathers in winning independence and in establishing the greatest and freest Government on earth, we shall go forward to victory, regardless of the conditions with which we are at present confronted. Unless they do this, Mr. President, some time in the not distant future the Hun, gloated with victory and with booty, the invader of our soil, may sink his fangs into America and write "Mene, mene tekel upharsin" upon the bomb-shattered walls of an American Babylon.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. WATSON. Agreeing entirely with all that the Senator from Colorado has so admirably and so eloquently said, I want to ask him, Is there any remedy at hand other than the repeal of the law?

Mr. THOMAS. I hope so, Mr. President. I am prepared to support any remedy, to advocate the prospect of any remedy that will bring home to all our people a realizing sense of our overwhelming peril. For that reason I have taken the time of the Senate this morning, I hope for the last time, upon this very important subject.

REGISTRATION FOR MILITARY SERVICE—PROSECUTION OF THE WAR.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am obliged to leave the Senate for an important conference on the financial corporation bill, and I therefore ask unanimous consent of the Senate, and their indulgence, to say a few words occupying but a few minutes, in regard to the bill which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] will presently call up and to which has been offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] an amendment providing for universal military training.

I have long supported the purpose of that amendment. I believe in it most thoroughly. I am not going to take the time of the Senate at this moment to argue it. I advocated it as a measure of preparation before war came; I advocate it as a measure of preparation now that the war is here; I advocate it because I believe that in war or in peace the training that would thus be given would be of value to us as a people. I especially urge it at this time because, in my belief, it would enable us to have the young men of this country ready, when they were called upon in the draft, to take their places in the ranks trained and disciplined. It is above all as a measure of immediate value and immediate preparation that I advocate it. How many more bitter lessons must we have in order to learn the necessity of preparation and of taking every step possible to meet the terrible situation which is now upon us?

This is one thing which we can do; but there is another thing, Mr. President, which I wish to say this morning, and I am encouraged thereto by the example of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], and that is to tell the truth upon certain subjects to the American people. The fate of the war is trembling in the balance. Our gallant allies are holding back the German advance at enormous sacrifice and with a courage which goes beyond the range of eulogy. In this dark hour it is a crime to keep from the American people facts well known to our enemies, but about which our own citizens are misinformed.

We know here and we have known for weeks, as the Germans have known, that we have no fighting planes in France. The Secretary of War spoke a short time ago of our beginning to send fighting planes to France. He said the number was small, but we had begun to send them. We returned at that time the two French models which we had had here. Since then I believe one American plane has gone; it may be on the water now; it may have been landed. The heavy Liberty motor, according to the best information I can get, may be developed so as to furnish adequate power for bombing planes. The light motor does not show a capacity for fighting planes. We have not a fighting plane in France. The front where our men are is not defended in the air. The French and the English have use for every plane they can bring up, and our men are not defended at all.

We have spent $840,000,000 for aeroplanes in the past year, and we have not a fighting plane in France. I was shown a statement from the Aero Club of America saying that what was needed was money—three thousand million dollars to build aeroplanes. Mr. President, we have granted powers and we have given money without stint; but appropriating money and granting powers will lead to nothing unless the money is wisely expended and the powers are efficiently exercised. This idea which some persons seem to have that all that is necessary is to appropriate money and utter brave words in order to end the war is one of the worst delusions which ever tempted a people to destruction.

The facts I have recited in regard to aeroplanes are known to Germany. It is time our people understood them.

We have no guns in France, except a few old coast guns which we sent out early and for which the French are making carriages. We are using French guns. That is the hard fact. We decided to make 75-millimeter guns. We got the French plans; they gave us everything, including the secret of the recoil, and six months were wasted while we were trying to improve the best recoil of the best gun in the world, and now we have no guns. We have gone back to the French plans, with six golden wasted months behind us.

We have turned out two American ships, according to the best information I can get. The country is told about 26, or whatever the number is. We have been finishing some commandeered foreign ships; we have commandeered other ships; but we have got only two American ships, and yet the Shipping Board has been in existence since September, 1916. Two American ordered and built ships is our whole contribution thus far to the new tonnage of the world.

Mr. President, it is to the last degree painful to say these things, but they are the truth. The facts are there to be dealt with. I have the deepest confidence in the American people, and I believe they should not be misled with tales of what we are about to do and not be told what we have done and what we have failed to do. Let them know the truth; whether it is bad or good, let them have the truth. If they have the truth and they see the difficulties, it will arouse the American spirit—not merely the spirit of generous patriotism with which they have come forward to give their sons and their brothers, their money, and their time to the country, but the grim determination, the hard setting of the teeth which was shown on both sides during the Civil War. Tell them the truth; tell them where we are to-day.

The world looked to us a year ago and said we had come to the rescue of the situation. If the situation is ultimately to be saved, it can only be saved by the resources and the man-power of the United States. We have a good draft law; it has been well administered. We got the men; we can get more men; but, apart from that, what have we to show in accomplishment? A wasted year.

Mr. President, the only relief that I can see is to appeal to the spirit of the American people. You can not do that if you deceive them. Tell them the truth. Let them know the dangers and the perils in which they are; that we are fighting for freedom, for civilization, for all that makes life worth living; and that we may be fighting before very long for our very existence as an independent nation. It is no time to deceive ourselves. Let us look facts in the face. I for one have held my peace a long time, but the day has gone by when it is right to hold our peace.

What I said is well known to Senators on both sides of the Chamber; just as well known as it is to me—better known, by far, to the members of the Committee on Military Affairs, which has done such great work during the past winter. But, Mr. President, I for one will no longer stand by in silence.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to ask the Senator why it is that the Military Affairs Committee have not published the testimony of Mr. Gifford and Gen. Wood and others who appeared before them?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am not on the committee. I have no fault to find with them. I think they have done great work. I am far from having a criticism on anything they have done. I praise them in every respect. They will give us the testimony of which the Senator speaks whenever they think it right to do so. All I want to say is that I, for one individual, one American—that is all—want my people to know just what the situation is, and then they will rise up and meet it; but if they do not know, they never will.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think it is proper to say that the President has appointed a committee which is at the present time undertaking a thorough investigation of the aircraft production matter, and that the War Council, with which the Military Affairs Committee meets each Saturday, has been promised a statement next Saturday of the facts thus developed up to that time.

I am not combating in any degree the statements made by the Senator from Massachusetts. The Military Affairs Committee, which has gone far in revealing failures and proposing reforms, has been criticized already in certain quarters for what it has done. At the present time it is engaged in an effort to cooperate with the War Department, the organization of which has been immensely improved since the investigations of the Military Affairs Committee commenced. I should not speak for the committee, as the chairman is here, but I believe I am safe in saying that the committee will give to the Senate as rapidly as possible any information or recommendation which may be of value regarding this aircraft matter. The committee is naturally under some restraint. It has a public duty to perform but can not make public all the information that comes to it and all the rumors that come to it. But an investigation is now in progress, and the Senator from Massachusetts will be gratified and the country will be gratified when that investigation has progressed a little more in having revealed the exact truth. There is, so far as I know, no disposition to conceal it. Whatever the mistakes of the past may have been—and they have been enormous—I believe they are in course now of being cured.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, it is quite encouraging to hear the Senator from Nebraska assure the Senate that there is a prospect that on next Saturday, or some other time in the future, the United States may get information as to what is being done in regard to the production of airplanes. That is quite a considerable progress for the United States to have made after it has been engaged for a year in the most desperate war that the world has ever seen.

I am somewhat surprised at the statement of the Senator from Nebraska, because my impression was that the substantial facts in regard to the airplane situation were known to the entire world. They are very simple. There is nothing complicated about the matter. The facts are admitted by those who are responsible for the production of airplanes. Nobody denies them, that I have ever heard. The substantial, fundamental fact in the situation is that we have been engaged for a year in this war, which the Senator from Massachusetts says may ultimately result in a struggle for the independence of this Nation, and that we have no airplanes. That is all there is about it.

I should like to know if the Senator from Nebraska is informed of the fact that the plan of those who have been made responsible for the expenditure of about a billion dollars which the Congress of the United States has appropriated for the production of this essential of modern warfare is that we are not going to have any airplanes at all, at any time, so far as fighting battle planes are concerned?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Senator from Nebraska know that that is the deliberate purpose and plan of this administration?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Since the Senator asks me the question, I am perfectly free to make an answer so far as I am acquainted with the facts.

In the first place, the Senator's statement that the facts are all known to the world is true, so far as the fact goes that we are probably many days behind time in the delivery of combat airplanes. Substantially, we are not behind time in the delivery of training airplanes, of which we have about 2,000. When I stated that an investigation was being made, I meant that an investigation is being made to develop who is responsible for the present delinquency in the delivery of combat airplanes.

Referring now to the last question of the Senator, I may say that we have every assurance in the Military Affairs Committee that a certain number of combat planes will be ready for delivery on the 1st of July.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What does the Senator mean by "combat planes"?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I mean planes to be used in combat—the highest type of combat planes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator does not seem to have the understanding of that term that the Aircraft Production Board has. We saw here the other day an exhibition of a combat plane, not made in this country, because there have been none made here, but made in France and brought here after we had been engaged in this war for a year, in order that here, at the Capital of the Nation, we at last might be given an exhibition of an aviator flying in a battle plane which we were not able to provide for ourselves; and, if I am correctly informed, we never will be able, under the administration and the plans and purposes of the Aircraft Production Board, to see as the product of American genius the spectacle of a battle plane such as that that was exhibited to us here on Sunday afternoon, because it is not the intention of this administration to make any of those planes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator there is in error, unless the committee has been entirely misinformed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The committee has been misinformed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me state to the Senator approximately the facts.

Last summer the Aircraft Production Board, in the excess of very oversanguine expectations, promised the country an enormous number of combat planes by a certain date of the present year. I think it was fixed at 20,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Twenty-two thousand.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. A very foolish and a very impossible estimate. Later on, about October, that estimate was reduced to 15,000. Later on, approximately in November some time, the estimate was reduced, as I recall, to 7,000. On the 1st of December it was again reduced, and it has been reduced since that time, say, on the 1st of January or some time in February, until it is now only about one-tenth of the original delivery promised by the 1st of July. It is true, however, that combat planes are being made. A number have been made in the United States—a very small number, it is true. I am not going to tell the number that are already in existence in this country. It is a ridiculously small number. It will be a larger number in April, and a still larger number in May.

I do not think it is proper to say that the manufacture of combat planes has been abandoned. It may be true that the liberty motor will not be used in the combat planes that are constructed, because the international conferences have developed the fact that possibly another motor may be superior to the liberty motor for combat planes, and the use of the liberty motor may be confined to the bombing planes; but it is not true that America will abandon the manufacture of combat planes, because America can not do that thing. France is now going to her limit in the manufacture of combat planes and is unable to deliver combat planes to us; and it is for that reason that our aviators across the water are not now flying in combat planes, because France is not able to deliver any to them.

What the Senator from Massachusetts said, however, is not strictly correct——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I prefer that the Senator should answer the Senator from Massachusetts in his own time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It will only take a moment, if the Senator will allow me to finish this. Our line is not entirely without protection, because French aviators do to a considerable extent, and to the extent that they are able, protect our line at the present time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. We ought to be very proud of the fact that we are depending upon the French for protection on our battle line.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. It may perhaps be illuminating to inform the Senator what the opinion of the Aero Club of America is regarding our shortage of planes. I read from a clipping from a New York paper of date March 19:

> Lack of funds has prevented the United States from carrying out an aircraft program which will gain and maintain the allies' supremacy in the air, according to a statement issued to-night by the Aero Club of America.
> Recommendation is made that an appropriation of $3,000,000,000 be made by Congress for the work. The present appropriation is $640,000,000.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is a little more than that. There was only $640,000,000 in one appropriation, but there have been several appropriations for this purpose.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington how he knows that it is the plan of this administration not to have any fighting airplanes?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will give the Senator my information. Of course, I am not in the confidence of the administration. It is deduced from circumstances which surround the articles that are published in the newspapers.

Mr. MYERS. Then, I will say, if the Senator will permit me, that it appears to be simply the opinion and conclusion of the Senator, not the announcement of an authentic fact.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; it is an announcement of a fact. I do not claim to be infallible. My conclusion may not be correct, but I believe that it is. Whether or not it is correct is subject to determination upon all the circumstances which anybody can produce. If the Senator has any better information, let him produce it, and let the world decide what the truth of the case is.

Mr. MYERS. Then it simply seems to resolve itself down to a statement and assertion of the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have not had an opportunity, on account of interruptions, to give the source of my authority. I am going to undertake to do it.

There have been a great many publications made of the admissions of the Aircraft Production Board similar to that which was quoted just now by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], apparently with an easy assurance that everything is all right. He says that this program is coming along, and that it will be only 90 days behind the schedule. Mr. President, the fate of nations is often decided in 90 days. My recollection is that France was conquered and put under the heel of the German emperor in less time than that in the War of 1870–71.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not put me in the light of an apologist. I certainly have not intended to appear in that light.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator, then, is not satisfied with the fact that the programme is 90 days behind time?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. By no means. The committee——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Why, Mr. President, this great battle that is now on in France will not last 90 days. It has already lasted only four days, and it has almost come to a decisive point. To come and say that we have performed our duty, that we have met with some discouragements but, notwithstanding those discouragements and obstacles, we are only 90 days behind the program, is to put the administration which is responsible for these things in an absurd position.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is something in the Senator's tone which indicates that I am appearing as an apologist. I am not. I am a critic. I have been condemning and attacking and endeavoring to speed up. I am only rising for the purpose of stating the facts. I say this Nation has not abandoned its policy of building combat planes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I say that it has. Has the Senator ever seen a battle plane produced in this country such as the French plane that was exhibited here the other day?

I have in my hand, Mr. President, a statement which bears the earmarks of authenticity. I am accustomed to weighing, with some discrimination, the merits of newspaper publications and undertaking at least to determine how much credence they are entitled to; and this one bears all the evidences of having come from interviews with the officials who have charge of this work. In fact, it so states. On paragraph is that—> while admitting that the airplane program is two months behind the original schedule—

Of course it is a great deal of satisfaction, Mr. President, when the fate of the Nation is to be determined, when defeat stares us in the face, to be confronted with the excuse that the schedule that was made for the equipment of the armies of this country was somewhat in fault. I have seen a number of statements to the effect that the number of airplanes and of guns and of machine guns was ahead of the schedule, and yet here is a statement that it is 60 days behind the schedule. Those statements come from the same sources. Which is correct? Has not the Senator from Nebraska, has not every Senator, seen those statements, put out from the various executive bureaus of the Government, that we are ahead of the schedule, that airplane production is ahead of the schedule? Well, what is the matter with the schedule? If our production of nothing at the end of a year is ahead of the schedule, who made the schedule, and why was it made upon that basis? And how does the Senator reconcile being ahead of the schedule with the statement which I have just read that we are 60 days behind the schedule and the Senator's statement that we are 90 days behind the schedule?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, there is no reconciliation. We are behind. I know we are at least 90 days behind.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator does not agree with the statements that have been put out from time to time that we are ahead of the schedule on aircraft production, then?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Of course I do not. I admit that, and I am not standing as an apologist. I object, however, to having the Senator state that this country has abandoned the construction of combat planes. This country has not abandoned that policy, and it can not abandon that policy.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; I agree with the Senator; it can not abandon the policy, because it has never undertaken the policy. It has not any policy to build battle planes, according to the best information I can get.

I asked the Senator a moment ago what is the distinction, what the battle plane was, and he said it was a fighting plane. I have in my hand here a statement written by, I presume, a correspondent of the New York World, reported in the local Washington Times. The New York World is, I understand, a paper whose correspondent has the confidence of the administration and access to sources of information. Here is the statement contained there, and I believe it, Mr. President, because of its intrinsic evidence of truth. It corroborates the substantial evidence of the Senator from Nebraska, together with the visible, ocular demonstrations which are open to everybody, or rather the lack of ocular demonstration of the existence of any battle planes after all the efforts we have made to obtain them. This statement says:

> By combat planes is meant the machines used for raiding and observation purposes and for day and night bombing. The term does not include the single-seated light exclusively fighting planes—the thoroughbreds of the air—nor does it include elementary or advanced training planes. They are listed on separate tables. The delivery of elementary-school planes is well into the quantity stage, and the advanced planes will soon reach that point. The highly developed single-seated fighters are being built in France and England. America has never intended and does not now plan to build that type. She is too far away from the front, where changes in this class of aircraft are of almost weekly occurrence.

Now I believe that statement. I have heard it a number of times made here at every period when inquiry was made for information, and I shall continue to base my conclusion upon its accuracy until I have some evidence to the contrary which has not yet been produced, notwithstanding the inquiry and the testimony of witnesses which the Senator from Nebraska has heard as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The only element of truth in the statement of the correspondent read by the Senator, so far as I know, is that it has been argued that combat planes should be made near the seat of combat for the reason that they are compelled from week to week or at least from month to month to modify and change them according to the progress and development of the art of manufacture. It is probable—I do not know but that it is already the fact—that America will ship over the material partly constructed, to complete the manufacture of combat planes in France for the purpose of taking advantage of the latest changes; but that America will abandon the manufacture of combat planes is not true. We have that from very definite authority. We know that some of the combat planes are in existence this month and that more are promised for next month, and that we will have at least 2,000 of them by July unless present calculations go awry.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is in conflict with the statement of the correspondent I have just read. He states that the production of combat planes is not yet in the quantity stage, and he carefully explains that combat planes are the bombing planes, the heavy planes for raiding purposes, and not the light battle planes which are absolutely essential to protect our lines of battle from the observation planes and the bombing planes of the enemy.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. FALL. The Senator is right. The term combat plane to the ordinary layman or the average American citizen is considered as a scouting, fighting plane. As I understand the Senator, the combat plane is not only necessary for the protection of our men in the trenches, but it is necessary for the protection of both the bombing plane and the scouting plane. The object of the scouting plane is to carry information, to obtain photographs, and so forth. It must be protected against the attack of fighting planes; it can not protect itself. The scouting plane is in the same condition. Those planes are protected by the battle plane.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The only way they can be protected is by the fighting plane.

Mr. President, one other point I want to call attention to.

Mr. BORAH. Before the Senator takes that up, has he read an article in the New York World which purports to contain the report of a special agent of the President upon the situation with reference to aircraft——

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; I have not read it; but I will say in that connection that I have made no search for material for criticism of the Government. On the contrary, I have searched for evidences of good administration rather than bad, and it is only when things come to such a pass as to be a scandal to the entire world, in my judgment, that I have felt it necessary to call attention to them.

Mr. BORAH. This purports to be a report of the confidential agent of the President. It is not a criticism at all; it is a report made, and I assume it was put out authoritatively. It could not have been given to the public except in one way.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield to me just one moment?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would much prefer that the Senator from Idaho complete his statement, and then I will yield.

Mr. KING. I just wanted to inquire of the Senator from Idaho, with the permission of the Senator from Washington, if when he speaks of confidential agent of the President he refers to Mr. Borglum.

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. KING. I think I can state to the Senator from Idaho that he does not occupy that relation to the President.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, I do not know. But the article states that by virtue of a letter received by the President on the 2d day of January this gentleman was authorized to make the investigation, and he made the investigation and made a report to the President, the report being confidential, and to the President. I take it it would not have been published in the New York World without a basis for the statement. But I read a single paragraph. If it is true, it is a terrible situation; and if it is not true, some correction ought to be made. If this report is not authoritative, it should be repudiated. The report says:

> The general situation indicates a terrible state of confusion and irregularity, as report shows, due to self-interest and intrigue, together with predetermination to thwart the effort of our Nation and the work of able and trusted assistants.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I can state on my own knowledge at first hand that a gentleman high in the organization of the airplane construction board stated to me that there seemed to be in the effort to produce airplanes some mysterious unknown influence that was putting a blight upon the entire efforts of the board that he could not explain. I know something about the efforts of the board and something of why we have no airplanes. I know that of my own knowledge.

In that same article that I referred to a moment ago it was stated that one of the difficulties which have prevented the production of airplanes has been the difficulty of getting spruce. I know where the spruce is. There are quantities of it in the State I in part represent and in the adjoining State of Oregon, and I myself have presented to the gentlemen who have been delegated to produce the airplanes the offer of men of wealth, of character, of patriotism, to produce and deliver to them all the spruce that they needed; men who are able to make good their word; men who could produce and deliver the spruce in record time if there had been merely one word of consent. But that consent was refused. They were unable to get permission to produce spruce, and yet it is said that the reason why we have no airplanes is because they could not get spruce. I know they could have gotten spruce not 60 days or 90 days ago but 6 months and 9 months ago. All the spruce that was needed could have been had for the asking for it and the payment of a reasonable price, to be fixed by the Government itself.

I also know something, Mr. President, in this connection, about the reason for the delay and failure to have ships. There are in my State great harbors. There are men skilled in building ships. There are men there with the resources and the capital who do not need to come to New York or anywhere else to secure the necessary funds to carry on their operations; men who are experienced in the construction of ships; men who have had organizations of employees ready at their bidding to carry out their contracts. I made offers on their behalf to the Shipping Board months ago and have informed the Shipping Board that I knew that if these men agreed to deliver a ship the ship would be delivered. Their record of accomplishment, the means which they possess, was a guarantee that the ship would be delivered in accordance with any agreement they made; and I was unable to get permission for these men, who were largely actuated by patriotic motives in offering to assume these contracts, because there are many other avenues of employment with a profitable return in which they have been engaged. But their offers were refused. They were delayed from week to week and month to month before they could get any answer at all.

In the meantime the lines of ships that carry the lifeblood of the Nation across the sea were being destroyed by the German submarines, while month after month men who were, in September, 1916, commissioned with authority to produce ships quibbled about preparations and about time and about specifications. Men have known how to produce ships that would sail the seas and carry freight to the people of the world long before the men who sit upon this Shipping Board were born. The members of the Shipping Board held no exclusive knowledge of the plans and specifications of ships. There are great organizations in the world whose business it is to determine whether a ship is seaworthy in order that they may insure it, and if a ship is built that comes within the rules and regulations of their register it is a sufficient ship for the needs of a Nation that is fighting for national existence.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. POINDEXTER. In just a moment. Those shipbuilders were ready to comply with those regulations and those conditions, and they were not only not sought but their offers were positively declined.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator think this is a proper time, admitting everything to be true, to discourage the American people in the saddest hour of our history during the war? Does he think it is the proper course to take on the floor of the Senate? Sometimes silence is golden.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I infer from what the Senator from North Carolina says that if these things are true that I say are true we should remain silent about them. I have remained silent about them for a long time.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator is taking this opportunity, when I say we are in great distress, to discourage the American people, when we need to have them enthused instead of being disheartened.

Mr. POINDEXTER. This is not going to discourage the American people.

Mr. OVERMAN. It discourages everybody. Now is the time for all men to be true and to be silent about matters that we may admit to be true.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not agree with the Senator. I think there comes a time after a while when silence and forbearance is a fault. I will tell you it is the duty of the Senator from North Carolina and of other patriotic citizens not merely to be silent but to exert yourselves to improve the administration and the efforts of the Government.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator is here at this time criticizing the administration because of mistakes, when it is doing the best it can to carry on the war.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am here for the purpose of pointing out what the Senator is seeking to cover up—an undisputed and scandalous failure of the administration.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask the Senator, admitting what he says to be true, is this the proper time for the Senator to be throwing it out to the American people, when they ought to be enthused? I think the Senator is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; I am not; but that does not make any difference

Mr. OVERMAN. I thought the Senator was. He is making statements here. I do not know whether they are true or not. They may be true, but I say we ought to correct these mistakes, but correct them in the proper way. Every man here on the floor wants to correct them. Every man here, I think, is a patriot; and why does the Senator stand here, at this very time when we are in a serious condition, to make the people of America unhappy and discourage them? This is not the time. I want every effort made to correct the errors, if there are errors. It is a time for everybody to get together and correct these errors.

Mr. POINDEXTER. How can everybody get together and correct the errors if everybody does not know about the errors?

Mr. OVERMAN. I think every Senator on this floor is trying to correct them. I know we have the Military Committee, which is a great committee, that has been investigating these matters; and they will be corrected.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is encouraging. I am glad to know that they will be corrected. It may be that the discussion here this morning may lead toward that end.

Mr. OVERMAN. The point I make is that the Senator from Washington is stirring up trouble in the country.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If it stirs up trouble, Mr. President, in order to point out the actual situation we are in, with a view of remedying that situation, with a view of changing this policy of nonproduction and removing the secret influences and mysterious blight that are thwarting the efforts of the administration, then it is time to understand that situation, in order that everybody, as the Senator from North Carolina says, may unite to bring about a successful issue of this war.

Mr. OVERMAN. My point is that the Senator is not going about it in the right way, and I do not believe—if he will allow me to say so—it the best way to do it at this time.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator from Washington yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FALL. As I understand, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] is now in charge of a bill providing that absolute power be vested in the President of the United States, and that the Senator is going to insist upon the passage of that bill. I am one of those who have advocated, or at least who have voted for, practically every particle of legislation of that character; I am not at all sure that I shall not support as strongly as I can the bill, the passage of which the Senator will urge; but, Mr. President, as an American I am exactly in the frame of mind which was so eloquently and so forcefully expressed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] this morning—one who would see his party sink to the uttermost depths of hell rather than that the people should suffer any further from inaction and failure and want of knowledge; one of those who would rather vote absolutely autocratic powers to the President; but I do want to know what the President is doing with the powers which have already been given. For that reason I think that a discussion of this kind as to evident failures, which we all know, every one of us, the Senator from North Carolina as well as I, or else the Senator who says he is seeking for information has not been in fact seeking for such information.

As one of those who recognizes that failures have been made, I think that the time has come for the application of remedies. I do not think that the President himself can be reached in any way except by the knowledge that the people of the United States are finally getting information which, apparently, he has not yet assimilated.

Mr. OVERMAN. I say to the Senator that I agree with him and I fully indorse the sentiments which have been expressed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], but I do not think the floor of the Senate is the proper place to discuss these matters at this time. I think it ought to be done by the committee; that that is the proper place to do it.

Mr. FALL. If I may trespass upon the time of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] a moment longer, I desire to say that the Senator from North Carolina calls himself a Democrat and I have been called a Republican. I believe, as a Democrat and as a Republican and as a citizen, and I have always so believed, that the people of the United States can attend to their business and can force their administrative and their legislative officers to attend to their business as it should be attended to if they are informed. Time and again here I have said that I was never afraid of inflamed public opinion if public opinion had an opportunity to inform itself. I say, with due respect to the President of the United States, that he is simply representing as an Executive, or he should represent as an Executive, the wishes and desires of the people of the United States as expressed through their legislative officers elected by them for that purpose. He should execute the laws which this Congress passes, and should administer the powers which they vest in him for the protection of the American people. I have been willing to vote the very ultimate power to the President; but I as one now say to you, sir, that I shall demand, as an American citizen, to know how those powers are being administered, not only with reference to the construction of airships but with reference to the control of the business of this country; with reference to the placing of our men in the trenches, where they may be captured to-day or may be dying by the thousands.

I want knowledge and I want the people to have that knowledge. I am one of those who differ from the Senator from North Carolina. I am not afraid of the people knowing.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] that there is no lack of channels under this administration through which information can be conveyed to the American people of the conditions as they exist to-day. I hold in my hand here, Mr. President, a list of the governmental publicity bureaus—I should say a partial list. I want Senators to understand that there are over 47 of them that I have recorded upon these pages [exhibiting]—47 governmental publicity bureaus. There is no lack of agencies on the part of this Government to see that information reaches the farthest ends of the country, in all the homes of the people; but I will undertake to say to the Senator that I do not believe that one of those agencies has published one thing in the way of criticism or calling the attention of the American people to the unfortunate position in which we find ourselves to-day.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think that is true.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I shall conclude in just a minute, if the Senator pleases.

Mr. President, I have as much interest in the success of the American Army on the battle front in France as has the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], but when we read from day to day the utterances of soldiers in the trenches to the effect that they see German bombing and gas planes flying over their lines and back of their lines, and that they have no means of protecting themselves except such as may be afforded them through the friendship and the common interests of our French allies, I think that devotion to that cause demands that any effort that I may be able to make in the way of publicity or otherwise be put forth to lead to the production of airplanes to accompany the other branches of our military service in France in order that they may be protected and that they may have opportunity to gain the victory which we all expect, but which will be impossible unless they are thoroughly supplied with airplanes.

One thing to which I object is the explanations and excuses which are made by those officials who are responsible for the production of the equipment of our Army. I have here a statement, recently published in the newspapers, in which these officials proceed to say that they have been successful because they have spent so many billions of dollars of money and have employed so many clerks in their offices. I do not think that is a proper standard of success. I admit they have spent billions of money; I admit that they have employed thousands and tens of thousands of clerks, but I say that when they have expended that money and employed this army of employees and assistants, and after the expiration of a year, when we are confronted with the fact, which I believe is not denied, that we have no machine guns, that we have no cannon except those that are supplied to us by our friends and allies in France, it is time to give public utterance to those facts and to call the attention of the country and the world to them.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. In view of the statement made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] that there are 47 publicity agents, I will ask the Senator if he cares to express his opinion as to the output of those agencies proportioned to the effort and the expense involved?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Well, I have here in my hand a statement, evidently coming from executive officers, with the heading, "Sixteen cannon plants ready for operation." Upon reading it I find that instead of 16 cannon plants being ready for operation, the statement is to the effect that negotiations are in progress which, it is hoped, will lead to the establishment of 16 cannon plants. That is the progress that we have made a year after we entered the war.

So it is said that another accomplishment has been the—expenditure of approximately $40,000,000 for plant facilities to manufacture artillery cannon, with an estimate that $300,000,000 will be spent for cannon alone within two years after the outbreak of the war.

I do not dispute those facts. It may very well be that they have spent $40,000,000 already for plant facilities, and that they have made estimates to expend $300,000,000 more, but if the amount were $300,000,000,000 and they had produced no cannon, it would not be an evidence of the performance of their duty.

So it is said—and this is a peculiar excuse, which is put out for the situation of affairs—that—

By June of this year the memorandum said—the division will have a staff of 1,500 officers and 10,000 civilians.

And this memorandum was put out by the Assistant Secretary of War—

That is quite an accomplishment, to get 1,500 officers and 10,000 civilians employed, if the standard of success in preparing this country to carry on this war is the number of officers and the number of civilians employed; but, however great the number of officers and however many thousands of civilians may be employed, it is very poor satisfaction to the country, in the time of a crisis such as this, if we have no results in the way of equipment or arms from that great establishment.

It was said a moment ago by one Senator that very soon we may be fighting for our national existence. Well, the trouble is that there are too many people in this country who are not in favor of independent national existence, and they have received entirely too much encouragement. There is a doctrine called "internationalism," which means a surrender of independent national existence and a merger with all of the different peoples of the world, which is openly preached and advocated by a considerable number of people. Not long ago I was very much surprised to hear read upon the floor of the Senate, with the approval and eulogy of distinguished and patriotic Senators, a letter from a gentleman by the name of Thompson, which contained a fulsome eulogy of Trotsky and Lenine, German traitors masquerading under the guise of Russians, who sold out their adopted country and who do not believe in the doctrine of independent nationality, but believe in that counter and inconsistent doctrine of what they call "internationalism."

Not long since we saw official utterances from the President of the United States, in which he offered encouragement to this misnamed government of Russia, which in the name of liberty has sacrificed the Russian people to the most tyrannical autocracy, perhaps, that any government has ever developed.

We have an ally in whom we are very much interested on the Pacific coast, an ally that has scrupulously kept her engagements in this war, an ally that has lived up to the best traditions of western civilization, although she has but recently acquired it. The great Empire of Japan has been a faithful ally to the United States and the other democracies of the world in this war; and yet, in the face of the advancing German influence in Russia, in the face of an army of German and Austrian prisoners who had been released and who, the papers this morning state, are gathering into an army in Siberia, fully equipped with machine guns, with powder, and with cannon, and although Japan is ready and willing, in pursuance of her obligations to her allies, in perfect good faith to do for Russia in the face of the German menace what we in our feeble and inefficient way are seeking to do for France, to send her troops there to stem that tide, to protect our Pacific coast, to protect the great store of railroad material and of war equipment which the taxes of our people have provided and assembled at Vladivostok, instead of offering a hand of encouragement, instead of showing our gratitude, we offer discouragement; we indicate, in the face of all the good faith that Japan has displayed, a doubt of her intentions. Consequently we leave this great drama of the secret machinations between the bolsheviki of Russia and the German Kaiser to go on, spreading their net around the liberties of the Russian people, gathering up her resources and consolidating their gains, organizing the Russian railroads, preparing to use all of the material of food and of men—because the men will be but slaves working under German military commanders—and to produce the materials with which Germany will meet France and England and the United States on the western front; and we not only sit idly by while that is going on but we dissent; we object to the help which the generous hand of Japan is proffering us.

We object to this disinterested policy on the part of Japan—I call it disinterested because I can readily see that it would be to the interest of Japan to conserve her forces, to keep her army intact, to maintain undiminished her supply of guns and powder. She offers to use them for the allied cause. From the statesmen of France and England come words of encouragement and of good faith, but from the American Government comes only dissent and refusal not only to assist but to consent for Japan to engage in this undertaking.

What can we expect from a foreign policy such as that? Time and time again there have been difficult and more or less acute issues between Japan and the United States in the Pacific, and there are certain plain and fundamental principles in which the people of the Pacific coast are not only interested but upon which they have planted themselves irrevocably. One of them is that the Pacific coast is for the people of the United States. It is a branch of that doctrine by which the United States has said to Europe and to Asia, in effect: "Do not interfere in the affairs of the Americas." Now, I am in favor of that doctrine. It is essential to our safety and to our future prosperity. But if we assume that attitude—that Japan must keep her hands off from the Western Hemisphere—Japan must expand in some other direction. She must find food for her people, room for her increasing population, somewhere on the face of the earth. We have said to her: "You can not find it in America"; yet because of an unfounded doubt, even as to her intentions on the mainland of Asia, we refuse to accept her assistance in meeting the German menace in Siberia. I say that it is a mistaken policy.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator inform us what information he has that is official about that? The newspapers, perhaps, have said it, but does the Senator believe everything he sees in the newspapers?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; I do not believe everything I read in the newspapers, but I undertake to pick out of things in the newspapers those which I do not believe and those things which I do believe. I have been accustomed for a good many years to consider the credibility of witnesses in the light of circumstances; and when I see a situation which is known to everybody to exist in Siberia, and when the universal statement is not only in the newspapers but everywhere, from Europe and Asia and America, that Japan is willing and ready to use her army and her fleet to protect the property of the allies and the interests of the Russian people, and when that enterprise is stopped, is not carried out, in the face of the great need for it, when the crisis is acute, I do believe in the face of that corroborating circumstance that our administration has refused to give its assent.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not profess to speak from any more knowledge than any other Senator has. I confess to an ignorance about as deep as I think all of us have of the relations between Japan and Russia and the probable effect of an assault by Japan upon Russia, and whether as between the German assault on the one side and the Japanese assault on the other Russia in its disorganized condition might not immediately join the forces of Germany itself in an assault on Japan. So that it is a very serious question, and not to be laid down, it strikes me, as a matter of mere unquestioned dictum that it is a proper thing to rush in there. I do not know. I am not in the confidence of those who are in touch with these matters; but those things have occurred to me while the Senator was speaking. I do not know what effect a Japanese invasion might have on the Russian people, especially as Russia is absolutely headless and has gone to pieces. Suppose that under the machinations which Germany has so successfully practiced in more than one country she should persuade Russia that her interest lies in standing with Germany against a Japanese invasion?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is a confirmation of the proposition which the Senator from South Carolina questioned. The views and the doubts expressed by the Senator from Arizona, with his means of access to the executive branch of the Government, confirm the public report that the administration entertains the same doubts that the Senator from Arizona has just expressed.

Now, while we are doubting, while the President is doubting—and I have no desire to embarrass the President in any way; I agree with him generally, and want to support him in every way possible—and while the Senator from Arizona is doubting whether we ought to act, Germany is not doubting. Germany is not hesitating. She has the ability to decide and to act, while we have only the ability in this particular matter to debate and doubt and hesitate; and while we are doubting the fate of Russia and her position in this war are being fixed and settled forever.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I will suggest, if the Senator will permit me, that sometimes people walk in where other individuals or spirits are afraid to tread. This is not a matter of fear, but it is a matter of common sense. It strikes me that if this country is in the deplorable condition that the Senator has been an hour telling about, we are in a very poor attitude from that standpoint to say that we will just rush in anyhow, nolens volens, prepared or not, and take on another coast in a war that is giving us about as much as we can attend to across the Atlantic. It seems to me that instead of laying down a course of action for the President, who probably has as wide a field and as many facts to deal with as we, I for one, at least, would be very careful before I laid down the absolute dictum that he was making an enormous mistake in a matter of this importance.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is not a dictum, Mr. President; it is the expression of an opinion.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just a moment. Although it is somewhat embarrassing to differ with the President, it has always been the practice in the United States for American citizens to be guided by their own judgment and their own opinions in these matters; and whether the Senator from Arizona is right or the President—who, I understand, occupies the same position on this question that he does—is right, or whether those who differ from him are right, must be determined in the light of events. The thing to be ascertained is not what the opinion of the President is or his judgment about these matters. Many Presidents have made mistakes. The thing to be ascertained is the truth.

I may not find it; the Senator from Arizona may not find it; but in the expression of conflicting opinions, and in calling the attention of the public in order that that great agency of democracy, an enlightened public opinion, may have an opportunity to operate, we may be able to ascertain the truth in this matter.

Mr. KING and Mr. SMITH of Arizona addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Utah, as he rose first.

Mr. KING. I will defer to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I was only about to suggest, in the line of the argument the Senator has already made in his expressed admiration of the go-to-it-ness of the German people, that I have never seen any particular effort to question behind the German Emperor's back his assault on the English forces.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not know that I can question it behind his back. I hope it will be questioned in front of his face to such an extent that it will not succeed.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I meant no offense to the Senator by saying "behind his back." I was referring to the fact that behind the back of the invading lines of Germany there was no one questioning that course of action.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understood what the Senator said.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I did not mean that offensively to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I know that the Senator did not. I do not expect that the intervention of Japan in Russia would result in any formidable or increased movement of the Russian people against the allies. The Senator knows that Russia is now under the control of the Germans; and if he has read the multitude of dispatches which, all taken together, indicate the true situation, he knows that Germany's constant and persistent labor and work in Russia is to fasten her tentacles upon the resources of that country; and unless they are stopped by the only thing that appeals to those who direct the movement of the German armies—namely, force—we will have what the Senator fears, and that is the resources of the Russian Empire directed against the allies in this war.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit just one more interruption, I will not trouble him any more.

I will ask the Senate to think for just a moment of the vast stretch of country lying between the proposed assault by Japan and the great Russian Empire, of which Germany at the present time has but a drop in the bucket in her possession, and to consider whether an assault from the extreme opposite side by an alien race might not have the effect that I have suggested. Not knowing that it was the President's attitude, not standing in the light of defending his attitude in any way, but seeing the geography of the situation and the immense differences of opinion in the Russian Empire, so far as we can safely gather them, it seems to me that we might be a little timid before we say, and think very carefully before we say, to the Commander in Chief of the Armies of the United States: "We advise right now an assault on eastern Russia."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a suggestion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. KING. I agree with the able Senator in his observations respecting Japan, and her integrity, and her scrupulous regard of all obligations as an ally, and her desire to carry out her international responsibilities. I agree with him that there is no reason justifying anyone in expressing or entertaining a doubt as to the fidelity of Japan to the allies in this great contest. I think I can say to the Senator—and I make this observation after having made some investigation—that the subject concerning which he is now speaking, namely, the intervention of Japan in Siberia, has received and is receiving the most serious consideration of the executive department of the United States and of the allies.

I do not think that there is a concurrence of view upon the part of all the interested parties in the wisdom or necessity of a military expedition immediately by Japan into Siberia. It has not been determined yet, as I understand, that the military grounds demand or justify the sending of a Japanese army into Siberia. Of course, the situation changes almost daily, so that no absolutely immutable plan can be adopted. My information is that the stores of munitions and war supplies the Senator refers to are not imperiled by any attack, threatened or potential, now apparent upon the part of German or Austrian forces; and I think the Senator can be assured that just as soon as it becomes apparent that military exigencies demand the intervention of Japan in Siberia Japan will go into Siberia with the support of all of the allies, including the Government of the United States. I feel sure that the executive department of the Government is dealing with this serious and important matter in a broad and comprehensive way. It is not always an easy task to ascertain the facts with reference to a condition so far away as that now existing in Siberia and eastern Russia, and the uncertainty of a situation and the daily change therein renders the consideration of the same difficult and delicate.

In my opinion there will be concord between our Government and those associated with her against the central powers in dealing with the Far East situation.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, my only hope is that the decision will not be delayed until it is a repetition of being too late, as has been so often the case in this war. The experiences in the war have indicated that the successful defense of what America stands for—free government, the principles of Christianity, and the teachings of civilization—must be defended in the west. From the beginning Russia has made but a feeble opposition, compared with her resources and numbers, to the central powers, which have started out to impose their "kultur" upon the world. The farther west we come, in my judgment from the experience of military operations of the war, the stauncher and stronger people are found. Austria perhaps is a little better than Russia; Germany is a little better than Austria; France and England are far superior to Germany; and when America finds herself, when her people are advised as to the issue, when we recover from the long campaign which was made by those in authority to prevent us from preparing to defend our rights, I am in hopes that we will, at least, be able to prove ourselves worthy to take our stand as equals beside those great people who are now defending civilization from the barbarism of Germany.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I have been sitting here in my seat wondering why this speech was made and this discussion had this morning. What is the purpose of it? Does anybody think it is going to do any good? I hope my friend was not playing politics when he was discussing these matters. I hope to God that is not true. This is no time to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 8696, the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I was much impressed, as I am sure we all were, by the remarks of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] a few moments ago. I agree with him, as I am sure the Senator from Washington will also, that this is no time to discourage the American people. But, Mr. President, while that is true, by the same token no more is it the time to mislead the people as to our condition of preparedness for the great task that is ahead of us.

In the course of some remarks that I addressed to the Senate yesterday I stated that I had recently seen in the public prints some statements which I regarded as perilously misleading. I do not withdraw the adjective. I think some of the statements I have seen are perilously misleading. For instance, on the 21st day of February there appeared in the Washington Post and in other newspapers a statement given out by the Secretary of War. The headlines over that article in the Post read as follows:

UNITED STATES AEROS GO ABROAD—FIRST SHIPMENT IS FIVE MONTHS AHEAD OF ORIGINAL SCHEDULE—LIBERTY MOTOR SETS PACE—MAKES POSSIBLE ATTACKS ON HUNS MUCH SOONER THAN EXPECTED—BREAKS EVERY KNOWN RECORD FOR SPEED AND CLIMBING OF THAT TYPE OF MOTORS FOR FLIERS, SECRETARY BAKER ANNOUNCES—THOUSANDS OF SKILLED MECHANICS NOW NEEDED AND MUST VOLUNTEER, NUMBER BEING 115,000.

Then the article begins with this:

The first American-built battle planes are en route to France, near five months ahead of the original schedule.

Mr. President, I am loath to believe that the Secretary of War gave out that statement. I can scarcely credit it as true, and yet it is attributed to him in this article and other newspapers of the same date.

Mr. President, I submit that that statement was wholly misleading and, as I said yesterday, perilously so. I mean by that just this: That any statement which leaves the American people under the impression that things are as they are not is perilously misleading. The people are entitled to know the truth. If we can not tell them the truth, let us not feed them upon statements of a kind which tend to quiet them and lessen their appreciation of the tremendous efforts that must be put forth by all, if we are to win this war.

Just 10 days ago there appeared in the newspapers a dispatch on the same subject, and the Indianapolis Star, a newspaper printed in the city in which I have my home, printed as headlines over this article:

"United States air fleet certain by July."

"Battle planes sufficient to protect all American sectors will then be in France."

The article which those headlines lead is not so very definite in what it has to say, but the impression made by the tenor of the dispatch upon the mind of the editor who wrote those headlines was in conformity with the character of the headlines themselves, and the whole American people are misled by that sort of thing, as they should not be.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. NEW. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator surely does not mean to hold the Secretary of War responsible for headlines in a newspaper or even for the contents of the newspaper article?

Mr. NEW. I did not. I said I was loath to believe that the Secretary of War had said what was attributed to him. The headlines, of course, are written in the office of the newspaper, but I read the first paragraph of it and I will read a little further:

The first American-built battle planes are en route to France, near five months ahead of the original schedule.

In making this announcement last night, Secretary Baker said the first shipment, although not large, "marks the final overcoming of many difficulties met in building up this new and intricate industry."

That is what the Secretary is quoted as having said.

Mr. President, I did not rise here for the purpose of criticizing the Secretary of War or of criticizing anybody else particularly, but I do think the point ought to be made clear that it is time the American people should be told the truth about their own affairs and not to be misled into a condition of mind that is too complacent considering the tremendous emergency with which we are brought face to face.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. NEW. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. I agree with the Senator that the public should be told the truth, and I assume therefore that the Senator will tell the truth now. Have we one single fighting airplane over in Europe to-day?

Mr. NEW. Not one.

Mr. McCUMBER. Have we a machine to-day, according to the testimony of experts, that will stand the strain of a fighting machine?

Mr. NEW. We have not a single combat plane in France to-day, unless it has been landed within the last few days.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. NEW. I do.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I have, Mr. President, somewhat the same intention of the Senator who has just propounded his query. I am a very humble Member of this body, but, like every other Member here, I am willing to give of my blood just as you are ready to give of your blood; but we ask for the blood that we give a fair chance in fighting this war. I take it the Senator understands and knows just what the situation is, and therefore, with his permission, I want to ask him what was the aircraft program for July 1 of this year?

Mr. NEW. I think, while I had not intended to mention it, it is fair and just to say that the original program called for delivering in France 12,000 combat planes by the 1st of next July.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Then I ask the Senator if he can answer, and if the answer violates no confidence, how many were delivered or how many will this Government deliver on the 1st day of July in France?

Mr. NEW. Thirty-seven.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Indiana, I desire to ask concerning the accuracy of a startling statement which has been repeated all over this building to-day. Is it in testimony before the Military Committee that the condition of our boys in the trenches to-day is that without let or hindrance German planes are flying over them and flying so low that our boys are shooting at them with revolvers? I want to know whether that is the testimony before the Military Committee?

Mr. NEW. It is.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Then, Mr. President, in answer to the animadversions of the Senator from North Carolina and others, I say that there is just one way to correct this sort of outrage upon American youth, and that way is, in the language of a distinguished Executive, "pitiless publicity." [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is any further demonstration in the galleries the Chair will direct the Sergeant at Arms to clear the galleries. The occupants of the galleries must understand that they are here by the courtesy of the Senate, and that manifestations of approval or disapproval form an infraction of the rules.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. NEW. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator says that it is now expected that there will be 37 combat planes delivered in France in July. Certain statements that bear intrinsic evidence of being from a well-informed source that I called attention to this morning make a distinction between aeroplanes which go under what I think is a misleading name of combat planes. He states that these planes that are called combat planes are listed alongside of another list that are called primary training planes and another list called advanced training planes; that the combat planes in that list are not fighting planes, but they are raiding and bombing planes; and there is stll another list of battle planes which are the only ones that are supposed to engage in battle in the air with hostile airplanes. I should like to know if that is correct?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, the Senator is correct. All planes, as I undestand it, that are engaged in combat are designated combat planes. That includes the rapid flyer and the bombing plane. They are distinguished from the observation plane and the scout plane. When I refer to combat planes I include in that list all the different varieties that are used in actual combat—bomb dropping and attacking other planes, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. NEW. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. In view of the answer of the Senator to the question of the Senator from California, I think it is fair to add to that statement that the original estimate of 12,000 machines was made last year, and that the estimate of February was about 2,100 or 2,200.

Mr. NEW. That is fair, because it is true.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. NEW. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest this thought also to the Senator: There has been a great deal said on the floor by distinguished Senators, members of the Military Affairs Committee, about drawing to the assistance of the national defense distinguished captains of industry, men who are known throughout the commercial and business world as successful business men. The demand has been made that such men ought to have been brought into the War Department, mobilizing the industries of the country and to better plan and outline and provide for this great national exigency. I suggest that the aircraft development has been largely in the hands of business men and not of military men. If I am mistaken the Senator will correct me.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I have not, up to this time at least, criticized the gentlemen who have had in charge the production of aircraft, but I have pleaded for a cessation of the making of misleading statements to the people of the United States and I have pleaded that they may know the truth about their own affairs.

There is no Senator on this floor who has any more abiding faith in the capacity of the American for great things than I have. I believe they can accomplish wonders once they set about it, once they know just what they have to do.

Mr. President, it is not calculated to make men go down into their pockets and subscribe for liberty loans, as we all must, if we are told that our airplane program is five months ahead of schedule, if we are told that everything is swimming, that all is just as it should be and all that could be asked. If they realize the truth, Mr. President, it will be far better for our soldiers who are abroad and far better for the cause they represent, and it is for that, Mr. President, that I plead.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Of course, it would not do the American people any good for the program to be five months ahead of the schedule if it was six months behind the war. I do not want to seem to be too persistent in asking the Senator a question. I wish to ask him one more question, because I think it is very important to ascertain, if possible, from the different sources of information the exact truth about this particular matter.

The distinguished Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] very graphically described in a few words and drew a picture of the situation of our young men in the battle trenches of France, and of German airplanes flying over those trenches with impunity so low that they shot at them with revolvers.

Mr. McCUMBER. The airplanes dropping gas bombs.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Dropping gas bombs on the trenches and in the rear of the trenches, on our camps, and in villages where our soldiers were living. If I understand the matter correctly, and I think I do, there is only one type, one class, I may say—there may be several types, but one class—of airplane that is capable of attacking the German planes that have been referred to that are doing the damage, and that class is not what is described as combat planes, which carry loads of bombs for raiding purposes, but small battle planes, intended for one purpose and one purpose only, and that is to reach the enemy plane and to attack it and destroy it. It is called a battle plane.

I should like to ask the Senator, because he is unusually well informed and has the benefit of all the testimony that has been given before the Military Affairs Committee, how many, if any, of the 37 planes that will be ready in July, that magnificent accomplishment of 37 planes one year and three months after we have been engaged in the war, will be battle planes that will be capable of attacking these German planes and destroying them?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I am afraid the Senator will credit me with more information than I have, because I am unable to answer that question definitely. I only know that we are to have in France on July 1 the number of fighting planes of all classes that I mentioned in answer to the question of the Senator from California a few moments ago.

REGISTRATION FOR MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs to lay aside temporarily the appropriation bill and take up Senate joint resolution 124 and let us finish that business to-day. I regard it as one of the most important measures that is going to come before the Senate. It is a war measure exclusively; it has been on the calendar nearly a month and a half, and it ought to be passed.

Mr. ASHURST. I share fully the view of the Senator from Arkansas. For that reason I did not insist that the unfinished business should be discussed during the morning hour, realizing that the Senate is a very efficient body of men, and that it can give a great answer in the hour of peril as to how to do business. I ask that the unfinished business be laid aside for 20 minutes that the joint resolution may be taken up and passed. Twenty minutes, I am sure, will be ample time.

Mr. KIRBY. Twenty minutes should be ample time to pass it in view of all the discussion that has preceded it this morning, but I doubt if that will be enough. I think it is of sufficient importance to displace anything on the calendar. I should like to have the Senator give an hour, and if it should not require an hour, then the appropriation bill could be taken up as soon as the joint resolution has been passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to say to the Senator from Arizona that I think the joint resolution is most important. It will require only a very short delay in the consideration of the appropriation bill, and I hope he will allow it to be taken up.

Mr. ASHURST. It is so important that I sit here in shocking amazement when Senators talk, talk, talk, when they ought to be voting. I ask that the unfinished business be laid aside for one hour and at the end of that hour, if it is not disposed of, I shall demand the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLIS in the chair). The Senator from Arizona asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside not to exceed one hour. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am not going at this time to continue the discussion that we have had to-day. I think it is a discussion that will do a great deal of good in the country, and I believe it will do a great deal of good with those who are administering the affairs of the Government. I am going to discuss some phases of it on to-morrow at the first opportunity I may have. I would not object to laying aside the Indian appropriation bill if there is any assurance that the joint resolution will be passed, but we are simply wasting time by taking a short while in the discussion of one bill and then taking up the unfinished business. We will gain time if we will continue the unfinished business and finish it and then take up these other measures, unless we can pass the joint resolution in 15 or 20 minutes.

Mr. McKELLAR. We can pass it in five minutes, I will say to the Senator, if we just quit talking about it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is true. I am not going to discuss it, but I imagine that the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] will create considerable discussion. If there is any assurance that it will not lead to prolonged discussion, I will not object to laying aside the unfinished business.

Mr. McKELLAR. The joint resolution was discussed very thoroughly yesterday. I hope the Senator will not object to letting it come up. I think we can pass it in the course of an hour.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It was not discussed very long yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas that the unfinished business be laid aside for one hour in order that Senate joint resolution 124 may be considered?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 124) providing for the registration for military service of all male persons citizens of the United States or residing in the United States who have, since the 5th day of June, 1917, and on or before the day set for the registration by proclamation by the President, attained the age of 21 years, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe under the terms of the act approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW].

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I desire briefly to oppose the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana. Here is a joint resolution which proposes to require the registration of all men who have become of age since the last day of registration that they may be drafted into the service in order that they may be mobilized into camps and trained to become soldiers at the end of the training period. It is regarded necessary that this shall be done. The War Department has long since asked that it be done; the Military Affairs Committee has recommended favorably the joint resolution, and now this amendment is proposed, which requires neither more nor less than that in addition to registering men who have come of age since the last draft, all men of 18 years of age shall be registered and trained as soldiers, but shall not be required to fight until after they become 21 years of age. That, it seems to me, will confuse the system we now have for organizing and mobilizing our Army. It will bring men into the training camps where we have no room to train them. It will bring them into training camps requiring an expenditure of money that we can not afford to spare from the training of the Regular Army. It will bring men into camp to be trained by officers who can not be taken away from the training of the regular soldiers. It will do all this. It will bring men in and mobilize them and expend money on them to the exclusion of soldiers when they can not be put into the battle line after the training is finished.

We are in war. We need more men. The imperative need of the allies yonder to-day is for more soldiers equipped and trained. England has asked for 250,000. We have not sent them yet. Now, what we want is soldiers who when trained can be put into the fighting front.

The joint resolution ought to be passed without any sort of universal-training theory attached to it. When the war is finished, in my opinion, there will be 10,000,000 men in the United States who will have been trained effectively, and 3,000,000 of them will have fought across the sea. That is the sort of Army you will have in the United States when the war is over if it is brought to a successful conclusion, and I believe it will be.

Now, why do you want to talk about universal training under those circumstances? There will be time then to talk about training men who can not be used now. Then, let us cut this amendment off, let us take it out now and pass the joint resolution.

I am not going to discuss the general situation here. There have been some very disquieting declarations made, but I want to say for the benefit of the public that there have been misstatements or rather inaccurate statements made here this morning. I am not able to state the condition accurately about some of the matters. But we have fighting planes on the American front in France. They are not American made; no. We have no battle planes which are American made on the American front in France, but we have contracted with France to supply the fighting planes over there, and we are furnishing the raw materials in order that it may be done. We have enough, as I understand, now to protect the fighting front yonder in France. That is the condition on that point, but it is true, as a matter of imperative need——

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. KIRBY. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas if he heard Gen. Wood's testimony on yesterday?

Mr. KIRBY. I heard Gen. Wood's testimony, and if you should ask me my private opinion about it I would give you such an answer as I would not like to make before the Senate here, and it would not be—well, I will not say, because Gen. Wood was urged to make some of the statements that he did.

Mr. KELLOGG. I desire to ask the Senator from Arkansas if Gen. Wood did not testify that the soldiers on the front were unprotected by airplanes?

Mr. KIRBY. I did not so understand him. He said the soldiers were well fed; that they were in good health and in fine spirits; that they were as capable a body of soldiers as there were in the world; and that man for man they were excelled by none. He also said there were no American big guns over there, but we knew that. We bought our big guns from France. We bought our fighting planes from France. They are there, and I did not understand Gen. Wood to deny it. I do not care to go into that, although I have my own view about what Gen. Wood said before the committee on yesterday, and if it becomes necessary later on I shall give expression to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW].

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the proposed amendment it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That the period of training between the ages of 19 and 21 years shall be in the aggregate not less than six months.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just a word in regard to this proposed amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana. Reading the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, it simply provides:

That all registered male persons who have attained the age of 19 years shall be subject to military training in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President, but shall not be called for active service until they have attained the age of 21 years.

Mr. President, I see no necessity for that great Executive discretion in the matter of military training during the period of two years between the ages of 18 and 21. Under the provisions of the amendment of the Senator from Indiana a period of 24 hours might be prescribed as the period for military training or a period of one year might be prescribed as the period of military training. It is left absolutely in the discretion of the President as to the time of the military training for these two years.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator from South Dakota yield to me?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I imagine that the reason for that is because this joint resolution, if the two classes of men—those 19 and 20—were put into actual training all the time, would withdraw from the industrial and the agricultural world 2,000,000 of our young men, or the greater portion of 2,000,000 of our young men. It seems to me that there ought to be limitations, and I have expressed that view to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW]; but, after all, his idea about the matter, it seems to me upon reflection, is correct, because it is going to be a very serious thing to withdraw 2,000,000, or thereabouts, of young men from the commercial and industrial and agricultural systems of the country. It ought to be left to regulation, so that those young men can be trained in those portions of the year which will take them away the smallest amount of time from industry, agriculture, and commerce, which are so necessary to be carried on in this country at this time.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I will simply say, in answer to the Senator from Tennessee, that the period of military training in order to equip these men for efficient service ought not to be less than six months; and that is the period provided for in the original Chamberlain bill, the bill which is now known as Senate bill No. 1—a period of training for six months during the year in which the young man becomes 19 year of age—but here now are two years and no period of training provided for, but all is left in the discretion of the President.

It occurs to me that the industries of the country might be protected with six months' training within that period of two years, and that men might be taken for two months or three months of the time, as the case might be, and that, too, when there would be the least prejudice to the various industries from which they are taken.

The object is to prescribe a period of military training and to provide that there shall be during the two years at least six months of such training.

Mr. VARDAMAN and Mr. NEW addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. May I suggest to the Senator from South Dakota that if the services of these boys are to be used in this war, he need have no fear, without his amendment, of their being subjected to less than six months' training, because six months' training is absolutely necessary if they are to be prepared to perform the duties of a soldier when they reach their majority and become subject to the present law. I do not think the amendment is at all necessary, even to carry out the honorable Senator's purposes.

If the Senator will indulge me further, I desire to say that I am going to vote against the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, even if it should be amended by the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota, because I really think that under the present law we can raise more men than we shall have ships to carry across the waters within the next two years, and I am fully mindful of the disastrous consequences which will follow taking these men from the industrial walks of life. If this war shall be won by the allies, it will be won by the combined use of bread and bullets. It is impossible to have sufficient food and clothing for our people at home, our soldiers and allies across the seas, unless the lands are cultivated, and the lands can not be cultivated without man power to do it. Every one of these boys is needed in industrial pursuits very much more than they are needed to use the gun. I am afraid that in the excitement of the moment, caused by the desperate conflict going on in Europe at this time, that we are liable to do imprudent and unwise things. There is no difference of purpose between the proponents of this amendment and myself on the ends to be reached; the difference is only in the means to the end.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. STERLING. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered was drawn in the form in which it now appears before the Senate with the thought that the President, in calling these young men, would have in mind the requirements of the callings in which they may be engaged, so far as they are engaged in any calling; that where they are students they might be taken at a time of the year when their colleges and schools were not in session; that as farmer boys they might be taken at the time of the year when the planting and harvesting seasons were not on; and that, if they were in other callings, they might be taken at the time of the year when they might be best spared from those callings whatever they may be.

I agree with what the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] has just stated to the effect—because that was the effect of it—that a period of less than six months' training—an aggregate of that much—in the two years covered would not amount to any training at all. I am therefore perfectly willing to accept the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I desire to ask the Senator from Indiana a question. The life of this joint resolution, and therefore of the amendment, as I understand, is limited to the term of the war, is it not?

Mr. NEW. It is; yes.

Mr. HENDERSON and Mr. KELLOGG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized; but before the Senator proceeds the Chair desires to state that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] has accepted the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] to his amendment. Therefore the pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana as modified.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, during the early stages of the war press and periodical earnestly and seriously printed columns on "Will the West fight?" While the West has shown that it will fight, in view of what has been said here this morning, I wish to read a short but a very interesting statement, which has been issued by the adjutant general of Nevada, indicating in the highest degree just what the West has done, and particularly that the West is back of the President in his great work almost to a man, and when I say that I include the western women. The statement to which I refer reads as follows:

NEVADA HEADS STATES IN PERCENTAGE OF VOLUNTEERS FOR ARMY.

CARSON CITY, NEV., March 14, 1918.

Figures received by Adj. Gen. Maurice J. Sullivan from The Adjutant General of the Army, Washington, D. C., show that Nevada's patriotism, as reflected by volunteer enlistments for the Regular Army, is the highest of any State in the Union. Nevada has gone "over the top" 900 per cent in the quota of enlistments called for, her volunteers from April 1, 1917, to February 26, 1918, reaching a total of 1,447, as against a required quota of 162.

Western States make a much better showing than any other section of the country, with Nevada standing at the head of the list, giving to the Nation nine times the number of volunteers called for by the Government as her proportion for the Regular Army, and followed in sequence by Montana, at 758.78 per cent; Utah, at 516.09; Oregon, at 472.10; Wyoming, at 432.41; Idaho, at 360.92; Washington, at 352.80; and California, at 337.57.

Nevada's record in volunteers is in keeping with her performance in every other call upon her patriotism and resources in the present world crisis, as it was her proud distinction to be the first State to oversubscribe its quota on the first liberty loan, narrowly missing making the same record on the second loan; and in Red Cross and other contributions and activities pertaining to the war Nevada loyally and zealously bears her banner of the "Battle-born State" at the very head of the procession of patriotic Commonwealths.

The average percentage of the volunteer enlistments compared to the specified quota for each State, based upon the official figures received by Adj. Gen. Sullivan, is 207.16 per cent. Nevada, therefore, heading the list at 893.21 per cent, is 696.05 per cent above the average for all of the States.

Mr. President, I have read this statement for the purpose of showing the patriotic spirit which has been manifested throughout the western portion of the United States, and particularly as showing how enthusiastically, and almost unanimously, the President has the support of that section in the great work in which he is now engaged. I believe that the figures which I have presented show that the West is most heartily in accord with the sentiment which has been expressed by our President, and I heartily approve of the principle which is involved in and covered by this joint resolution.

I can say, I believe without contradiction, that there are no better soldiers in our ranks than those that come from the great West. I am here to legislate for their comfort and welfare, as well as the comfort and welfare of all our soldiers and fighting men. I am here to assist our President in the work that confronts him at this critical time. It seems to me to be wise legislation to increase our fighting force and provide for the needs and requirements of our Army with all the speed that is in us.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I shall take but a moment of the time of the Senate, but I should like to express my views and reasons for voting for the amendment of the Senator from Indiana. To my mind, it is one of the most important pieces of legislation that has come before the Senate since I have been a Member of it. It proposes a military and economic principle far-reaching in its effects and of surpassing importance.

Will we not be warned by the experience of England, a democracy which, like ourselves, for years labored under the delusion that the ocean and the channel were her protection; that her navy was all that was necessary? A standing army was deemed to be a danger to the English nation rather than a protection. Had England had a million men trained as soldiers, the war would not have occurred. They would have been an insurance for the peace of Europe. England has paid dearly for her folly—the loss of a million men, the shaking of the foundations of the British Empire, and possibly the loss of her colonies. We are not interested, perhaps, in the extension of that dynasty, but we are interested in the principles of Anglo-Saxon government and civilization which she has spread over the world.

Mr. President, I am not going to revert to the failures and the follies of the last year; I shall look forward. I realize that before we entered the war, since Germany was confined at least upon the east within her natural boundaries and only occupied a part of France and Belgium, it was difficult to make the American people believe in world domination of Prussian militarism; but to-day it is different. With Germany occupying all or nearly all of Russia, the Balkan Peninsula, a part of Italy, and making the most tremendous efforts to break through the English and French lines and complete the destruction of France, German world domination is not so remote, perhaps, as we may imagine; and we may have to answer at the bar of history for our failure to prepare. Is there a better time to do it than now?

Sir, I fear we do not realize what Prussian slavery means. If we could but hear the sobs of Belgium, see the ravishing of Serbia, know the crimes against Poland, and bring them home to our people, I think we might realize what some day we may be confronted with. The Hun has not changed in 2,000 years. Civilization may have sharpened his lust for conquest and power, and knowledge and science increased his instruments of destruction, but he is a Hun at heart, and he is seeking the domination of the world by the most brutal and barbaric methods ever employed. We might just as well understand that now as at any other time.

If the war continues, as it may, for two or three years, the highest military authorities say we may need two and a half million or three million men in France. Gen. Wood says we may; and I consider him one of the highest military authorities. It is better to procure those men through universal military training than in any other way. Such training has many advantages; it is democratic. I call as a witness the same distinguished general when he says that the American drafted Army, man for man, is the finest army in the world, better by far than the old

Regular Army of this country, and that was a fine Army. It is economical because the youth can receive his training with his education. Moreover, it engenders patriotism and love of country, inspires a feeling of responsibility, and augments his interest in his country. It improves health and morals.

If you will but look at the thousands of spindle-legged, narrow-chested, weak-hearted young men who have been discharged or not taken because physically unfit, you will know that the Nation needs universal military training. That training will make vigorous, strong men; and when they go back to the employments of civil life, after undergoing military training, they will be better qualified for the struggle of life than would otherwise be the case.

But, say the pacifists, it inspires war. I deny it. Look at Switzerland. She has not been engaged in war since the Napoleonic wars, although she is in the midst of the troubled nations of Europe. She has always had universal military training. It could not inspire war under our form of government. Our form of government is a protection against Prussian militarism or any other. A soldier is a citizen with the same interest in his country, with the same interest in his home, with the same interest in peaceful occupations. I never knew a private soldier to desire war for the glory of it. We have but to look at the millions of men who constituted the armies of the North and the South at the close of the rebellion, who returned to their occupations and their homes better citizens, and loving peace more than before, but with a feeling of responsibility born of the knowledge that they had done something for their mother country.

We may say—and we deluded ourselves at one time with the thought—that the age of war has passed. Peace societies were formed, Hague conventions organized, and all the literature of peace was spread over the world; and yet in an instant, in an age of peace and civilization, a war has descended upon the world the horrors of which surpass babarism. All history gives the lie to the statement that war has ceased. From the time the first and greatest Republic known to history was struggling against the efforts of oriental power to the dawn of the twentieth century the troubled pathway of progress and civilization has been lined with the wrecks of war. It was war that brought democracy to France; it was war that insured the liberty and the institutions of the Anglo-Saxon; it was war that brought to this country the establishment of the principles of freedom, and in time it may be, and probably will be, necessary to fight for the preservation of this Nation. A government that is worth having is worth fighting for.

If we reserve this measure until after the war we shall never pass it. Now is the time to prepare for the future, when we are confronted with the greatest crisis the Nation has ever known or may ever know. I hope that the amendment will be agreed to and that the joint resolution will pass.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have for many years been in favor of universal military training. It develops physical manhood for both peace and war. I have, however, serious doubts as to the advisability of attaching to this emergency measure the amendment of the junior Senator from Indiana. We have already provided for a larger Army than we have thus far been able to equip, and we have millions of men of legal age already on the registered list ready to be called. We do not need these boys below the age of 21 for this war. We are in the midst of a great emergency, which is not only military but industrial, and one quite as much as the other. To me it would seem a most unwise thing for the country at this time to take a million and a half or two million or three million of the boys who are needed for the industrial life of the Nation, who are quite as much needed in peaceful pursuits to preserve the Nation as is the Army or the Navy, and compel them to go into training camps. Not only that, but I am thinking somewhat of the expense that this plan is going to charge upon the country. If, however, I thought this amendment could be beneficial in winning the war, I would not hesitate to support it, but I do not believe that it can be utilized to promote the successful prosecution of the war. On the contrary, I can conceive how it may retard the victory. We have already called for the Army and Navy about 2,000,000 men between 21 and 30 years of age, and that has made a tremendous drain upon the industrial support of the Nation. The agricultural interests of this country are in jeopardy to-day, and they being in danger the result of the war itself is threatened. I believe it would be very unwise at a time when food shortage is threatened for lack of farm labor to increase that danger by taking unnecessarily more men from the pursuit of agriculture to train them for an emergency beyond the present war. Our business is to win this war. Whatever is necessary to that end should be—must be—employed, but no unnecessary burden should be carried.

I admit the force of all the arguments that have been made in favor of the principle of universal military training. In ordinary times I am in favor of it; I have stood for it; I wanted to adopt it four years ago; but we have now made our plans for this war; we are drafting our resources almost to the limit; and we are really placing in danger the production of the food that is necessary for ourselves and our allies. Now, you propose to force a system of universal training, which shall take not less than a million and a half, and probably more, of our boys who are needed to carry on the work of the country, to train them for not less than six months in two years, while their fathers and brothers are already in the military camps. Every man, woman, and child in the United States has a duty to perform. Those of military age who are physically fit should enter the Army or Navy in either their active or reserve departments. The balance, and it will require all of them, should help to win the war by performing the agricultural and industrial work of the Nation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if we take the boys off the farm for six months of the year, so far as the farm is concerned we had just as well take them for 12 months.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think so. To take these men, who are now needed to balance up our program, out of all productive activity for six months seems to me the height of folly, and that notwithstanding, as I have already said, I am in favor of universal military training.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does not the provision of the amendment making them subject to military training under rules and regulations prescribed by the President safeguard that matter?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The original amendment did that; but the Senator from Indiana has accepted the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], which compels the President to take them for six months out of two years.

Mr. KELLOGG. I was not aware of that.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is a compulsory proposition now. It might have been better if it had been left as the Senator introduced it, although, as has been suggested by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], the President might impose 12 months' training, but I do not think he would. If it is left in the discretion of the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, with this crisis on our hands, I do not believe he would compel them for six months or three months during the pendency of this war to leave the works that are necessary for the country to engage in this particular training plan.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not mean, by my suggestion, to convey the idea that the President would enforce 12 months' training without the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota, because I, like the Senator, do not believe he would. Probably he would not make it less than six months. But, in addition to the reasons which the Senator has given, is it not fair to say that when we do, if we do, provide for universal military training, Congress ought as a matter of fact to enact and put into the statutes the definite time that soldiers should be trained—in other words, not turn it all over to the President? We might have one President who would want to train them 6 months, and the next President might want to train them 30 days. In other words, when we do enact such a law, ought we not to make it comprehensive, so that it would be a definite statute?

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. Just let me answer the question of the Senator from Nebraska, and then I will yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. WATSON. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I answer the Senator from Nebraska by stating, as I began, that this is emergency legislation. It is proposed to put an amendment on the measure without proper consideration.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. We are proposing to write into a war statute—that is, limited to the period of the war—this universal military training proposition, without having considered it in all of its details and relations to all of the matters involved in this war.

Mr. WATSON, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. SHERMAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. WATSON. I simply desired to ask this question of the Senator from Nebraska: Does the Senator understand that this is the permanent policy of the Government, as announced in this amendment, or is not this only a temporary measure, for the duration of this war?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I shall be glad to allow the Senator from Nebraska to answer the question.

Mr. NORRIS. My understanding is that this amendment is the announcement of a permanent policy.

Mr. WATSON. I had not so understood it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The act itself, of course, is temporary; but there could be no argumnet for this amendment except as a permanent measure——

Mr. NORRIS. That is right.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Because it can not be used during this war, if it ends, as many people think the war will end, in two or three years. It must be urged because of its effect upon the future, which I think would be a good effect and justifiable, if it did not cost too much now. If it did not interfere with the war now, I should say it was a good time to adopt it; the earlier the better.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield right there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The amendment itself provides that it shall be a permanent policy, as I understand it. It says:

That in addition to the persons subject to registration and selective draft under the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, all male persons between the ages of 19 and 30, both inclusive, shall be subject to registration and draft in accordance with the provisions of said act: Provided, That all registered male persons who have attained the age of 19 years shall be subject to military training in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President, but shall not be called for active service until they have attained the age of 21 years.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I understood from the author of the amendment that he intended it to be limited to the period of the war.

Mr. WATSON, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. BORAH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield, and if so to whom? There are three Senators on their feet.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. WATSON. This amendment provides that in addition to the persons at present subject to registration and selective draft, these others shall be added. Now, the provision for registration and for selective draft is only for the duration of the war.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Then, do I understand that this is simply another form of draft for the war?

Mr. NEW and Mr. NORRIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield to the junior Senator from Indiana to answer that question.

Mr. NEW. Is that inquiry addressed to me? I did not get the inquiry of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH I understood from the remarks of the Senator's colleague that this was only a temporary war emergency that was being provided for.

Mr. NEW. The whole act is temporary in its application.

Mr. BORAH. Then do I understand that the Senator is simply offering an amendment here that would be considered a war measure, to end with the war?

Mr. NEW. I think it is a war measure.

Mr. BORAH. And to end with the war?

Mr. NEW. No.

Mr. BORAH. That is precisely what I was seeking to ascertain.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what I was getting at, too.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I understood the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] to answer the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] a few minutes ago and say that it was.

Mr. NEW. I think it would end with the war, because the whole act is limited to the duration of the war.

Mr. BORAH. But the Senator's intention is to inaugurate and initiate a permanent policy of universal military training?

Mr. NEW. That would be the Senator's desire.

Mr. BORAH. Is that the Senator's intention with this amendment?

Mr. NEW. To inaugurate it, in the hope that Congress will continue it.

Mr. WATSON. That is the point precisely.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. I thought the Senator had yielded the floor.

Mr. TOWNSEND. No.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, a moment ago I addressed an interrogatory to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] as to the life of this amendment. His answer was that it was limited to the period of the war. Now, I do not understand the Senator to say that his amendment extends beyond the war, do I?

Mr. NEW. No; I do not think the act at all, any part of it, extends beyond the war; but I say I am offering it now in the hope that Congress will continue it and make it ultimately a permanent policy.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I trust I may be permitted to indulge the hope that it will not, after this war is over.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I would like to see universal military training after the war is over. I would have liked to have seen it before we entered the war; but with the preparations that we have already made, with 10,000,000 men registered for Army and Navy service and subject to call, with the conditions which surround us now, I think it would be a great mistake to divide and weaken our resources by putting in force a proposition that can not with any reason be expected to be of any avail to us during the war, but which may result in great embarrassment to us. I want universal military training to be discussed and settled upon its merits and not confined to an hour's discussion upon an emergency piece of war legislation. The proposition involved in the pending amendment is right in principle and in time of peace, but when our country is in war, when every able-bodied man is subject to call to the colors, when farms and factories and shops and mines are being denuded of men, when all the camps we can build and equip for our soldiers and recruits are already overcrowded, when the Public Treasury is carrying a load of almost crushing weight it is a poor time to force our boys into military-training schools unless such a thing is necessary to win this war. At any rate, let us take time to consider the matter.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I presume it is useless, but I most sincerely wish the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] would withdraw this amendment and let us proceed with this joint resolution. It is a very important measure. Everything is depending now upon this legislation. We ought to go on with it and we ought to complete it. We have not an unforgiving minute to lose, and this proposition does not affect the conduct of this war. It does not reach the present conditions at all. Under the very provisions of the amendment the boys who are brought into training must continue this training for two years before they can register and be available as part of the Army. This war, in all probability, will end very much within that time. In fact, my own judgment is that the story will be told within the next six months; and this amendment does not bear one particle upon the conduct of the present war, inasmuch as it does not make available a single man, it does not train a single man that can be used in this war.

These boys from 19 to 21 are brought into compulsory training and they can not register until they are 21. It simply hampers the present arrangement. It puts an additional burden upon the country to train boys who can not be used for two years. Now, that thing can wait. It will be just as much in order and just as efficacious and just as wise, if we decide to do it at all, six months from now or a year from now as to-day. It will have just as much bearing on this war, except that if we do not adopt the amendment it will relieve us of the necessity of providing for this training which we shall be compelled to undertake if the amendment is adopted.

I wish the Senator from Indiana could see his way clear to let us pass this joint resolution, which provides for the registration of these men, and complete the call. They ought to be registered at once, as provided in this joint resolution. We now have something like 300,000 men, in round numbers, in the Navy, something like 400,000 men in the Regular Army, and something like 700,000 men in the National Army, with 2,000,000 now waiting for call. You now propose to provide by this amendment that a million or a million and a half boys shall be taken out of the industries, out of the farms, and elsewhere, not less than six months every year and trained in order that two years from now they may be registered and become a part of the Army.

There is no use to bother with this now. It does deal with a permanent policy of the Government. It is a policy which can be settled and determined, as I said, a year from now just as well as now, and there is no occasion for insisting upon this amendment on this joint resolution, which is highly important that we should enact this day.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, that is just exactly one of the troubles with us in this country—"the war will probably end so-and-so." We hope that the war may not last more than six months, never taking into the account the other probability that it may last more than two years; that it may last indefinitely; and that our ultimate resources may be called upon to enable us to prosecute it to a successful conclusion.

As to these boys——

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. NEW. I yield.

Mr. KIRBY. Is it not a fact that under the amendment proposed here to-day we bring in practically a million new men every year? There are coming of age every year a million men who will be registered under this joint resolution that we propose to pass now.

Mr. NEW. There are about 500,000 men, physically fit, who would pass muster in the draft, becoming of age each year, according to the best information I can get. But, Mr. President, as to the argument made here that it is going to take these men for two years away from service, that assumes that every one of them is to-day only 19 years of age. Why, they are all the way from 19 up to 21 now. There are as many of them between 20 and 21 as there are between 19 and 20, and not all of them will have to wait two years; but every one of them is liable to service under this draft the minute he reaches the age of 21.

I contend that it is far better to begin on those men who are soon to be called and put them through a course of training that will make them available for use as soldiers when they have reached the age of 21 than it is to wait until they have reached that age, then put them into the Army, and require the time that is necessary to make a soldier of a man after he reaches that age.

Mr. SHERMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WALSH. Has the hour elapsed which was allotted for the discussion of this measure?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not until 25 minutes past 3. There is still 10 minutes remaining for the consideration of the joint resolution under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is an abundance of time for the present occupant of the floor.

Mr. President, why delude ourselves by mistaking hopes for conditions? The footfalls of destiny are 3,000 miles away. When the Secretary of War returns to his native soil I trust that by the light of bursting shells and the roar of German cannon he will have ceased in his heart to be a pacifist. I ask leave to insert in the RECORD, without reading, from his report under date of November 20, 1917, on page 36, the paragraph relating to universal military training.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

UNIVERSAL MILITARY TRAINING.

The subject of universal military training continues to be discussed in the country. The department has not sought and does not now seek legislation on the subject, chiefly for the reason that the formulation of a permanent military policy will inevitably be affected by the arrangements consequent upon the termination of the present war. Civilized men must hope that the future has in store a relief from the burden of armament and the destruction and waste of war. However vain that hope may appear in the midst of the most devastating and destructive war in the history of the race, it persists—perhaps because we are encouraged by the analogous substitution of courts for force in the settlement of private controversies; perhaps because all the perfections of nature teach us that they are the product of processes which have eliminated waste and substituted constructive for destructive principles. When a permanent military policy, therefore, comes to be adopted it will doubtless be conceived in a spirit which will be adequate to preserve against any possible attack those vital principles of liberty upon which democratic institutions are based, and yet be so restrained as in no event to foster the growth of mere militarist ambitions or to excite the apprehension of nations with whom it is our first desire to live in harmonious and just accord.

Mr. SHERMAN. I trust, if in the providence of God the Secretary of War shall survive to write another report for 1918, this paragraph will not be found in it; or, if any be found in it upon that subject, that it will be in accord with the opinion of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. For some years I have seen him stand upon the floor of this Chamber, in season and out of season, when there was but little sympathy with his views, and when the piping times of peace were in the land, asking for universal military training. His appeal has fallen upon heedless ears.

To-day, whether we will it or not, Mr. President, we must face the conditions of the world. The German now is like he was 2,000 years ago. He is animated by the desire for world-wide conquest; and he is not other or different than in the days of Julius Cæsar, when he hung upon the flank of the Roman. The face of the general who is on the front against the lingering remnant of American troops found across the ocean is the face of the German who destroyed civilization and left a refuge for it only in the church and the monasteries of an ancient age. He is the one survivor of the Dark Ages, because the civilized portion of mankind at that time, because of their vices, had not strength enough to defend themselves.

The civilized world to-day is not in that condition, but it is in a condition of lamentable unpreparedness. Since Strasburg and Sedan, and since the ancestor of the present Kaiser began his preparations for the military conquest of the world, the rest of us have slumbered under the delusions of universal peace. It will not come in my lifetime. I am prepared to pay war taxes the rest of my days. It is with a feeling of sadness that I realize that in my generation we will not see our hopes accomplished. I only hope to leave to the new generation a world that may conquer at least this power that has undertaken to spread its dominion around the globe.

I am in complete accord with this amendment, only if there is a question about its permanence I trust it will become the permanent policy of this country. If we do not prepare to defend by force republican government in the New World, we may confidently expect that we will be unable to preserve the Government founded by our fathers. To us, the principal Republic in the world, comes the sober responsibility to defend by brute force its right to survive.

This is no war for novices. It is a war against a military power that for 40 years, as I have suggested, has prepared to dominate the world. The senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] expressed the situation in language that ought to remain in the memory of every Senator. It is a contest between these two forms of government; and whether we wish it or not, we face the issue. There is no essential difference between Russian socialism and Prussian despotism. They both arrive at the same end. The poet Goethe, and in his time Heine, the German poet, described the Prussian of their generation as he is to-day. Both those poets, speaking for the better genius of the German people, said: "The Prussian is made by nature stupid and cruel, and by science he is made ferocious, wicked, and dangerous." The latter is the foe we face.

I believe Hindenburg foresaw the condition when he said: "The west line of our battle is not in France, but on the Atlantic coast of America." I hope the war will end in six months, or less time—who does not? But I refuse to be deluded by my hopes that it may be accomplished.

So far as I have a vote or can be heard on the floor of this Chamber I propose to put this country into a condition of defense. It is time we trained soldiers from the years of understanding until they reach the age when they can become full-fledged military men to meet the power across the sea. If we do not, this Republic never faced the crisis that it does now. The way we must prepare is by military force to meet the power that has humbled England, France, and their allies. Whatever we may think, however hopeful we may be, we can not close our ears nor our understanding to what has happened in the Old World.

The age of universal military training is at hand. Whether by our fiat to-day or by these amendments it can be accomplished avails but little. It is bound to come if we are to preserve ourselves against the power with which we are now at war.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not care to go on if the unfinished business is about to be laid before the Senate. I understand that the hour has expired now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will expire in about a minute.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee if he is going to ask to have the unfinished business laid aside still further?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, of course, when I asked unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside for one hour I had no doubt that a body of patriotic American Senators would dispose of this joint resolution within the hour. If it can be disposed of in the next 10 minutes, as I think it ought to be, I will ask unanimous consent that that be done.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I have no desire to delay the consideration of the joint resolution which is now pending, but I look upon this amendment as presenting a very serious proposition at this particular juncture. I am very much opposed to the amendment, and I shall want some time to present my views as to why I am opposed to it. It can not be disposed of in the next 10 minutes.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unanimous-consent agreement having expired, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, the Indian appropriation bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8696) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I was going to speak on the amendment that was pending when the joint resolution was up. I have no desire to speak on the Indian appropriation bill. If the Senator does not expect to lay aside the unfinished business, I will yield the floor.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, though a member of the Indian Affairs Committee, I was unfortunately absent at the time the bill under consideration was before it; but I desire to say a few words upon the item now before the Senate, notwithstanding the very complete presentation of the merits of the question by my colleague [Mr. MYERS] on yesterday.

I desire to preface what I have to say by some brief observations prompted by some inquiries addressed on yesterday to my colleague by the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. He has always evinced a very keen and sympathetic interest in these questions that are of primary concern to the people of the West. The inquiries naturally suggested that in the opinion of the Senator from New Hampshire the appropriation, while nominally for the improvement of the lands of the Indians and for the irrigation of their allotments, really operated practically exclusively for the benefit of the white settlers.

I am sure that the Senator from New Hampshire, if fully advised of the facts, would not recognize in that fact, even if it were true, any valid objection to the appropriation under consideration; and I take a little time to advise him and other Senators who may entertain like views why that is the case.

Under the bill by which this reservation was opened the Indians residing upon it were entitled to select their allotments, which they did. The remaining lands then became open to homestead entry, provision being made in the bill for the irrigation of a considerable area of the land thus opened to homestead settlement. The Reclamation Service outlined an extensive, and I may say, an ambitious plan for the irrigation of these lands. The plan was outlined even before the Indian allotments were selected, so that the Indians in selecting their allotments had an opportunity to select lands which would eventually be irrigated by the project which was contemplated by the bill. The white settler had an equal opportunity to select lands under the ditch that could be irrigated by the system or he had an opportunity to select lands above. Before the lands were opened to homestead entry at all they were appraised. Obviously the lands under the ditch and capable of irrigation from the canal to be constructed were valued at a comparatively high figure relatively, while the lands above the ditch, those that could not be irrigated by it, those that must be cultivated by the dry-farming system, if they are to be cultivated at all, were estimated at a relatively low figure.

Likewise, Mr. President, the homestead entryman was permitted to take only a single unit under the ditch, a limited area, in some cases 40 acres, but not to exceed 80 acres. The homestead entryman was invited by the Government to go upon this area and select lands as he saw fit, either under the ditch or above the ditch. He was required to comply with all the requirements of the homestead law and to pay into the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of the Indians the appraised value of the land.

Accordingly settlers went there. Each settler had an opportunity to select lands under the ditch that were to be irrigated by the system or to select lands above the ditch. Vast numbers of them selected lands under the ditch upon the assurance given by the Government that in due and reasonable time the irrigation system would be completed and their lands would be thus opened to irrigation. The Government carried out that project, making, however, small appropriations, comparatively speaking, until last year, when an appropriation of $750,000 was made.

Now, let me call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire and others who do me the honor to listen to this discussion to this, that up to the present time of the 134,500 acres under the ditch it is estimated that by July 1, 1918, with the aid of the large appropriation that was made last year, there will be opened to irrigation under the ditch 97,300 acres, leaving 37,200 acres under the ditch capable of irrigation by the system, when it is completed, now after nine years still without water.

The Senator will, I think, readily understand, and it can be very readily appreciated, that the man who made the selection of land under the ditch and has not yet been able to get water is in a most desperate situation. I undertake to say that if the Senator himself had gone out there and had exercised his homestead right and had taken 80 acres under that ditch, and had made all his preparations for farming, by irrigation rather than by the dry-farming system, not yet, after the lapse of nine years, being able to get water for his farm, he would appreciate the situation of many of those people.

So, Mr. President, I say it is a matter of no consequence how much of this land is being farmed by Indians. I will say with the greatest frankness here in the Senate that the expectations that were generously indulged at the time this project was started, and which had been harbored for many years before, that the Indians could be taught the use of water for irrigation and taught the arts of agriculture, and that they would use the water for that purpose have been most disappointingly met.

The fact about the matter is that there is only a very small proportion of the Indian allotments that are actually cultivated by the Indians themselves. Many of them, however, get the benefit of the irrigation by leasing their lands to white men who do cultivate the allotments. I undertake to say that there is not a full-blooded Indian upon the Flathead Reservation who actually makes use of the water for the purpose of irrigation. There are probably 1,000 acres cultivated by irrigation by breeds of various degrees of blood. However, there are still a large number of the Indians whose lands are included in this area of 37,200 acres that have not yet been supplied with water, and the appropriation is for the purpose of constructing laterals and extensions of the system in order that they may be supplied with water. They practically went there under an assurance from the Government carried in the legislation that in due course of time and with reasonable rapidity the water would be supplied to these lands, and they paid their money for the lands, and the money is in the Treasury of the United States upon practically that assurance and guaranty.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENDRICK in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Can the Senator tell the Senate whether or not the entire appropriation of last year has been exhausted, or is there a large surplus still in the hands of these parties?

Mr. WALSH. I am not able to give that information.

Mr. GALLINGER. One other question. Can the Senator give the Senate any idea, judging from the number of acres that have been irrigated under the appropriation of $750,000, how much more money will be required to irrigate the lands that are now not irrigated?

Mr. WALSH. I can help the Senator with that. It was estimated that the appropriation of last year would extend the irrigated area by 17,300 acres. It would take two appropriations of that amount practically to cover the unirrigated area; that is, assuming that the same area would be covered by the additional appropriation.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is precisely the information that I wanted to get. An appropriation of $750,000 this year and of an equal amount next year would almost accomplish the purpose?

Mr. WALSH. That would appear to be the case from the statement here.

Mr. President, I am not unmindful of the force of the argument that is made here, and that doubtless was made before the committee, upon the ground of economy, but there never has been a time since this project was commenced, certainly no time since I have been in the Senate, when the argument of economy could not be urged with plausibility and with a great degree of force But, Mr. President, the consideration to which I have adverted, and others, moved the Senate to act a year ago, when really the considerations impelling us to exercise economy in the very last degree were effective. The Senate recognized, in view of the appropriations that had been made theretofore—$200,000 the year preceding, $325,000 the year preceding that, and so on—if that policy were continued the overhead charges would be terribly burdensome ultimately and the completion of the project would be indefinitely delayed, and practically the guarantee of the Government to the settlers would be violated.

So, Mr. President, considering all these things, I have no doubt the Secretary of the Interior in making his estimate of $750,000 for this project had in mind all the suggestions that have been made, to the effect that economy ought to be exercised. I have no doubt in the world that the House committee making the appropriation recognized the force of everything that could be said concerning the necessity of conserving all our resources for the purpose of carrying on this war. The House could not have been uninfluenced by the same considerations. So I do not believe that the argument here made ought to be persuasive now.

I do not desire to travel over the ground so ably covered by my colleague on yesterday, but I wish to advert to a consideration that is important in this connection. The most successful irrigation project in the State of Montana, and I undertake to say, without fear of contradiction from any source whatever, one of the most successful that the Government has undertaken, is the Huntley project in the Yellowstone Valley, in the State of Montana. The success of that project is very largely due, if it is not entirely due, to the fact that it is in the vicinity of Billings, Mont., at which is located a very large and successful beet-sugar factory.

Those lands are particularly adapted for beet culture, and only lands that are irrigated are available for that work. During the past year a very complete and extensive sugar-beet factory has been established at Missoula, a city to which this Flathead Reservation is immediately tributary. In addition to that a branch line of the Northern Pacific Railroad has been constructed up the Flathead Valley and through the Flathead Reservation, making practically all the lands under this great irrigation system available for beet culture, it being immediately tributary to Missoula. So we have added assurances in this fact of the ultimate success of this great enterprise.

Mr. President, it is true that you can cultivate grain upon the Flathead Reservation without irrigation. A crop will be insured in most of the seasons. But, Mr. President, you will bear in mind that the Flathead Reservation is 1,250 miles from the terminal market of Duluth and Minneapolis. It is nearly 700 miles from the market of Portland. I need say nothing further to assure everybody who knows anything about the cultivation of wheat that it can not be grown with success in that region by reason of the enormous distances to which it must be transported. It is most signally fortunate for this project that the beet-sugar factory has been established at Missoula.

My esteemed friend and neighbor, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], is much concerned about the labor problem. It is, of course, a most serious one, but I can assure the Senate that, whatever may be the condition in the State of Utah, there was no difficulty experienced, at least last year, in harvesting crops in the State of Montana. I was there immediately after the harvest. I attended the State fair, and I found no complaints from any source of a lack of labor to take care of the crops, and our people have gone to work this spring with a purpose to sow a very much greater area than has ever been sown before. Apparently the labor proposition discouraged no one from making every possible effort toward producing everything that can be produced.

Accordingly I hope that the amendment offered by my colleague to amend the report of the committee by fixing the appropriation at $500,000 may prevail.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] to increase this appropriation to $500,000, I think, under the circumstances should be defeated. The committee had three reasons for reducing the appropriation. The first was the question of economy; the second was the high cost of material; and the third was that there was not enough of the land used and cultivated by the Indians and settlers now under the ditch to justify a larger appropriation at this time.

It will be recalled that in the speech made by the senior Senator from Montana yesterday he stated there were 80,000 acres under the ditch, and that is the testimony that was given before the committee.

Mr. MYERS. How much did the Senator say? I did not catch it.

Mr. CURTIS. Eighty thousand acres. Of that 80,000 acres, according to the testimony, taking the last figures, those given by the Senator, there is a difference of only some 2,000 acres between the figures that I submitted yesterday and those submitted by the Senator; there are only 18,000 of the 80,000 acres cultivated.

It does seem to me that if the argument of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] is to be considered very seriously, there ought to be a showing made that more of that 80,000 acres of land is cultivated.

Mr. MYERS. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. MYERS. Of course I can not give any assurance that the Indian part of the land will be cultivated any more this year than last year. The Senator from Kansas will remember that Mr. Bien, of the Reclamation Service, who was before the committee and gave the figures, stated that 50,000 or 60,000 of the 80,000 acres were owned by Indian allottees.

Mr. CURTIS. No.

Mr. MYERS. Yes; that is in the testimony. I can turn to it. Those were his words. I can produce them, I think; but I will make my statement, and then if the Senator wishes to dispute it——

Mr. CURTIS. No; I do not care to dispute the Senator's statement.

Mr. MYERS. The testimony shows that the water was put on the Indian land first. It was the primary object to get it on the Indian land. That policy has been pursued, and while the greater part of the Indian lands have been covered with water, not so great a proportion of the land of the white settlers has yet been reached; and he said of the 80,000 acres already covered 50,000 or 60,000 acres were Indian land. I can not give any assurance as to that, but I will say that of the lands of the white homesteaders, I am assured by many people who are interested, practically every acre that is subject to water will be put in cultivation and put to use this year. As to my authority, I will say one source is Hon. Addison K. Lusk, who lives on the reservation, and is a member of the Montana Legislature, and who appeared before the committee. He assured me he was able to say that practically every acre of the white homesteaders covered by water would be put in cultivation this year, and I have the same assurance from others. Why do they think so, the Senator may ask. For a number of reasons. Because they realize the necessity of producing as large a food crop as possible for our people in this crisis, and because they realize that they ought to make as great a showing as possible of their appreciation of this project in order to have it continued expeditiously. For those reasons and other reasons I can give the Senator the assurance that the lands of the white homesteaders will be quite completely cultivated this year.

Mr. CURTIS. Now, Mr. President, we will take the figures of the Senator from Montana, that 50,000 acres of this land under the ditch are Indian land. That leaves 30,000 acres of land under the ditch-settlers' land. Yet the report given by the Senator from Montana shows that only 15,000 acres, in round numbers, of the settlers' lands are being cultivated.

Mr. MYERS. I say Mr. Bien said 50,000 or 60,000. He did not say it was either. It may be 50,000; it may be 60,000.

Mr. CURTIS. The figures showed that three-eighths of this land was occupied by white settlers and five-eighths under the Indian allotment, which would make 50,000 acres. The Government has spent up to this time over $3,000,000 and you have a showing of 80,000 acres under the ditch and only 18,000 acres of it cultivated. With that showing, is Congress justified in making this great appropriation? I, for one, do not believe that it is. The Indians surely are not taking advantage of the irrigation project. Only 969 acres of their land are being cultivated by the Indians and only 1,700 acres are being cultivated by their tenants.

I asked the Senator yesterday if it was the intention or if he thought that the Government had a right to attach a lien on the Indian allotments. I had a reason for that. The department to-day is forcing the patents upon those Indians without their consent. It is forcing those patents, going so far as to file them of record, without the consent of the Indians. The statement was made that after those patents were filed, if the Indians attempted to sell the land, there would be a lien upon the allotment. I do not believe under the law Congress can now create a lien upon that land; I do not believe that the department has any right to fix a lien upon that land, because those Indians were allotted under the act of 1887, and in that act there is a positive promise in the following language:

That upon the approval of the allotments provided for in this act by the Secretary of the Interior he shall cause patents to issue therefor in the name of the allottees, which patents shall be of the legal effect and declare that the United States does and will hold the land thus allotted for the period of 25 years, in trust for the sole use and benefit of the Indian to whom such allotment shall have been made, or, in case of his decease, of his heirs according to the laws of the State or Territory where such land is located, and that at the expiration of said period the United States will convey the same by patent to said Indian, or his heirs as aforesaid, in fee, discharged of said trust and free of all charge or incumbrance whatsoever.

Under that provision of the law the Congress of the United States and the Indian Office can not put a lien upon the land allotted to those Indians under the trust patent.

Mr. MYERS. May I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. MYERS. If I am wrong, then, in assuming that the cost of putting water on the land by an Indian allottee is a lien on that allottee's allotment—if there is now a law covering it and it can not be done, and there is no lien—then what is the objection to going ahead with the project?

Mr. CURTIS. Because the Senator stated yesterday that the money, from whatever source, that might be placed in the Treasury to the credit of any Indian allottee would be held out to pay off this obligation.

Mr. MYERS. That is only my opinion. I am not the head of the Indian Bureau.

Mr. CURTIS. What are you doing? You are forcing upon these Indian allottees who are not using the water that obligation which the Senator thinks is a lien and which I deny. But whether it is a lien or not, you are putting it upon those Indians and you are going to take the money out of the Treasury as it goes in to their credit to pay off the lien.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to be understood. Of course, I can not speak with authority about what the Indian Bureau will do or what the properly constituted agencies of the United States Government will do. I was only saying what I assumed they would do and what I supposed they would do. It is for them to act, and, as far as I know, I do not know what they are going to do.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, this project was not selected for a reduction alone. Here is the chairman of the committee with irrigation projects in his State, and the appropriations for those projects were cut in two because we wanted to reduce the amount carried in this bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. This project and the conditions surrounding it are not very well known to me. I should like to ask the Senator, as I did not quite understand the point he was making a moment ago, whether the Government is building this reservoir and dam and furnishing water to the Indian lands without any charge to the Indians, either from the money of the Indians or from the lands?

Mr. CURTIS. When the Indians use the water they must pay the annual charge.

Mr. KING. Is there any provision by which the Government is to be reimbursed for the money which it expended in the construction of the reservoir?

Mr. CURTIS. Under the act of Congress of two years ago the settlers must pay their proportionate share and the Indian allottees must pay their proportionate share.

Mr. KING. Well, what is the complaint the Senator is making about the fee-simple titles being forced on them?

Mr. CURTIS. The complaint I am making is that they are forcing title upon these Indians without their consent, after having given them a trust patent under the act of 1887 and promising to give them a patent in fee at the end of 25 years, that would give them land free and clear of every encumbrance.

Mr. KING. Did the Indians understand, when this project was undertaken, that they would have to pay for the water, and do they now object to paying for the water?

Mr. CURTIS. Most of them do object to paying for the water. I have a petition here—and, by the way, I want to refer to the petition filed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]; he had such a petition—I have a petition, signed by 65 Indian allottees under the project, stating that they did not want the water.

Mr. MYERS. I will say that I did not receive any such petition.

Mr. CURTIS. No; I am speaking about the petition which the Senator from Montana had in favor of the project. I have a petition, signed by 65 Indian allottees and signed by 5 settlers, owning, I think, some 8 or 10 tracts of land, according to the petition, and stating that they do not want the water. I do not know how these petitions were secured. I do not think the Senator from Montana knew how the one he presented was secured, but in the petition presented by him there is the name of one Indian who is in the penitentiary. I have a letter from him, stating that he never signed the petition and did not authorize anyone to sign it for him. I am told there is the name of an Indian woman on the petition who has been dead a number of years. I refer to this simply to call the attention of the Senate to the manner in which these petitions are gotten up.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Those petitions are like all others, are they not?

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Washington says they are like all other petitions.

The strongest point in favor of this measure is the fact that the Government did open up certain land to public settlement, and there were, as I recollect the testimony, between 500 and 600 settlers in that locality. They have 48,000 acres of land within the project. They were promised water, and I am satisfied the Government is going to give it to them. The point, however, is that this year, with the high cost of material, with so many thousand acres unused, was not the Committee on Indian Affairs justified in reducing this appropriation to $250,000?

The chairman of the committee has within his State a number of projects, and yet he willingly consented to have the appropriation for his projects cut in two. Here are the Senators from Washington, neither of whom I believe agrees to the reduction, and who have, in my judgment, the best project on any Indian reservation in the United States, who were not given the amount estimated for the project in their State. We have another project in the State of the distinguished Senator from Wyoming, who is now in the chair [Mr. KENDRICK], an item which was put into the bill by the other House, and yet that was stricken out. An amendment was presented by him, and refused. I refer to this simply to show that the committee tried to treat all sections alike in this bill, and that there was no animus at all.

I am sorry that the Senator from Montana yesterday saw fit to say that this matter was worked up by an attorney in this city and that the result of the reduction was brought about on account of the delegation that came here.

Mr. MYERS. Will the Senator from Kansas let me make a statement?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly; I will.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator misunderstood me. I did not say that the action of the committee was the result of that. A reading of my statement in the RECORD will show that I did not say that.

Mr. CURTIS. I understood the Senator to say that, but I do not want to misquote him.

Mr. MYERS. I did not say that the action of the committee was the result of that. I was merely referring to the attitude of the Indians. I merely stated that up to the year before last no opposition had ever been heard from the Indians, and that there was no opposition from the Indians until a Washington attorney and a man of Indian blood from Oregon had appeared on the scene. I did not say that their action caused the result in the committee.

Mr. CURTIS. The truth is—and in justice to the committee I feel I should state it—that the committee agreed not to hear any member of the delegation representing these Indians on this question, expecting to hear only the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] being absent on account of sickness, to hear the officers of the department, and then take action; but while the hearing was going on the senior Senator from Montana produced a witness who lives on the reservation. After that outsider was heard, members of this delegation asked to be heard, and members of the tribe who were members of the delegation were heard in opposition to this appropriation. Those Indians, however, to be fair to that delegation, said to the committee, and they have said in the petition to Congress, that they have no opposition to the irrigation project if their lands are relieved from the charge; that they do not intend to take advantage of this system; that they do not intend to use the water; and that, therefore, they do not want to be charged for it. That is all this delegation has asked. They say if you will relieve their lands from that charge and want to go ahead and put water on and furnish it to the settlers and let them pay for it, they have no objection; and I believe from the showing made, from the fact that only a small quantity over 900 acres of land is being irrigated by the Indians, that they are justified in asking for this relief.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to ask the Senator whether these lands will produce crops without irrigation?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not want to go into that matter, because I have no personal knowledge regarding it; but some of the witnesses testified that those lands produced better wheat without irrigation than with it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It merely struck me that if these lands were under the irrigation system and they are desert lands such as we have in our section of the country, they would be practically worthless without water, and that, therefore, the Indians would absolutely need water on their lands.

Mr. CURTIS. Some Indians appeared before our committee with samples of the products of last year, which they said was a very dry one. They exhibited fine potatoes and vegetables of all kinds, good wheat and other grains, which were raised without any irrigation. Many of these Indians at the hearings two years ago contended that irrigation is not needed, as I recollect. The dry-farming expert of the State was here, and witnesses before the committee testified as to how crops could be raised under the dry-farming system in that section.

I do not care to occupy the time of the Senate any longer, but I merely desire to say that it does seem to me that, with an expenditure of over $3,000,000 and with nearly $3,000,000 more required for the completion of the project, Congress should stop and think before it makes this appropriation, when it is shown that less than 20,000 acres of the 80,000 acres under the ditch are actually being cultivated by white settlers and by the Indians and their tenants.

I hope the amendment will be defeated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. MYERS. I ask for a division, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A division is asked for. Those in favor of the amendment will rise and stand until counted. [A pause.] Those opposed will rise. [A pause.] The amendment is lost.

Mr. MYERS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BANKHEAD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], who is absent from the Chamber, and so I withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], which I transfer to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], whom I do not see present. Therefore I withhold my vote, not knowing how he would vote on this question if present.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). Has the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut, which I transfer to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I do not see him in his seat, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. MCKELLAR (when the name of Mr. SHIELDS was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIELDS] on official business.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. He is absent, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], which I transfer to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, has the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a pair with that Senator, and for that reason I withhold my vote.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to inquire if the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have a pair with the Senator from Kansas, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. KELLOGG. I wish to inquire if the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. KELLOGG. I announce my pair with that Senator, and withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to inquire whether the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That Senator not being present, and having a general pair with him, I withhold my vote.

While I am on my feet I desire to state that my colleague, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], is absent on account of illness.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, has the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. COLT. In the absence of that Senator I withhold my vote.

Mr. KELLOGG. I transfer my pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and vote "nay."

Mr. WOLCOTT. I inquire if the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Having a general pair with that Senator I withhold my vote.

I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SAULSBURY] and to state that he has a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT].

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], which I transfer to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS];

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED];

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY]; and

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. KIRBY. I desire to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES], and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] are detained on official business.

Mr. SHERMAN. I transfer the pair heretofore announced to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and vote "nay."

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 16, nays 25, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] the yeas are 16, the nays are 25. There are present and not voting the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]. On the vote announced the amendment of the Senator from Montana is lost.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I move as a further amendment that "$250,000" be stricken out of the committee amendment and "$400,000" inserted. I submit that to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLIS in the chair). The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 35, line 17, it is proposed to amend the committee amendment by striking out "$250,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$400,000."

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I certainly do not wish to take the time of the Senate, but I ought to say a word. Both Senators from Montana must know that, speaking from a personal standpoint, I should be glad to vote for this amendment. I do not share the opinion that some of my colleagues on the committee entertain as to the project. I think it is a very worthy project. The reasons that moved the committee and the only reasons that caused the committee to make these reductions were considerations of economy. I have never been an economist, Mr. President, unless it may be said that I am a "political" economist. I myself have never talked economy; I waste enough words, anyhow; and I think that in talking economy in matters of this kind we sometimes waste words, especially when our constituents send us here and tell us to get appropriations just as fast and as furiously as we may.

But, Mr. President, there is a point where serious men must pause in respect to public expenditures; there is a point where men of judgment ought to stop and reflect before they proceed to appropriate large sums of money out of the Treasury. Meritorious as all these projects are—the one in Montana, the one in Washington, the ones in Arizona, and that in Wyoming—the committee is of the opinion that, in view of the enormous national expenditures, the great demands made upon the Treasury, and in view of testimony, at this particular juncture it is wise and expedient not to appropriate the entire sum which the House of Representatives had seen fit to appropriate for projects in the States of Montana, Wyoming, and Washington. Therefore the appropriation for the Montana item was reduced by the committee from $750,000 to $250,000, and a very substantial decrease was made in the appropriation for the project in Washington. There could be no better project than the one in Washington, but we were of opinion that at this particular time the public interest would be served best by simply keeping the projects from falling into a state of disrepair rather than initiating new work, laudable as new work may be and beneficent as it will be in the future.

Mr. President, I have stated the reasons which induced the committee to make these changes. It is a very infrequent thing that the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs reduces an appropriation, as all Senators will bear witness; but if when we attempt to reduce appropriations we are to meet with discouragement and the committee is not to be sustained, our committee will fall back into our old-time inveterate habit of increasing instead of decreasing the appropriations.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Arizona, the chairman of the committee, to another consideration, which I think was a factor in eliminating these large appropriations from the bill. I refer to the question of labor. It was argued that all the labor we have will be needed for the production of crops, and that no irrigation projects should be undertaken at this time. A still further objection was made that the materials which must necessarily be used in the construction of irrigation projects at this time are exceptionally high, and it certainly would not be wise to expend vast sums of money for the extension of irrigation projects at a time when the materials used in their construction are perhaps from 100 to 150 per cent higher than they ever were before. I think, however, the most serious objection to these undertakings was the question of labor. I simply wanted to remind the chairman of the committee that that was also one of the factors which influenced the action of the committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Arizona a question. I understand that this is an irrigation project and that there are now under irrigation about 80,000 acres of land. Is that true?

Mr. ASHURST. I will read from page 196 of the House hearings on the bill:

> The area of irrigable land under project, 152,000 acres.

That is what the department says as to the number of acres that may be irrigated.

> Area of irrigable land under constructed works, 63,000 acres.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understood it was 80,000 acres.

Mr. ASHURST. I am reading from page 196 of the House hearings on which is set forth the statement of the department.

Mr. BANKHEAD. How many of those 63,000 acres are actually under cultivation?

Mr. ASHURST. Of the 63,000 acres, I believe that substantially eighteen or nineteen thousand acres are under irrigation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand that the appropriation estimated for by the department is entirely sufficient to take care of that project and prevent deterioration.

Mr. ASHURST. The testimony of Mr. Morris Bien, who represented the Reclamation Service before the committee and whose testimony was taken by your committee, was that it would require at least $250,000 to continue the project—that is, to maintain it as a going project, prevent it from falling into disrepair, and prevent the work from deteriorating and the material from being scattered.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the information I desired, and really I can see no use of increasing this appropriation.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Arizona admits that he is a political economist, but that is no distinction; there are many "political economists." I know numbers of them; that is, people who are economists for political reasons. It seems to me it is the most common branch of learning that I encounter anywhere. So the Senator is not entitled to any singular distinction on that account. We see evidences here every day that he has a great deal of company.

I did not feel that I would be doing my duty in this matter unless I gave the Senate a chance to vote on some amount less than the amount named in the first amendment which I offered, which was $500,000. I thought it my duty to submit to the Senate and give it a chance to vote on an amendment proposing an appropriation of $400,000, which is $100,000 less than the amount named in my last amendment. I thought that concession might be sufficient to satisfy the "political economists." Therefore I submit this amendment to the wisdom of the Senate, and of course would be pleased to see it adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Montana to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, in regard to the assertion of the Senator from Arizona that the Yakima irrigation project is the best in the United States, it is not necessary for the Senator from Arizona to offer any proof on that subject. I admit it. It is true. But it seems to me that the committee have also conceded that this project in Montana, while it is not up to the standard of the one in the great Yakima Valley, on the Yakima Indian Reservation, is a good one. By their appropriation of $250,000 for the project they approve it. That removes all discussion from the Senate as to whether or not this project is going to be adopted. They have adopted it. They are putting a large sum of money into it. The executive branch of the Government, charged with the responsibility of spending this money, recommend to Congress that the amount which they need for the economical conduct of this work is $750,000.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. I think the Senator is mistaken in his conclusions. I will say that this is not a new project. The project under consideration is not a new one. The Government has already expended about three million three or four hundred dollars on the project. This appropriation is simply an additional appropriation.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is what I stated.

Mr. GRONNA. I misunderstood the Senator, then.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I stated that it was not a new project, and that it had already been approved and adopted, and that this bill carried a large sum of money for the continuation of the work on it. My understanding was that the Reclamation Service estimated that for the proper prosecution of this work, upon which several millions have already been expended, they should have during the next fiscal year $750,000.

Mr. GRONNA. That would be, of course, for an extension of the project.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; but it is regarded as the continuation, I understand, of this same project.

I am not in sympathy with the policy that has been advocated by some that because we are engaged in war all work of internal development and improvement ought to cease. I think that the demands of the war require the maintenance of all of our policies of internal improvement, internal development, and the prosecution of public works. The French Government is more intimately involved in the war than the United States is, or at least more directly. Ultimately, I think, we have as much interest in the war and are confronted with as vital results as France is; but France is more directly in touch with it now than we are, and has been fighting for her very life at the threshold of the Nation. It is not very long since there was a great celebration in France, right in the midst of the war, of the completion of the great Marseille Canal. They did not stop the construction of that great public work because they were involved in this war. They regarded it as essential to the prosperity and to the strength of the Nation, in war as well as in peace, to continue the improvement of the country and the development of its resources and its facilities.

Assuming that this is a meritorious project—as we must assume, because the committee has recommended the appropriation of $250,000 for it—it seems to me it follows that the efficient development of it, the appropriation of a sufficient amount of money to carry on the work in a businesslike way, is in the interest of economy and in the interest of the development of our resources and the maintenance of the national strength. Generally speaking, I do not know of any class of public improvement that yields a larger return than approved irrigation projects. I know that there has been some effort to discredit them recently, but my opinion has never changed in regard to their merits. We see on every hand, and particularly we have a living object lesson in the State of Washington, that these projects, if carried on to their full development, not stopped half way, so that the full results can flow from the undertaking, yield as great returns and in some cases much greater returns than it had ever been estimated would be the result.

I thought I would say this word, although this project is not in my State. It seems to me that certain fundamental considerations rather support the position taken by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, he would be a very bold man who would be higher in his idea of the value of irrigation projects than I. Surely I have a right to speak with some authority on these Indian projects. I have with pride been watching their progress for four years as chairman of the committee and for six years as a member of the Indian Affairs Committee, and I ought to know something about them. I share the views expressed in the splendid speeches that the Senators from Montana have made with reference to the project in their State, and I agree also with the Senators from Washington as to the project on the Yakima Reservation. I repeat that my vote against this appropriation must not be construed as in any sense a feeling of hostility toward the irrigation interests of this country. Indeed, Mr. President, my distinguished colleague and I represent the premier irrigation State, of the agricultural interests of which we are so justly proud. Under the great Salt River project lands that before the project was built were worth but $5 to $10 an acre have sprung to a value of $300 an acre, and are producing millions of dollars' worth of long-staple cotton. The rich lands of the Yuma project are becoming one of the great marvels in crop production. Irrigation is both ideal and practical. It appeals to the poetic fancy and to hard common sense. I am the earnest friend and ready champion of any and all projects where there may be the smallest opportunity for success. But because I am an earnest friend of the irrigation projects of our country it does not necessarily follow that I should vote for large expenditures and huge appropriations out of the Treasury at a time when you have to pay out $3 to get $1 worth of value.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. Let me finish the sentence. Assume this situation: Assume that a large potato crop was raised in a certain county and that 2,000 carloads could not be gathered, but rotted in their beds because they were not dug out of the ground. Assume a situation with reference to fruit, where $14 per day was offered to agricultural laborers to gather fruit, but the fruit rotted on the trees. Can you fail to gather your harvest and then ask me to vote for large appropriations to stimulate and increase the production in that locality?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether the consideration of the committee amendments has been completed?

Mr. ASHURST. No, Mr. President; we have not completed the consideration of the committee amendments, and, indeed, there was a unanimous-consent agreement that we should complete the committee amendments first. If, however, individual Senators at this time wish to offer amendments in their own right, I have no objection, only I hope they will not lead to debate.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I prefer to take the orderly course, then, and I will let the committee proceed to dispose of its amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 35, after line 18, to strike out:

For continuing construction of the irrigation systems on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, in Montana, $100,000 (reimbursable), which shall be immediately available and remain available until expended.

And insert:

For maintaining the irrigation systems on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, in Montana, $25,000 (reimbursable), which shall be immediately available and remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, at the top of page 36, to strike out:

For continuing construction of the irrigation systems on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, in Montana, $75,000 (reimbursable), which shall be immediately available and remain available until expended: Provided, That not to exceed $25,000 of applicable appropriations made for the Flathead, Blackfeet, and Fort Peck irrigation projects shall be available for the maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for official use upon the aforesaid irrigation projects: Provided further, That not to exceed $3,500 may be used for the purchase of horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, and that not to exceed $4,000 may be used for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles.

And insert:

For continuing construction, maintenance, and operation of the irrigation systems on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, in Montana, $50,000 (reimbursable), which shall be immediately available, and remain available until expended: Provided, That not to exceed $15,000 of applicable appropriations made for the Flathead, Blackfeet, and Fort Peck irrigation projects shall be available for the maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for official use upon the aforesaid irrigation projects: Provided further, That not to exceed $3,500 may be used for the purchase of horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, and that not to exceed $4,000 may be used for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, under the head of "North Carolina," on page 43, line 6, to change the number of the section from 14 to 15, and in line 8, after the word "superintendent," to strike out "$33,600; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; in all, $39,600" and insert "$41,600; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; in all, $47,600," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 15. For support and education of 200 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Cherokee, N. C., including pay of superintendent, $41,600; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; in all, $47,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 43, after line 11, to strike out:

For the construction of a bridge across the Oconalufty River, at or near the Indian school at Cherokee, N. C., $8,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be expended until the Secretary of the Interior shall have obtained from the proper authorities of the State of North Carolina, or the county of Swain, satisfactory guaranties of the payment by the said State of North Carolina, or by the county of Swain, of at least one-half of the cost of the construction of said bridge, and that the proper authorities of the said State of North Carolina, or the said county of Swain, shall assume full responsibility for, and will at all times maintain and repair, said bridge and the approaches thereto: And provided further, That any and all expenses above the amount herein named in connection with the construction of said bridge shall be borne either by the said State of North Carolina or the said county of Swain.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not agree to this amendment.

I want to say that two years ago the Senate adopted this provision. The House refused to agree to it because they did not have the information before them. This time the House investigated it and put it on the bill.

We have a little band of Cherokee Indians in North Carolina, a Government reservation there of about thirty or forty thousand acres, and the county surrounding it has appropriated the sum of $200,000 and has expended the money on the roads coming up to the Indian reservation. They have a river there which has yet to be bridged, and this is to appropriate the small sum of $8,000 to build that bridge. It is on the Government reservation, right at the Government school, and the children can not get across the river unless the bridge is built. The county has built these fine roads right up to the Indian reservation, and there is the river, and they can not cross over it, and the county can not build it. Unless the Government builds it, they will have no bridge there. The Government has done nothing for these Cherokee Indians in the past except to give them a school.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator to say that the bridge was within the reservation?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the committee, then, was under a misapprehension. The committee took the view that the bridge was not on the reservation.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes, sir; I am informed that it is.

Mr. ASHURST. If this bridge is on the reservation, I wish to go on record unqualifiedly as voting for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over will be found on page 63, where it is proposed to insert the following after line 10:

That section 6 of the act of Congress approved April 26, 1906 (34 Stat. L., pp. 137, 139), is hereby amended by substituting the following for the proviso in the concluding paragraph thereof: "Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform, in person or by his duly authorized representative, all duties devolving under existing law upon any officer of the Five Civilized Tribes, including the execution of tribal deeds and other instruments, in all cases where the position held by such officer is or shall become vacant."

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I make a point of order against the amendment from line 11 to line 21.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, personally I have no doubt that the item is obnoxious to the point of order, but I think one of the Senators from New Mexico is interested in the discussion of that item.

Mr. OWEN. I simply make the point of order against it, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inquire of the Senator from Oklahoma what the point of order is?

Mr. OWEN. That it changes existing law; that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. General legislation on an appropriation bill?

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is, on page 75, at the foot of the page, where the committee amendment proposes to strike out "$500,000" and to insert "$250,000," so as to read:

For continuing construction and enlargement of the Wapato irrigation and drainage system, to make possible the utilization of the water supply provided by the act of August 1, 1914 (38 Stat. L., p. 604), for 40 acres of each Indian allotment under the Wapato irrigation project on the Yakima Indian Reservation, Wash., and such other water supply as may be available or obtainable for the irrigation of a total of 120,000 acres of allotted Indian lands on said reservation, $250,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended: Provided, That the entire cost of said irrigation and drainage system shall be reimbursed to the United States under the conditions and terms of the act of May 18, 1916: Provided further, That out of the sum herein appropriated the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay to Violetta Stone and W. D. Stone, husband and wife, the sum of $629.48 for lands purchased of them for use in connection with the construction of the diversion dam across the Yakima River, as provided for in the act of May 18, 1916 (39 Stat. L., p. 154), and the sum herein appropriated shall be available for the purchase of such other lands as may be required in connection with the construction of the aforesaid irrigation project.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, in view of the statements of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] and also of the chairman of the committee with reference to the Yakima project, that it is one of the best if not the best in the United States, it is not necessary to go into details as to the merits of this proposition; but I hope that the Senate will not adopt the amendment proposed by the committee, and I will state just briefly why I think that amendment ought to be rejected.

I believe in economy; but there is sometimes no economy in not making the appropriations necessary to keep the Government work going on as it ought to go. As a matter of fact, I think the most waste that we have committed in connection with Government work results from our failing to provide the money to do the work in a businesslike way; and so here, I think, to cut this appropriation down to $250,000 is not economy but is an actual waste, and will result in waste to the Government in the end. Of course, it makes the appropriation for this year $250,000 less than the amount proposed by the House, but ultimately this project will cost more by reason of cutting it down to $250,000 than it would cost if we appropriated the $500,000; and in my judgment we ought to appropriate more than $500,000.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. I notice that the item reads:

For the irrigation of a total of 120,000 acres of allotted Indian lands on said reservation, $500,000.

If that amount is reduced to $250,000, could not the department have prepared for irrigation 60,000 acres of that land?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No. The Senator, I think, has a wrong idea as to the project.

Mr. CURTIS. I simply wanted to know what the fact was in that regard.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Probably I had better explain the situation just a little bit.

On the Yakima Indian Reservation there is a project known as the Wapato irrigation project. That is not a reclamation project under the Reclamation Service, but it is an Indian irrigation project and the work is being done by the Indian Service. This Wapato project contemplates the ultimate reclamation of 174,000 acres of land. There is one unit of that project, however, that will cover 120,000 acres when that unit is completed. All this land was allotted Indian land. The Indians have sold some of their lands, so that about 20,000 acres of this land that is under the proposed reclamation project is owned by private parties. There are no homesteads involved in this case as in the Montana case. The total cost of reclaiming this 120,000 acres is estimated at about $3,000,000, so that this $500,000 does not complete the project for the reclamation of 120,000 acres of land, but that is just what they provide for this year. As I say to the Senator, it will cost ultimately about $3,000,000. We have appropriated, I think, about $400,000 to carry on this project. In the last bill we appropriated $200,000 and in the preceding bill we appropriated $200,000 to begin to carry on the work.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. May I ask the Senator if there is a limitation on the cost of the project?

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is no limitation except the estimate submitted by the Indian Office when the project was, we might say, adopted.

I might refer to this phase of the situation, and I hope the Senator will notice it:

For a great many years—in fact, ever since the treaty was made, I think, in 1857, or at any rate since the value of water for irrigation has been realized—there has been a controversy between the Indians and the Government of the United States as to the division of the water in the Yakima River. The Yakima River is the source of irrigation for this reservation; but prior to this controversy coming up, and upon the inducement of the Government, white settlers had gone into that valley generally and had taken up lands under the desert-land act, homestead and otherwise, until they had actually appropriated for irrigation purposes every drop of water of the Yakima River that flows in its channel at the low-water stage. Now, the Indians have asserted this claim: The Indians have contended for a long time that they were entitled to one-half of the water flowing in the Yakima River. They have been asserting that claim for a great many years. To allow that claim and to carry it out would be to dispossess and deprive thousands of settlers of the water that they have put on their land, and destroy their crops and work irreparable injury.

Congress wrestled with that matter for quite a while, and finally got a commission to go out—a joint commission of the House and the Senate—and that commission recognized the justice of the Indian's claim, but it also recognized the condition that had been permitted to grow up in that valley and the injury and damage that would be done if the Indians were allowed to take half of the water out of the natural, normal, low-water flow of the Yakima River. So, in order to do justice to the Indians and in order to do justice to the settlers who had gone in there at the invitation, in fact, of the Government, this joint commission of the House and Senate recommended that we buy stored water for the Indians equivalent to one-half the flow in the Yakima River and furnish them a free water right for one-half of each allotment. Congress did that, and we appropriate in this bill, I think, the fifth payment of $100,000 of the amount, $635,000, that it was estimated it would cost to furnish stored water to supply these Indian lands. When that was done, they also submitted an estimate of the cost of reclaiming the largest body of land that it was possible to reclaim there. That project embraced this 120,000 acres, and the cost was about $3,000,000; and we have started on it and appropriated, as I remember, $400,000 in two Indian bills before this. So this appropriation made by the House of $500,000 was simply intended to carry on the reclamation of these lands.

It was necessary to include all these lands in this project, because, as the Senator well knows, you can not irrigate one-half of an allotment and let the other half go. Furthermore, to do that would make it tremendously expensive, even if you could do it. So that all the lands were included, and the Indians have to pay for the water right for 40 acres of an 80-acre allotment, and the white people have to pay their part for the water for their land. All of this money will be ultimately repaid to the Government. There is not any doubt about the repayment of this money. So that as a matter of fact this is a loan of money in order to carry on a Government project for the reclamation of Indian lands, and every dollar of it will eventually come back to the Government.

Unless the Senator wants more information as to the details of the project itself, I will not take further time on that point.

None of the objections urged by the Senator from Kansas to the project in Montana apply to the project in Washington, unless it be the matter of economy or keeping down the appropriation. The question of labor was raised by some Senators, by the Senator from South Dakota. Of course, we have not all the labor that we want in this valley. Our people have some difficulty and some trouble in getting labor. The demand is very great; but the fact is that we have always secured all the labor that was necessary to get our crops in and get them harvested, and we expect to do it this year. We have been enlarging the area in different parts of the valley, and our people expect to enlarge the area this year, and there is not any question but that every foot of land that is made available for cultivation and for irrigation will be irrigated and cultivated.

Now, let me suggest this as to the importance attached to this project by the officers of the Government: They considered it so important that last year, in the extra session of Congress, an estimate and recommendation came to this body from the Secretary of the Interior urging that an appropriation of $750,000 be made for this project as an emergency appropriation. Of course, the Appropriations Committee did not feel justified in putting it in the emergency appropriation act, because if that were put in many other claims would be presented, and so it was rejected; but that shows the importance that the department attached to it. Why did they send down this estimate? They sent down this estimate for this project because of its very great importance for furnishing additional food products; and the showing here was that by the expenditure of a dollar of Government money we would get products that the Government needs to the extent of $1, $2, or $3. The showing is that on these lands we can produce from 40 to 60 bushels of wheat to the acre. I have here a statement from the superintendent in charge of this irrigation under the Indian Office, and he estimates that the production per acre is 60 bushels; or, making a conservative estimate of 50 bushels to the acre, he estimates that each year we would have an appropriation of $750,000 we would put under cultivation 30,000 acres of land that would produce 50 bushels of wheat per acre, or a total of 1,500,000 bushels of wheat—one of the farm products that this country deems absolutely vital to the success of this war.

It seems to me that that is something which should appeal to the Senate; that it is something which should appeal to the Congress of the United States; and that it ought to offset this proposition of economy. Every foot of land that can be reclaimed here will be cultivated. The superintendent made the estimate last year when the recommendation of $750,000 was made, that if $750,000 was made available last year 30,000 acres of additional land would be brought under irrigation and cultivation this year, and that if $750,000 would be available for the next year there would be 30,000 acres more next year subject to cultivation; in other words, with the proper appropriation we would have in two years 60,000 acres of additional farm land under cultivation. At 58 bushels to the acre that would be 3,000,000 bushels of wheat that it would make available. Of course, all this land probably would not be put in wheat, but much of it in potatoes. Last year on the Yakima Indian reservation, upon the urging of Government people and those interested, eleven or twelve thousand acres of potatoes were planted and harvested. Every foot of land that can be irrigated now has been and is being cultivated. So there is no question of that character arising in connection with it.

I wish to call attention to another fact. This matter was represented to the State council of defense, and their opinion was asked with reference to it. They adopted a resolution, which I desire to read. This is not a petition from the landowners or those directly interested. It is not a statement made by them, but it is the council of defense not of the county but of the State, composed of men from all parts of the State who are looking upon this matter from a patriotic standpoint, and upon the showing made they adopted this resolution:

Copy of resolution adopted by the Washington State council of defense, July 17, 1917:

Whereas a loan from the Government war funds—

I will say, in explaining the resolution, they thought that without getting an appropriation from Congress the President might allot a sum of money out of the $100,000,000 that we left with him, so they worded their resolution in that way, and really made it a recommendation to the President to allot out of the war fund we gave him the necessary sum of money to carry on this work—

Whereas a loan from the Government war funds to the Indian Service of somewhat less than $2,000,000, to be expended in the extension of the Wapato, Simcoe-Toppenish, and Satus irrigation projects in the Yakima Indian Reservation will make available for wheat production in 1918 30,000 acres of exceedingly fertile lands capable of producing more than a million bushels of wheat, and in 1919 an additional 30,000 acres of equally fertile land, making possible the production of more than 2,000,000 bushels of wheat in 1919;

Whereas the production of such additional 3,000,000 bushels of wheat in two years appears to be a vital military need;

Whereas there is no project in the West where an expenditure of approximately $25 per acre will produce such an increased wheat production of 3,000,000 bushels in two years and 2,000,000 bushels each year thereafter; and

Whereas the rental value of these unused acres is very much needed by the Indian owners, and there is an immediate demand for every acre of these reservation lands as soon as placed under water: Be it

Resolved, That the National Council of Defense, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Interior be urged to arrange for the advancing to the Yakima Indian Reservation service from the war funds of the Government sufficient money for the extension of said irrigation projects, said funds to be returned to the Government by the owners of said lands in annual installments: Be it

Resolved further, That the Senators and Representatives from this State be requested to use their influence with the National Defense Council and the respective departments of the Government to accomplish this purpose.

That is the recommendation of the State council of defense, placing the matter upon the basis of a national necessity by men thoroughly acquainted with the situation and the possibilities of the project.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator kindly yield to me?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. I wish to call attention to the situation which actually exists. Let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that a similar organization composed of able, patriotic men in my own State sent to me, and I have no doubt sent to my colleague [Mr. SMITH], a statement that we at once ought to exercise our energies to secure an additional $500,000 in this bill to stimulate and increase agricultural development in Arizona. There must be a limit somewhere, and the hard and fast line was drawn by the committee. We did not discriminate. The Arizona appropriations were reduced by the committee, and a delegation came on here to talk to me about it. I could not play favorites. I could not vote to reduce appropriations in other States and then increase the appropriations in Arizona.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope I have not said a word to lead the chairman of the committee to think that I was thinking the committee had acted unwisely.

Mr. ASHURST. No; the Senator has not.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Or acted in a discriminating way or anything of that sort.

Mr. ASHURST. I was only saying that each locality views the matter from its local viewpoint, and that large appropriations are sought to be made out of the Treasury to stimulate agriculture in this and that locality. This committee was required to look at the situation as a whole and view it by and large.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope the Senator does not feel that I am reflecting upon the action of the committee.

Mr. ASHURST. On the contrary, Mr. President, the Senator has made a very able and a very respectful argument. I have not risen to criticize anything or to object to anything the Senator has said. I feared when the Senator sat down we might have a vote or might adjourn, and I wanted to give in a few words the reason which moved the committee to reduce the appropriation from $500,000 to $250,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am just presenting my own proposition upon its merits in the hope that it will appeal to the good judgment of the Senate. I know what actuated the committee, and I have no criticism to make upon its action. The committee felt that they should cut these appropriations down. They felt that they should treat every project in the bill on the same principle and in the same way, and with that I am not finding fault; but I am appealing to the Senate in the hope that the merits of my proposition may convince the Senate that in this case, at any rate, the Senate may think a wiser course could be followed in the interests of the Government.

I know the action of the committee is based upon a fair conception of acting for the best interests of the Government. I do not question that for one moment; but I believe that the interests of the Government will be promoted by allowing the provision that the House adopted to stand. In the first place, as I said a while ago, I think it is not economical to cut up these projects and furnish an amount of money that will not carry them on in the most economical way. Much of the force that will be gotten together under a $250,000 appropriation will have to be disbanded before the year is up, and when another appropriation is made to carry on the work for another year it will cost more to get that force together. So instead of saving money, in the end you will lose money. But the committee took a different view of that. I hope the Senate will conclude that the committee took the wrong view and that they will reject the committee amendment. But, independent of that, I think the interest of the Government in this national crisis will be conserved by making an appropriation that will, at any rate, insure the reclamation of 30,000 acres of land for the next year.

What is the result if you do not do it? According to the superintendent of irrigation, we will get more than 8,000 acres additional for the next year with the $250,000; but his estimate is that if we had $750,000 we would get 30,000 acres. In other words, if we get an appropriation of $500,000 we shall probably get 20,000 or 24,000 acres, but with the appropriation of $250,000 we will get only 8,000 additional on this reservation. Is that wise? I do not think so.

Now, about the additional cost of the work of irrigation, here is what the engineer says, and I simply give you his statement. He met that objection. He said:

> The question has arisen as to what effect the high cost of labor and materials will have on the total cost of the project. While this might increase the cost to some extent, the 20 per cent added to all estimates—

That is the general lump sum that they add in connection with these irrigation projects after they have made an estimate of the cost; they add a lump sum of about 20 per cent to cover contingencies and exigencies. He says—> the 20 per cent added to all estimates for contingencies is thought to be sufficient to cover any increased cost on account of labor and materials being higher than usual. Should it increase the cost, however, the farmers would be able and willing to pay for this increased cost on account of getting higher prices for their products.

The owners of the land could well afford to pay any additional cost at this time.

Mr. President, this work has been going on. Every dollar that you expend for extension of agriculture—and that is what it amounts to—will be beneficial in the way of bringing additional land under irrigation. You do not have to extend your canal any considerable distance, or any distance at all, until you make the water available for irrigation. That is one of the peculiar features of this project in the beginning. From the time when it was commenced, when you got the main canal out a quarter of a mile, you could begin to irrigate a large area of land; and so, as you extend it, it simply brings an additional area under irrigation. But I take it it is not necessary to go into that.

Mr. President, I am not going to take the time of the Senate any further. The Senate knows the attitude of the committee.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator pardon me just a moment?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator, I hope, will not think me impertinent.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Not at all.

Mr. ASHURST. I simply desire to inquire if the Senator intends to ask for the yeas and nays, because that will guide my course.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should like to have the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. I fear there will not be a quorum at this time. Will the Senator object to postponing the vote until to-morrow morning?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No.

Mr. ASHURST. The bill may then be laid aside for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the consideration of the amendment will be postponed until to-morrow.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. Unless there is some matter that some Senator desires particularly to bring before the Senate, I wish to move an executive session. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. ASHURST. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 27, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 26, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, Almighty God our Heavenly Father, for all the good, the generous, the pure, the noble, the brave, the great, whom Thou hast from time to time raised up, who by devotion to duty and the rectitude of their behavior left the world better that they lived and wrought.

By devotion to our duty, in the spirit of emulation, help us to leave behind us a record worthy of emulation by those who shall come after us; in the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ, Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SOUTH DAKOTA'S RATIFICATION OF PROHIBITION AMENDMENT.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, South Dakota has ratified the proposed constitutional amendment for prohibition. I send to the Clerk's desk a certified copy of the proceedings.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Certificate.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA, SECRETARY'S OFFICE.

I, Frank M. Rood, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the annexed senate joint resolution No. 1 was duly passed by the 1918 special session of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of South Dakota, at the city of Pierre, March 22, 1918.

[SEAL.] FRANK M. ROOD,
Secretary of State.

A joint resolution ratifying a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America relating to the manufacture, sale, and transportation of intoxicating liquors.

Whereas both Houses of the Sixty-fifth Congress of the United States of America, by a constitutional majority of two-thirds thereof, made the following proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States of America in the following words, to wit:

"Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States as provided by the Constitution:

"ARTICLE —.

"SECTION 1. After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

"SEC. 2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

"SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress."

Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota, the House of Representatives concurring:

SECTION 1. That the said proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America be, and the same is hereby, ratified by the Legislature of the State of South Dakota.

SEC. 2. That certified copies of this preamble and joint resolution be forwarded to the governor of this State, to the Secretary of State at Washington, to the presiding officer of the United States Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States.

A. C. ROBERTS,
Speaker of the House.

Attest:

CHAS. M. GARDNER.
Chief Clerk.

W. H. MCMASTER,
President of the Senate.

Attest:

W. N. VAN CAMP.
Secretary of the Senate.

I hereby certify that the within act originated in the senate, and was known in the senate files as senate joint resolution No. 1.

W. N. VAN CAMP,
Secretary of the Senate.

STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
Office of secretary of state, ss:

Filed March 22, 1918, at 3.40 o'clock p. m.

FRANK M. ROOD,
Secretary of State.
By GEO. F. SAYERS,
Assistant Secretary of State.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, when South Dakota was admitted into the Union in 1889, when her constitution was submitted to the people for ratification at the general election on October 1 of that year, a separate provision for prohibition was submitted at the same time. At that election there were 40,234 votes in favor of the constitutional provision for prohibition and 34,510 votes against it.

In 1895 the Legislature of South Dakota submitted to the people of the State a proposed repeal of this constitutional provision, and at the general election in 1896 the vote for repeal stood 31,901 for it and 24,910 against it. In 1916 an amendment for prohibition was again submitted to the electors of the State, and the vote at that general election was 65,334 in favor of prohibition and 53,380 against it. The legislature met in January, 1917, and enacted a bone-dry law, which went into effect on July 1, 1917. That law has been vigorously enforced, and it has been violated only in few instances.

Recently the Legislature of South Dakota convened in special session and by unanimous vote of both Houses, not a single vote being cast against it, ratified the Federal prohibition amendment. I take some pride and satisfaction in the record made by my State. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 389) to extend the time for cutting timber on the Coconino and Tusayan National Forests, Ariz.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. 9867) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years on account of war expenses, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3426. An act to empower the President to requistion, for war purposes, timber and timber products, rights of way, and logging equipment; to construct and operate logging roads and sawmills; and fixing a penalty for the violation thereof.

ARMS AND AMMUNITION.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD a speech delivered by me before the Union League Club in New York some 10 days ago on the subject of arms and ammunition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech that he delivered before the Union League Club about 10 days ago on the subject of arms and ammunition. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FOURTH-CLASS POST OFFICES.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I offered an amendment to the postal employees' salary bill, which was intended for the relief of post offices of the fourth class that had been made central accounting offices. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], in opposing that amendment, made the statement that there were no fourth-class post offices that were central accounting offices. I disputed that statement at the time. Of course, it is too late now to correct whatever adverse effect the gentleman's statement may have had upon my amendment, which, of course, was very great because of his prestige as a member of the Post Office Committee and as an expert on these questions; but in the interest of accuracy I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that upon inquiry at the office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department I find that there are 196 fourth-class offices that are now central accounting offices; that 21 of these are in Kentucky alone, and 5 in my own district, as I stated yesterday. I have discovered that there is even one in the gentleman's own State of Illinois, in Elizabethtown, Hardin County.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. And there are 40,000 fourth-class post offices.

Mr. LANGLEY. I do not question that; but the gentleman said there were no fourth-class post offices that were central accounting offices, and yet the records of the department show that there are 196 of them.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, it was not the intention to have any; I knew that.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman was simply mistaken. Inasmuch as he now seems willing to concede that I was right and he was wrong, I believe that is all I want to say.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Young, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 9352) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for an Assistant Secretary of War," approved March 5, 1890, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. HITCHCOCK, and Mr. WARREN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 389. An act to extend the time for cutting timber on the Coconino and Tusayan National Forests, Ariz.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 9571. An act to authorize the appointment of officers of the Philippine Scouts as officers in the militia or other locally created armed forces of the Philippine Islands drafted into the service of the United States, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 9903. An act to provide for restoration to their former grades of enlisted men discharged to accept commissions, and for other purposes.

URGENT DEFICIENCIES.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the urgent deficiency bill (H. R. 9867).

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, this is a most important report. There have been one or two changes in the early part of the bill, made, I understand, chiefly as a result of the labors and ability of the chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations [Mr. SHERLEY]. I think there ought to be a quorum here during the consideration of it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of no quorum present.

Mr. SHERLEY. Personally I hope the gentleman will not insist on the point. I think there will be plenty of Members in attendance here before we are through with the consideration of the report.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw his motion?

Mr. WALSH. I dislike very much to disagree with the distinguished gentleman, but I think there should be a more full attendance in the House.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum.

Mr. SHERLEY. I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anthony	Fordney	Key, Ohio	Rowland
Blackmon	Gandy	Kreider	Schall
Borland	Gard	LaGuardia	Scott, Pa.
Caldwell	Good	Lenroot	Scully
Chandler, N. Y.	Goodall	Littlepage	Smith, Chas. B.
Church	Gould	McCulloch	Smith, Thos. F.
Classon	Graham, Pa.	Mann	Stephens, Nebr.
Cooper, Ohio	Gregg	Mason	Templeton
Copley	Hamill	Miller, Minn.	Thomas
Curry, Cal.	Harrison, Miss.	Miller, Wash.	Tinkham
Davidson	Harrison, Va.	Mott	Van Dyke
Dent	Hayes	Overmyer	Vare
Dies	Heintz	Pou	Ward
Drukker	Hollingsworth	Powers	Wood, Ind.
Eagle	Johnson, S. Dak.	Price
Fairchild, G. W.	Kahn	Riordan
Flood	Kehoe	Roberts

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and sixty-six Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the conferees.

[For conference report and statement see proceedings of Saturday, March 23, 1918, pp. 3967 to 3971.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, the urgent deficiency bill as it passed the House carried a total of $687,830,482.46 of cash appropriations and authorizations of $419,339,000. As it passed the Senate it carried in direct appropriations $761,780,912.20 and the same amount of authorizations, or an increase in the bill of $73,950,449.74. As it came out of conference there had been a recession on the part of the Senate of $30,079,142.74 and a recession on the part of the House of $43,871,307, so that the bill now carries $731,901,789.46. The reason for the addition of $43,000,000 over the bill as it passed the House was due, not simply to increases in items that had been passed upon by the House but to the fact that estimates of considerable size came to the Congress after the hearings had been closed and too late to be considered by the House committee; and those estimates were very properly taken to the Senate committee and there considered and some of them allowed, some of them rejected It resulted from that that there were added matters by the Senate which had not been passed upon by the House and that the increases were not of the ordinary kind representing increases in matters upon which the House had expressed judgment. That was true of nearly all of the $73,000,000 that were added. The Senate made few changes in matters that had been considered by the House, and of the $73,000,000 they added they subsequently receded from some $30,000,000. So much for the general financial statement.

There were placed by the Senate upon the bill two provisions of first importance—provisions of legislation that the House should be fully advised of. One of them provided for the purchase by the Government of the Hoboken docks owned by the Hamburg-American and North German Lloyd Steamship Cos., German companies, the title to these properties, however, being held by two American corporations, the stock of which, however, is all German owned.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I prefer to make a general statement touching these matters and then I shall yield to inquiries. There was also a provision added which enlarged the scope of the power of the Alien Property Custodian. Under the law as it passed the Congress touching alien property the Alien Property Custodian was given the custody of such property for management and control, but with the right to sell only in order to prevent waste, that limitation having been put into the bill in conference and not having been in the bill as it passed through the House or the Senate. The Senate Committee on Appropriations, upon representations made by the Alien Property Custodian, reported a provision authorizing the Alien Property Custodian to sell any property of aliens that came into his possession, the same as if he were the absolute owner thereof, provision, of course, being made for the turning of the moneys into the Treasury of the United States. When the bill reached the floor of the Senate there was added an amendment, upon the motion of the Senator from New Jersey, in the way of a proviso, which required that all property sold by the Alien Property Custodian should be sold to American citizens at public auction to the highest bidder. That amendment was adopted by the Senate, and the provision in that form came to the House and subsequently went to conference. The House conferees agreed to the amendment of the Senate touching the right of the United States to buy the properties at Hoboken, the change made being largely a change in form and not in substance. The Senate amendment as it passed the Senate provided that the President might buy these properties, and further provided that if the price could not be agreed upon that 75 per cent of the value fixed by the President as just compensation might be paid to the person entitled to receive the same, and such person should have the right, having declined to accept the full amount, to sue for such additional sum as he felt entitled to. In other words, the same provision was inserted in the Senate amendment touching the payment of the purchase price of this property as had been provided in connection with property taken by the Government from American citizens, but it did not seem to the House conferees that there was any reason for such a provision under these particular circumstances. We were providing in the second amendment for the right of the Alien Property Custodian to sell any property held by him, and we were providing in the first amendment for the right of the United States Government to buy these particular properties. It did not seem either necessary or desirable to make a distinction between the situation that would arise when the Government bought and when a private person bought. If any private person buys property from the Alien Property Custodian, he simply pays the money to the Alien Property Custodian, and it is then held subject to such disposition as may be arrived at at the end of the war. There was no reason for authorizing suit against the Federal Government touching the price that should be paid.

If the person authorized to sue in the Senate amendment meant the Alien Property Custodian, there was no reason to have him sue the Federal Government. If it meant the German owners of the property, there was a very great reason why they should not be permitted to sue the Government, because it would result that the Government would put itself in the position where it would be bound by the judgment of its own courts and yet the other party to the suit would not be bound, and the final disposition of the moneys that come from the sale of alien property in America will have to be settled at the council table when peace shall come between the warring nations. There was no wisdom in such a provision. The House conferees therefore insisted that the first amendment should simply carry the right to the President to buy, and the Senate acquiesced in that viewpoint. When it came to the second amendment, the provision as it had passed the Senate, while doubtless intended to safeguard the disposition of this property, might have, and in many instances would have, resulted in transferring the property back into the hands of the very people that we desired to take it from, because by having an absolute requirement that the sale must be made to American citizens at public auction to the highest bidder, in many instances it meant that the minority interests, American in name only, would have been the actual purchasers, and the property would really be held in the future, as in the past, for Germany. No greater blow and no more legitimate blow can be struck in this country against our enemy, Germany, than by depriving her of the industrial control that she had through ownership of many corporations and many industries in America. [Applause.] And we would be lacking in ordinary common sense, to say nothing of patriotism, if we did not provide for a separation of these German citizens from control in great industrial matters. A recital could be made, taking hours, showing instance after instance where the German control of industries in this country is great enough to have very far-reaching influence upon the life and the trade of this country. Now, we all of us recognized the need of ending that commercial influence and control. We also recognized the desirability of safeguarding, so far as it can be done, the disposition of this property, which runs into the hundreds of millions, having in mind the major purpose of the legislation, and that presented the real problem to the conference, a problem that was not entirely easy of solution. We present to you the report in the belief that it has been intelligently solved. We provide that when the property is sold it shall be sold at public sale, after public advertisement, where the property or the major portion of it is situated, to the highest bidder who shall be an American citizen. That is the broad rule that we lay down as being the policy that ought to be and shall be followed in all these cases where there is not some compelling reason otherwise. But, having laid down that general principle, we provide that the President, for reasons stated, shall have the right to order the disposition of this property by private sale or otherwise——

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. In a moment. And we further provide that after the sale has been made the Alien Property Custodian may upon order of the President set aside such sale for reasons stated, and subsequently the property may be sold by public sale or otherwise, as the President may direct. In other words, we state as the judgment of the Congress that the property, unless there be special reasons to the contrary, when sold, shall be publicly sold, but we give to the President the power in the interest of the Nation to declare that it shall be disposed of otherwise when in his judgment it is necessary so to do in order to protect national interests. Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I wanted to ask the gentleman about the cases referred to—the sale of the Hamburg docks.

Mr. SHERLEY. I should have stated that where the sale is to the United States Government it does not require that it be a public sale.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It can negotiate directly?

Mr. SHERLEY. Unquestionably; and manifestly where the Government is to buy there is no reason why there should be a requirement of a public sale, when the Government would be compelled to bid against others in order to acquire property it might need and does need for war purposes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The first amendment relates exclusively to the taking over of the docks, piers, warehouses, wharves, and terminal equipment and facilities on the Hudson River now owned by the North German Lloyd Dock Co. and the Hamburg-American Terminal & Navigation Co., two corporations of the State of New Jersey, and so forth. The second amendment relates to the trading-with-the-enemy act, approved last October.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That relates to the Alien Property Custodian and what he may or may not do with property of which he is the custodian.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; it changes existing law in this particular, that under existing law he is permitted to sell property to prevent waste, and under the amendment as agreed to he is permitted to sell property as if he were the absolute owner—in other words, to sell any property that comes into his hands, but to sell it in the manner provided.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, would the Alien Property Custodian under that second amendment have the power to sell these Hamburg docks?

Mr. SHERLEY. Unquestionably. He has them in his possession and control and has had them for months.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I call attention to this language of the first amendment:

That if any such property—

That is, docks, wharves, and so forth—shall be taken over as aforesaid, the United States shall make just compensation therefor, to be determined by the President.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. "Upon the taking over of said property by the President, as aforesaid, the title for all such property so taken over shall immediately vest in the United States."

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, can that property be sold to the United States if it already has a vested title?

Mr. SHERLEY. Because the gentleman does not make a distinction between the title the Alien Property Custodian has under the law and the title the United States will get under purchase. The Alien Property Custodian under the law that we passed is authorized and directed to take over alien property which he holds as a common-law trustee.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I understand.

Mr. SHERLEY. Without a fee title to it; but under this, when the President shall have bought this property and taken it over, the fee-simple title in that property vests in the United States Government.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Well, if that is so, that the fee-simple title is in the United States immediately upon taking over property by the President under the provisions of the first section, how can the Alien Property Custodian under the provisions of the second amendment sell property to the United States to which it already has fee-simple title?

Mr. SHERLEY. Except that you make a premise that does not exist. The Alien Property Custodian has not the fee-simple title now.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The United States has.

Mr. SHERLEY. The United States has not. It is in these corporations. The control of the property is in the Alien Property Custodian. Under the second amendment, as such custodian he has the right to sell as if he were the absolute owner, and he does sell to the United States, which under the first amendment is authorized to buy and, when it buys, get a fee-simple title.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I confess I do not exactly understand that myself.

Mr. SHERLEY. I assure the gentleman that the matter has not been dealt with blindly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I presume it has not.

Mr. SHERLEY. It has not been done without regard to the questions of law involved.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If the Alien Property Custodian under the provisions of the law approved last October, known as the "trading-with-the-enemy" act, already has the custody of those docks, wharves, and so forth, and under the second amendment already has the power to sell to the United States, why was it necessary to have this first amendment, authorizing the President to take it and secure at once the fee-simple title?

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, it was thought desirable to expressly authorize the President to acquire these particular properties. The second amendment is very much more far-reaching and wider than the first.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Well, I know; but if he already has the power to sell it to the United States there was no reason whatever for giving to the President the power to take the fee-simple title right off himself.

Mr. SHERLEY. He does not take the fee-simple title right off himself. He gets it when he shall have acquired the property, either by concrete sale by the Alien Property Custodian or by taking the property and making just compensation therefor.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The language of the first amendment is this:

Provided, That if such property can not be procured by purchase, then the President is authorized and empowered to take over for the United States the immediate possession and title thereof—

Without any regard to the custodian.

Mr. SHERLEY. Suppose we do. When we have allowed him to take the property of American citizens when he needed to, shall we refuse to give him the power to take the property of alien enemies of the country? [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not see why gentlemen are applauding anything except the emphasis the gentleman gave to his reply. It did not meet the point I have made here.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will make his inquiries in my time instead of commenting upon my answers, perhaps I can satisfy him.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I did not comment upon the answer. I commented upon the applause. I made no comment upon the answer.

Mr. SHERLEY. All right.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It was very eloquent, indeed, and I thought not entirely responsive.

Mr. SHERLEY. That explains the applause.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, then, the point I wish specifically to make is this: The first amendment in express terms authorizes the President, without any regard to the custodian, to take over that property, the immediate possession or title thereof, and when he does that, instantly, by the provisions of the same amendment, the title to that property is absolutely vested in the United States. And yet in the second paragraph they say that the Alien Property Custodian can proceed to sell that to any person that he pleases. It seemed to me upon the face of the two provisions that there was a contradiction. That is all.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will.

Mr. WALSH. In reference to the last query propounded by the gentleman, of course, where property is specifically mentioned in the first section, any other legislation of a general character would not annul the specific legislation.

Mr. SHERLEY. But it is inconceivable that an Alien Property Custodian, the appointee of the President, controlled by him, would undertake to dispose of property to somebody other than the Government of the United States when the Congress of the United States says that it will be bought by the President for the United States.

Mr. WALSH. Now, may I ask the gentleman under what conditions, if he feels it is proper to state, would it properly arise whereby the President might decree that in the public interest the property should not be sold at public sale?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will answer the gentleman without undertaking to name specific cases, though I think they could be named. Here is a certain industry owned 10 per cent, or 20 per cent, or 30 per cent by naturalized American citizens, with 60 or 70 or 80 per cent owned by German citizens, all of the capital in the first instance having been practically German. That minority interest might, and in many instances probably would, be in a position to bid most for the property, knowing both its value and also being practically bidding for the interests that were there in the first instance. The purchaser would be technically an American citizen, and yet his money come from and his heart be in Germany. We have scriptural warrant for the saying that where a man's treasure is there is his heart also. In such a case it would be in Germany and not in the United States. It might be highly desirable that the sale should not be permitted to go to such minority interest.

There is even another case that is conceivable that is not related to the question of aliens and alien enemies. There might be a purchase of some of these corporations which represent great dominant influences in certain trades by their large rivals in business that would give to them, if they got possession of the property, a complete monopoly, and it might not be desirable in the interest of the public that that should occur.

There is in this morning's paper a statement touching an alien-enemy corporation owning large sugar properties in the Hawaiian Islands, and the statement—I do not know how accurate it may be—is to the effect that an effort had been made, which was circumvented by the Alien Property Custodian, for the transfer of that property to certain American citizens so as to prevent the taking over of the properties and subsequent sale by the Alien Property Custodian. Suppose that particular property, assuming the statements in the papers are true, should be put up for sale and the purchaser should be the minority American interest, which is American in name only.

It would be the height of folly to permit a sale to take place and that property to come back into the possession of the people who would be operating it simply until the time when they might again give to German citizens and the German Government the influence and control which such ownership carries with it.

Mr. WALSH. Now, just a further question. I agree with the statements of the gentleman, but I thought that an explanation ought to be part of the record. Of course, the second amendment which the gentleman has been discussing does not make it compulsory?

Mr. SHERLEY. It does not.

Mr. WALSH. And certain businesses which are manufacturing things necessary for the war—they can be carried on, I assume, by the Alien Property Custodian if he deems it advisable?

Mr. SHERLEY. That is true.

Mr. WALSH. Under the second amendment?

Mr. SHERLEY. That is true, and of course there is certain property coming into his hands where manifestly there is no reason for the sale. There have come into his hands, for example, stocks in United States companies, in the aggregate representings millions of value. Some German owns certain shares of stock, we will say, in the Pennsylvania Railroad, or in the United States Steel Co., or in the Illinois Central Railroad, or any other of the great corporations of the country. There is no reason in the world for the selling of that stock. It could be held, and the dividends as they accrue, if they should accrue, turned into the Treasury of the United States, and at the end of the war such disposition of that property could be made as will result from the final adjustment of the claims of the two Governments. But there are many going concerns that are enemy owned, either partially or entirely, many of them representing dominant influences in certain commercial lines. For this country to sit quiet and permit that control to continue; aye, even more than that, to have the Government's own custodian take charge of them, have them expand by virtue of the very war that Germany has forced upon us, and have these people safeguarded in their property, and at the end of the war that they had forced upon this country have that property turned back, greatly enhanced in value and in size, would be so idiotic that it is inconceivable that any people would contemplate it for a moment of time. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. The second amendment also changes the trading-with-the-enemy act in another particular by providing a penalty for the undisclosed principal?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. We undertake to safeguard the matter not only by giving the President the power to provide for sale other than public but we also provide a very severe penalty for any person buying for an undisclosed principal, or for resale to a person not a citizen of the United States, or for the benefit of a person not a citizen of the United States, with a provision also for the forfeiture of the property.

Now, I ought to say, before turning from these important amendments, that in regard to the first amendment there was presented a very interesting situation, one of great hardship to the city of Hoboken. These terminal properties paid annual taxes to the city of Hoboken of about $140,000. By virtue of their coming into the ownership of the United States they will not be subject to that tax, and the loss at this time of $140,000 of annual revenue to the city of Hoboken is a very severe loss. It was urged, and strongly urged, by my colleague [Mr. EAGAN], the gentleman from New Jersey, who represents that city, that provision should be made to enable the city to continue to collect taxes from such property; that these properties perhaps differed from usual Government property in that they were properties that could and would be used in a commercial way, and that the municipality ought not to be penalized by virtue of the Government taking them over. I do not think there was a man on the conference but was impressed with the equity that underlaid the argument that was so ably presented by the gentleman, but to have acquiesced in it meant to establish a precedent so far-reaching that we felt that we were not warranted in acquiescing, even if the rules controlling conferees had permitted us, which they did not. If this Government shall ever take over all of the railroads of America it would be presented with the problem in a very acute form as to what provision should be made permitting States and political subdivisions of a State to obtain revenues heretofore obtained from taxation of such property. Manifestly we did not feel that we had the right to undertake to solve that in a conference without any previous expression of a judgment by Congress on the subject.

I mention this because it is only fair to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EAGAN], who, in signing this report, has given an exhibition of a Member's ability to look beyond his district and look to the Nation's need rather than simply hold the local viewpoint. [Applause.] The need of the Government in taking this property was great, and he was big enough not to be willing to let a local situation, acute as it was, interfere with him in aiding in the doing of this important national work.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. AUSTIN. On page 64 provision is made for temporary office buildings in the District of Columbia, one item being $5,775,000, on page 65.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would say to the gentleman that the only change made in the building program was to authorize the department, if it saw fit, to avail itself of heat furnished commercially rather than to create its own heating plant.

Mr. AUSTIN. I was out of the city when the bill passed the House originally. I wanted to ask the gentleman as to these two items, one being $5,775,000 and the other being $2,377,500. What profits are paid to the contractors for constructing these buildings, which I understand were commenced before this bill passed the Senate?

Mr. SHERLEY. I can not answer the gentleman. I understand the frame buildings in Henry Park are to be built by the War Department directly without the interposition of any contractor. I do not know the terms on which the contract has been made touching the building of the concrete buildings at Seventeenth and B Streets.

Mr. AUSTIN. My understanding or information is that the Government is to pay for the cost of labor and material and $250,000 to the contractor.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is possibly so.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wanted to know whether that embraced all that they were to receive for their work?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will say to the gentleman that the answer to that will depend upon the terms of the contract, and that I have no personal knowledge of it. I know in a general way, from talk with Commander Parsons, that he contemplated the building of these buildings through the assistance of a contractor. I have seen, at Seventeenth and B Streets, some temporary frame buildings that are being put up there by a contractor who, I assume, is the contractor who is going to build these buildings.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does not the Committee on Appropriations know anything at all about what the Government is paying for this work?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will answer the question. I am glad he has made the inquiry. There is probably close to a billion dollars worth of contract work under way or to be taken up shortly. The Committee on Appropriations could not, if it worked 24 hours a day all the time and did nothing else, follow and undertake to pass judgment upon the wisdom or lack of wisdom with which various contracts are let or the terms of such contracts. Now, I say that because the gentleman has touched on a question infinitely bigger than the reason for his inquiry and infinitely bigger than the question as to these buildings.

I believe that the time has come, and I have so stated to responsible heads in the War Department and elsewhere, when the War Department ought to be in a position to perform a lot of work directly without the interposition of contractors. As to whether that is wise or not, men will differ, and men do differ, but it seems to me that that was true as to that character of building which was simple and ordinary and concerning which the department has now had considerable experience. When the war broke they did not have the organization to enable them to do such work, but they ought now to have the organization that would enable them in many instances to do it, and they ought not to pay out money to contractors where contractors are not needed. There is work of some kind where the use of contractors will probably be both necessary and desirable, in the interest of both speed and economy.

Touching these particular concrete buildings, I am not prepared to say that it is not the part of wisdom, having in mind the desire to get them speedily and to get them cheaply, to pay an organization that has had experience in the building of similar work a fee for supervising such work. Now, the price fixed, in my judgment, prevents any great waste of money. We provided for buildings of a size that would make a total cost of $3 a square foot. Before arriving at that opinion we had the judgment of the Army, of the Navy, of the Superintendent of the Capitol, and of Treasury officials as to cost; and their figures, as I stated, and as the gentleman would have heard me state if he had been here when the bill was up, ran from $2.50 to $3.09 a square foot, dependent somewhat on the character of the foundations that might have to be made. I understand that the gentleman has learned—because it came to me through another gentleman—that there was some contractor who claimed that he could build concrete buildings for $1.50 a square foot. If he can, I bid him Godspeed, because he will be doing something that nobody else has ever done for this kind of building, as far as I have been able to learn. I am not a builder and I have to take the advice of the men who ought to know. Now, I would be glad if some of the legislative committees would undertake to function instead of criticize and would provide a rule as to how money should be expended in connection with the building program of the Government. The Committee on Appropriations will welcome such legislation. But I suggest to those who draw it that they will find something of a problem in making a rule which will bind and which will not also prevent.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I say a word or two?

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman may ask me a question in my time.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have not criticized the committee.

Mr. SHERLEY. I did not say the gentleman had.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has reported a bill here which I think goes further than this bill or any other bill in protecting the interests of the Government in requiring that this work shall be given out on a competitive basis. There is no safeguard in any of these bills so far.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; there is. There is a price fixed.

Mr. AUSTIN. In this bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And in the public-building bill, too.

Mr. AUSTIN. As to the contractor who offered to do the work for $1.50, I had no talk with him.

Mr. SHERLEY. I know the gentleman had not.

Mr. AUSTIN. But a Member of this House did, and he said this man came to him with the strongest indorsements as to reliability and efficiency, and that he offered to do it for $1.50, and that we were paying $3.

Mr. SHERLEY. If he can do it, I hope he will get an opportunity to do it. I will say to the gentleman, further, that it is absolutely impossible for either the committee or for Congress by legislation so to safeguard the expenditures of these huge sums as to prevent extravagance at times, desirable as it is to prevent it. I can not do it. In all the matters that the committee has had to deal with it has tried to get all the information it can. When it brings the bills to this floor it gives all the information it has. After the bills have become laws, the responsibility must rest with the administrative officers, and in these particular cases I do not think there is any liability of any great amount of extravagance, because the price was fixed after an investigation which showed what the price would probably be.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does the gentleman know whether in this instance that I am giving him, of the Government building where the contractor was given a contract which gave him $250,000 profit for three or four months' work, any other reliable contractor in the United States was asked whether he would do it for less money?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know; but I have no doubt that the Bureau of Yards and Docks of the Navy Department, having had considerable experience as to cost, and having control over the cost as they will have control over this, and desiring to build the building within the time necessary and within the limit of cost necessary, chose people who they thought were responsible and capable. I had nothing to do, as I will never have anything to do, with the suggestion of any human being for any contractual relationship with the Government. The responsibility is with the Navy Department. If the gentleman has a quarrel with what has been done, his quarrel rests with the Navy Department.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am asking this for information——

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no doubt that they will be able to give good and substantial reasons for any action that they have taken.

Mr. AUSTIN. The reason I asked the gentleman whether the contractors were to have more than $250,000 profit was that it was stated that if they succeeded in constructing the buildings for less than a certain fixed amount they were to have an additional fee for their services, and I wanted some information, and naturally thought the committee dealing with this matter and reporting the appropriation could give us some. If the gentleman does not know of any means or method by which we can protect the interests of the Government against these exorbitant prices for this work, very good.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman mixes up assumptions with statements of facts that make his conclusions totally illogical. He says exorbitant fees. The gentleman assumes that a fee of $250,000 for the construction of buildings of this character within a certain time that will cost about $5,000,000 is an extravagant fee. I deny on the face of it that it is an extravagant fee. If it is an unnecessary fee, it ought not to be paid, but the assumption that the gentleman makes I submit has not yet been supported by anything more than his statement.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, if the Committee on Appropriations would say to these departments that are getting this money "you must submit the proposition to more than one reliable contractor and have competitive bids," it would be done.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will say to the gentleman that I have not only gone to the heads of the departments but I have gone further and oftener than the gentleman or any gentleman he can name to various officials of this Government to safeguard public expenditures whenever I learned of anything that warranted me in doing so. I can not take idle rumor and make it the basis of representations, and no other man with any appreciation of responsibility of office and of the tremendous tasks that we are dealing with now could do so; but if the gentleman at any time will bring to me any detailed statement of facts I will guarantee to see to it that it comes to the immediate attention of the responsible officials of the Government.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not challenge or question the gentleman's sincerity or his splendid work in reducing expenditures, for we all know——

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, let us dispense with the compliments.

Mr. AUSTIN. That he favors economy and reduction of public expenditures; but I do not think I am giving offense by in this public manner——

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman could not be offensive.

Mr. AUSTIN. Suggesting to this committee that has the handling of the money of the taxpayers that we might reduce the enormous expenses growing out of the construction of these buildings by having competitive bids or propositions from contractors; and there are many of them all over this country who have been here to Washington appealing to the Members of this House to give them an opportunity to bid on some of these propositions, and they have gone home without having that opportunity.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is quite true; and much of the criticism has been from men who did not get contracts because other people did. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I used?

Mr. BURNETT. Did they have any opportunity?

Mr. SHERLEY. They ought to have a chance, of course, if they are responsible people. How much time have I used?

The SPEAKER. Forty-nine minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have 30 minutes additional time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that he may have 30 minutes additional time. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Can no other Member of the House get an opportunity for a few minutes to express his views on this bill without the consent of the gentleman in charge?

Mr. SHERLEY. He can not do it in my hour.

The SPEAKER. He can not as long as the gentleman's hour lasts, and if it is extended to an hour and a half the same conditions apply.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. After that will there be then opportunity?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman does not move the previous question, the matter can be debated indefinitely.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman consent that I have a very few minutes at the conclusion of his time?

Mr. SHERLEY. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. GILLETT. Does not the gentleman intend to yield any time?

Mr. SHERLEY. Unquestionably I do. I did not want to take half the time that I have consumed, but I have tried to yield to questions of any gentleman on the floor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky that his time be extended for 30 minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I would like to have about 15 minutes—or 10 minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I shall yield the gentleman 10 minutes in a few moments.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Kentucky yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to make an inquiry in connection with Senate amendment No. 44, which is substantive legislation.

Mr. SHERLEY. I was coming to that just when I asked for the time. Amendment 44 is an amendment authorizing the payment of claims for property lost by officers, enlisted men, and female nurses of the Army. As originally proposed by the Senate it was very much broader than as it was agreed to in conference. The House conferees insisted upon the amendment going out, believing it could more properly await action of the Military Committees of the House and Senate. The Senate conferees insisted and persisted upon its remaining in the bill. The Senate Committee on Military Affairs had reported such a bill and it had been put on in the Senate in accordance with their rules. A similar bill was pending before the Committee on Military Affairs of the House and the conferees finally agreed to the provision with a limitation that narrowed it, and instead of the provision as it left the Senate providing for the repayment either in money or in kind of all the property that officers or enlisted men or nurses were required to have and which might be lost under circumstances enumerated it now provides for the reimbursement in money or in property of only such property as they are required to have in the field service, restricting it in that regard. It also eliminated one of the cases, which was that the property should be reimbursed whenever the loss was without fault or negligence on the part of the owner. We provided it should be reimbursed whenever it was without fault or negligence on the part of the owner in the three cases set forth in the report.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was it the purpose of the conferees to limit this reimbursement for property lost by the enlisted force in the Army to the war alone?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; and it is limited to the war.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, the only limitation I find of that character is next to the last paragraph, which, after the prior language, would lead me to believe it was to continue for all time.

Mr. SHERLEY. It was not so intended. What happened was the Senate undertook to amend the present law which relates to the payment of claims in peace times by making it apply both to peace and war times and making it very much wider. We did not change that statute at all, but we limited this to the cases enumerated, and in the limitation of the time when claims can be presented it is provided that claims must be made within one year after the claim arises, or made within six months after peace. That necessarily limits it to the war, and then we also limit it to property which they are required to have in field service.

Mr. STAFFORD. So virtually that limitation is in effect during the existence of the pending war, that this authority shall be granted for the payment of these claims?

Mr. SHERLEY. That is my understanding. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. DALLINGER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky why the appropriation of $100,000 for the Watertown arsenal was stricken out of the bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. It was stricken out because it related to some offices at Watertown that we felt we could get fuller information about and come to a better judgment on in connection with the estimates of the sundry civil bill, and that is a bill that will necessarily come on the statute books within two or three months, and it was not such an emergency as to warrant us in carrying it at this time.

Mr. DALLINGER. It does not mean——

Mr. SHERLEY. It does not mean we either approve or disapprove of the item.

Mr. ROWE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. ROWE. With reference to the other item, amendment No. 44 to the Senate bill, why was not that made to apply to commissioned officers and men in the Navy as well as in the Army?

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, they have a law of their own, and then the Senate put this on, and we could not have added a provision as to the Navy as a germane amendment.

Mr. ROWE. There seems to me a good deal more complaint in my section of the country in reference to losses by men in the Navy.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is a matter that should address itself to the Committee on Naval Affairs. We have no jurisdiction of it.

Mr. EAGAN. Mr. Speaker, the urgent deficiency bill, as it passed the House, as explained by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], was amended in one very important respect. The first amendment authorized the President to acquire the title to the docks, piers, warehouses, wharves, and terminal equipment and facilities now owned by the North German Lloyd Dock Co. and the Hamburg-American Line Terminal & Navigation Co., in Hoboken, if he shall deem it necessary for the national security and defense, provided that if such property can not be procured by purchase the President is authorized to take over for the United States the immediate possession and title thereof. Upon the taking over of the property by the President, the title to the property shall immediately vest in the United States.

I feel that I should call the attention of the House more explicitly to the effect that that will have on the city of Hoboken. The gentleman from Kentucky said it would mean a loss of $140,000 in taxes. It will be nearer to $150,000, and coming at this time it will work very great hardship on the city, due to the fact that by the operation of the half-mile prohibitory zone the city of Hoboken will lose next year in excise taxes about $125,000 additional. Four-fifths of the saloons of the city are within the prohibited area and a good many of them have already been closed, and the city expects to lose practically all of that revenue next year.

In addition to that, Hoboken will lose a very substantial amount—the exact amount can not be figured now—in the taxable value of the properties in which those saloons are located, so that all in all Hoboken will be placed in a most embarrassing position.

I did my utmost in the conference committee to provide some remedy for Hoboken, but without success. I do not know whether any remedy can yet be found, but I submit that it will be a very great injustice to Hoboken if some way can not be found whereby the city may continue to receive the taxes on these docks. Were it not for the fact that many of the items carried in this urgent deficiency bill bear directly on the prosecution of the war, I should have refused to agree to the conference report.

This amendment was put on as a rider to the urgent deficiency bill in the Senate. No opportunity was afforded to the officials or citizens of Hoboken to be heard, and under the rules that govern conference committees no legislation could be effected in the conference.

The amount of money represented in the taxes paid by these steamship companies is about one-eighth of the total taxable revenues of the city from real estate taxes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EAGAN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What is the property said to be worth?

Mr. EAGAN. The German steamship piers, buildings, and lands were assessed for taxation purposes in 1917 to the extent of about $6,283,000, if I remember correctly. Our total ratables are about $79,000,000. This property along the river front comprises about one-third of our entire water-front, and is probably the most valuable property in the city.

Hoboken is a thoroughly loyal city. It has done its full duty in the liberty-bond drives and in every war appeal that has been made to the American people, including the call to the colors. It feels particularly honored by being made the port of embarkation of our fighting forces in the great war in which we are now engaged. It is the last bit of American soil which the boys in khaki tread upon before embarking for France. It welcomed the taking over of these docks by Uncle Sam.

I submit that if this is to be not only a war measure but must be extended over into peace times as well, and the property owned for all time by the United States, some remedial legislation, some way must be found to provide the money that we are going to lose in taxes. Hoboken can not stand this loss. It will be a blow from which it may not be able to recover. Hoboken can not materially reduce its expenses. It is the most thickly settled city in America, probably in the world, and this imposes, of itself, a serious tax burden, especially for school purposes.

Hoboken has no means of substantially increasing its taxes, and its tax rate will be increased upward of 50 points by the loss of this revenue and by the loss in excise revenue that I referred to a moment ago.

Mr. MADDEN. What does the gentleman mean by "50 points"?

Mr. EAGAN. The rate is now $23.20 per thousand, and the loss of this revenue and the excise revenues will mean that the remaining property of the city, exclusive of the steamship docks, will have to bear all of the tax burden.

Mr. MADDEN. About 1 per cent additional?

Mr. EAGAN. No; it is very much more than that. The German steamship docks and buildings paid nearly $150,000 in taxes last year. The estimated loss in excise revenues will be about $125,000, or $275,000 in all. The total of the taxes of the city last year was about $1,400,000. The loss in revenue from both of these sources amounts to about 20 per cent, and this loss will have to be borne by the remainder of the property in the city subject to taxation. As I have said before, Hoboken can not stand this great loss of revenue, and it must be given relief in some way, so far as the German docks are concerned. If this 20 per cent is added to the remaining property subject to taxation, it would make the tax rate about $27.86 a thousand.

Mr. MADDEN. $23 per capita?

Mr. EAGAN. $23.20 per $1,000 is now the tax rate.

Mr. MADDEN. That is $2.32 per hundred?

Mr. EAGAN. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. "Fifty points" would mean that you would go up to almost $2.80 a hundred, instead of $2.32?

Mr. EAGAN. Yes; on the remaining property.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EAGAN. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. Has Hoboken any municipal docks?

Mr. EAGAN. No. Unfortunately we have not a foot of water-front property that belongs to the municipality.

Mr. NORTON. Could the city take over these docks and operate them?

Mr. EAGAN. The city would be very glad of the opportunity to take over the docks and lease them to the Federal Government at an agreed price that would represent the interest on the bonds and the amount that the city now receives in taxes. There is no objection whatever to the Federal Government taking over the property, but the city is not in a position to stand this drain. I submit it should not be put to such a great hardship and injury as this will entail.

Mr. NORTON. It occurred to me that the municipality might be able to operate the docks more efficiently than the Government at this time.

Mr. EAGAN. The municipality would be glad to do that, but it yields, of course, to the Federal Government.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EAGAN. Yes.

Mr. DEWALT. I suppose it is true that this property is always increasing in value. Would it not therefore be an increasing loss each year, because the rate would be the same and the property value greater?

Mr. EAGAN. That is so. During the last 10 years the assessed value of the property has increased about 100 per cent. Perhaps the property was undervalued for taxation purposes in the past, but the increase in the assessed valuation is due, in the main, I think, to the great increase in the value of this property. It is invaluable.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks by the insertion of a telegram from Hon. P. R. Griffin, mayor of Hoboken, an editorial from the Hudson Observer, of Hoboken, and an editorial from the Hudson Dispatch, of Union Hill, N. J.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

HOBOKEN, N. J., March 16, 1918.

Hon. JOHN J. EAGAN,
Member of House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The city of Hoboken is very much opposed to the Government taking title to the German steamship piers, unless adequate provision is made for the protection of the city on the taxes. If the Government takes title, and thereby the taxes of the piers are lost, it will practically mean bankruptcy to the city. I would request that you arrange for a hearing and give Hoboken an opportunity to be heard. Wire me particulars if you please.

P. R. GRIFFIN,
Mayor of Hoboken.

[From Hudson Observer, of Hoboken, N. J., Mar. 22, 1918.]

A MOST SERIOUS PROBLEM NOW CONFRONTS THE TAXPAYERS OF HOBOKEN—TIME TO ACT.

What will the Government do to recompense Hoboken for the loss of taxes involved in the taking over of the piers and their permanent retention? The loss of $150,000 a year in taxes on top of the shrinkage from liquor licenses certain to follow the continuation of the barred zone is a blow from which the whole city will stagger unless speedy methods of relief are found. Wiping out at one swoop 20 per cent of its ratables is just about the most serious blow any community can sustain.

In Hoboken's case the destruction is worse than that caused by a great fire, for in such a case the ground value remains and buildings may be replaced. But local taxation of Government-owned property is impossible, either directly or indirectly, and hence, so far as Hoboken's finances are concerned, the docks and piers are irretrievably wiped out.

The situation is unprecedented. No other city in the country ever has or probably ever will be called on to face its like. But it is distinctly a war emergency. The burden is cast upon Hoboken for the benefit of the entire country. Therefore, at least until Hoboken can be afforded ample opportunity to readjust itself to the changed conditions the problem is in effect a national problem and should be dealt with as such by the National Government which has created it. We do not know what form of assistance can be extended under the circumstances, but it must be given, and given quickly, in one way or another. The situation deserves and will doubtless have the prompt attention of the President. The entire New Jersey delegation in Congress should be prepared to act if remedial legislation is deemed advisable. It stands to reason that the United States Government will see that the situation is cleared up satisfactorily to the city. Mayor Griffin and the city commissioners should not delay action in the matter.

[From the Hudson Dispatch, of Union Hill, N. J., Mar. 23, 1918.]

THE TAXES ON HOBOKEN PIERS.

It would be outrageously unfair for the Government to take title to the valuable German piers in Hoboken, without making provision for the payment of taxes in full upon the property. Hoboken can not afford to lose $150,000 taxes, and the Government has no right to expect the taxpayers of the city to make up such a deficit.

The exemption of the piers from taxation would be vastly different from the exemption of post offices. Every city and every municipality has a post office, which is exempt from taxation, so that it is about "even up" on that score.

But when it comes to steamship piers Hoboken would be carrying a burden which no other municipality in the land would carry for the Government. A city like Hoboken has to depend upon its valuable water-front property for a big share of its taxes, and any plan for the Government ownership of the piers should be predicated upon the payment of taxes upon them.

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the first of these amendments proposes new legislation; the second does not propose new legislation, but only to amend an existing law enacted last October and known as the trading-with-the-enemy act. I voted for the trading-with-the-enemy act, as did also, I believe, every other Member of the House who was present when the vote was taken, and I am prepared to vote for anything proper which will make it more effective. And therefore it is of course clear that I questioned the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. SHERLEY] about the legal purport of these two amendments during his opening speech, not because I was opposed to the trading-with-the-enemy act, or to its amendment, but because of the exceeding importance of his statement that the two amendments, if enacted into law, would permit the custodian of alien property, in his discretion, to sell certain wharves and docks in Hoboken belonging to two New Jersey corporations which are specifically named in the first amendment. Now, that, I think, is not a proper construction of the two amendments taken together. On the contrary, in my judgment, if these two amendments become law, the power to acquire the title to the property named in the first amendment will be vested exclusively in the President of the United States.

Before further discussing this point I desire briefly to remind gentlemen of the importance of water terminals, and to say that it is my strong belief that on grounds of high public policy the United States should not sell any of its wharf or dock property located on navigable waters. This, I believe, because of the constant embarrassing troubles which communities undergo through the private monopolization of water terminal facilities. I maintain that whenever the United States Government becomes the owner in fee of wharfage, dockage, or similar facilities on navigable streams or harbors, it never should absolutely relinquish that title.

This question is not a new one in Congress. Some years ago a bill was introduced in the House which proposed to give the Government the right to sell virtually at private sale wharves and docks which it owned in the harbor of San Juan in Porto Rico. That bill was opposed and defeated on the floor. A few years earlier an attempt was made to sell wharfage and docks which the Government owned in Alaska. That provision was in a bill favorably reported here, but when brought to the attention of the House it was defeated. Now, I think, at least I hope, that the President will construe this amended bill so that the first Senate amendment will mean that he, the President, shall have the exclusive authority to acquire the title to and to control the Hoboken wharfage and other property here in question. This, I hope, in part also, because of the predicament in which Hoboken may soon find herself. If necessary, the President might be empowered, in behalf of the National Government, to lease the docks and other property to that municipality for a time, or perhaps until after this war is over and normal conditions shall be restored, or perhaps with the privilege—though this I do not urge—of buying the property at a certain figure, on an amortization plan, so much each year for interest and so much for payment of an installment on the principal, and with a provision that if Hoboken ever should attempt to sell the property the title should thereupon immediately revert to the Government of the United States.

But the only really sound policy is for the Government not to sell any of its water terminals. That is a forward-looking view to take of a problem now being presented to the business interests of this country everywhere, but with especial force wherever there is a monopolization of such terminal facilities, and the consequent power to dictate to manufacturers and other shippers. It is, and for years has been, one of the most important business problems before the American people—this question of the control of transportation terminal facilities.

I now ask the attention of gentlemen to the language of this first amendment:

The President is authorized to acquire the title to the docks, piers, warehouses, wharves, and terminal equipment and facilities on the Hudson River now owned by the North German Lloyd Dock Co. and the Hamburg-American Line Terminal & Navigation Co., two corporations of the State of New Jersey, if he shall deem it necessary for the national security and defense: Provided, That if such property can not be procured by purchase, then the President is authorized and empowered to take over for the United States the immediate possession and title thereof.

The President will not have to wait for a jury. He himself can take and pay for the property, and thereupon the title instantly will vest in the United States. He can alone fix the amount to be paid as compensation.

If any such property shall be taken over as aforesaid, the United States shall make just compensation therefor, to be determined by the President. Upon the taking over of said property by the President, as aforesaid, the title to all such property so taken over shall immediately vest in the United States

This first amendment, when enacted, will be new legislation. And this new legislation will relate exclusively to certain property—docks, wharves, and so forth—therein specifically described. Now, this property, so specifically described, is property which was previously included in the provisions of the trading-with-the-enemy act approved in October last, but only in general terms. In that act of last October there is no specific mention of these particular wharves and other property. On the contrary, as I have said, the provisions of that act apply to all alien enemy property and are general in character. And, therefore, in so far as that act of last October may be held to include in its general terms this property in Hoboken, it is now, as to that property, to be entirely repealed by this first amendment, which makes new and complete provisions concerning that property, and in express, specific terms. Under the trading-with-the-enemy act power over all the property of all alien enemies is given in general language to the Custodian of Alien Property, but under this first amendment power over certain particular pieces of such property belonging to certain of these alien enemies is in specific language given to the President, and to him alone.

In other words, the first amendment, in clear, specific terms, takes the particular property in Hoboken out from under the general language of the trading-with-the-enemy act, and therefore repeals that act in so far as it relates to that particular property.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I thank the gentleman from Illinois. Certainly it ought not to be considered the intention of Congress to give the Custodian of Alien Property the right to sell this property in the city of Hoboken to any corporation, any steamboat company which already may have abundant wharfage facilities, and may desire to acquire this Hoboken property to help enable it to secure a monopoly of terminal facilities.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. If the property is owned in part by loyal American owners, what would the gentleman say as to the constitutionality of these proceedings?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I understand it is owned by two New Jersey corporations, the stockholders of which are Germans and alien enemies. Nevertheless, the corporations are both New Jersey corporations, and the dealings would be had with New Jersey corporations, artificial beings, acting through their officers.

And the title to be taken over would be the title of the corporation, not the title of the individual stockholders.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I would not wish the custodian of alien property to have power to sell this property to some steamship company which already in the city of New York has abundant dock facilities. And yet he will have that power if the construction is that the first amendment does not confer upon the President exclusive jurisdiction respecting the property in Hoboken. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DEWALT. The trading-with-the-enemy act provides that the Alien Custodian can take stock of any alien enemy in any corporation.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is a New Jersey corporation an alien enemy?

Mr. DEWALT. No, no; but if the stock of the corporation, and whether it be a New Jersey or a Pennsylvania corporation makes no difference, is owned by an alien enemy, and an alien enemy is one who resides in alien territory, then that stock can be taken by the Alien Custodian. So here the remedy would be for the Alien Property Custodian to take the stock, and he would have the voting power of the stock naturally as he had the stock; but that would not necessarily give him title to the real estate. He would only have the stock.

Mr. SHERLEY. And if the gentleman would permit, he has had the stock for months.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But the first amendment authorizes and empowers the President of the United States to take over the specifically described Hoboken property of two corporations.

This means all of the property of the corporations—stock and everything else. He can take it, regardless of the wishes of the custodian of alien property. The first amendment expressly authorizes the President to do this. It does not leave it to inference.

Mr. GRAY of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. GRAY of New Jersey. Does not the gentleman remember that the United States Government has taken over all of the rest of the property of these corporations without the consideration that the gentleman had in mind, namely, the ships belonging to them, for which these terminal facilities were secured?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But the gentleman mistakes the point under discussion. The law of last October gave, in general terms, the custodian the right to take over all of the property of all alien enemies. Here is a new section to be enacted now—in March, 1918—taking out in express terms from the general provisions of the trading-with-the-enemy act of last October certain specific property, which it names, and giving complete authority over it to the President. Therefore that property thus named is taken out of the jurisdiction of the custodian of alien property.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. STEELE. This is a new, specific authority to condemn, regardless of the trading-with-the-enemy act of last October.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Repeals by implication are not favored in the law. That is the ordinary rule of statutory construction. But it is true also that in this instance we have what is equivalent to a repeal in express terms, because, as I said a moment ago, the act of October, 1917, in general terms, gives authority over all the property of all alien enemies to the Custodian of Alien Property, while the pending first amendment gives authority over certain portions of this property belonging to certain specifically named alien enemies to the President.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I sincerely hope that the President will thus construe the law and take immediate possession of those wharves and other property up there. That, in my judgment, would be the true way to solve this problem. The two amendments ought not to be so construed as to permit the Custodian of Alien Property to sell it at public or private sale to some corporation which now already has great wharfage facilities in New York and that will pay three time the value of the property in order to own and control it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman object to the Congress providing for the acquisition of this specific property through legislation such as this, rather than leaving it to the Alien Property Custodian?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No. The gentleman misunderstands me.

Mr. WALSH. That is all this amendment does.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. WALSH. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I shall detain the House only a few moments longer.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has only one minute remaining.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman from Illinois will yield me additional time?

Mr. CANNON. I yield the gentleman such time as he desires.

Mr. SHERLEY. I shall not want more than 10 minutes. I shall not detain the House unnecessarily, and would not at all if it had not been for the statements made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER]. I am just as anxious as he is, and I am sure the President of the United States is as anxious as he is, that this property shall neither go back into the hands of former German owners, nor go into the hands of any private monopolistic control. The very purpose of this provision, put in at the suggestion of the President himself, was in order that the United States Government might acquire with the idea of keeping, these terminals at Hoboken and not with the idea of having the Alien Property Custodian sell them to anybody else.

Now, the sole effect of the first amendment is to give plainly the right, first to the President to negotiate and purchase, and failing, if it be conceivable that he could fail, dealing with the Alien Property Custodian—failing negotiations for the purchase, the right to take. That is the plain meaning of it, and he who runs may read. Now, there is no better way I know of to assure the thing that the gentleman has in mind than what we have provided.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Not now. Now, the second amendment was an amendment introduced not simply because of the Hoboken docks, but introduced for all alien property in order to correct an omission in the original alien property act, to give to the Alien Property Custodian the right to sell for any cause and not simply the right to sell to prevent waste, which is the way the law now reads which is upon the statute book. Now, what will happen will be this: The President will negotiate with the Alien Property Custodian for the purchase of these properties. Failing to arrive at an agreement he will take the property under the power that is given, and if he does take the properties by the very terms of the act authorizing him to take them he must make just compensation and the title vests in the United States, and having vested in the United States I hope it will not be given or sold to the city of Hoboken or to anybody. I hope it will always remain the property of the United States, and that is the intention of the provision, and there is no amount of construction that can change the plain meaning of this particular section.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Just a question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The reason I took the floor a moment ago was that I understood the gentleman to say, in reply to my question earlier to-day, that the second amendment—the one which amends the "trading-with-the-enemy act," approved in October last—authorized the Custodian of Alien Property to sell these docks.

Mr. SHERLEY. Authorized him to sell all property that is in his possession as alien-property custodian.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The docks are in his custody, then can he sell the docks?

Mr. SHERLEY. He can and will to the United States.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will yield, I do not think I understood the argument of the gentleman from Wisconsin. He was trying to provide against the danger, as I understood it, of the Alien Property Custodian selling these docks to some other corporation, but suppose the United States Government buys them, the title comes to the United States and thereupon he loses the right to sell to anybody else.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course he does.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That takes them out of his custody.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is inconceivable that the alien-property custodian under the control of the President, appointed and removable by him at will, would sell or undertake to sell the property to some one other than the United States when the Congress has gone to the extent, at the instance of the President, of expressly providing that the President may buy them for the United States.

Mr. MADDEN. He could commandeer them if he wished.

Mr. SHERLEY. Not only has he the right to commandeer their use but this property is being controlled by the Government now and used in connection with its war purposes.

Mr. MADDEN. So when the disposition is made of these properties at Hoboken to the United States Government the custodian is out of the control of them entirely?

Mr. SHERLEY. Why, yes; what he will get is a certain amount of money as the purchase price for them, which he will turn over to the United States Treasury.

Mr. MADDEN. For a subsequent accounting?

Mr. SHERLEY. And have to account for it at the end of the war.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is exactly the construction which I hoped the gentleman will say is the correct one.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have never said anything else from the beginning. The gentleman misunderstood me, and what led the gentleman into error, if he will permit me, was this thought, that he keeps thinking of the second amendment as having been written simply in its relationship to the Hoboken property.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Oh, no.

Mr. SHERLEY. Whereas the second amendment was written for the purpose of affecting all property in the hands of the custodian.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The first amendment is new legislation and relates exclusively and specifically in its terms to wharves and docks in Hoboken owned by two New Jersey corporations. I was not mistaken as to the facts. I simply misunderstood the gentleman from Kentucky this morning if he then said what he now says is the proper construction of these two amendments.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is no doubt. I know the matter originated with the President. I know his wishes; I know what we are intending to do here, and anybody who reads the section can have but one conclusion. The first section provides the United States may buy; the second section provides that the Alien Property Custodian may sell this or any other property that he has in his possession. The result will be that the title to this property will be turned over to the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the report, and upon that I move the previous question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit one question?

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman admitted by his last statement that the statute is not mandatory and that the custodian can sell or may sell to the highest bidder those wharves and docks, but he hopes that the custodian will sell them to the President.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not hope. I know he will.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Exactly; but I claim that under the best and proper construction it ought to be held that the first amendment confers exclusive power upon the President to acquire these docks and wharves, and that as to them there is no discretion left in the custodian.

Mr. SHERLEY. We do not need to waste any time. What the gentleman believes ought to be compelled I know will be done, and we might as well move on.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

PAYMENT OF INCOME TAX BY INSTALLMENTS.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman if it does not take over five minutes.

Mr. BARNHART. I send to the desk a letter, which I do not think will take over two minutes to read, from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue relative to the possibility of having the income tax paid by installments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 22, 1918.

Hon. HENRY A. BARNHART,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BARNHART: I have your favor of the 16th instant inclosing a letter from Mr. M. W. Mix, president Dodge Manufacturing Co., Mishawaka, Ind., in which he suggests that some plan be adopted for the payment in installments, throughout the year, of income and excess profits taxes due on June 15 next.

There is no provision of law under which this department may defer, beyond June 15, 1918, the payment of income and excess profits taxes, and the financial requirements of the Government are such as to make it unwise for this department to recommend to Congress at this time the enactment of legislation that will authorize the department to defer such payments beyond June 15.

The situation to which you have directed attention has been given most serious consideration. Such action has been taken to minimize the strain of sudden withdrawals as is permissible under existing laws; as, for example, Treasury Decision 2622 authorizes the partial payment, in advance, of income and excess profits taxes established to be due for the taxable year 1917, and Treasury Decision 2639 authorizes and directs the acceptance of Treasury certificates of indebtedness, at par and accrued interest, in payment of income and excess profits taxes due on June 15 next. About $1,250,000,000 of certificates maturing in June and acceptable in payment of income and excess profits taxes have been issued and sold. This is about one-half of the estimated amount of those taxes.

I am strongly in favor of having the taxes paid in installments, but I think they ought to be paid in installments in advance, and that payment of taxes ought not to be deferred.

These devices will serve effectually, it is believed, to reduce the strain on financial institutions, and further relief may be afforded by taxpayers who will anticipate the necessity of paying their taxes and arrange their financial affairs accordingly.

Let me add that the passage of the war finance corporation bill will, I think, have considerable effect along certain lines in relieving any undue strain in connection with the payment of income and excess profits taxes.

Respectfully,

DANIEL C. ROPER,
Commissioner.

INCREASED PAY FOR POSTAL EMPLOYEES.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the postal salary bill, H. R. 9414.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9414.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point that there is no quorum present, and evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees. Those in favor of going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union will, as their names are called, answer "yea" and those opposed will answer "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 356, nays 1, not voting 74, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9414, with Mr. CARAWAY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9414, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9414) granting increased compensation to certain officials, employees, and laborers in the Post Office Department and Postal Service, and for other purposes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. Under the rule adopted on March 21 two measures were made in order as parts of this bill. Both of those two measures have been considered by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and they both contain paragraphs which are headed as sections. In the rule as printed in the RECORD the sections are not numbered, but the various sections of each measure are grouped together and each group is paragraphed 1 and 2. My inquiry is, In considering parts of the bill, will they be considered by sections in each of the two parts or will they be considered as one section for each measure?

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, there is some doubt in my own mind as to whether under the rule the amendment that was offered, which contains two or three sections, can properly be considered as one section in the bill, and I will therefore change my amendment so that the sections in the bill will be considered in the order in which they appear and are numbered in the original bill. For instance, we will take up the section on the motor trucks, and then the section on aviation, and then the proposition on the postal employees.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I was unfortunate enough not to have heard the gentleman's remarks when the bill was first taken up for consideration, and I do not know whether or not he devoted any considerable time to explaining these two bills that were made in order. Is it his intention to devote some time now to discussing or explaining the measures in a general way?

Mr. MOON. These two bills were put on in the Committee on Rules for the purpose of being considered with the main bill, H. R. 9414, as amended. We have completed the original bill and have come to the first amendment authorized by the Committee on Rules. In the bill as it was brought into the House and approved by the Committee on Rules the motor truck was the first section, and then the aviation section, and then came the independent section of the postal matter. I had moved to consider them all as one section, but if it is desired by the House to do otherwise—and it may be done more speedily that way—we can take them up one at a time.

Mr. STEENERSON. That is satisfactory.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman, I think, may have misunderstood my inquiry. I wished to inquire whether the gentleman now intends to make any remarks touching these two important measures in the nature of explanation or general debate, or whether he has heretofore done so?

Mr. MOON. I want the House to have a full explanation of this section. I have no objection to reasonable debate.

Mr. WALSH. My inquiry went more to the intention of the gentleman to make at this time more extended remarks on these two subjects.

Mr. MOON. I am going to offer an amendment to the first section, and then, with the consent of the House, I would like to have the statement of the department, which goes into detail in every particular, read.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Before the chairman of the committee takes his seat, I think it will be understood, first, that these various paragraphs, including one in this and one in the other, ought to be separately numbered.

Mr. MOON. That is the suggestion I made.

Mr. TOWNER. Now, in order that that may be done and without changing the proposition as now presented, I think it would be proper for the chairman of the committee to ask that they be considered by unanimous consent as separate paragraphs.

Mr. MOON. That is what I asked. Mr. Chairman, I ask that these sections, all of them made in order to be introduced as amendments, be treated as sections.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the amendments, made in order by special rule, be offered as paragraphs, each paragraph treated as a section. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first section.

Mr. MOON. Let the Clerk report the motor-truck section first.

The CHAIRMAN. It was read for information yesterday, as the RECORD shows. It is being offered now for amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the Chair will permit, last evening the Clerk read the first paragraph and was about to read the second when he was interrupted by a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has just instructed the Clerk to read the first paragraph for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That to promote the conservation of food products and to facilitate the collection and delivery thereof from producer to consumer and the delivery of articles necessary in the production of such food products to the producers, the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to conduct experiments in the operation of motor-vehicle truck routes in the vicinity of such cities of the United States as he may select, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, and the cost of such experiments, not exceeding $300,000, may be paid by the Postmaster General out of any unexpended appropriations of the Postal Service, and the Postmaster General shall report the result of such experiments to the Congress at the earliest practicable date.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] has an amendment that he wanted to offer to the first section.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the first section. The lines in the bill are not the same as those in the amendment, but the Clerk will find, about the middle of the third line from the bottom of the page, the place where I offer this amendment. That is, after the word "service," insert the following: "Provided, That the Postmaster General may use the revenue derived from this experimental motor-vehicle truck service to establish and maintain additional motor-vehicle truck routes, and to provide for the purchase of vehicles and operating expenses thereof."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOON: Insert after the word "service" the following: "Provided, That the Postmaster General may use the revenue derived from this experimental motor-vehicle truck service to establish and maintain additional motor-vehicle truck routes and to provide for the purchase of vehicles and operating expenses thereof."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee want to be heard on his amendment?

Mr. MOON. I hardly think it is necessary to be heard on it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I desire recognition in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has the floor.

Mr. MOON. If there is any opposition to this amendment I want to say that this is purely an experimental service, that the department believes it will accomplish good results, and that instead of bringing a loss it will bring a substantial revenue to the Government. Of course the amount authorized for this experimental service is small. Standing alone it would accomplish good in proportion to the sum that is authorized, but the department suggests—and this amendment is a departmental suggestion—that for the extension of the service the revenues that may be derived from it may be used in the enlargement of the service for the benefit of the public. That will accomplish the desire of the department in trying to make effective a system by which the cities will be connected with the country and the country with the cities in the distribution of the products of the farm and of the merchandise from the cities, so that they will find it mutually beneficial.

There is a vast portion of our country that is not reached by railroads and other common carriers of traffic that can be reached speedily and readily by the motor truck. It has been estimated that there are hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of farm products that are not brought to the cities, because of the fact that they are on various farms along the road in such small quantities that it is hardly worth the while of the farmer to quit his work upon the farm and lose a day in carrying these products to the city, and yet, although small in amount at any one place, when taken together they constitute a vast amount of food. They can be sent on motor trucks at very small cost to the farmer—one-half of a cent per pound—and with practically no loss to the Government, and the people of the cities can have the benefit of a very much larger amount of food than they now have. Surely it must be conceded that at the present time there is in the cities and towns of our country a dearth of food, that food is very costly, and that this additional supply brought in and placed upon the market, in addition to that which is brought through the general channels of transportation, will so enlarge the supply of food products as to bring down the price to the consumers in the cities, and in the same way the products of the city may go to the farm. That is the general purpose of this provision, and I think that it very well and properly carries out the purpose.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MOON. Certainly.

Mr. LANGLEY. Does the gentleman know about how far from the cities the Postmaster General contemplates sending these trucks?

Mr. MOON. I do not know how far from the cities, but they might go a hundred miles. There has been a very intelligent statement in detail of the purposes of this provision and the effect of it and the cost of it. I will not undertake to state from memory all that has been said upon the subject, but a little later on I will ask that there be read from the Clerk's desk the statement of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General on the subject, in which he goes into all the details as to the cost of the service, and the benefits that may be derived from it, and the ultimate value of the service without ultimate loss to the Government. The same statement was printed as an exhibit to my remarks made a few days since.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment. I have already referred to this bill, and I criticized it. I am not opposed to the principle of the Government undertaking the transportation of farm products and parcels, but I think it ought to be done so as not to encumber the other mail. The statements of the department officials published by me the other day show that the parcel post is impeding the first-class mail. The two ought to be separated, and, in my opinion, the Post Office Department ought to go further than this proposition, and establish a sort of express-package business and keep it separate, so as not to interfere with the high-class mails.

This amendment is a most vicious proposition. The constitution provides that no money shall be taken out of the Treasury except pursuant to appropriation by Congress. Here is money collected by the department, which the department wants reappropriated, for use in a temporary experiment. It seems to me that is a vicious practice. They can carry on this experiment and determine whether it is a success without this authority.

Perhaps it will be a success. I do not know. I hope so. But if it is a success they do not need extraordinary authority. They can come to Congress at the next session and get all the money that is required. This is a very dangerous thing to do in the way that it is proposed. We have done it a few times in case of emergency, but certainly there is no emergency existing here that authorizes the Post Office Department to collect revenue and then use it over again for this experimental purpose. This is not a regular postal activity. It is considered simply an experiment in the transportation of articles growing on the farms, bringing them to the city, and bringing to the farmer the things that he gets from the city. It will never be a success unless you do it under different conditions than it is proposed to be done here. It should not be done under fixed rates of postage. If you want to make it a success, they ought to do as an express company does and establish a reasonable rate to meet the rates of competitors. Now, everybody knows that the express companies are using the post office for the purpose of transporting unprofitable business, and where the haul is profitable they take it themselves. With fixed rates of postage that can not be avoided. If you are going to make this movement from the farm to the consumer in the cities and back again to the farm a success, you ought to establish a regular package-freight business. If you then transfer the parcel post to a separate bureau, the two will work together, and you will not hamper the first-class mail.

There is room for an extension of Government authority, but it should be broad and well throughout. We should not only utilize motor trucks and highways, but trolley lines, railroads, and water routes, and establish terminals to transact the business as a separate activity from the regular mail.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am opposed to this amendment. The Post Office Department in recent years endeavored to establish a so-called parcel post "from the farm to the table" movement. I wanted to inquire of the gentleman who has just taken his seat, what has been the success of that project?

Mr. STEENERSON. Does the gentleman inquire of me?

Mr. HELM. If the gentleman knows, I should like to have the information right quick.

Mr. STEENERSON. All I know is that I have read laudatory descriptions of it in periodicals, which have advertised it without expense to the department.

Mr. HELM. I know that in a general way, in the large cities like Cincinnati, Washington, Baltimore, Louisville, and places of that kind, a systematic effort was undertaken through the parcel post to bring the farm in touch with the table, but I do not think it amounted to much, and this is a worse proposition than that.

But that is a little side issue. In the present condition of our country, when we are in the throes of the most gigantic war, to be piddling and delving into every little experiment of this kind and of every nature is absolutely preposterous, to my way of thinking. My mind may be an abnormal one——

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELM. No; I can not yield. We are going to divert $300,000 into this kind of a scheme, we are going to install self-operating telephones, and flying-machine postal service, and every new-fangled scheme and project that can be hatched up right here in war times, when the money ought to be used for war purposes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And for Garabeds.

Mr. HELM. Yes; and for "Garabeds," as if there was no bottom to the Treasury of the United States. I know how futile it is for men to get up here and make this kind of a talk. I might just as well speak against a cliff, but, gentlemen, here is the last edition of a Washington paper, and one of the headlines says, "Defeat, but not disaster." The conditions in France ought to be at this time a sort of "stop, look, and listen" signal, which should be right above the Speaker's desk, so that every Member could see it and cause you to pause. Here you are rushing headlong as if you were on a joy ride, with the bars down. You take another plunge into the Treasury. France is being overrun to-day. It is a vital question as to whether this drive can be stopped or not. Can you not see that our responsibility is growing and expanding at an accelerating ratio every second? More man power is going to be demanded of us. This means more money; it means more expenditures of every kind; yet here we are like a lot of schoolboys picking up every newfangled proposition that is handed to us, and we vote for it like a lot of young birds with their mouths open, while the mother bird perches on a limb with a worm in her bill.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELM. Yes; if the gentleman wants a worm, I will give him one.

Mr. LANGLEY. I think the gentleman is fully equipped for scattering that sort of product [laughter], but that is not my purpose in interrupting the gentleman. My purpose is to ask him if the object of this amendment is not to facilitate the transportation of farm products?

Mr. HELM. Foreign or farm products?

Mr. LANGLEY. Farm products, whether for foreign or domestic purposes. Our soldiers, as well as the people of the cities, have to be supplied with food. If that is the purpose of this proposition—to facilitate the transportation of farm products—how can it be so inadvisable as the gentleman states?

Mr. HELM. Is there a road in the gentleman's district where one of these trucks could run? [Laughter.] Before you could use one of these trucks in your district you would have to build a road.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman permit me to answer that? Yes; they could run in mine and in his, too. My district adjoins his, and I know personally that there are more mudholes in his district than there are in mine. [Laughter.]

Mr. HELM. My district does not adjoin the gentleman's district by 50 miles. Is my time exhausted, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has half a minute more.

Mr. HELM. Gentlemen, if you have a serious thought about this war, if you are on the fighting side of this war, instead of on the money-making side, then I submit to you that you ought to stop, look, and listen. The sooner the American people get on the fighting side of this war issue instead of on the money-grabbing side of it and the money-making side of it the better.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HELM. It is absolutely true that the rural carriers and the city delivery men are having a harder time in making buckle and tongue meet than ever before, but every man, woman, and child in the United States of America is having precisely the same difficulty. What is true of the rural carrier and the city carrier and the postal clerk is true of every human being in the United States. They have precisely the same difficulties to meet as the rural carrrier and the city clerk and the postmaster, and this is a time when everyone has to share his part of the load, when every man, woman, and child in the United States has got to feel the pinch of this war. The office-holding class in the United States is not the only class to be looked after and to be safeguarded and surrounded with comforts and luxuries to make life easier and happier to them. The man who is entitled to some consideration at our hands is the man who has to go down into his jeans and dig up a part of the tax to pay the war expense and also the salaries of the office-holding classes, and you gentlemen ought to let that sink into you. The country is at war. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, if there is any merit in any proposition, it is in this, because this provision seeks to reduce the cost of living; it does not seek to make any money for anybody. It seeks to put the consumer in touch with the producer through the postal department, and we are proposing here to appropriate $300,000, to be placed at the disposal of the Postmaster General, to make an experiment as to whether or not it is feasible and practical to remove the food supply from its place of origin to its place of consumption without having to go through the middleman. This might properly be termed a war measure, for in its execution it is proposed to relieve the burden of the ordinary man by reducing the cost of living. While we are making the experiment we ought to take advantage of all that we receive from the sale of supplies and use that to extend the service to a larger number of people. The people who live in the great cities of the country should have the advantage of a service such as this section proposes, if the Post Office Department can prove the practicability of such a service; and I maintain that, if we are to give the Postmaster General the power to experiment at all, we ought to give him that power to its fullest extent. He can not exercise the power to its fullest extent unless he be given the right to use the receipts from the sale of the farm products in the form of a revolving fund.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. STEENERSON. Is there anything in this provision to authorize the Government to sell farm produce?

Mr. MADDEN. Well, we bring it in and we make a charge for the service, which amounts to the same thing; and all that we receive from the charge we make, over and above the cost of the service, should be used for the extension of the service.

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. MOON. If the gentleman will yield right there, because perhaps the House will not want all of this report read, I want to remind him that the Post Office Department in making this estimate upon a route of a hundred miles, 50 miles each way, in calculating the expense of the whole year on 2,000 pounds at the parcel-post rate, $10 for 313 days a year, estimates it would yield $3,130; but the operating of vehicles to convey half a ton each way is $1,740.15 and the expense account is $1,200 a year of the carrier, so at the lowest estimate the profit will be $189.85.

Mr. MADDEN. So that if we have a profit from all of these routes and we use the funds derived from that profit to extend the service so that it can be granted to more people, if that be done, and if there is any surplus, and if at the end of the year it can be shown that the service is a valuable service; that it is performing the function that it was intended to perform; that it has put the consumer and the producer in touch with each other; that it has reduced the cost of living; that it has proved to be a service in which the Government should engage——

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Then we ought to continue the service. In just a moment—and if at the end of the period of experimentation——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. I ask that the gentleman have one minute additional, as I desire to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may speak one minute. Is there objection?

Mr. HAMLIN. Make it three minutes. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks that the gentleman from Illinois be permitted to speak for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield to me? I got him the extension of time.

Mr. MADDEN. Let me complete the sentence. If at the end of the period of experimentation the department is not able to show that it is entitled to the expenditure of an additional sum, then the routes can be discontinued. I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. But does the gentleman consider who would pay this profit? Somebody must pay it if the Government makes it.

Mr. MADDEN. I presume the consumer would pay the difference between the Government operation and the sum received for the operation.

Mr. BRITTEN. He pays it now.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. And how is that going to reduce the cost of living if he has got to pay this great profit to the Government to get his produce into town?

Mr. MADDEN. Quite a different proposition from that which now obtains. The farmer to-day produces and then he employs agencies to remove his product to the consumer. Does he move that production to the consumer directly? Not at all. He moves it to the place where some middleman is employed and the middleman then has got to pay a storage charge, clerical force; he has to charge a profit for his own service, and sometimes it is advanced 100 per cent on the original cost.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Just one more question.

Mr. MADDEN. Just a moment. Whereas the Government of the United States proposes only to charge the difference between the cost of the operation of his vehicle and price he charges for the use of the vehicle, which is a very nominal difference.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield to me? I think my question will answer the interrogatory also of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING]. Does the gentleman know a very late Member of this House, a very active and honored Member of this House, made a statement before a committee of this House of which I am a member right upon this point? He went out to Maryland about 25 miles and bought, I think, $5 worth of produce—eggs, butter, and so forth—and let it come into the city in the ordinary way and go through the middle man—following it, however, to the consumer—and that $5 worth of produce actually cost the consumer $11 and something.

Mr. MADDEN. I can understand that very well.

Mr. HAMLIN. Whereas, to come by parcel post it would only cost about 50 cents.

Mr. MADDEN. It is to do away with that that we propose this experimentation, and if we can prove that we have saved 10 per cent over and above the present cost, we then have the right to claim that we have done a service worth while.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. WALSH. How much does the gentleman expect we are going to do away with on a $300,000 scale?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, we do not expect to be able to serve all the American people, but we do expect possibly to prove from the experiment that we are able to reduce the cost or that we are not able to reduce it. But the main question is, Is it worth while to spend $300,000 if by the expenditure of that money we may be able to do some good?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] is recognized.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I shall consume the five minutes of time. I can not believe that the three days of debate on this bill has been sincere. It strikes me as a very inopportune time for the Congress of the United States to devote three days of debate to increase of salaries when the world is burning up at this moment. Nero fiddled while Rome was on fire, and it strikes me that that is exactly what this Congress is doing now. With war bills of great and tremendous importance upon the calendar awaiting passage, with a bill on the calendar now, passed out of the Committee on Agriculture, proposing to furnish the farmers $9,000,000 with which to buy seed this spring, every pressure being brought to bear upon the farmers to increase their products this summer, and yet those bills are not called up for consideration. And I have about made up my mind, without criticizing any particular one, that behind this filibuster here there must be an attempt to hold that bill appropriating $9,000,000 for seed back from consideration. I am not able to understand it from any other conceivable viewpoint.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. COX. I can not yield now.

Now is the time to sow wheat in the Northwest. Two weeks from now it will be entirely too late to buy seed wheat. If that bill was put through here, with $9,000,000 made available to the Department of Agriculture, there is no doubt the wheat products would be multiplied by hundreds of thousands of acres in that northwest country. The farmers in my State, all over that great corn belt last year, got badly hit as the result of the frost. They are seeking to-day to find where they can buy reliable seed corn in order to plant corn this summer. And yet this bill, that every Member of this House that knows anything about it knows will never become a law in its present shape, will be headed off somewhere before it is time for it to become a law; but three days must be consumed on the floor of this House in order to increase the salaries of certain postal employees.

Now, I quite agree with the gentleman from Chicago that this present provision, in my opinion, is the best provision in the entire bill. Experimental though it is, we must remember that 20 or 22 years ago the whole question of rural-route mail was an experimental matter, which has developed to-day to a certainty. It took 30 years to force through Congress a parcel-post bill. Until six years ago we could send by parcel post cheaper from here to Tokio, Japan, than we could here from one street corner to another. But special interests held it back, all the time claiming that parcel post could not be operated satisfactorily in this country; and it never was forced through Congress until powerful and potential organizations, to wit, of the farmers and the laboring men got behind it and compelled Congress to pass it. The question of food supply to-day is very largely one of transportation. It is bringing the city fellow and the country fellow into close touch. This is an experiment pure and simple. It is the best provision in the entire bill. To-day there is an experimental line like this running from Indianapolis, Ind., to Louisville, Ky.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LANGLEY and Mr. PLATT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] is recognized.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, experiment with these motor mail routes has already gone far enough in a tentative way to show that in many sections they are going to be a success, and are almost certain to be a success where the roads are good enough to give them a fair chance. It seems to me that this is no extravagant appropriation, nor is it extravagant to allow the use of the receipts in establishing new routes. These motor mail routes are established so that they cross the railroads generally. That is the idea of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, who is very enthusiastic in advocating them, and it is a good idea. If possible, he establishes them so that they cross the railroads instead of paralleling them, and they actually develop new business. They have an effect on the territory served like a trolley road running out into a suburban district. Such a trolley will develop a new residential district. The land out in the country is worth nothing for residence purposes until you make some way for the people to get into town from it. And in the same way you can make it advantageous for farmers to cultivate land which they are not cultivating now, when you give them an easy way to send their products into market. These motor trucks pick up parcels, eggs, chickens, and so forth, properly crated or packed along the route. A great deal of it will doubtless be picked up at the smaller post offices, but a great deal of it also will be picked up at crossroads and at farmhouses and when it reaches the cities it will be delivered directly to the consignees, most of it, without being handled at the post offices. It seems to me this is a project that deserves every encouragement at this time. Doubtless some extravagant statements have been made as to what these motor mail routes will accomplish in the way of winning the war, but that they will cause land to be cultivated that is not now cultivated I have not any doubt. They will bring a certain amount of farm produce that now goes by roundabout ways or not at all directly into the towns and will reestablish in some cases old trade lines which have been abandoned since the building of railroads. They will be a good thing for the farmers and a good thing for the cities.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does not the gentleman believe that if you can by these motor trucks transport perishable foodstuffs to the cities you will thus enable us to ship more nonperishable foodstuffs for war purposes?

Mr. PLATT. I think there is some truth in that.

Mr. FARR. It would be a relief to the railroads.

Mr. PLATT. Not only that, but in a good many cases it will bring to the smaller post offices much better connections for first-class mail. There are a great many places where the railroads run on north and south lines into the great cities, or on east and west lines. Mail from towns only a few miles apart now has to go into the cities on one line and out on another. Motor mail routes will in many cases connect such towns directly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, there was an amendment offered and is pending. I do not want to close debate on the section now. I think it would be a very good thing to devote time on the amendment that is offered. I move that debate close in 10 minutes.

Mr. STEENERSON. I was informed that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] wanted to discuss that amendment for a few minutes.

Mr. MOON. Discuss what?

Mr. STEENERSON. Wanted to discuss this amendment about the revolving fund.

Mr. MOON. I would not have any objection if he desires to discuss it. I want to close debate on that amendment as soon as we can.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. LANGLEY. I want five minutes.

Mr. STERLING of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am a member of the committee, and I would like five minutes.

Mr. MOON. Will it be satisfactory to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STERLING] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] to take five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. What was the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MOON. I will ask that all debate close on this particular amendment in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate on this particular pending amendment close in 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MOON. I do not mean by that that the debate shall close on the motor-truck section, but that the debate shall close on the amendment offered to the amendment. The discussion will be extended on the motor-truck section.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I reserve the right to object. What is that amendment?

Mr. MOON. To the effect that the money is to be used as a revolving fund.

Mr. LEVER. Has the gentleman in mind how much time he will take on this section?

Mr. MOON. I can not possibly tell how long these gentlemen want to talk. I do not want to close them off too soon, but it seems to me this debate should close in half an hour.

Mr. LEVER. I desire to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that there is a rather important bill on the calendar from the Committee on Agriculture, which, if passed at all, ought to be passed very early. I understand that the Committee on Rules is ready to report a rule for its immediate consideration. The rule has been ordered reported out of the committee for some time.

While this matter is an exceedingly important matter, I still rather agree with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] that we have spent three whole days talking about whether a fourth-class postmaster ought to get $80 or get $85 a year. It seems to me that there ought to be some close to this, in order that other legislation, more important legislation, may be taken up. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. POU. The gentleman from Tennessee having yielded, I want to say to the House and to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture that a rule providing for the consideration of the matter to which the gentleman from South Carolina referred is ready to be presented immediately after this bill is disposed of.

Mr. LEVER. I knew that, and therefore I made the statement to the House.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman should not be in too great a hurry about that. I am going to amend my motion, or withdraw the motion I made, and ask that all debate on this section and the pending amendments and all amendments thereto close in 35 minutes.

Mr. LANGLEY. I reserve the right to object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 35 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LANGLEY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I have been seeking recognition for some time.

Mr. MOON. I did not ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman. I know I can not get that. I make the motion. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 35 minutes. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STERLING of Pennsylvania, Mr. LANGLEY, Mr. TREADWAY, Mr. NORTON, and Mr. DEMPSEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STERLING] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. STERLING of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, gentlemen of the committee, in the brief period of time allotted to me I shall urge the adoption by the committee of the amendment proposed by Judge MOON, of Tennessee, to that section of the bill which authorizes experiments in motor-truck delivery and also undertake to show to the committee the wisdom of adopting, when so amended, the section which is in itself being considered by the Committee of the Whole House as an amendment to the pending bill by virtue of the resolution reported by the Committee on Rules and approved.

What is the substance of the section Judge MOON proposes to amend and what is the nature of that amendment? The section provides that the Postmaster General shall expend a sum, not exceeding $300,000, to conduct experiments in the operation of motor-vehicle truck routes, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, and between such points or cities of the Nation as he may select.

The Moon amendment provides, in substance, that whatever profits are derived from the experiment, namely the operation of motor-truck routes, may be used by the Postmaster General for the further extension and advancement of the motor-truck delivery system.

Who is there to contend, if this experiment shows a substantial profit, that the plan should not be extended and enlarged? And who is there to contend, if the experiment proves beneficial and helpful to the Nation and to the people, in the present emergency, that the motor-truck delivery system should not be encouraged and supported?

The purpose of the proposed experiment is to determine if such plan will promote a conservation of food products, facilitate a collection and delivery thereof from the producer to the consumer, and also provide a means of delivery to the producer of those articles necessary and essential to food production.

The cry of our Nation in the present world crisis is that men, ships, and guns will win the war. This same slogan may be said to be the belief of every nation on earth fighting for the maintenance of free government and against the advancement of the military propaganda of the Hun.

Let me say to the committee that in the assembling of the man power of the world for this contest, in the preparation for the construction of ships and the manufacture of guns, there are two primary essentials first to be considered, and those are food and fuel. The men assembled and selected for military purposes are dependent upon the production of sufficient foodstuffs to sustain and support them, and they are equally dependent on the fuel of the Nation to operate and run the industries and manufacturing establishments organized to turn out the ships, the guns, and all war equipment. The industries of the country will become useless unless there is produced and transported to the seats of industry the proper quantities of coal and coke.

The civilian population of the Nation, a great portion of which is found in the centers of population—the large cities and industrial communities—will be found in many instances far from the fields of agricultural development and the production of foodstuffs.

Food and fuel will win the war. It must not only be produced, but arrangements must be made to transport the foodstuffs and the fuel to the places where it is most needed. This duty will fall to the American people. It is imperative. It should and must be encouraged by the National Government. This is no time to quibble about the expense; it is necessary and must be done.

This Government nor its citizenship, the taxpayers, will ever be able to estimate the loss in men and money occasioned by the delays brought about by the unprepared conditions, in power and equipment, of the railroad systems of the country when the present war situation was forced upon us.

The man power of the Nation has already been diverted from the usual avocations of life into two fields, both closely identified with the military preparation. First, 2,000,000 and more of the best man power of the country are now trained for military service in the field of battle. Second, more of the productive man power has been encouraged to engage in that class of labor directly allied with the preparation of the war program; that is, by working in the mines, the munition factories, the shipyards, and all other industries engaged in the construction and manufacture of war equipment.

In my judgment, there will soon necessarily be a diversion of a large portion of the civilian population of the country to special fields of industry. It may be necessary to take the unemployed from the centers of population to the agricultural fields of production in order that we may produce the necessary foodstuffs to support not only the men in the military service, but also to feed the very large number of our people located in the big cities of the country and in the industrial sections of the Nation, where the production of farm and agricultural products has been made almost prohibitive by the high price of wage paid to the laboring man, whose service has been regarded as essential in the preparation of war equipment.

Without these necessary foodstuffs the soldier in the field will be unable to perform his service; without this necessary food in the large cities, centers of population, and industrial communities, there will become unrest, dissatisfaction, and serious conditions.

Therefore we must not only arrange to produce the fuel and the foodstuffs in abundant quantities, but we must also arrange, by every possible method of transportation, to carry that fuel and that foodstuff from the fields of production to the very places where it is needed to satisfy the requirements and the demands of the people.

The power and equipment of the railroad companies were found to be deficient. There may be, and there no doubt is, a better systematized arrangement for the use of the power and the equipment of the railway systems of the Nation under its present management, but who will contend that there has been sufficient opportunity to increase the power and the equipment so as to handle properly the fuel, the foodstuffs, and the war equipment so necessary in this emergency.

Whatever railroad power and equipment can be saved from the transportation of foodstuffs to the centers of population and industrial communities by adopting any other means or method of transportation will make available the use of that railroad power and equipment for the transportation of fuel—coal and coke—to the seats of industry, to the centers of population, for industrial and domestic purposes. In other words, the States of West Virginia, Illinois, and Pennsylvania produce more than 60 per cent of the coal produced annually in the United States, and large sections of these States formerly engaged in the production of agricultural products are now almost entirely engaged in the production of coal and coke, and many thousands of people living in these industrial communities are dependent for their foodstuffs on other sections of the country.

Railroad power and equipment, deficient though it may be, must without other preparation, be used to carry food to these people to feed and sustain them while they labor to produce the fuel so much needed by the Nation. If this railroad power or equipment can be saved, or any portion of it, why not proceed to the necessity?

I assume to make the statement, that if there could be furnished to the sections of the country where is found the valuable deposits of coal, sufficient railroad power and equipment to transport the greatest possible production capable of the man power now engaged in that industry, that much of the necessity for the regulation of coal and coke prices would be removed, and the domestic and industrial needs of the country properly supplied.

The coal and coke operators, in at least a portion of the Pennsylvania district which I have the honor to represent in this Congress—and it is one of the leading coal and coke producing districts of the Nation—are already making preparation to meet the food situation as best they can. Many of the operators of Fayette County, Pa., have purchased thousands of dollars' worth of tractors, seed, and food materials for garden purposes. They have arranged to give the laboring man sections of land to plant and cultivate, furnishing to him the seed and material, with the understanding that he has the benefit of the crops and foodstuffs raised therefrom, and this is all done for the purpose of meeting any possible scarcity of food, and handling any possible condition of disquiet and discontent. These men will do their best, and while the mines and men are idle on account of transportation facilities they will labor in the gardens being now provided.

There extend into and through at least four of the most important counties in southwestern Pennsylvania for the production of coal and coke two highways of recognized national reputation. The Lincoln Highway would open up to the coal fields of southwestern Pennsylvania the great agricultural county of Lancaster, in Pennsylvania, and, through the great agricultural Cumberland Valley, the old National Road extends. These particular agricultural sections, and all of the agricultural lands between these sections and the coal region, would furnish a means of providing foodstuffs to the industrial regions of western Pennsylvania and the large cities thereof if properly organized, and thereby save the railroad power hereinbefore referred to. Like lines of communication could be established elsewhere in the Nation.

There are 156,000 miles of improved hard-surfaced highways in the United States. Important mail matter and valuable food products could be collected and delivered by means of motor vehicles along these highways, so that a distance of at least 80 miles may be covered in a period of 12 hours. I believe that the earning power of the system will exceed the cost. But, after all, the present emergency requires additional methods of transportation for these essential articles. The Post Office Department, gentlemen of the committee, has already in a small way undertaken this character of service. I read to you, and will have placed in the RECORD, a statement of postage, weight, and cost covering a period of six days in the present month on Government-owned motor-truck routes.

On the route established between Baltimore and Oxford the postage on first and fourth class matter amounted to $62.37; the total weight of pounds carried, 749½; and the cost of maintenance, $63.

And now I call your attention to the postage, weight, and cost of six other routes. The first item in each instance will be the postage received by the Government for the carriage of first and fourth class mail matter, the second item the weight, and the third item the cost:

Route.	Postage.	Weight.	Cost.
Baltimore-Mount Airy	$475.73	7,940	$54.33
Hagerstown-Mount Airy	198.35	2,124	74.52
Baltimore-Gettysburg	355.67	4,328½	59.04
Lancaster-Gettysburg	203.82	1,866½	67.80
Baltimore-Solomons	1,120.55	12,427½	127.50
Philadelphia-Oxford	645.66	17,718	145.08

And further, gentlemen of the committee, on Wednesday, March 20, this year, a motor truck left Lancaster, Pa., for New York City, a distance of 180 miles or thereabout. It carried approximately 3,000 pounds of parcel-post matter, and reached its place of destination in a running time of 12 hours. The postage derived from this trip amounted to $31.60, and the direct expense thereof approximately $10—$4 for a driver, $6 for gas.

The parcel-post matter embraced 4,000 1-day-old chicks, Easter season; 200 pounds of honey; 500 pounds of smoked sausage; 500 pounds of butter; and 18,000 eggs. When the consignment was turned over to the consignee, 9 eggs were found to be broken in transit and 2 chicks had died.

On the same day the same man in Lancaster shipped 28,800 eggs to the same consignee by express, and approximately 10,000 eggs of that consignment were destroyed by rough handling in course of transit.

It seems to me that the character of legislation embraced within the subject now under discussion must not only be considered in the nature of an experiment, but rather in the nature of a necessity. I hope that the amendment offered by Judge MOON after this section will be adopted, and that the section itself will then be adopted by the committee as one of the outstanding and important features of the legislative enactment now before the House.

I desire, briefly, to refer to other sections of the bill, providing for the increase of pay to rural carriers and postal employees. There has been pronounced criticism by a few Members of the House against the character of this legislation. Certain prominent Members, distinguished for their ability and legislative experience, have referred to this measure as an unwarranted raid on the Treasury of the United States, and others have classed it as pork-barrel legislation. Long before I ever expected to have the honor of a seat in the Congress of the United States I very frequently read of Treasury raids by the Congress and of "pork-barrel legislation." In times past allegations have been repeatedly made, regardless of what political party was in power. I do not believe this legislation to be in the nature of pork-barrel legislation, and if it is, no more equitable distribution has ever been made by a legislative body. This proposed increase of wage directly benefits more than 250,000 American citizens. It helps to reestablish and make more efficient the mail service of the country, a service that was inaugurated and has constantly been improved, for the purpose of bringing into closer relationship the commercial life, the business interests, and the people operating and living in one community or State with those in another community or State.

A few years ago the people living in rural communities were afforded an opportunity to carry on correspondence relative to their commercial and business interests with other sections of their county, State, and Nation by going to fourth-class post-offices which had been established by the Government, and to which offices the mail was carried by contractual agreement. Then the Government, through the Post Office Department, seeing the necessity of making a still closer relationship between the people and the business interests, provided a more efficient service by establishing the rural route, until the rural carriers of the country reached annually in this Nation 28,000,000 of its population.

This closer relationship of people, business, and the commercial life of the Nation was further benefited by the establishment of the parcel-post system along these many, many rural routes, and when that great benefit was placed within the reach of the people of this Nation they quickly took advantage of it and established their lines of communication for business and commercial purposes throughout each of the communities, and reaching from community to State and from one State to another. To-day many of these important rural routes have become disabled and inefficient, in fact abandoned entirely, because the carrier is unable to support himself and his family, feed and care for his horses and keep up his equipment and provide for a replacement of the equipment necessary to carry on his business on the salary he now receives. The fact is he has left the rural-carrier route and sought better wages in other fields of industry, and was forced to do it to meet the increased cost of the necessities of life for the support of himself and his family. It has prevented the circulation of the important loyal newspapers of the country to a vast portion of the Nation's loyal citizenship. This citizenship must be kept in close touch, it must be forewarned against the enemy propaganda, and 28,000,000 of the country's population must not be placed beyond the reach of this educational influence. The fourth-class post office can not in this emergency be reestablished where the rural route has taken its place.

In the district which I represent the rural-carrier service is almost hopelessly disorganized. Farmers and laboring men have formed committees and selected one man out of a community to furnish the equipment and deliver the mail for a period covering a week at a time, and then another would substitute and take his place, to the end that all of the patrons of that route would be served. I have tried to have young men, intelligent, bright boys, placed at this work, but have been confronted with a departmental ruling from the Civil Service Commission that no boy under 17 years of age may be a substitute carrier and no boy under 18 years of age may be a permanent rural carrier. This, to me, is a ruling that at least for the present should be suspended. I am unable to see why an American boy, physically and mentally fit to perform the service of keeping intact the lines of communication established by the rural-carrier system, is not competent for that position, when it was the argument, I am told, by the Army Staff, that such character of American manhood was physically and mentally fit to enter the military service of the Nation to fight the trained Prussian military advancement.

The Government can not afford to have this great mail system fail to properly function in this emergency. If there is no other way to maintain these lines of communication in their efficiency, some substantial increase of payment must be made. The rural carriers and the postal employees are entitled to an increase on their own account, and the efficiency of the mail system of the country requires that the line of communication be always open and always working.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I should like to supplement the statement that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STERLING] has just made by giving the aggregate of the expenses and postal receipts of the six routes to which he refers. The total weight carried over those six experimental routes was 15,236 pounds. The actual cost of operation, maintenance, overhead charges, depreciation of the trucks, and so forth, was $386.22. The total postage received was $2,417.49, a profit of seven times the actual cost. These figures represent six days' operation during the present month. It seems to me that is a very excellent governmental experiment. As a rule, experiments are mighty expensive. Here is an experiment that is making money for the Government, and it is right and fair that that experimental profit should be used for the continuation of the experiment and the extension of the effort to establish these motor-truck routes through farming districts. I disagree absolutely with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX] who said that the debate on this bill had not been sincere, that we were trying to choke off some other legislation. Has there been anything more sincere than the effort that this House has made during the past three days to better the condition of the Postal Service men in this country? I think it has been time well spent and money well invested. [Applause.]

This proposition comes right home to another class of our people. My district is partially a farming community in western Massachusetts, adjoining a section of Connecticut and near to a section of New York, portions as inaccessible as any sections in those respective States. The farms are being depopulated, farming is dying out, and all for lack of accessibility to the markets. This sort of service will provide for farming communities means of reaching market centers. The establishment of a motor route through the section to which I refer, which will put into communication with the market the sort of country where we are appealing to the people to better the farming conditions, to produce more and to bring it to the market for consumption both here and abroad, is one of the most useful propositions in which the Government can engage. I have seen nothing in the way of service to the people of the country that promises more than this move to establish motor routes. The deserted farm in our country has been a very serious question. Our State legislature has for a long time had that problem before it. Our State board of agriculture has been greatly exercised over it. It is not because the farming community is a poor one. It is the richest possible kind of a farming section, but the very fact of the inaccessibility of the market is what prevents its production being brought up to its highest standard. So give the farmer this chance, experiment in just such a section of the country as that, and it will redound both to the profit of the country and to the amount of production of the farm. I am sincerely interested in the passage both of the amendment suggested and the amendment to it that the chairman of the committee has proposed. It is proper that the profit shown in this experiment of 7 to 1 over the cost should be used for a continuation of the experiment. [Applause.]

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SNYDER. I should like to say to the gentleman that I live in a farming community, and so far as I have been able to learn no farmer has suggested this proposition to me. I doubt the feasibility of it myself very much.

Mr. TREADWAY. I will say that no farmer in my section has suggested it. It would perhaps be the last thing that the farmer might think of proposing, but we want to offer to bring it to him rather than wait for him to ask to have it brought to him.

The farmers are much exercised over the men who have been called to the service and the great difficulty of securing necessary farm help to take their places. By adoption of motor routes, instead of being obliged to take a considerable portion of time to carry produce to market, it can be loaded onto motor trucks and delivered to the centers in much less time than over the usual means of communication and in much better condition.

Take, for illustration, a shipment of a case of eggs. If loaded on a truck no handling is required until delivery in the market. If sent by any other way, from inaccessible sections, the number of times the case would be handled is problematical. Butter, berries, milk, and every perishable commodity of the farm can be handled better and quicker in this manner than under existing conditions. It opens a very wide field of improvement in farming methods, and I bespeak for the rural communities I represent the favorable consideration of the House for the pending measure. Further than this, it is not like many forms of legislation, entailing large expense. The experiments have been carried sufficiently far to prove the service will be profitable as well as very beneficial.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Chairman, this is a war measure if ever there was one introduced in any legislative body in the world. It is not merely a matter of saving in the cost of distribution which this legislation seeks to attain. We know that if we win this war we must conserve food, man power, and motive power. This bill looks to a better utilization of the vegetable-producing energy of this country. As stated by my colleague from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], in proportion as we can increase the use of vegetables in this country we will remove the burden from the grain and meat crops of this country and make possible a greater exportation of those products. There is nothing that can utilize the odds and ends of time and labor as vegetable production can utilize them. Let us see what is the situation. These food commodities are produced in the country. Somebody must get them to market. The practical, comon-sense proposition that presents itself to a Congress engaged in guiding a country in the conduct of a great war is, Can we conserve man power by having one man drive a truck over 50 miles and gather up the products of the farms along those 50 miles instead of having each farmer along that 50-mile route hitch up his own conveyance, take his own time, and undertake to get his commodity to the market? I submit that it is common sense to send somebody around with a vehicle that can gather up from these farms the vegetables and other small parcels of food products which they want to send to market, and let the farmer stay at home, continue the day's work, and raise more food to help win the war. That is practical common sense.

Another thing. If we properly utilize this service we will establish distribution routes in the cities. When these trucks enter the city, instead of going to the post office and having to clear through the post office the products brought in, they will take these commodities over the delivery routes, and the people in the cities can get on their tables that evening the commodities that were gathered fresh from the farms in the morning. And in proportion as you can get these wholesome, fresh vegetables to the table of the city man at a price freed from a multiplicity of profits and which puts no limit upon the amount that he can afford to buy, you will indirectly increase the amount of exportable grain and meat.

Besides, gentlemen, we have reached a point in this country where those of us who live in the cities must recognize the fact that in the price we pay for what we eat we must stand the overhead charges upon distribution. We not only must pay the overhead charges upon distribution, but those of us who buy vegetables and eat them must pay for the vegetables that rot in the field. You know, as a matter of common sense, that a farmer who has, say, one extra basket of beans above what is needed at home can not afford to hitch up his team and take those beans 8 or 10 miles to market, but if a man will come along driving a truck for the Government his wife can send those beans to somebody in the city. If those beans are not eaten by somebody in the city, they will rot in the field after they are produced—a food waste and an economic waste.

Then those of us who do eat beans must pay in the price we give for the beans we eat the value of those beans that rot in the field, which we never had a chance to buy. We must do that because agriculture must be put on a plane with every other calling. We have to pay the farmer as much net profit to stay on the farm as he can make if he goes to the factory. That is the reason why you have been losing your population in New England. Agriculture has not been able to meet the bid of New England industry. Much of this back-to-the-farm-movement stuff is all rot. You might just as well go down here and haul the water out of the Potomac River up to Great Falls and empty it into the river there and expect it to stay as to put people on the farm, unless you make it just as profitable to farm as to engage in any other business in the world. Let us at least make an earnest intelligent test of this proposition, which seems to be practical and unquestionably is aimed in a right direction.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, a little while ago in a friendly colloquy between my distinguished colleague, Mr. HELM, and myself I stated that my district adjoins his, and he said in reply that the boundary of my district does not come within 50 miles of his. I regret to have to advertise to the House the inaccuracy of his geographical information, and I would not do so but for the fact that I would leave myself in an attitude warranting the presumption that I am lacking in the same line of knowledge if I did not call attention to the fact that the county of Jackson, which is in my district, borders on the county of Madison, which is in his district. It was originally cut off from his district to the eleventh district, and later from the eleventh to the tenth district. Incidentally I might remark in passing that the Republican majority of Jackson County has greatly increased since it was cut off from his district, which warrants the inference, I think, that the county has profited by the transfer.

Mr. HELM. How long has that been taken out of the eleventh district?

Mr. LANGLEY. About six years. It was transferred to the eleventh many years ago and put into the tenth by the act of 1912.

Mr. HELM. That is one of the perambulating counties of the eleventh district.

Mr. LANGLEY. A Democratic legislature is responsible for whatever perambulating there may have been. I did not have anything to do with that.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that this is about the first time since I have been a Member of this body that I have at one and the same time agreed with both the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON]. When both of these distinguished statesmen, so radically different temperamentally and politically, come together on a proposition, it must be right. I shall support this amendment because I believe it is a step in the right direction, and I congratulate both of them upon the fact that they are showing a disposition to-day to be a little more generous toward the people in the rural districts than they exhibited yesterday. I regretted to see them throw their powerful influence against the effort we were making to aid the star-route carriers and the fourth-class postmasters, all of whom are greatly underpaid and sadly in need of congressional relief. The gentleman from Tennessee says that these motor trucks will probably go as far as a hundred miles from the city. That will help some, and it shows a tendency to depart from the custom which has prevailed too much heretofore of confining the large appropriations and the benefits of Federal aid generally to the large cities and their environs and neglecting the rural districts. There is another indication, which I am glad to see, that a little more consideration is being given to the people who live in the country.

During my many years of service here I have observed that, as a rule, the city chaps—excuse me, I mean city Members—do not seem to be able to see clearly beyond the corporate limits of their own municipality. I am glad to note that this mental astigmatism is gradually passing away, and the fact that the two distinguished gentlemen to whom I have referred both concur in this proposition to help the farmers a little bit is very gratifying to me as a country Member of Congress. Another healthy sign of the times that I have noticed lately is that we do not hear and read now, as we used to, so much facetious tommyrot about the sharpshooters of the mountains. We need them in this war. We do not hear and read so much as we used to about "Senator Sorghum" and "hayseed," about "Bitter Creek," "Podunk," and "Pumpkin Center." It is now becoming generally recognized that we need this class of our citizenship to produce the foodstuffs necessary to keep the city chaps from starving to death as well as to feed our soldiers. [Applause.]

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that when this proposition becomes a law that it will be so enforced by the Post Office Department as to carry out the purposes which Congress had in view in enacting it, and that it will be enforced in a more liberal spirit than has been the policy of that department with regard to the star-route carriers.

Some resentment has already been shown in this debate of criticism of the Post Office Department in this connection. I have had a good deal of experience with that department, especially with regard to star routes, and I say to you that in my humble opinion Shylock of old, in the zenith of his unconscionable career, could not have been more merciless in his demand for his pound of flesh than has been the Post Office Department in insisting upon the literal enforcement of its contracts with regard to star routes, which are, in my opinion, the most one-sided contracts, that the Government was ever a party to.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. I can not yield now. It is no answer to that to say that they are made and enforced in accordance with the laws enacted by Congress, because I know of innumerable cases where the work has increased to such an extent that it is absolutely cruel to insist upon the performance of the contract without additional compensation, which the department has it in its power to grant, and without permitting the reletting of the contract, which the department also has it in its power to do. It is no answer to this argument to say that a contractor ought not to be paid any more than his bid, for the simple reason that conditions have changed since the contract was made: The cost of living has increased enormously; the cost of equipment has increased; the cost of feed and of labor has increased, so that in many instances it actually costs practically twice as much to carry the mail as it did when the contract was entered into. I realize, Mr. Chairman, that I am digressing somewhat from the rules governing the debate under the five-minute rule, but the pressure for time yesterday was so great that I could not get an opportunity to say some things that I wanted to say about these star-route carriers, who are having such a hard time just now under these prevailing high prices. I wish I had the time to tell you gentlemen about some cases that have come under my personal observation. Why, Mr. Chairman, I know of cases where it is costing carriers almost twice as much as they are getting from the Government under their contract. There have been almost enough mountain mules and horses and buckboards put out of commission to supply the Quartermaster Department in the patriotic effort of these men to carry out their contract with the Government. It is unfair and unjust for the Government to refuse to give relief under such circumstances. We have increased the compensation of rural carriers and nearly all other classes of employees in the Postal Service, and it is a crying shame that this class of the Government's employees, who need relief more than any other class, apparently can not get it. I voted for all of these other increases, and yet when we ask for some specific relief for these star-route carriers we are met with a sort of indefinite proposition which is clothed with elastic language that might be construed—— [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, during the debate that we have had upon this bill to increase the salaries of postal employees I have listened to so much ill-timed and unfounded criticism of the Post Office Department that I am tired of it and feel compelled to say a word in reply. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY], who has just addressed the House, says that the policy of the Post Office Department in dealing with these star-route contractors is the policy of a shylock. As a matter of fact, the Postmaster General has no right under the law to alter or modify these star-route and screen-wagon contracts, and the reason we have put this provision in the bill is at the suggestion of the Postmaster General, in order that he may have authority to investigate these cases and give relief in proper cases. There is no question but that there are some contractors now who are laboring under considerable difficulties, and the purpose is to allow the Post Office Department to correct these conditions.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I am sorry that I can not yield.

Mr. WALSH. Then I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the amendment before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas will proceed in order.

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. I dislike very much to make a point of order, but the gentleman is a member of this important committee and I would like very much to have whatever information he can give on the pending amendment. I do not think we are interested particularly in the amendments that have been adopted, but the gentleman is a very able member of the committee and I would like to get his opinion upon this.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman from Texas is discussing the extraneous matters that have been brought in by the gentleman from Kentucky and some other gentlemen who have heretofore spoken in this debate.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but this is another day.

Mr. BLACK. I believe that the gentleman from Massachusetts referred to the fact on yesterday that post-office inspectors did not give prior notice that they were coming to inspect a post office in order that the postmaster might get ready for the visit. And it occurred to me that would be a very novel matter to criticize the Postmaster General about.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman appreciates the fact that debate upon this amendment has been limited to a certain time, and I am sure the House would receive valuable information from the gentleman upon the pending amendment.

Mr. BLACK. I did not rise to discuss the pending amendment, and if I am to be held to that——

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BLACK. I thank the gentleman. Now, then, I just want to say a word further in reply to some of these criticisms. I think it is an amazing fact that the Postmaster General has been criticized on the floor of the House during the debate on this bill for conducting the Post Office Department upon a self-sustaining basis. I suppose according to that line of argument that if he had created a deficit he would have been entitled to fine praise. During the five years of his administration it is true that the great department under his able management has paid all of the expenses and has left some surplus. Is that to his discredit? Has the time come when an official of the Government is to be penalized for the use of business efficiency in the conduct of the public business? Indeed, I think not. I think he ought to have the approval and support of the country [applause], because notwithstanding all of the criticism that has been voiced upon the floor of this House by some gentlemen who have spoken and by some labor and postal organizations and that has found its way into some of the newspapers—notwithstanding that, I say without fear of successful contradiction that there has never been a time in the history of this country when the Post Office Department taken as a whole was more efficiently administered than it is to-day. I say this in reply to some of the unfair criticism which we have heard during this debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am going to refer to the fact that this House has taken some time for the consideration of this bill, as did my distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. Cox], for whose zeal, earnestness, and ability I have the very highest respect; but I want to refer to the time taken in order to compliment the House that while we have been doing a just and good thing, we have done it deliberately, thoughtfully, carefully. We have not done it hastily. We have not done it in a way to be criticized at all. Now, gentlemen, I want to come to the question here of the Post Office Department operating motor trucks through the country to market agricultural products and bring back goods from the cities. I live in the county of Niagara, one of the greatest producing counties in the United States. We raise in profusion practically everything that can grow in the temperate zone. We raise fruits of all kinds, we raise vegetables, we raise every kind of grain, and we have had practical experience with this question of marketing our products by motor truck. So I speak not from theory, I speak not of what can be done, but I speak of that which actually has been done in the county of Niagara. We have farmers in my county who raise 40,000 baskets of peaches and 7,000 or 8,000 bushels of apples. Last year, when those peaches were hanging ripe upon the trees——

Mr. SNYDER. If the gentleman will permit, I desire to say the gentleman is somewhat of a farmer himself, and I want to say I visited him last summer, and on one of his farms he had 7,000 baskets of peaches. [Applause.]

Mr. DEMPSEY. When we had last fall our peaches hanging ready for harvest upon the trees, when the cities and villages throughout this Union needed them, when they were of incalculable value, the transportation facilities of all the railroads—and we have three trunk lines in the State of New York, and besides that we have the Erie, the Lackawanna, and the Lehigh running out of Buffalo—those great systems all broke down completely, and we had to use the motor truck and the cold-storage warehouses. So I say to you, gentlemen, that, although we did it haphazard—because it was haphazard as we organized it in our need—yet it proved a great relief. What we did haphazardly will prove of great and incalculable value when done as you propose to do it here—systematically, day by day, upon a schedule. It will do more than simply relieve congestion. It will, so far as the railroads are concerned, relieve them of transportation to the near-by centers and supply them by the motor-truck lines. And you will supply them in this way. You will supply them better than the railroad will supply them in two or three ways. First, you will supply them in the knowledge from day to day of what their needs will be. You will supply them more certainly, because the motor trucks will reach the market when the car may be sidetracked somewhere and stay until the fruit is decayed. Again, when it reaches the market it will be delivered exactly where it is needed, and the car has to be sent to certain people, and it may not reach there for two or three days. Then, it will answer another thing. You will find upon every farm each day that there are articles of food which go to waste, and yet the farmer can not afford to transport them, even though they be of great value in the city. If the farmer has vegetables or fruit ripe and ready for market but too small in quantity to pay him to market them, he will gather them and deliver them to the passing motor truck, to his own profit and to increase the food supply of his city brother. The use of these trucks will save much food which would otherwise go to waste, and it will encourage and stimulate production. The provision of the bill will prove of great value and usefulness and should be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I am only going to take a couple of minutes. I have introduced an amendment, and I will ask the Clerk to report it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1 of Senate bill 2718, line 6, after the word "producer," insert the words "in connection with the Parcel Post Delivery System."

Mr. TOWNER. I desire to call the attention of the committee—I have already called the attention of the chairman of the committee—to this amendment, that there is no statement in this first section that connects the provision of the section and the Postal Department at all, and this was only intended for the purpose of showing it was connected with the Parcel Post Delivery System.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment offered by the gentleman is a good one and ought to be adopted.

Mr. TOWNER. That is all I have to say, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. TOWNER. May not we have a vote on my amendment now to dispose of it?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 9, strike out the words "at the earliest practical date" and insert in lieu thereof the words "not later than December 10, 1918."

Mr. MOON. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that there is an amendment already pending that has not been disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understood the agreement, all amendments were to be sent up and read; but if it is the other way, the Chair will put them now.

Mr. MOON. I did it under the supposition that the 35 minutes for debate had expired.

The CHAIRMAN. There are five minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is recognized.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, this amendment I have offered requires a report from the Postmaster General not later than the 10th of next December rather than "at the earliest practical date." The purpose of that is so that if this proves to be the wonderful success it is predicted here in putting Uncle Sam into the green-vegetable peddling business, it might be taken into consideration in making up the next annual appropriation bill. I assume from the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] that the Postmaster Gneral, who is to have charge of this $300,000 experiment, might possibly hail from the great State of Texas. For myself I do not believe that this experiment is going to accomplish the great good that has been prophesied for it. Reading the hearings and seeing the answers to the very adroit questions of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], we find that the department is going to keep a record and issue bulletins of the produce and supplies, and prices to producers and consumers and patrons, and to provide for regularity of service, and so forth. And we will find in the purchase of these ton and half-ton trucks, with their $1,200 drivers, you will build up a great paternalistic system operating from certain favored localities, which will confer benefits upon comparatively few; and in return they are supposed to cart back to the producer some of the products in the city which the farmer needs. In other words, this single employee will become the man to do the ladies' shopping. When he comes back to the city with a load of produce, he will run around to the department stores and hardware stores and to other places to purchase articles and carry them back to the farm.

Mr. STEENERSON. Are these chauffeurs, or employees, to be under the civil service?

Mr. WALSH. The hearings state that they are not; that they could not be in the beginning. The gentleman, my colleague from Massachusetts, stated that the debate on this bill during the past three days has been very sincere. I agree with him. Some of the most sincere debates in this body, I have noticed, are those which engage the attention of the House in taking money out of the Treasury for the benefit of some particular class of Government employees amongst our constituents by way of increasing their compensation or salary. I am rather inclined to agree with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX] that this is no time for us to be deliberating at length in order to confer authority upon the Postmaster General to experiment and tinker with this motor-truck system, and that this proposed amendment has no place upon this measure which has to do with increasing the salaries and with regarding the post-office employees.

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. WALSH. I certainly will.

Mr. MOON. I just rise to say that I think you are mistaken about the gentleman from Indiana making a statement against the bill. He spoke for the bill, I think.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Indiana commented upon the fact that we had been three days in debate.

Mr. MOON. And he commented upon the fact that this was a good section.

Mr. WALSH. I understand this particular section has the approval of the gentleman from Indiana, but he commented upon the fact that we had debated three days upon the increase of salaries of these post-office employees. I trust that the amendment to the section will not be agreed to and that this measure may be confined to simply a reasonable salary increase bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. The vote is first on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

Mr. ROBBINS. May we have the amendment read again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again read, as follows:

Amend the first paragraph by inserting after the word "Service," line 12, page 2, of the printed amendment, the following:
"Provided, That the Postmaster General may use the revenue derived from this experimental motor vehicle truck service to establish and maintain additional motor-truck routes and to provide for the purchase of vehicles and operating expenses thereof."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALSH. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 87, noes 7.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows.

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 2, line 14, of the printed rule, strike out the words "at the earliest practical date" and insert in lieu thereof the words "not later than December 10, 1918."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 15, noes 77.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. STAFFORD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to inquire whether the vote does not have to be taken by the committee on the proposal offered by the gentleman from Tennessee to adopt it as a part of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will first report the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROBBINS] that has been offered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. ROBBINS: Page 2, line 6, after the word "of," strike out "any unexpended" and insert the word "the"; and in line 7 strike out the word "of" and insert in lieu thereof "for."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] to strike out the section.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALSH. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 92, noes 6.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, deliver and turn over to the Postmaster General from time to time, and without charge therefor, for use in the Postal Service, such aeroplanes and automobiles or parts thereof as may prove to be, or as shall become, unsuitable for the purposes of the War Department; and the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to use the same, in his discretion, in the transportation of the mails and to pay the necessary expenses thereof out of the appropriation for inland transportation by steamboat or other power boat or by aeroplanes or star route.

Mr. MADDEN and Mr. NORTON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is recognized.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. STAFFORD. To make a point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I maintain that the gentleman is too late. The committee is about dividing.

Mr. STAFFORD. There has been no debate on the proposal.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct about it. The gentleman from Tennessee, the chairman of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say one word upon this amendment. The language is "the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, deliver disabled aeroplanes used in the war to the Postmaster General, to be used, in his judgment and discretion, for the benefit and carrying on of the war." There is no additional cost, as I understand it, and this service has proved to be a very effective service. While it may not be proper to experiment with the purchase of new machines for the expansion of the service, yet I know of no better use to which the disabled war airplanes can be put than to use them for the Postal Service.

As to the next section, if I may be permitted to refer to it, it fixes 24 cents an ounce as the rate for carrying this sort of mail. The airplane can carry mail five times as fast as a train, and if the rate is fixed as proposed in the bill it is bound to be remunerative.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. DYER. The section provides that the expenses for the upkeep, and so on, shall be charged to the appropriation for inland transportation. Why is that?

Mr. MOON. Because the airplane service would be a branch of inland transportation, and inland transportation for carrying the mail is appropriated for in the Post Office appropriation bill. This bill does not carry a greater appropriation than would be provided for there. It is for an additional service.

Mr. DYER. If any of these automobiles could be obtained, would they be used by the Postmaster General for the extension of the service?

Mr. MOON. Does the gentleman refer to airplanes?

Mr. DYER. No. This includes automobiles as well as airplanes. Would the automobiles be used by the Postmaster General for the extension of the service?

Mr. MOON. I imagine they would be.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman give me five minutes?

Mr. MADDEN. That will give the gentleman five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

Mr. ROBBINS. I have an amendment pending.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am heartily in favor of this legislation. The carrying of parcel post and other mail by motor trucks will be a wonderful stimulus to agricultural development in many sections of the country and will in a most material and direct way contribute to the success of the war work of the Nation. I trust that the experiments in the carrying of mail by motor trucks provided for in this bill have been proposed by the Postmaster General with a broad and comprehensive plan in mind for a system of motor-truck mail delivery covering the entire country. I trust that in asking for this legislation at this time from Congress the Postmaster General has done so primarily because its enactment will enable him to put into operation a new system of rural mail collection and delivery which will effectively cooperate and coordinate with the activities of the other departments and branches of the Government to more successfully carry on our part in this war. This legislation has no place here and is entitled to no consideration by the House at this time unless the new system of mail delivery and the experiments it provides for will cooperate and coordinate with and strengthen industries necessary and essential to our successful conduct of the war.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NORTON. No; I am sorry I do not have the time to do so. I am particularly in favor of that the War Department may turn over to the Post Office Department motor trucks and aeroplanes for which the War Department may have no further use. Aeroplanes, in my judgment, are in the future to play a most prominent part in both the industries of war and the industries of peace. Final victory in the present world war will, in my judgment, be with the side that can place well-manned in the air the greatest number of fighting aeroplanes. It was both surprising and depressing to me to read in the press reports yesterday that Gen. Leonard Wood, who has but recently returned from France, stated to the Senate Committee before which he appeared that, at the time he was in France, while the United States had there more than a thousand trained aviators our Government did not have in France one single fighting aeroplane. I wish to criticize no one at this time. I wish to condemn no one at this time for such a condition. This is no time to criticize or condemn. I want to assist in every way within my power to improve these conditions as rapidly as it is humanly possible to do so. I hope and trust that the condition referred to by Gen. Wood will be very soon changed. I have confidence in the genius and patriotism of my countrymen. I have confidence, that soon, very soon, we shall not only have one, but many thousands of American fighting aeroplanes on the western battle front manned with brave, skillful aviators who will carry the Stars and Stripes to victory against the forces of the mad war lords of Germany and Austria-Hungary and their allies. The one thing of most importance in the world to-day is the one thing of paramount importance to every man, to every woman, and to every child in this land of ours, is the winning of this terrible war in which the very fate of democracy, of free institutions of government, yea of christianity and of modern civilization, is at stake. This war can only be won by us as a united Nation and as a united people dedicated to doing promptly and efficiently whatever will best and most quickly contribute to placing from three to five millions of trained American soldiers, thoroughly well equipped and plentifully supplied with the best munitions and instruments of modern warfare, out on the western battle front in France where the titanic struggle between democracy and military autocracy is being waged.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NORTON. Not just now.

Mr. DYER. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not talking to the amendment.

Mr. NORTON. Well, what is the gentleman's question? I would be delighted to yield to my good friend from Missouri [laughter] if I only had a little more time. The gentleman knows I only have a few minutes time.

Mr. DYER. I withdraw the point of order. I want to ask the gentleman what is the idea of having automobiles or parts of automobiles in this section? What does the Postmaster General desire to use these automobiles for?

Mr. NORTON. I presume he desires to use these automobiles in carrying out this new system of parcel-post delivery by motor trucks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back one minute of his time.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to what I think is an omission made in this bill. In the report of the Postmaster General he refers to the aeroplanes that he wants to use as the ones that are "not necessary" for use in military operations. In this bill the aeroplanes referred to are described as those that are "not suitable" for military purposes. My amendment simply puts in the words "or unnecessary." We all know that there will be a lot of aeroplanes constructed that will be serviceable for war purposes, but after the war is over they will not be needed or "necessary." Let us make the law correspond with the report and request of the Postmaster General, as found on page 40 of his annual report.

The rural motor service is a most important provision. It is not now altogether experimental. In the Annual Report of the Postmaster General, page 40, he states:

On June 30, 1917, 774 motor routes were in operation. It is desirable that existing restrictions be removed and opportunity provided for establishing service by motor vehicle to rural communities.

I have, Mr. Chairman, one of these routes proposed through my district, extending from Pittsburgh, Pa., via Butler, Pa., to Erie, Pa. I am very much in favor of this amendment and hope this House will adopt it. Further discussion of so meritorious a proposition I deem unnecessary.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to inquire what became of the statement of the Post Office Department which the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Tennessee, said he would ask to have read to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WALSH. Why, I submit that it is.

Mr. MOON. I will ask that that statement be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROBBINS].

Mr. ROBBINS. Is there any objection to amendment? It is simply to perfect the bill according to the report of the Postmaster General.

Mr. MOON. I do not think there is any serious objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROBBINS], which will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 19 of the printed amendment, after the word "unsuitable," insert the words "or unnecessary."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next section of the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. That from and after the passage of this act the Postmaster General, in his discretion, may require the payment of postage on mail carried by aeroplane at not exceeding 24 cents per ounce or fraction thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next section of the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. That hereafter the balance to the credit of any one person in a postal savings depository, exclusive of accumulated interest, shall not exceed $3,000. Noninterest-paying deposits shall not be accepted. All laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, is an amendment to that amendment in order at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire recognition on his amendment?

Mr. MOON. The amendment offered to the postal-savings act is for the purpose of securing revenue to the Government of the United States. Before the act was amended about a year ago, the amount which would be deposited by any one depositor in the postal savings bank was limited to $500. At that time we raised the amount to $1,000 interest-bearing and $1,000 noninterest-bearing deposits for any one depositor. The result of that has been to double the deposits, to increase them from $20,000,000 to $40,000,000. The Post Office Department informs us that there is now an intense demand by people in the country who are not willing to trust the national banks or State banks, but who will trust the postal savings bank, that they be allowed to deposit money in larger amounts. Hundreds of them are asking the department to be permitted to deposit $3,000 or $4,000. The department thinks, as the House thought in the beginning, that it was wise to place a limitation upon the amount which might be deposited by any one depositor, but the department is now of the opinion that the limit ought to be raised. If we have the success in the future which we have had heretofore, there will be a large increase in the revenue of the Government. The amount of the limitation proposed is now $3,000. The House understands that the Government collects this money from the depositors and pays 2 per cent interest. The Government loans it out under conditions fixed in the statute at 2½ per cent interest. The revenue derived last year from this source above the expense was $955,000. The department thinks that if you raise the amount of the deposit to $3,000 for any one depositor there will be a great increase of revenue to the Government.

Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman think this will interfere with the sale of Government bonds or that people will put their money into the postal savings banks instead of buying bonds?

Mr. MOON. Oh, no. The people who deposit in the postal savings bank want to put their money where they can get it out readily, without taking the bonds to the market where they can be sold. In my opinion it will not affect the purchase of Government bonds at all.

While I am on my feet I will say that the next paragraph, with reference to the postal savings law, is simply to provide for a small deposit card and for the purchase of 10 adhesive stamps to be placed upon the card, to be held by the depositors and then presented for collection when desired, without any extra accounting system in the department.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MADDEN. I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Nebraska yield for the purpose of allowing the gentleman to offer this motion?

Mr. LOBECK. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, now I offer my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LOBECK: Page 3 of the printed amendment, line 8, after the word "exceed," strike out the figures "$3,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$10,000."

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], the chairman of the Post Office Committee, has made a very good statement which shows that if a small amount was a good thing for the people of the country who want to deposit their money in postal savings banks, a larger amount would be better. I am in favor of increasing the limit up to $10,000. And, while this section does not cover this point, I think we ought to increase the number of postal savings banks throughout the country. At the present time there are 7,161 postal savings banks scattered throughout the United States. We have 56,170 money-order post offices in the country, and every money-order post office in the country should become a postal savings station. If the present Postal Savings System has brought a revenue of $900,000 annually, as stated to-day on this floor, to the Government, the extension of the system by the establishment of a larger number of postal-savings stations will still further increase the revenue.

Mr. MADDEN. The experience of the Post Office Department shows that there ought not to be as many postal savings banks as the gentleman indicates, because the deposits in some of them are so small that the cost of auditing amounts to more than the benefit that is derived.

Mr. LOBECK. Right in the city from which the gentleman comes there ought to be more postal savings stations. Throughout that city there are small banks that are accepting deposits from foreign-speaking people, and, I am told, for future shipments to Europe after this war is over. They, these foreign-language people, deposit with banks that speak their own language. They advertise in their papers that they will receive these deposits and will hold them for the depositors. Before the war came on, a million immigrants a year came to this country and several hundred thousand returned each year. They sent $300,000,000 of money normally every year in savings to Europe, and to-day there are trust companies in the United States which are advertising to hold this money of foreigners, to be returned when the war is over. Uncle Sam ought to get hold of this money now.

Mr. DYER. Why not buy bonds with it instead of passing this section?

Mr. LOBECK. If we have the money, we can use it.

Mr. DYER. We can not use it for buying bonds.

Mr. LOBECK. We ought to pay 3 per cent, instead of 2, to get these deposits. In every mining industry, in every mechanical industry in this country there are large numbers of foreigners who are making good wages, and they should be encouraged to deposit with our Government and should be given ample conveniences to do so.

Mr. DYER. Does not the gentleman think that a lot of these people would put their money in these postal savings banks at 2 per cent, instead of buying bonds, when they can get 4 per cent if we pass this amendment?

Mr. LOBECK. I would rather they would buy bonds; but they would have to be educated to do so. There are trust companies advertising in this country that they are State and city and Government depositories. They are paying 3 per cent. The foreigners that read that language and do not understand English as they ought to deposit their money with these little or large local banks, when they ought to deposit with the Government. We ought to pay them 3 per cent, instead of 2 per cent, and we ought to get 3½ per cent for our money, instead of 2½ per cent, or the Government make use of it. This whole matter ought to be looked into very thoroughly. We ought to collect and would, if we had enough postal savings banks in this country convenient for the laborers and others to make use of same. We could get $300,000,000 annually, instead of its being held and saved for shipment abroad. Under the privilege to extend my remarks, I had stated that certain banks or trust companies are advertising that they pay 3 per cent, and the following is a translated copy of an advertisement printed in a European language, and which states this offer. This newspaper I am told has a wide circulation:

Készülödjünk A Békére.
Let us prepare for peace.

On February 11 an event of great significance has taken place. The lofty-souled President of the United States delivered an oration rich in ideas of the possibilities of peace. This manifestation of statesmanly wisdom aroused a strong echo all over the world and has carried forward the cause of peace with a great step. Sooner or later this salutary event will have to take place, which will redeem of suffering the peoples bleeding of a thousand wounds.

We do not enter into soothsaying regarding the time of making peace, but we might say that much, that he acts properly who makes right now the necessary preparations.

As generally known, crowns can not be bought or sold at present, money can not be transmitted to Hungary, and crown deposits can not be placed. But the saved money can very well be sent for deposit to New York, so it shall be at hand at any moment. With the same frankness with which we have till now defended the interests of our clients, we advise them now to place their saved money in their own interest as dollar deposit, bearing interest at 3 per cent, in our mighty bank, where the money—

1. Bears interest from the day of arrival.
2. Is in unconditional safety.
3. Is every moment accessible.

We furnish readily more of information and reply to every letter immediately.

On February 23, 1918, I had the honor to introduce House bill 10186, which reads as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10186) to amend the act approved June 25, 1910, establishing postal-savings depositories, and acts amendatory thereof, and for other purposes, by extending the usefulness of the Postal Savings System and instituting publicity for securing from the public postal-savings deposits.

Whereas the success of the present war and the prosperity of our Nation after the war depends to a great extent upon our ability to bring into circulation savings which are hoarded and intended for export; and

Whereas it has been so far impossible to establish sufficient numbers of United States postal-savings banks, in spite of the fact that this sort of foreign institutions receive in each normal year hundreds of millions of dollars for safe-keeping from our residents; and

Whereas the rate of interest allowed on deposits by our postal-savings banks and required by them for the redeposit of the same from National and State banks is inadequate and in need of proper adjustment; and

Whereas the export of savings interfere with loyalty and the qualification for citizenship; that savings intended for export form a reserve fund for our imperialistic enemies; that savings kept on deposit in this country promote Americanization and thrift, which being a fundamental requirement of stable government and of welfare of citizens and immigrants, it should be encouraged, aided, and assisted in the necessary and practical manner; and

Whereas the masses of wage earners are in need of specific information for taking cognizance of our postal-savings facilities and to counteract the inducements offered to millions of our residents to export and keep on deposit their savings in foreign countries, which are described as the land of opportunities after the war; and

Whereas it is necessary to provide for postal depositories at each and every one of our post offices, to pay a fair rate of interest for such deposits, and acquaint our population of the availability of these governmental depositories: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act approved June 25, 1910, establishing postal-savings depositories, and acts amendatory thereof, and for other purposes, by extending the usefulness of the Postal Savings System and instituting publicity for securing from the public postal-savings deposits, is hereby amended so that it shall read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That said board of trustees is hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to designate all post offices to be postal-savings depository offices, and each and every post office is hereby declared to be a postal-savings depository office within the meaning of this act and is authorized and required to receive deposits of funds from the public and to account for and dispose of the same, according to the provisions of this act and the regulations made in pursuance thereof. Each postal-savings depository office shall be kept open for the transaction of business during such hours as the Postmaster General, with the approval of the board of trustees, shall direct."

SEC. 2. That section 7 of said act is hereby amended so that it shall read as follows:

"SEC. 7. That interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum shall be allowed and entered to the credit of each depositor once in each year, the same to be computed on such basis and under such rules and regulations as the board of trustees may prescribe, but interest shall not be computed or allowed on fractions of a dollar."

SEC. 3. That section 9 of said act is hereby amended so that instead of reading: "and the sums deposited shall bear interest at the rate of not less than 2½ per cent per annum," it shall read: "and the sums deposited shall bear interest at the rate of not less than 3½ per cent per annum."

SEC. 4. That section 10 of said act is hereby amended so that instead of reading: "which bonds shall bear interest at the rate of 2½ per cent per annum," it shall read: "which bonds shall bear interest at the rate of 3½ per cent per annum."

SEC. 5. That section 14 of said act is hereby amended so that it shall read as follows:

"SEC. 14. That the sum of $500,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Postmaster General and the board of trustees to establish the postal-savings depositories in all post offices in accordance with the provisions of this act, including the reimbursement of the Secretary of the Treasury for expenses incident to the preparation, issue, and registration of the bonds authorized in this act; and the Postmaster General is authorized to require postmasters and other postal officers and employees to transact, in connection with their other duties, such postal-savings depository business as may be necessary; and he is also authorized to make, and with the approval of the board of trustees to promulgate, and from time to time modify or revoke, subject to the approval of said board, such rules and regulations not in conflict with law, and compile and disseminate specific information for securing from the public postal-savings deposits, as he may deem necessary to carry the provisions of this act into effect."

SEC. 6. That all laws or parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

This legislation has for its very purpose the increase of larger and increased deposits with the United States postal savings bank, and I hope the House will act favorably on the same and that the bill or some better bill be enacted into law.

I have read with interest an article in the Daily Financial America of date March 6, by Lajos Steiner, which reads as follows:

[From the Daily Financial America, New York, Mar. 6, 1918.]

A DRIVE FOR POSTAL SAVINGS DEPOSITS.

(By Lajos Steiner.)

A campaign should be conducted for securing as postal savings bank deposits those amounts which in normal years are exported from here. For decades before the war over $300,000,000 have been exported in each normal year by immigrants to their countries of origin. The war made the exportation of this sum impossible for the time being. Immigrants earn higher wages at present than ever before.

The results of such a campaign would improve conditions for more reasons than one. Immigrants would become emancipated from under the yoke of that multitude of concerns which operate at every nook and corner wherever immigrants receive wages, and which concerns solicit and receive for export this sort of savings, sell steamship tickets for remigration, and in the course of plying their trade obstruct the immigrants in becoming Americanized. They keep away the immigrants from our institutions, methods, and ideals so as to be enabled the better to exploit them and to induce them to remigrate. This proceeding is encouraged and facilitated by the agents of the respective European governments, the steamship companies, and their influential and omnipresent votaries.

Foreign-language newspapers derive the largest part of their income from the concerns which advertise for the savings to be exported and the sale of steamship tickets for remigrants. The income of these papers would decrease by the Americanization of immigrants; therefore, they do not promote assimilation, but stimulate the export of savings. These sort of remittances only strengthen the kaisers, and become a total loss to American prosperity.

Systematic work is conducted for having the immigrants stay away from everything American—to have them acquire the habit of exporting their savings; to have them keep their savings on deposit in the postal savings banks of the countries of origin, and in time to purchase tillable land over there. By these influences immigrants were made to believe that they are disliked in this country; that our Government intends to conscript and even to confiscate their savings; that it is impossible for them to reengage in farming successfully in the United States; that after the war Europe will be the land of opportunities; that those who fail to return to Europe immediately after transportation becomes available will be prosecuted and when apprehended court-martialed; that their property will be confiscated and their families dispossessed.

Well-informed men believe that 5,000,000 immigrants will depart from here as soon after peace comes and they can be transported. At present the timid immigrants keep their savings in belts and stockings, they hide it in crevices under the floor, or deposit it for safekeeping with concerns which are to export same when that becomes again possible. Immigrants know that mill and mine will not employ them in old age, and believe that it is best for them to return to Europe after they have accumulated some savings. While everything that can be done is being done for having this proceeding continue, practically nothing is done to effect improvement. This evil should be corrected.

The present time is opportune for remedial action. Corrective work should be commenced without delay. Branches of our postal savings banks should be established and maintained at each and every one of those suburbs, hamlets, railroad shops, mills, mines, and lumber camps where wage earners could avail themselves of these governmental depositories. A campaign should be conducted for soliciting and receiving the deposits of industrial employees. We have some 17,000,000 resident immigrants: all are wage earners, they are diligent, saving, and thrifty. The aggregate of their savings amounts each year to hundreds of millions of dollars. These deposited sums would be redeposited by our postal banks in our national, savings, and other banks, and would augment our national welfare and prosperity. At present these sums are hoarded and really form a reserve fund of enormous amounts for the kaisers. Once immigrants discontinue to export their savings they could be interested in American problems, they would make efforts in time to become United States citizens, and their children would surely be as useful and loyal Americans as the children of the earlier arrivals.

The forces which interdeal in alienating from Americanism our immigrants are at present less efficient than before. Immigrants arrive and depart since the last four years to small extent; therefore they are fitter for Americanization than they have ever been before. The last to arrive is here for about four years and has picked up at least some of our language. Immigrants are now more inclined and qualified to be reached and properly influenced than ever before. At this psychological moment better results could be secured than at any other time. This opportunity should not be neglected. The moral and financial effect of our success would be a disastrous blow to imperialism and a fortunate factor for democracy. The present time is opportune to eliminate the forces which prevent immigrants from becoming Americans.

Let our postal savings banks penetrate those localities where wage earners' savings could be secured for deposit. Branches should be established in out-of-the-way places, at points distant from post offices, in sections reached by rural free delivery, and in those parts of our cities where this sort of people dwell. If necessary, headquarters should be established in offices of employing companies which would be willing to cooperate to the extent of providing such headquarters. Experience proves that immigrants incline quite strongly to make use of postal savings banks. Out of the $150,000,000 deposited in our postal banks by some 700,000 persons, about 65 per cent are immigrants.

Immigrants trust in governmental institutions. The improvement can be effected, the results could only be beneficial to this country as well as to the depositors. After their savings are kept in this country it will be possible to direct immigrants to our farms and thus increase our food production. Immigrants are land hungry. Just as soon as their savings enable them to do so, they leave industrial employment and reengage in farming. They are good farmers; the lands which they till in Europe are farmed for over 1,000 years and are still productive, because these immigrants know how to till the soil properly and without destroying its fertility. Not only is governmental action called for from the standpoint of humanitarianism, but from the standpoint of our own economic needs of the present and future. The matter involved is a problem no whit less serious than others over which we are concerned because of what the end of the war may mean to us. It is a problem of present as well as future moment, for the agents of foreign governments are utilizing our lack of postal savings facilities to take charge of the funds of resident immigrants to have them sent abroad.

Postal savings bank branches should be established at all those points where wage earners could avail themselves of these governmental depositories, and an aggressive campaign should be conducted to influence the immigrants, by information in the newspapers, by circulars, speeches, and other practical means, to deposit and keep their savings in these Federal banks and make efforts to become good Americans. The present time should be utilized to make a drive for securing postal savings bank deposits.

This subject of increased facilities for the wage earners of this land should be given the most earnest consideration by the Post Office Department as well as Congress at an early date.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out that amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, that motion is not in order. The section has not yet been adopted.

Mr. STAFFORD. The vote is being taken upon its adoption.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule under which these amendments are being considered says that they shall be considered as sections offered in the bill, and under that construction of the rule which has been heretofore acted upon the Chair thinks the motion of the gentleman from Missouri is in order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri to strike out the section.

The question was taken.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 2, noes 99.

So the amendment to strike out was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. That section 6 of the act approved June 25, 1910, is hereby further amended so that the proviso in said section shall read as follows: "Provided, That in order that smaller amounts may be accumulated for deposit, any person may purchase for 10 cents, from any postal-savings depository, specially prepared adhesive stamps to be known as 'postal-savings stamps,' and attach them to a card which shall be furnished for the purpose. A card with 10 postal savings stamps affixed shall be accepted as a deposit of $1 either in opening an account or in adding to an existing account, or may be redeemed in cash."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move the adoption of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, there is still another section, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"SEC. —. The additional compensation granted by the provisions of this bill shall be paid out of the revenues of the Post Office Department. If the revenues of the said department shall be insufficient to meet the appropriations made by this act, a sum equal to such deficiency of the revenue of said department is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply said deficiencies in the revenues for the Post Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1919, and the sum needed may be advanced to the Post Office Department upon requisition of the Postmaster General."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move the adoption of the section just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BLACK rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BLACK. I want to discuss the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BLACK. I am going to take only a few moments of the time of the House to discuss some of the financial aspects of this bill as it now stands amended.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman can not make that motion until five minutes is consumed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is correct. The motion is out of order.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, on Friday, after the reading of the first section of the bill, I moved to strike out the reclassification paragraphs of the bill and substitute for it a provision to pay all of the postal clerks, letter carriers, and railway mail clerks 15 per cent per annum increase in compensation where their salaries were $1,200 or less and 10 per cent per annum increase where their salaries were more than $1,200 and not in excess of $1,800. That amendment was not adopted, and in the brief explanation I undertook to make at the time it was offered within the limited time that was then at my disposal I showed from the figures that had been compiled by the Post Office Department that the adoption of my amendment would within the period of four years mean a saving to the Government of at least $35,000,000.

Now, since I made that motion to amend in the manner that I have just stated other amendments have been placed in the bill which increase still further its annual expenditure $11,240,000, according to the way I have been able to figure it, and so if this bill is adopted in its present form the first year it will cost about $40,000,000; the second year it will cost more on account of the automatic promotions; and the third year it will cost still more, and will reach its peak of cost in the fourth year, and will cost the postal revenues at least $55,000,000 more the fourth year than under present law before the adoption of any salary increases, and therefore when we go into the House from the Committee of the Whole, if I can obtain recognition for that purpose, I will move to recommit the bill with instructions to report the bill back to the House forthwith, with an amendment striking out all of sections 1 and 2 of the bill and to substitute language which will give all the rural carriers, postal clerks, letter carriers, railway mail clerks, assistant postmasters, and all other postal employees who receive a salary of $1,200 or less an increase of 15 per cent per annum, which, in the case of a $1,200 salary, will be $180 a year, and to those who receive a salary above $1,200 and not in excess of $1,800, my amendment would give an increase in salary of 10 per cent per annum. Mr. Chairman, the motion to recommit will not change the effect of the provision in the bill which increases the compensation to fourth-class postmasters, nor will it have any effect on the provision that gives the Postmaster

General the authority to adjust the compensation paid to star-route carriers, screen-wagon services, and so forth.

Mr. MOON. If the gentleman will yield, I want to say to him that the Post Office Department has recommended that we pass an appropriation of $12,000,000 to meet the expenses up to the beginning of the next fiscal year and $48,000,000 for the next fiscal year, so the total amount will be $60,000,000 for this bill.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I believe that those are the figures which have been compiled by the Post Office Department, but I feel that it is but fair to state that on account of the modification made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] of his amendment here Monday there will be about $7,200,000 of that amount which has been estimated by the Post Office Department cut off. But notwithstanding this reduction, if the bill goes through as it now stands during the first year undoubtedly it will cost more than $40,000,000 over present expenditures, and thereafter will cost still more for the second, third, and fourth years, as I have shown.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I ask, in pursuance of the unanimous consent heretofore granted, to return to section 6 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks that the committee return to section 6 under the agreement heretofore made. The Clerk will report the section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That this act shall be in force and effect from and after its passage. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. MOON. Inasmuch as legally that section means nothing, I move to strike it out.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be instructed to number these sections numerically in their proper order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to number the sections consecutively in their proper order. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOON. And also to amend the title in accordance with the provisions of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise——

Mr. WALSH. I just want to direct the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to the fact that the title of a bill is not amended in committee.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman is right about that. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CARAWAY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 9414, had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is there a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the Madden amendment and also on the Almon amendment, the first Madden amendment making a permanent increase.

The SPEAKER. What is it the gentleman demands?

Mr. BARKLEY. I demand a separate vote on the Madden amendment making this provision permanent law, the first Madden amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

Mr. BARKLEY. I also demand a separate vote on the Almon amendment, increasing the increase to 20 per cent.

The SPEAKER. Is there a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The question was taken, and the other amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The SPEAKER. The vote will be on the first Madden amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the yeas and nays—evidently a sufficient number——

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the amendment be reported.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out all after the word "that" up to and including the word "follows," in line 6, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "hereafter the compensation of postal employees shall be as follows."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman's motion is to strike out the amendment, is it?

The SPEAKER. No; he just simply asks for a vote on the amendment of the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. A vote of "aye" would sustain the amendment?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 264, nays 97, not voting 72, as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. GOULD (for Madden amendment) with Mr. BLACKMON (against).

From March 25 to April 15:

Mr. BORLAND with Mr. GOOD.

Until further notice:

Mr. CHURCH with Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH.

Mr. CLARK of Florida with Mr. GOODALL.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH with Mr. HERSEY.

Mr. FIELDS with Mr. MERRITT.

Mr. FLOOD with Mr. MONDELL.

Mr. GRAY of Alabama with Mr. ROWLAND.

Mr. HOUSTON with Mr. SCOTT of Pennsylvania.

Mr. HOWARD with Mr. WOOD of Indiana.

Mr. KETTNER with Mr. SWEET.

Mr. LEE of Georgia with Mr. FORDNEY.

Mr. MCCLINTIC with Mr. MOTT.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina with Mr. MEEKER.

Mr. POU with Mr. WILLIAMS.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. LITTLEPAGE, is unavoidably detained, and he asked me to say that if he were present he would vote "yea" on this vote.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, did Mr. MEEKER vote?

The SPEAKER. No, sir. He is not recorded.

Mr. DYER. Mr. MEEKER is out of the city. He expected to be back to-day to vote. If he were here, he would vote for the Madden amendment.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The vote will be taken on the Almon amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky demands the yeas and nays. All in favor of the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Forty-eight gentleman have arisen, not a sufficient number.

Mr. STAFFORD. The other side.

Mr. COX. The other side, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The other side will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Two hundred and sixty-one gentlemen have arisen in the negative. Forty-eight is not a sufficient number. The Clerk will report the amendment that is called for, the Almon amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Almon amendment to the Madden amendment: Strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Almon amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. COX. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 232, noes 52.

So the Almon amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the title of the bill amended so as to conform with the text.

The SPEAKER. That comes at the last.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. BLACK. I am opposed to it as it now stands.

The SPEAKER. If any gentleman is really opposed to the bill and has a motion to recommit, the Chair will recognize him.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman says he is opposed to the bill as it now stands.

The SPEAKER. Well, he is able to speak for himself.

Mr. BLACK. I am opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

The Clerk read as follows:

I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with instruction to that committee to report the same back forthwith with an amendment striking out all beginning with line 3, page 1, down to and including all of line 11, page 3, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That during the balance of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the increased allowance for postal employees in addition to the compensation now received by them shall be as follows:

"SECTION 1. That carriers in the Rural Free Delivery Service shall receive 15 per cent per annum up to and including those receiving $1,200 per annum, exclusive of mileage allowance and $24 per mile per anum for each additional mile over 24 miles. That clerks in the first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service shall receive 15 per cent per annum up to and including those receiving $1,200 per annum and 10 per cent per annum up to and including $1,800 per annum.

"That railway postal clerks shall receive an increase of 15 per cent per annum up to and including those receiving $1,200 per annum and 10 per cent per annum from $1,200 per annum up to and including $1,800 per annum: Provided, That nothing herein shall authorize the Postmaster General to discontinue promotion of clerks in first and second class post offices or carriers in the City Delivery Service or railway postal clerks from grate to grade under the provisions of the classification acts fixing the compensation of those employed in these branches of the Postal Service.

"SEC. 2. That the increases herein provided for shall apply to assistant postmasters in first and second class post offices, allowances for clerks in third-class post offices, and substitute clerks and carriers, also to all post-office clerks, laborers, watchmen, per diem employees, printers, chauffeurs, janitors in post offices, and all other postal employees whose rate of compensation comes within the limit to which these increases apply."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the demand for the yeas and nays on the previous question or on the motion to recommit?

The SPEAKER. On the motion to recommit, as the Chair understood. Those in favor of taking the vote to recommit by the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Sixty-one gentlemen have risen.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, one more.

The SPEAKER. Sixty-two.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the Chair has already announced the vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows; but the gentleman wanted to be counted and came in.

Mr. HUDDLESTON rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Alabama rise?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. To make the point of order that the demand for the yeas and nays before action is taken on the previous question is too early.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been voted.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The Chair did not put the reverse.

The SPEAKER. Oh, yes; he did. There was only one vote against it. Sixty-two gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. GARNER. I make the point that 62 is a sufficient number.

The SPEAKER. Sixty-two is not.

Mr. COX. The other side!

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and fifty-seven gentlemen have risen. The yeas and nays are refused.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands tellers.

Mr. GARNER. I ask for tellers.

The SPEAKER. You can get tellers if you get enough to vote with you. Those who are in favor of taking this vote by tellers will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Sixty-three gentlemen have risen—a sufficient number—and tellers are ordered. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] to act as tellers.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DALLINGER. Is this vote by tellers on the question of whether we shall have a yea-and-nay vote on the motion to recommit?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already announced that.

Mr. DALLINGER. Is it on the motion to recommit? The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] says it is not; that it is on the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The previous question was ordered 15 minutes ago.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 70, noes 245.

The SPEAKER. On this vote the ayes are 70 and the noes are 245. Seventy is enough. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. MADDEN rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. MADDEN. To make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to have the question stated to the House, so that we can tell.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit. Those in favor of recommitting this bill with the instructions offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 51, nays 311, not voting 69, as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On the vote:

Mr. LONGWORTH (for) with Mr. WALSH (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. ASWELL with Mr. DRUKKER.

Mr. GANDY with Mr. GOODALL.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina with Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota.

Mr. BLACKMON with Mr. ROWLAND.

Mr. HAMILL with Mr. STINESS.

Mr. OVERMYER with Mr. WOOD of Indiana.

Mr. THOMPSON with Mr. ANDERSON.

Mr. WEBB with Mr. HEINTZ.

Mr. MCCLINTIC with Mr. PRATT.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I voted "nay." I have a pair with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. LONGWORTH, and I desire to withdraw my vote of "nay" and answer "present."

The name of Mr. WALSH was called, and he answered "Present."

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that my colleagues, Mr. GEORGE W. FAIRCHILD, Mr. GOULD, Mr. MOTT, Mr. CHANDLER of New York, Mr. WARD, Mr. LAGUARDIA, and Mr. THOMAS F. SMITH are unavoidably absent and desire to have it announced that if they were present they would vote "yea."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, Mr. TINKHAM of Massachusetts, and Mr. WHITE of Maine had to leave before this vote was taken and requested me to say that if they were present they would vote "yea."

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, Mr. KAHN and Mr. CURRY of California are unavoidably absent and have requested me to state that if they were present they would vote "yea," Mr. CURRY being sick and Mr. KAHN being called away on important business.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that my colleagues, Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH, Mr. FESS, and Mr. COOPER of Ohio are unavoidably absent, and if present would vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make the same announcement with respect to my colleague Mr. FORDNEY. If he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the same announcement with respect to my colleague Mr. POWERS, who if he were present would vote "yea."

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that if Mr. CALDWELL were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Speaker, Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island has been unavoidably called away while this vote was pending, and if he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Speaker, I make the same announcement with respect to my colleague, Mr. LITTLEPAGE. He would vote "yea" if he were present.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. MOON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to withhold that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman is going to make a request, I would rather not.

Mr. LEVER. I was about to say to the gentleman that I propose to-morrow morning to move to dispense with Calendar Wednesday for to-morrow.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order there is no quorum present, and evidently there is not. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] moves that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 7 o'clock and 11 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 27, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 27, 1918.

(Legislative day of Tuesday, March 26, 1918.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

PUBLICATION OF CASUALTY LISTS (S. DOC. NO. 208).

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WOLCOTT). The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of War in response to a resolution of the 22d instant, giving the reasons of the War Department for withholding places of residence of those whose names appear in the casualty lists. The communication will be printed and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and also ordered printed in the RECORD.

The communication is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 22, 1918.

To the PRESIDENT UNITED STATES SENATE

SIR: I am in receipt of Senate resolution under date of March 22, 1918, requesting me, if not inconsistent with the interest of the service, to inform the Senate if an order has been issued by the War Department to the effect that hereafter in publishing the casualty lists of the American Expeditionary Forces now abroad that the names of soldiers only would be given, withholding the announcement of their residence and next of kin; and if so, the reasons for such an order. I would inform you in reply that an order to that effect has been issued by the War Department.

The method pursued by the War Department with reference to information concerning casualties is the following:

First. To place in the hands of the nearest relative or the friend given by the soldier in his emergency address prompt and accurate information concerning the casualty before anything is given to the press.

Second. To prevent any information appearing in the papers which will be of any possible assistance to the German cause.

The old system, which gave the date of the casualty, enabled the Germans to get exactly what effect was produced upon our troops in a raid of that date. The publication of the address of the nearest relative or the emergency address did not give the relative any information which had not already been given to them, but it brought down upon them a swarm of claim agents, who guaranteed that they would obtain from the Government the war-risk insurance which is guaranteed by law to the proper inheritor, and in spite of the fact that the department has in each case advised the nearest relatives that their claims will be adjusted by the Government and that they will be furnished the money that is due them without the interposition of claim agents, numbers of poor people have yielded ro the importunities of these claim agents, and are thereby deprived of a portion of what is justly their due. The department has also been informed by the Red Cross that relatives of men who are killed in France were the victims, under the system of giving their addresses publicity, of the most absurd propositions to make money, making their grief an object of exploitation.

The raids which are being conducted along our front are for the purpose of capturing a soldier, if possible, with the object of obtaining from him information about the organization which is opposed to the German lines at that point. With the publication of the address of the nearest relative, the German agents in the United States approach the relatives and obtain from them the very information which Germany is attempting to obtain along our front by attacks on our forces.

In France they publish no casualty lists at all, and the information reaches the relatives from the mayor of the town where the relatives live, who is required to communicate the facts to them verbally.

The matter of a change in our former method of publishing casualty lists was brought up by a cablegram from Gen. Pershing, in which he stated that representatives of the French Government had formally protested against the methods that were then used, the specific case to which they referred being a statement given out by the War Department officially which permitted the Germans to know definitely the effect of gas shells on a certain date. The whole subject was then thoroughly studied and the decision reached to adopt the policy which is the subject of the Senate resolution.

Respectfully,

BENEDICT CROWELL,
Acting Secretary of War.

DEVICES FOR TAPPING TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE WIRES (S. DOC. NO. 207).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 19th instant, a report from the chief of the intelligence branch of the General Staff relative to any devices known to the War Department to prevent spies from tapping telegraph and telephone wires, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

ESTIMATE OF APPROPRIATION (S. DOC. NO. 209).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an additional estimate of appropriation for the office of the Treasurer of the United States for the fiscal year 1919, in the sum of $1,500, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the secretary of state of the State of South Dakota, transmitting a certified copy of a joint resolution ratifying the proposed prohibition amendment to the Constitution, which was read and ordered to be filed, as follows:

Certificate.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA, SECRETARY'S OFFICE.

I, Frank M. Rood, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the annexed senate joint resolution No. 1 was duly passed by the 1918 special session of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of South Dakota, at the city of Pierre, March 22, 1918.

[SEAL.]

FRANK M. ROOD,
Secretary of State.

A joint resolution ratifying a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America relating to the manufacture, sale, and transportation of intoxicating liquors.

Whereas both Houses of the Sixty-fifth Congress of the United States of America, by a constitutional majority of two-thirds thereof, made the following proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States of America in the following words, to wit:

"Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein). That the following amendment to the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States as provided by the Constitution:

"ARTICLE —.

"SECTION 1. After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

"SEC. 2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

"SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress."

Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota, the House of Representatives concurring:

SECTION 1. That the said proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America be, and the same is hereby, ratified by the Legislature of the State of South Dakota.

SEC. 2. That certified copies of this preamble and joint resolution be forwarded to the governor of this State, to the Secretary of State at Washington, to the Presiding Officer of the United States Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States.

A. C. ROBERTS,
Speaker of the House.

Attest:

CHAS. M. GARDNER,
Chief Clerk.

W. H. MCMASTER,
President of the Senate.

Attest:

W. N. VAN CAMP,
Secretary of the Senate.

I hereby certify that the within act originated in the senate, and was known in the senate files as senate joint resolution No. 1.

W. N. VAN CAMP,
Secretary of the Senate.

STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
Office of Secretary of State, ss:

Filed March 22, 1918, at 3.40 o'clock p. m.

FRANK M. ROOD,
Secretary of State.
By GEO. F. SAYERS,
Assistant Secretary of State.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9867) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9414) granting increased compensation to certain officials, employees, and laborers in the Post Office Department and Postal Service, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Presiding Officer:

S. 389. An act to extend the time for cutting timber on the Coconino and Tusayan National Forests, Ariz.; and

H. R. 9867. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes.

COAL OUTPUT IN COLORADO.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present a couple of telegrams from my State bearing upon the coal situation, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GLENWOOD SPRINGS, COLO., March 23, 1918.

Senator CHARLES THOMAS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Whereas the National Fuel Administration put in effect March 11, 1918, an order drastically reducing the scale of maximum prices to be charged for Colorado coal, and whereas as a result of such order a large number of mines, which could only be operated at a loss at the prices fixed March 11, have been closed down, and others will be forced to discontinue or curtail operations, resulting in a reduction of the output of Colorado coal of at least 4,000,000 tons for 1918, as estimated by the operators, and whereas coal is one of the essentials for the winning of the war, and its production should be stimulated by the fixing of prices that will yield a reasonable profit and permit the intensive operation of all mines, a policy which has been recommended in fixing the prices for other commodities—steel, copper, wheat, etc.—now, therefore, the Business Men's League of Glenwood Springs respectfully petitions the National Fuel Administration to reconsider its order effective March 11, 1918, and to promptly restore the scale of maximum prices effective immediately prior thereto.

BUSINESS MEN'S LEAGUE,
C. R. MCCARTHY, President.

DENVER, COLO., March 24, 1918.

Senator C. S. THOMAS,
343 Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Answering your wire, received yesterday, information furnished by operators of 14 idle mines in Walsenburg and Trinidad districts indicates date of resumption of work by them is indefinite. General reason for closing down is prices authorized by Fuel Administration. Purchases are now delayed so that buyers may take advantage of new prices effective April 1. Mines where orders have been canceled up to April 1 so as to take advantage of new prices have closed down during the interval on account of high cost of day labor to keep them open during idle times. Some operators state operation under present wages and cost of material is so expensive as to leave practically no margin. Under the new prices established by the Fuel Administration these properties, it is said, will remain closed until prices are resumed in August on the old basis. As further stated in my message of the 21st, dealers with no coal on hand are advising their customers to hold off until lower prices go into effect. Dealers with coal on hand are anxious to release now on coal they have in stock, paid for at prices in force prior to the reduction. There is absolutely no question but that these conditions are causing labor to leave the State, where they can secure employment permitting full time.

H. VANMETER.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. JAMES. I desire to present numerous petitions sent to me from various counties in Kentucky signed by thousands of our fellow citizens, praying for the passage of a law to curb the activities of German propagandists and spies in the United States. I ask that one of the petitions, all of which are practically the same, be printed in the RECORD. I shall not ask that the names be printed, as they are too numerous, but that all of the petitions be received and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the petitions were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and one of them was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[American Defense Society, State of Kentucky. Petition of the people of the United States of America to the Congress at Washington.]

Whereas the security of the United States and the success of our arms are endangered by the activities of disloyal persons and organizations within the borders of our country, we, the citizens of the United States whose names are hereto subscribed, do hereby petition the Congress of the United States to enact forthwith a law imposing punishment upon all persons or organizations responsible for pro-German activities, or for the publication or public utterance of statements tending—

To impede or interfere with the operations or success of the United States in war or in recruiting or enlistment, or

To hold the Government of the United States or any of our allies up to ridicule or obloquy, or

To cause disloyalty or refusal of duty on the part of any person in connection with the war.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Eugene, Oreg., praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KNOX presented a petition of the Woman's Suffrage Party of Center County, Pa., praying for the submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of the seventh ward of Philadelphia, Pa., and a memorial of sundry citizens of the fifth ward of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the adoption of a Federal suffrage amendment, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Birdsboro, Pa., and a petition of sundry citizens of Trafford, Pa., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of the congregations of sundry churches of New Castle and Shickshinny, in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Bucks County Fish, Game, and Forestry Association, of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the repeal of the present game laws, which was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Greybull, Wyo., and a petition of sundry citizens of Basin, Wyo., praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of the Local Branch of the Association of Collegiate Alumnæ, of Ann Arbor, Mich., praying for the repeal of the present zone system of postage rates on second-class mail matter, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of the congregation of the Free Methodist Church, of Bad Axe, Mich., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation making it unlawful to deposit in the mails certain matter to expose the secret work of fraternal orders, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Onsted, Mich., praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which was ordered to lie on the table.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 4198) to authorize the county of Okanogan, Wash., to construct and maintain a bridge across the Okanogan River; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 4199) granting a pension to Edward D. Hagen; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 4200) to establish in the District of Columbia a laboratory for the study of the criminal, pauper, and defective classes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. TILLMAN:

A bill (S. 4201) to authorize the Columbia Railway & Navigation Co. to construct a canal connecting the Santee River and the Cooper River, in the State of South Carolina; to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for professional and scientific books, law books, and other books of reference relating to the business of the Department of the Interior, from $1,000 to $1,500, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing that in addition to the increases in salary provided for in section 6 of the legislative appropriation bill a further allowance of $12 per annum shall be granted to every such civilian employee of the Government of the United States and the District of Columbia for each child below the age of 16 years dependent entirely upon him for support, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 9414. An act granting increased compensation to certain officials, employees, and laborers in the Post Office Department and Postal Service, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8696) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Henderson	Norris	Stone
Bankhead	Hitchcock	Nugent	Sutherland
Borah	Johnson, Cal.	Overman	Thomas
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Page	Thompson
Chamberlain	Kendrick	Robinson	Tillman
Colt	Kenyon	Shafroth	Trammell
Culberson	Knox	Sheppard	Underwood
Curtis	Lodge	Smith, Ariz.	Walsh
Fall	McCumber	Smith, Ga.	Warren
Frelinghuysen	McNary	Smith, Md.	Watson
Gallinger	Martin	Smoot	Wolcott
Harding	Myers	Sterling

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WOLCOTT). I desire to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] is necessarily absent. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT].

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], is absent on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. FRANCE, Mr. JONES of New Mexico, Mr. KING, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. MCLEAN, Mr. NEW, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. VARDAMAN, and Mr. WADSWORTH answered to their names when called.

Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. BECKHAM, Mr. NELSON, Mr. BAIRD, Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. SHIELDS, Mr. SWANSON, and Mr. JAMES entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment of the committee at the foot of page 75, to strike out "$500,000" and insert "$250,000."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the amendment is that relating to the Yakima Indian Reservation and the Wapato project. I discussed it at considerable length yesterday afternoon, and I am just going to summarize practically what was said then, because many Senators are now present who were absent at that time. The House committee and the House put in a provision of $500,000 for carrying on this project. The Senate committee proposes to reduce it to $250,000.

I wish to call attention to the fact that the Secretary of the Interior considered this as being so important that last summer at the extra session of Congress he sent down an estimate recommending an emergency appropriation of $750,000 to carry on the project. It could not be taken up at the extra session. The recommendation was renewed this year by the department, and they submitted an estimate of $750,000.

In the debate in the House in connection with this item my recollection is that the chairman of the committee, or at any rate one of the members of the House committee, referred to it as the best irrigation project in the United States, stating that the Government gets more for every dollar expended than upon any other project. I wish to call the attention of Senators to the statement of Senators yesterday on the floor, members of the committee, to the effect that this is one of the best irrigation projects in the United States, and no objection to it upon the merits are offered here.

Under the provision as reported by the Senate committee we can reclaim on this reservation during the next year, according to the estimate of the superintendent in charge, only about 8,000 acres of land. If the provision made by the House is allowed to stand, according to those estimates, as I understand them, we could reclaim next year at least 20,000 acres of land. It is estimated that with the amount of $750,000 recommended. 30,000 acres could be reclaimed. This land will produce on an average 50 bushels of wheat to the acre. The income per acre from the land this last year was $100; that is, from the land irrigated and under cultivation. I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that without irrigation this land is absolutely desert—it will produce nothing.

The fact was brought out in connection with the lands in Montana on yesterday that some of the Indians are opposing the appropriations for the reclamation of lands, because the land would produce good crops without irrigation. That is not the case with reference to these lands. As I said, these lands are absolutely desert, they produce nothing until they are irrigated. So the longer we leave these lands without irrigation they will be uncultivated and unproductive. Every acre that has water now is cultivated, and just as soon as we get additional acreage under water that acreage will be cultivated.

This is the cheapest construction in connection with irrigation anywhere in the country. That has been the case heretofore, and the continuation of it will be the same. What will be done with this money is simply the extension of canals already made. Some of the Senators who have visited this locality, as they did a few years ago as members of a joint commission to look into it, know the character of the country, know the character of the soil; that the excavation is largely by machine work; that we get more for a dollar expended than almost anywhere else; that the lands are comparatively level; that the canals are put in almost on a direct line, and we simply extend the main line, and then all we have to do is to take laterals out to cover the land.

The Government has already expended in satisfying the claims of the Indians $500,000, carrying $100,000 in this bill, and has obligated itself to pay an additional $135,000 to get water for these lands. We have expended also a little over $400,000 in commencing this work. The ultimate cost of it for distribution will be two or three million dollars. The only objection, as I understand it, that is made by the committee is upon the ground of economy, upon the ground of holding the appropriations down. Mr. President, I recognize the view of the committee. I sympathize with the view of the committee for economy, and I am in favor of holding appropriations down where to hold them down does not create waste.

Furthermore, it seems to me the situation here and what can be accomplished by the expenditure of this money justifies this expenditure and justifies its expenditure now. It is urged by the State council of defense. It is deemed so important that the Secretary of the Interior sent it in as a special recommendation last summer at the extra session. It will increase the production of food produced and means much in the prosecution of the war, and also especially to these Indians and in the development of this project in the most economical way it means much, because those who have observed the manner of carrying on Government work have been unanimous in the opinion that when we carry the work on by piecemeal it is the most extravagant way by which it can be carried on, and that the ultimate result is that instead of saving money we waste it. That would be the result in connection with this proposition.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to inquire of the Senator if he has any estimate of the increase which will be necessary to carry on the work at this time. In other words, how much will the cost of material and labor be increased by carrying on the work now as compared with prewar conditions?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yesterday I read from the report of the superintendent who has charge of this irrigation matter and of this reservation, Mr. Holt, touching that very point, and I will read it to the Senator.

> The question has arisen as to what effect the high cost of labor and materials will have on the total cost of the project. While this might increase the cost to some extent, the 20 per cent added to all estimates for contingencies is thought to be sufficient to cover any increased cost on account of labor and materials being higher than usual.

It is the custom of the Indian Office in making up their estimate for work of this kind, after they have made detailed estimates to add a percentage of 10 or 20 per cent to cover emergencies and contingencies, and that is what was done in this case. The superintendent states that that will cover the increased cost on account of material, and so forth.

I want to say, as Mr. Holt suggests here, that whatever the cost may be it will all be paid back to the Government in the end, because the actual cost of doing this work and putting in this construction is assessed against the land to be benefited.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I suppose the Senator from Washington understands that the cost of the entire project will be distributed among all of the property owners, those owning land under the project, does he not?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, yes.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Well, will that not then have a tendency to increase, and will it not very greatly increase the cost to those people who now have their lands under cultivation, and which lands have been put under irrigation when prices of labor and material were much less than they will be for the additional work?

Mr. JONES of Washington. They may have to pay a little bit more; that is true; but they are willing to do it; and it is but fair that they should do it. They should not hold this work back.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington if he has had any expression in reference to that matter from those who now have land under cultivation?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I certainly have not heard of any opposition from them—not a word. As a matter of fact, all of the people on this reservation are earnestly and heartily in favor of this appropriation at this time; in fact, those who are urging it are largely those who have lands already irrigated. They are simply looking at it not alone from a patriotic standpoint, of course; but, if you can call it so, from a selfish standpoint—from the selfish standpoint of seeing the country developed and seeing these lands reclaimed. They know that it may mean a little bit greater cost to them, which they will have to pay, but they do not oppose that.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But does not the Senator think it will cost very much more?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think so; and I will tell the Senator why. I know the locality there. As I said a while ago, this is a very easy construction. It is largely just mere excavation. You can take a shovel and shovel it out. There is not much rock, and as to the greater part of it there is no rock at all. They get the work done largely by people who live there, people upon the farms, and they do not charge the increased price per diem that you have to pay to men in different vocations who come in largely from the outside. Of course there is some increased cost; there is no question about that; labor is scarce in our section; but, as I said on yesterday, there will be no trouble about labor so far as getting a sufficient amount of labor not only to do this work but to cultivate the land that will be brought under cultivation and to harvest the crops. They will do it. Our people are going out in that section in families doing the work of the community that is necessary to be done in order to put in crops and to harvest crops. Many people who heretofore have not been working very much, who have been taking it pretty easy, have gone out to work, and they will do it now. So, as an actual fact, the real increase in cost under the present conditions of this project will not be very great. I am satisfied that the superintendent in the statement that he has made has correctly described the situation.

Mr. President, I feel that I have covered this matter as fully as I can cover it. I am not going to take the time of the Senate further. I believe that the basis upon which the committee acted with reference to this amendment is not really justifiable; that to carry the amount at least that was provided by the House will in the end be a matter of economy. Furthermore, I believe that the benefits that will come to the Government, to the Indians, and to the reservation will far more than justify the inclusion at least of the amount provided by the House, and will justify the rejection of the amendment of the committee.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I feel like repeating in regard to this amendment, which reduces the appropriation carried by the bill for a project in the State of Washington, what I took occasion to say on yesterday in regard to a similar reduction of an appropriation for a project in the State of Montana, with this difference, however, that it is conceded by the committee, conceded by the Reclamation Service, and by everyone who is interested in irrigation and in this bill, that the Yakima Valley irrigation system, of which the Wapato project is a unit, is the most successful and the most fruitful in its results by actual demonstration, in so far as it has already been developed, of any project that has been undertaken by the Government in this great policy of reclaiming the arid lands of the West.

The amount that is carried by the bill as it came to the Senate is considerably less than was the amount carried for the project in Montana—$500,000—and it is urged by those who have to do this work that this amount is essential for the economical progress of the work.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Washington has stated that the amount was less than that carried in the Montana item. I think the Senator is mistaken. The amount was reduced to $250,000 in the Montana item, the same as it is in this.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; I think the Senator from Kansas misunderstood what I said. The House bill carried $750,000 for the Montana project, but it only carried $500,000 for this project.

Mr. CURTIS. That is true.

Mr. POINDEXTER. So we are only asking for $500,000, the amount that was provided by the other House.

The only ground that I have heard urged for the committee action in substituting $250,000 for $500,000 is economy. There are a good many business men in the Senate, and I submit to any business man, if he has undertaken any business enterprise, has committed himself to it, has put his capital into it, has determined that that enterprise requires a certain amount of money for its completion, whether there is any economy in stinting the supply of funds for carrying on work to a point which cripples the progress of it. On the other hand, any good business man will say that it is more economical to provide sufficient funds to maintain his organization without interruption and to secure the best appliances to complete the work at the earliest possible time. So the dictates of economy, it seems to me, would be in favor of maintaining this appropriation rather than reducing it.

If this were a question of whether or not we were going to commit ourselves to a new project, it would be a very different thing, but we have committed ourselves to this project. It is not a new project; we have already expended a great deal of money on it, and a certain amount more is necessary to complete it. We will not get the returns that were anticipated and which were the justification for undertaking this project until it is completed. I have always thought, about any irrigation enterprise, that sound judgment required the fullest possible development of the enterprise at the earliest possible moment, because in that way only can you begin to get the fullest measure of returns—in this case, the wheat or the other crops which would be grown upon these lands. We need them and we can not get them until the work is finished. By retaining in the bill the amount which was provided by the House the work will be finished sooner and we will get the returns sooner.

From every standpoint it seems to me that such a policy is far preferable to making appropriations in dribbles and allowing the organization which may have been formed to carry on the work to deteriorate and go to pieces, and then have to get it together again. The history of our river and harbor improvements has demonstrated the fallacy of the idea that it is economy to make small annual appropriations for completing a work which the Government has undertaken, to which it is committed, and which it is going to carry on to completion. Time and time again have these works been closed down and the organization of employees has gone to pieces, and then, when another small annual appropriation was made, the Government had to go out and at great expense get new men, educate them in the work, organize them, and start up again. In many instances a very large percentage of the appropriation—as would be the case in this instance if the same principle is adopted and only $250,000 is appropriated—would be expended in getting ready to go on with the work. Now, after we have gotten ready we ought to have enough money to go on with the enterprise rather than to have to stop again and let the organization be dissipated, and then have to gather it together again when another appropriation is made.

For these reasons I think that it is sound economy to reject the committee amendment and to follow the action of the House of Representatives and the recommendations of the executive department.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, the Committee on Indian Affairs had before it a very difficult problem in considering these irrigation enterprises. There is not a member of the committee, so far as I am aware, who is not thoroughly in favor of the reclamation of arid lands by irrigation. There were a number of projects under consideration by the committee and they were all considered meritorious. The degree of merit was not considered by the committee very carefully, but they were treated as meritorious projects as a whole.

There was not any doubt in the minds of the committee that the project in the State of Washington was meritorious, likewise the one in Montana, and others in Arizona and in Wyoming; and if these had been ordinary times I do not think that there is any question that the committee would have recommended all the appropriations which had been asked for. We felt that the work ought to be done at some time, but we were confronted with this problem: That at this time the Nation is in need of all the money that can be had for immediate purposes in the war. It was recognized not only that the money could be used for other purposes but if money were diverted for the purpose of extending these irrigation enterprises it would have to result in the use of material and labor. I think it is generally understood over the country that labor is short, and that if there is a surplus of labor in any one locality it can find a very strong demand in some other section of the country. The same thing may be said of materials; and the labor which is required to manufacture the machinery to do the work of carrying on or further extending these irrigation projects was felt, by the committee at least, to be needed, and the need was of an intense nature that that labor should be diverted elsewhere.

Not only that, but it was felt that to do the work would incur an expense of from 50 to 100 per cent in excess of what similar work would require in ordinary times. I listened to the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] when he read the estimate of the additional cost; and I must say that the committee felt that the increased cost would be much greater than that indicated by the estimate. Under all the circumstances, however, we felt that the money should not go into these enterprises further than was necessary to keep them as going concerns.

The junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], who last spoke, said that this was not like a new enterprise. It is a new enterprise in one sense of the term; it is an extension of an existing system. We might illustrate that by using an instance where a man wanted to build a house with 10 rooms and had already constructed 5 rooms to the house and completed them. So far as the additional five rooms are concerned, it would be a new house. That is our understanding of the situation of this project in the State of Washington, and to that extent it would be a new project.

The amount of money proposed to be appropriated by the committee amendment was deemed by the committee to be adequate to keep up the work, to maintain the organization, and save the whole organization from being disintegrated, as has been suggested.

If Senators will understand the spirit in which the committee has acted, it seems to me that the appropriation of $250,000, which has been suggested by the committee for that project, ought to be enough. If it is not enough for that project, then the committee undoubtedly has done wrong with respect to the other projects, and if the Senate chooses to increase this appropriation, then it seems to me we should reconsider the action which was taken upon yesterday and go back to the Montana, the Wyoming, the Arizona, and other projects in other sections and increase the appropriations made for them.

We cut down these appropriations everywhere, and if you are not going to accept that as the proper action, then I think by all means we should reconsider the action taken by the Senate upon yesterday. I certainly would feel that that should be done, and would be glad personally to move a reconsideration of the action for which we voted on yesterday.

These matters, however, were gone into by the committee in the best of good faith. We realized the importance of these irrigation projects. We felt that at a proper time they ought to be carried out, but we felt further that the absolute necessity for conserving resources at this time, conserving the money, and conserving the materials and the labor which the money will represent was so great that we ought to forego these extensions upon a large scale. This project, as we understand it, will not be seriously injured. Some work will go ahead. The project is a going concern now, and it is simply a curtailment upon the extension. I feel that the committee ought to be sustained in this matter if it is to be sustained in any of these matters.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, just one word. There is, I think, one very important feature of this matter to which I have not called attention, but which I did call to the attention of the Indian Affairs Committee in executive session, and that is this:

There is not any article of food that we need more than sugar. Day in and day out there is urged upon us the importance of saving sugar and the very great need of it. The sugar industry is just developing in this section. Last year for the first time a beet-sugar factory was opened up at Yakima, just a little over a mile from the boundary of this reservation. On this reservation now they are constructing another beet-sugar factory, and about 25 miles away, but off the reservation, they are constructing another one. The development of this project is necessary for the success of the development of that industry in that locality; and while, as I said, there is a necessity for economy, there is also a necessity for food—not only for wheat, that we can produce there at the rate of 50 bushels to the acre, but for the production of sugar, that will be stimulated, encouraged, and developed by the reclamation of these lands.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I stated upon yesterday that the committee had treated all these irrigation projects alike. The committee were influenced by the fact that they thought it was necessary to reduce the appropriations to the lowest possible point. They were also influenced, as has been well stated by the Senator from New Mexico, by the high cost of material. But it seems to me there is an additional reason why this amendment should be defeated.

In the bill a year ago there was an item of $200,000 for this project. There remained unexpended of that amount at the time the hearings were held by the House committee in December last $188,000, and so, with the $250,000 given in this bill and the $188,000 unexpended balance, it gives to this project $438,000. Now, in view of the fact that the projects in the State represented by the chairman of the committee, the project in the State represented by another member of the committee—Wyoming—and the projects in other States where members of the committee urged them, were reduced, it seems to me only fair that the committee should be sustained.

It is true, as stated by both the Senators from Washington, that perhaps the Yakima project is the best—in fact, it is the best—irrigation project on Indian lands in the United States.

My recollection is, from looking up this question last year, that every acre under the project where water was available was cultivated last year. But with nothing done on this new unit of 120,000 acres, and with $188,000 unexpended balance for last year, surely the Senator from Washington will not contend that enough work could be done to raise any sugar upon this land by sugar-beet farming next year; and I think, in view of the fact that there is $188,000 unexpended balance of the $200,000 appropriated last year, the $250,000 recommended by the committee is sufficient for this year.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I just want to say, in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas, that this $188,000 will all be gone by the 1st of July, when this $250,000 is available. It has all been contracted, and the work is going on, and it will be expended before the 1st of July.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, for year.—in fact, ever since I have been a Member of this body—I have uniformly urged adequate appropriations for the completion of reclamation projects. I have always been a believer in the speedy completion of those projects, and I shall raise my voice and give my vote in behalf of this project and against the pending committee amendment.

I am a believer in adequate appropriations for reclamation projects and the speedy completion of them, no matter where they may be located, whether in my State or in another State; that has been my attitude and my course ever since I have been a Member of this body. I believe that any reclamation project, wherever located, if a meritorious project, ought to be completed as speedily as possible; if it is not meritorious it should not have been authorized by Congress nor embarked upon. The fact that these projects have been started is conclusive evidence that they are meritorious, because they are carefully looked into, the nature of the country ascertained, the character of the soil ascertained, the cost estimated, and the probable results computed, before the projects are authorized. The Reclamation Service looks into those things, and I do not think it can be charged with undertaking unfeasible or unworthy projects; and the fact that projects are authorized and begun shows that there is merit in them. At least, that is the time when the merit of the projects should be determined; and having been determined to be meritorious, I believe they should be treated like any other enterprise under either public or private supervision. They should be rushed to completion as soon as possible. If there is any benefit to be gained by the completion of them, it ought to be attained as soon as possible.

I believe in applying that principle to affairs in private life as well as in public life. If a man is going to open up a farm and bring it to tillable condition, I believe he should clear the land, fence it, improve it, break it, and put it into crops and put it to some useful purpose as soon as possible, and carry on the work as rapidly as possible. Somebody is going to be benefited by it. I believe the benefits ought to be derived as soon as possible, and I believe that to appropriate less than $500,000 per year to a large reclamation project is unwise economy. If you drag the appropriations over a great number of years, the overhead charges are much greater and the cost of construction to the homesteaders is much more per acre than if the work is rushed to speedy completion. I do not believe that in time of war we should abandon all of our domestic improvements, especially those that relate to agriculture, which is the basis of our prosperity and must be the basis of winning the war. I believe it is not only justifiable but advisable to give our reclamation projects liberal appropriations.

Holding these views, I take pleasure in joining the Senator from Washington in opposing the committee amendment. I hope it may be rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I do not know that there is anyone in public life who was more intimately connected with the inception of the irrigation system than I was, and I have been a diligent and constant laborer in efforts to advance that great enterprise. Just last night I received a telegram from the board of supervisors in the county in which I live asking for an appropriation of some $50,000 to be placed on the Indian appropriation bill for the purpose of building a road through the Papago Reservation, up to the line of which the State has already built almost a boulevard, a perfect road. From there on for a great distance there is no road at all. It is an Indian reservation, where the State could not intrude itself, and I have been appealed to to see what I could do toward getting this road built.

I have made some inquiry and tested somewhat the feeling of the Committee on Indian Affairs. They have revealed to me such conditions that I do not feel that I could ask at this particular time for the construction of that road, although it is very much needed. I must take occasion here also to testify to my confidence in that committee and to commend the course they have pursued in their efforts to keep alive these projects, giving them all they could. Notwithstanding my own inclination in the matter and the fact that it is a case arising in my own State, I do not feel that I could ask for this appropriation, at least at this time, although I know its necessity. So I am constrained to stand by the committee, however much I should like to aid the great project for which the Senators from Washington are standing now. Having felt obliged to forego my desire for my own State in the matter, I can not help but sustain the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the committee. [Putting the question.] By the sound the ayes seem to have it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], who has not voted, and for that reason I withhold my vote. If the Senator from Florida later votes, I will then record my vote.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. GRONNA (when Mr. LA FOLLETTE'S name was called). I desire to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is necessarily absent, due to illness in his family.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. THOMPSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when Mr. WALSH's name was called). My colleague [Mr. WALSH] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GERRY (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from New York has not voted.

Mr. GERRY. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and let my vote stand.

Mr. JAMES. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

Mr. HARDING. I note the absence of the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], with whom I have a general pair, and therefore I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. REED. I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]; and

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is necessarily detained on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 10, as follows:

YEAS—39.

Ashurst	Henderson	McLean	Swanson
Baird	James	Martin	Thomas
Beckham	Johnson, S. Dak.	New	Thompson
Borah	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Tillman
Curtis	Kenyon	Nugent	Trammell
Fall	King	Page	Vardaman
France	Kirby	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Gerry	Knox	Shields	Watson

Hale	Overman	Smith, Ga.

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate the action of the conferees on the part of the Senate upon Senate joint resolution 133. The joint resolution passed the Senate, and in the House it was amended by certain provisos. The Senate disagreed to the amendments and appointed conferees. The conference committee met and, after going over the matter with the House conferees, the Senate conferees determined that the proper course was for the Senate to recede from its disagreement and agree to the House amendments. Therefore we present this resolution to the Senate:

Resolved, That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House to Senate joint resolution 133.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the title of the joint resolution be stated.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 133) authorizing the granting of insurance under the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended by the act approved October 6, 1917, on application by a person other than the person to be insured.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator why the conference report does not come in in the usual form.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Where the conferees of the Senate agree to the action of the House no conference report is necessary. The House will not be called upon to act upon the subject at all again. We, as conferees, agreed, and the House conferees do not join in the report. We are following the action taken by the Senate in the Sixty-fourth Congress on Senate bill 35 and Senate bill 36. The Senate conferees concluded that they would recommend to the Senate to agree to the House amendments and no conference report is necessary to the House. This action by the Senate will terminate the consideration of the measure and the bill will become a law upon receiving the signature of the President.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been interrogating the Senator from Georgia, and I want to ask him one or two further questions.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the resolution which the Senator now offers is agreed to by the Senate, will it be transmitted to the House of Representatives showing our action? In other words——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The transmission to the House is notice from the Senate that the Senate has agreed to the House amendments. It takes the place exactly of our having agreed in the first instance to the House amendments.

Mr. GALLINGER. It quite surprises me that we ever have disposed of a conference in that way, but if there is a precedent for it, as the Senator says, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. My own first suggestion was to submit a conference report, but I was advised that the practice has been to the contrary, and I was given these two citations. I find that in the course I am taking now we are pursuing exactly the same course that was pursued in the last Congress. I think the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] made at least one of the reports.

Mr. GALLINGER. It simply struck me as being an unusual course of procedure, and for that reason I raised the question. Perhaps it is just as well. I am not going to push the matter any further.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It struck me also as unusual at first, but I realized the soundness of the view when I found the precedents had been in that way.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I was a member of the conference, but on account of being compelled to attend a meeting of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations this morning at the same time the conferees on the joint resolution met I was not aware as to the action taken by the conferees until this moment.

I do not remember ever having made any conference report in the way the Senator has just stated, nor do I remember of one ever having been made in that way. I wonder how the House will know the action of the Senate. The Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House and asked for a conference with the House. The House granted the conference, and it seems to me that the only way that the records can be clear is for the conferees appointed by the House to make a report upon the disagreement between the two Houses upon the joint resolution.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senate now passes the resolution receding from its disagreement and notifies the House that it has receded from its disagreement, that gives the House a record that the necessity for the conference has ceased, and the House then simply discharges its conferees. So I was advised by one whom I thought knew.

Mr. SMOOT. I would very much prefer to have made a regular conference report; but if the Senate adopts the resolution proposed by the Senator from Georgia and the Senate will notify the House of the action taken by the conferees on the part of the Senate, I shall not further object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that on Senate bill 35, July 19, 1916, a similar motion was made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to agree to the House amendments and that the Secretary was further ordered to notify the House of Representatives. So it appears that such a resolution would be in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Was not that motion made before the matter went to conference?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be the record and that may have been the course taken, but I will say frankly I do not remember it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That record was the one brought to me as an argument against the course that I had intended to pursue, which was to submit a conference report; and also I had cited the action on Senate bill 36. I was also assured by the Senate employee, who is very efficient as to precedents, that that had been the precedent, and if I pursued the course I had contemplated pursuing I would be pursuing an unnecessary course. I was satisfied this would accomplish the result, and I was not particular about the way.

Mr. SMOOT. I merely want to say that I certainly was mistaken in my opinion when I asked for such an order of the Senate. I believe it would have been better at that time to have made a conference report, just as I believe it would be the proper course to make a conference report now.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia what motion he is making at this time?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The motion I am making is that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House to Senate joint resolution No. 133.

Mr. POINDEXTER. How can the Senate consider that joint resolution when the joint resolution is not before the Senate? The joint resolution is in the committee of conference.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The conferees report to the Senate and ask that this resolution be adopted.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is quite a different proposition. I asked the Senator what his motion was, and he stated an entirely different kind of a motion.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the conferees make a report to the Senate that removes the entire controversy.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have reported from the Senate conferees that after conferring with the House conferees we believed it was best that the Senate should recede from its disagreement and accept the House amendments, and therefore I offered the resolution by direction of the Senate conferees.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, it seems to me that it is a pretty important matter, because it involves the procedure of conference committees. If the Senator from Georgia makes a motion to recede from the disagreement of the Senate to the House amendments to the joint resolution I will make a point of order against the motion, because the joint resolution is not before the Senate, it is in committee of conference, but if the Senator makes a report from the conference committee no point of order would lie in my judgment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I report from the Senate conferees, not from the House conferees. As the Senate conferees accept all the House amendments and are ready for the Senate to recede entirely there is no occasion of agreement required, because we accept all the amendments.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is somewhat difficult to get this matter in a definite shape and hold it there for any length of time. I think there are three different propositions now that the Senator from Georgia has made.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The first was the motion he made as a Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The second was the report of the conference committee, and the third that he now makes is a report of the Senate conferees, without ever having held a meeting or conferred with the House conferees. I make a point of order against that, Mr. President, for the reason that the Senate conferees have no jurisdiction to consider the matter or to make a report on it except as members of the conference committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have been unfortunate in my statement, in that I have not been able to make the Senator from Washington understand what we have done. I do not think he has heard what I have said.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I only——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. One moment. At the opening of my statement I advised the Senate that the Senate conferees had met with the conferees of the House, and as a result of their conference they had reached the conclusion that the Senate should accept all the House amendments, and there was no occasion for an agreement between them.

Mr. POINDEXTER rose.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. One moment. Let me finish and let the Senator understand what I mean.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not going to interrupt the Senator before he has finished.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Our conclusion was that we should recede entirely and accept all that the House had done. No agreement was required. We yielded entirely. They agreed to nothing; they yielded nothing. That was the peculiarity of the situation. Under those circumstances we come back to the Senate, as the representatives of the Senate, with the joint resolution and say an agreement between the conferees was not necessary, because as a result of the conference we recommend complete yielding by the Senate and that the Senate accept all the amendments referred to the conference adopted in the House, and as a representative of the Senate conferees I moved the adoption of the resolution which I read. Now I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senator from Georgia and his associates, if they are agreeing with him on this question, have assumed a function either of the Senate or of the conference committee. What right did the gentlemen whom the Senate appointed as its representatives on a conference committee have to decide this question and report back here that we decide that the House amendments should be agreed to?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We do not do that at all. The Senate has to decide it. We come back to the Senate and say, as your conferees, we recommend that the Senate shall accept the entire amendments of the House.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I make a point of order against that, Mr. President, for the reason—and I should like it to be distinct in the RECORD—that the joint resolution is not before the Senate. Now, the Senator from Georgia has reiterated that he is not reporting from the conference committee, but that the representatives of the Senate who were directed to sit on a conference commtitee have arrogated to themselves the authority of saying they will not do that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We did do it. We did sit with them.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Why did you not make a report, then?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We did not make a joint report because it was only necessary as the result of our action to report to the Senate. We did not require an agreement, because they yielded nothing; we yielded everything. Therefore we reported to the Senate that our recommendation to the Senate was that we accept all that the House had done.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator tell us where the joint resolution is at the present time?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In the Senate here.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Oh, no.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is lying on my desk. We had the joint resolution and we brought it back.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I make the suggestion that there is only one authority which can bring the joint resolution back to the Senate. The Senate committed this joint resolution to a committee of conference. Now, it is in the same status there that a joint resolution would be if it were committed by the Senate to any other committee, even to a committee of the Senate. It remains in that committee until it is reported back to the Senate by the committee.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] has stated several times that the committee took no action, but that the Senate members of the committee took some action. He now asks that the action taken by the Senate members of the committee be ratified by the Senate, and that the Senate agree to the House amendment to this joint resolution. The joint resolution being in the committee of conference, and the committee of conference having made no report, I submit that the Senate can not act on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that it is perfectly proper for a conference committee of the Senate to make a report to the Senate whenever it sees fit to do so.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask whether the Senator from Georgia has presented to the Senate the papers from the House of Representatives?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have.

Mr. SMOOT. And they are before the Senate now?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They are before the Senate now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is entirely proper for a committee of conference to make a report; that the committee may make a report to the Senate at any time and offer a resolution upon it. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. CURTIS and Mr. GALLINGER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas, the Chair believes, arose first and therefore he is recognized.

Mr. CURTIS. I want to call the attention of the Chair to the document entitled "Conferences and conference reports," section 20 of which says:

> While a conference asked by the House was in progress on the House's disagreement to Senate amendments, by a special order the House discharges its conferees, receded from its disagreement, and agreed to the amendment.

So it seems under that rule the proper course to pursue is for the Senator from Georgia to ask that the conferees be discharged and that the Senate recede from its disagreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is necessarily the effect of the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is exactly what I am asking.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire desire to be heard?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; I desire to say a word, because I think this is a matter of some consequence. It is certainly going to upset the established usage of this body if we dispose of conference reports in this way. I turn, Mr. President, to the manual of Mr. Cleaves, which was adopted by the Senate, Mr. Cleaves having prepared this manual when he was clerk to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate. On page 347 it says:

> In drafting a conference report care should be taken in stating the action of the conferees on amendments to observe the parliamentary rule that neither House can recede from or insist on its own amendment with an amendment—

And so forth.

That was the opinion of Mr. Cleaves, who drafted that manual, which the Senate adopted.

It would have been a very easy matter to have made this report in the usual form—that the Senate recede from its amendment and the House agree to that action. It would have come here, been agreed to, and gone to the other House, and the House Members would have been informed of the fact that the Senate had receded from its amendment. That is simply the usual parliamentary way; but if we are going to adopt a new method—possibly it is a short cut to disposing of a conference report—I have an impression that it will not save any time, but will really establish a new way for conferees to act when they have an important duty put upon them by their respective Houses.

That is all I have to say about the matter. I have an impression that the point of order ought to have been sustained, but the Chair has ruled otherwise and I have no disposition to contest the wisdom of the Chair.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, will the Chair permit me merely to make a brief observation in order to seek to justify the point of order which I made?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington is recognized.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator from Washington yield to me to ask the Senator from Georgia a question? I merely want to get at one fact.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In regard to this matter?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to ask the Senator from Georgia whether this joint resolution is in the House of Representatives or in the Senate? Who asked for the conference?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senate asked for the conference.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not remember which House asked for the conference.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the House agreed to the conference, are not the papers in the House of Representatives by parliamentary law?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not know.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. SMOOT. That is where they ought to be.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the papers are in the House of Representatives, and that we can not act upon the matter here until they come over.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think that is quite an important point, and I apprehend, if I understand it, that this is a Senate joint resolution.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is a Senate joint resolution.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Then it would be in the Senate if it originated in the Senate and went to the House of Representatives, was amended there and sent back to the Senate, and the Senate disagreed to the amendment and appointed conferees. So the joint resolution, when disposed of by the conferees, would be reported back to the Senate.

But I want to suggest, Mr. President, that the House of Representatives, as well as the Senate, has jurisdiction over conference committees, and I submit this for the RECORD in justification of the point which I made, without any desire to be contentious with the Chair about the matter at all, that the Senate of the United States can not recall a measure from a conference committee of the Senate and of the House of Representatives; that the conference committee must take some action and report it back, as representing both the Senate and the House of Representatives. The Senate has not exclusive jurisdiction over a measure after it goes to a conference committee.

The conference committee can ask to be discharged in the manner in which the Chair suggested a moment ago as being in order; but that is not the case here. The conference committee, representing the Senate and the House of Representatives, have not asked to be discharged. Only the individual members of that committee representing the Senate have asked to be discharged, and it puts the Senate in the position, without the consent of the representatives of the House of Representatives, of going into a conference committee which represents both Houses of Congress and taking a bill or joint resolution away from it before the committee has reported. I say it is out of order, and, it seems to me, it is out of the jurisdiction of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I make the point of order that, upon objection, the report must go over; and I make that objection.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, before that point is decided I want to say merely one word in reply to the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

There was nothing left for the other House to insist upon when the Senate conceded everything that the House had demanded. That is what changed this conference in its character from any other conference. There was no necessity on the part of the House of Representatives to insist upon the conference when the House had been conceded by the Senate conferees all that the House had asked and when they were ready to come to the Senate and ask the Senate to approve a concession to the House of all that the House had asked.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. One moment. I am now repeating the argument as it was pressed upon me in the conference. I wish to say again that my own preference was to pursue the other course. My own impression was that the desirable course was to submit a conference report, but I yielded to the views of my associates that it was unnecessary, and I still believe it was unnecessary. So far as I am personally concerned, I would just as lief make a formal report, and, if it would save time, I would rather do that. As the Senator from New Hampshire has asked that the matter go over until to-morrow, if the other members of the conference committee are willing to accept the view that I first took upon the subject, I am perfectly willing to proceed in that way, although I am also equally sure that this is a satisfactory mode of handling the subject.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I merely wish to add a few words, in view of the fact that there may be some future action taken on the matter. I do not think that this procedure has even the virtue, as suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], of being more direct. I think it is much more complicated, indirect, and involved than the ordinary parliamentary procedure. If we undertake here to act upon this joint resolution after it has been committed to conference, without consulting the House of Representatives or having the sanction of the Representatives of that House, we leave the measure up in the air, so far as the House of Representatives is concerned. We have got to go through the process of notifying them that we have taken this action, and then, instead of the joint resolution becoming a law, the House of Representatives has got to go through the procedure of having the matter explained to them and discharging their conferees on the committee.

Aside, however, from the question of whether it is a more direct or a simpler method of disposing of the business, there is this fundamental consideration, that a parliamentary body must have jurisdiction of a measure before it can act upon it; and when it has disposed of its jurisdiction by submitting it to a joint tribunal of the two Houses of Congress, it can not act upon it until it gets it back again from that joint tribunal.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Georgia will withdraw the papers and also the resolution submitted by him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution goes over under the objection of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], in any event.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It goes over until to-morrow, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire has objected to its consideration to-day, and it goes over, as a matter of course, until to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. I am quite sure the Senator from New Hampshire would not object if the Senator from Georgia asked to withdraw the papers.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will not ask to withdraw them until I have another meeting with those with whom I was acting, who desired the matter to be given this direction. If they themselves are satisfied with the changed course, I shall be perfectly willing then to ask to withdraw the papers.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, I shall not ask that they be withdrawn, but I wish to make a brief explanation, after looking at the record of the action taken by the Senate on July 14 in the case of a conference report which I asked to have acted upon. In the case now under consideration the Senate asked for the conference on March 22, and the House granted the conference on March 25. Of course, when the conference report is presented the House should have charge of the papers and first act upon them. In the case of the two bills to which I have referred, namely, Senate bill 35 and Senate bill 36, the Senate asked for the conference. The House, therefore, had the papers in its possession and acted upon the report and the papers had not been delivered to the Senate. Therefore, knowing that the House had acted on the conference report, I moved that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 36) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents, and so forth.

I thought that when the papers came from the House and the Senate had acted the record would be made in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date; but I am told that the papers did not come from the House on that day. I am quite sure, however, under the rules of the Senate that the Senate, having asked for the conference and the House having granted the conference, the conference report and all papers pertaining to the bill must first go to the House of Representatives for action.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ASHURST. I understand the conference report goes over, and I therefore ask the Senate to resume the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8696) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask the Secretary to read the next amendment proposed by the Committee on Indian Affairs which has been passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCCUMBER in the chair). The Secretary will state the next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs which has been passed over.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is the one passed over at the request of Mr. KENDRICK, to strike out, on page 81, lines 16 to 20, inclusive.

Mr. ASHURST. I should like to have the Secretary read the matter proposed to be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. On page 81, after line 16, the committee reported an amendment, to strike out:

For continuation of investigations, beginning of construction, and incidental operations on a project for the irrigation of a portion of the conditionally ceded lands of the Wind River Reservation, Wyo., $100,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1905, and to remain available until expended.

Mr. KENDRICK. After the word "expended," in line 22, I wish to offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 81, line 22, after the word "expended," and before the period, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That the construction charge for the actual cost of said project shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior and divided equitably between the Indian land and public and private land irrigated by such project, and that the charge as fixed for said Indian lands shall be reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1905, and that the charges as fixed for private and public land irrigated under such project shall be paid by the owner or entryman in accordance with the terms of payment of construction and maintenance charges as provided by the reclamation law and amendments thereto.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will yield to me for a moment——

Mr. KENDRICK. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not rise to discuss the amendment, but merely to obtain from the Chair some illumination as to the present parliamentary status of the amendment. If I understand the rules correctly, the Senator has the right to perfect the House text before the vote is taken on the amendment of the committee to strike out. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ASHURST. Then, the question would be on the adopting the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana, would it not, to the text of the House bill? I merely wish to understand the parliamentary status.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming to the portion proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, this is a tremendously important amendment to the community affected by the irrigation enterprise on the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming. It involves an irrigation scheme of wonderful merit, which has been thoroughly examined by experts and is in every sense worthy of the consideration of this body. It is an appropriation of Indian money for the reclamation of Indian lands, and the expense is justified either in times of peace or in times of war.

Mr. President, these lands are at present practically without value merely because they are not irrigated. Their reclamation as provided in this amendment would bring them into the market and make them immediately salable, and would yield to the Indians many times the amount of money here proposed to be expended. It would also greatly enhance the value of the contiguous lands that are now practically unused and yield but little, if any, revenue to the Indians.

Conditions are such in the vicinity of this reservation that the benefits of the expenditure will be immediately manifest. It is not as though by authorizing this appropriation Congress were merely spending $100,000 on a project that would not be valuable until a million or two were spent. That might be of doubtful value. In this instance, however, the project is of such a character that by the expenditure of a larger or a smaller sum, a larger or a smaller area can be brought under irrigation and made susceptible of cultivation. As a matter of fact, the work which will be done with this money is really the continuation of construction already in progress. An area of approximately 10,000 acres, already irrigated by the settlers in the ceded portion of the reservation, will ultimately become a part of this project, while the Indian Office, cooperating with the settlers, has already spent $40,000 on a joint ditch. Other ditches are being constructed by the Indian Service in this district and will eventually be united into one large project. In other words, the various units of the whole project are not interdependent, but may be economically constructed separately.

It would be very easy to enlarge upon the wonderful possibilities of this project. The soil is ideally adapted to irrigation. Every tract in the vicinity that has been brought under water has been promptly taken up, and the demand is constantly increasing for this kind of land. Added to this there is an abundance of water, additional quantities of which may be obtained at moderate cost; there is a complete absence of engineering difficulties and complications, while the altitude and climate render successful farming a certainty. Forage crops, grain, and sugar beets may be raised here with splendid results. When the land is reclaimed, much will be added to the wealth of the community and particularly to the wealth of the Indian tribes, whose holdings will be greatly enhanced in value by the beginning of the work.

More than this, Mr. President, not one dollar of this fund will be wasted or misappropriated, but every cent of it will be promptly returned to the Treasury. The construction of the head works made possible by this appropriation will mean the occupation of more tracts by new settlers, the construction of comfortable homes, and the general development of the territory involved in a manner that will aid materially in the solution of the problems of readjustment that will come after the war.

I might say for the information of Senators that the Indian Office only last week recommended, and on last Saturday the Interior Department issued, an order authorizing the immediate expenditure of $30,000 on ditch construction in the immediate neighborhood of the land the reclamation of which will be initiated by this appropriation. It has been recognized by the Interior Department that early results may be obtained. The settlers are ready and waiting to take up the land just as soon as they are assured that water will be put upon it. Numerous families, I am informed, were awaiting merely the issuance of this order to migrate from Middle Western States into Wyoming and to begin the cultivation of the land upon this project.

The same arguments which induced the Indian Office to recommend this $30,000 extension apply with equal force to this appropriation. Indeed, the argument in favor of the appropriation is far stronger, for many settlers moved into this section years ago under the impression that this project was about to be undertaken, and they have been waiting from year to year since for some sign of activity on the part of the Government.

It has been said that the Indian Committee was inclined to eliminate, or at least to reduce, many items in this bill because of the fear that the high cost of material and the difficulty of securing labor would make the expenditures prohibitive. But, Mr. President, if the materials and the labor may be secured at all, almost any appropriation that will contribute toward the increase of food production will be money well spent. We have been told over and over again that food is one of the most essential weapons of the present war. We should therefore hesitate at any form of economy that will tend to prevent the cultivation of wider areas. In the ceded portion of the Wind River Reservation there are thousands of acres which to be made bounteously productive need only irrigation. We have the land, the settlers, and the water. All that is needed is the system to store and distribute the water. With the absence of engineering difficulties, to which I have already alluded, all circumstances point toward economical construction. The project is therefore one in which we may justly look for the largest returns for the smallest outlay.

Whatever motives of economy prompt us in this crisis to reduce to the utmost all expenditures save those designed for war purposes are the very motives which, in my judgment, should prompt us to include this appropriation in the present bill.

Briefly summarized, the appropriation of this sum for the beginning of construction may be asked because of the inherent virtues of the project itself, because it will benefit the Indians whose lands will be improved, because it will be to the advantage of the white settlers who have been expecting action of this kind for the past 10 years, and because it will initiate an irrigation project which at the conclusion of the war will be found an important factor in the readjustments that will have to be made.

I am very much in hope, therefore, that the amendment as offered will prevail.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. KENDRICK. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice that the proviso reads as follows:

That the construction charge for the actual cost of said project shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior and divided equitably between the Indian land and public and private land irrigated by such project, and that the charge as fixed for said Indian lands shall be reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1905, and that the charges as fixed for private and public land irrigated under such project shall be paid by the owner or entryman in accordance with the terms of payment of construction and maintenance charges as provided by the reclamation law and amendments thereto.

I want to ask the Senator when the construction charges for the actual cost of the project are to be made? If made before the project is completed the Senator knows, as we who have been interested in projects in the West know, that the estimates of cost put upon the construction of those projects have never been within 50 per cent of what they have actually cost, and in some cases the cost has been three times or four times the amount of the original estimate. From the Senator's amendment I would conclude that the charge for the actual cost is to fixed by the Secretary of the Interior while the investigation of the construction and incidental operation of the project is under way.

Mr. KENDRICK. No, Mr. President. As I understand it, this amendment will not mean the assessment of the charges before the cost has been determined. I assume that they will be levied when they have been determined, just as is done in other irrigation projects and as provided by the reclamation law.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice that the appropriation is—

For continuation of investigations, beginning of construction, and incidental operations on a project for the irrigation of a portion of the conditionally ceded lands of the Wind River Reservation, Wyo., $100,000, to remain available until expended.

That is all that the appropriation is to cover; and then there is added to that a proviso—

That the construction charge for the actual cost of said project shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior and divided equitably between the Indian land and public and private land irrigated by such project.

It seems to me that there is no relationship between the two; and I can not tell from this whether the Indians are to pay the actual cost of the project as fixed by the Secretary of the Interior now, or whether they are to pay for it after it is finally determined in the construction of the project.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, my understanding of that matter is perfectly clear—that the Secretary simply acts upon the division between the Indians and the settlers, and the cost is to be the actual cost of construction.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, then, of course, the wording is rather unhappily expressed, because it says:

That the construction charge for the actual cost of said project shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WARREN. It is to be fixed on the basis of the actual money cost.

Mr. SMOOT. No; it says here "that the construction charge for the actual cost of said project shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. He is to fix the actual cost of the construction.

Mr. WARREN. Well, who would fix it, if not the Secretary?

Mr. SMOOT. That would be determined by the amount of money that was appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. WARREN. Exactly; and that is all this means—that the Secretary shall fix the charges on the basis of the money cost of building it; that is all.

Mr. SMOOT. It may mean that, but it certainly does not say that.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, for the information of the Senator from Utah I will say that the appropriation, as I understand it, is really asked for by the Reclamation Service, the officials of which report that they can construct the dam and begin, as stated in the language of the amendment, the construction. I will say to the Senator also that because of the simplicity of the engineering problem this project in all probability will be constructed more nearly on the basis of the actual estimate than almost any that have been initiated.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me for a moment?

Mr. KENDRICK. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. The department asked for an appropriation of $200,000. It was not proposed for other bills because it was an Indian matter, or partially so; hence the Indian appropriation bill is the proper place for it. The House put in only $100,000. The investigations of this proposed project have been carried on and perfected as to a large part of it, but it is one of those projects that by adding storage reservoirs on the way the initial project could be extended into very large proportions, and the department wished not only to construct but to carry the investigations somewhat further. The $200,000 that the department asked for would put in the head gate or diversion matter and bring the water out through the hills to a point where the distribution of water could be commenced. The land is a comparatively level plain from there on, and small ditches could be connected and water utilized, but even this $100,000 will more than take care of the head gate, and $200,000 would carry it through to where water could commence to be delivered.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, does the Senator contend that the department asked for $100,000?

Mr. WARREN. I did not say that. I said they asked for $200,000.

Mr. CURTIS. For this purpose?

Mr. WARREN. It came in the regular way among the estimates for the Reclamation Service. It was not considered by the other committees, because it referred to Indian lands and should go in the Indian bill; and, as I say, the House put in only $100,000 to commence it. I may say in this connection that, as the Senator knows, every other project that the committee cut down has been left at least a portion of its appropriation, while in this case it is cut out entirely. I think the Senator will admit, as he must, and as must everyone else who knows anything of the situation, that in comparison with other projects there would be no reason, on account of the adaptability or the promise of the project, why this one should be cut out entirely, while all others are given enough to carry them along.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I asked the Senator in reference to the estimate because my recollection is that while the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs was before the committee he did not ask for this appropriation, and the department did not ask that it be put in; and my recollection is that that was one of the reasons why the committee cut out the entire item. If I am wrong, I should like to have the chairman of the committee correct me in that statement. That is only my recollection.

Mr. WARREN. Let me say what my understanding is on that point and not take it from the chairman, of course.

As I said before, an appropriation of $200,000 was asked for. It was not inserted in other bills because it was an Indian matter. Naturally, the assistant commissioner before the committee would say, if asked that question, probably, that he preferred that it should not go in the Indian bill but that it should go in the other.

This project, in the case of which the amendment of my colleague will perfect the language already in the bill, is shown to be one of those projects that is part Indian and part for citizens—those, by the way, who have already located there and have been waiting for water for the last 8 or 10 years. The line of ditch goes across the line between the ceded lands of the Indians and the public domain.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question there—not in line with his argument?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I want to know if the Senator is advised under what act these Indians hold their allotments, and whether it was under the act of 1887 or whether it was a special agreement with them?

Mr. WARREN. I could not tell the dates at present without looking it up; but these lands were ceded to the United States with the understanding that they would be disposed of in certain ways, and that the money from the lands should go back to the Indians Now, certain portions have been disposed of, and this particular land, although rich in soil if water is put upon it, is barren without it; and unless it is fructified by water the Indians will get a mere bagatelle out of it, whereas with it the land will sell readily at figures that will give them a good return.

I trust that the amendment offered by my colleague will prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was rejected.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I believe that completes the committee amendments, with the exception of one committee amendment on page 5.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 21, after the numerals "$150,000," the committee proposes to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the sale of anhalonium or peyote to an Indian, or its introduction into the Indian country, shall be, and is hereby, declared to be a violation of the acts of July 23, 1892 (27 Stat. L., p. 260), and January 30, 1897 (29 Stat. L., p. 506), and punishable in accordance with the penalties provided for therein: Provided further, That possession by a person of intoxicating liquors in the country where the introduction is prohibited by treaty or Federal statute shall be an offense and punished in accordance with the provisions of the acts of July 23, 1892 (27 Stat. L., p. 260), and January 30, 1897 (29 Stat. L., p. 506).

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, this is a very important amendment, and as there are only a few Senators present I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	McNary	Sheppard
Baird	Gore	Myers	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	Gronna	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Beckham	Henderson	New	Smoot
Chamberlain	Johnson, Cal.	Norris	Swanson
Colt	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nugent	Thompson
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Tillman
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Owen	Trammell
Fall	Kendrick	Page	Vardaman
Fletcher	Kenyon	Poindexter	Warren
France	McCumber	Shafroth	Watson

Mr. MYERS. My colleague [Mr. WALSH] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. This announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. MARTIN, and Mr. SUTHERLAND answered to their names when called.

Mr. CALDER, Mr. KING, Mr. STERLING, Mr. HARDING, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, Mr. THOMAS, and Mr. UNDERWOOD entered the Chamber and answered to their names

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. JONES of Washington obtained the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator from Washington yield to me for a moment?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. I wish to make an inquiry. I beg pardon of the Chair, but I did not quite catch what the Chair said on the amendment upon page 81. In other words, if I understood him aright, the question was on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended, and I did not quite catch just what the decision of the Chair was on the viva voce vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The text which was proposed to be stricken out by the committee was perfected by an amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming, and then the amendment proposed by the committee was disagreed to. So it leaves as a part of the bill the text as it came from the House, with the proviso added on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. ASHURST. Then the committee amendment was disagreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was.

Mr. ASHURST. I take this opportunity to give notice that I shall ask for a separate vote on the amendment of the committee when the bill gets into the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so noted.

Mr. ASHURST. That constitutes all the committee amendments except the one on page 5.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the amendment that has been reached in the pending appropriation bill is a very important one, and I hope that the amendment proposed by the committee will be agreed to. I am not going to discuss that amendment at this time, however; but there are some other matters that I desire to take the time of the Senate upon, and this is as good a time as any to do so.

With reference to the use of foodstuffs in the manufacture of wine and beer, a patriotic mother writes me:

Can we feed our soldiers on this poison liquor? No. Can we raise our children on this poison liquor? No. Then, for the sake and safety of this country, do all you can to stop this wastefulness.

A gentleman writes:

I am glad to eat corn bread these days, but it makes my blood boil to think of the effort of citizens to save while the breweries are permitted to use tremendous quantities of grain and coal and man power in manufacturing stuff that weakens and curses those who use it.

Another loyal citizen says:

Since writing you before, in May of last year, the matter of permitting the brewers to use grain in the manufacture of beer has been placed in the hands of the President, and notwithstanding the fact that the people are placed under all sorts of restrictions, in the use of foodstuffs, he is permitting the brewers to use an amount of grain equal to 70 per cent of the prewar normal. * * * I listened to a man from Puyallup yesterday, talking on the necessity of planting all the available ground, and he said if the war lasted two or three years longer the world would be starving. If there is the remotest possibility of that statement being true, it is time somebody was doing something. * * * From the best information I have been able to obtain there has been used in the last year in the making of booze 7,000,000,000 pounds of foodstuff. Enough to load 87,500 cars of a capacity of 80,000 pounds each, making a string of cars 730 miles long. Just sit down and digest that if you can. What do you think about it? Is it time to call a halt? Surely. * * * The question of food is the most important question before the American people; the President admits that. He is frantically pleading with the people to produce and save food, and says that if we do not we may lose the war, while he, the self-same man, is handing the self-same food out to a bunch of German brewers to be spoiled and rendered unfit for food.

In my mail this morning I received this from a business man in my State:

In my humble judgment, we are still going at this job—

Referring to the war—

in kid gloves instead of with hard, bare fists. This isn't any pink-tea business, and the sooner we begin to get maximum efficiency the sooner will the war be brought to a righteous end.

There is yet a most powerful enemy stalking through the country—not in Washington State, thank God—more powerful than all the traitors we have harbored or are harboring in our midst—the liquor traffic.

Mrs. Margaret B. Platt, former president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of our State, expresses her feeling in this way:

CONSERVE! CONSERVE!

(Margaret B. Platt.)

Oh, yes; oh, yes;
Dear Uncle Sam,
We women are willing
To help all we can.
We'll eat less bread
And save the wheat,
Add fish to our diet
To save the meat;
We'll use less sugar
And still keep sweet—
And
We'll save our money and buy a bond
For Liberty's cause the world around;
But, Uncle Sam,
Please, won't you close the breweries?

Oh, yes; oh, yes;
We hear the cry
For conservation
We'll do or die—
We'll talk and try,
We'll skimp and save
And work and slave,
Corn bread for every meal we'll eat,
And give our Allies the best of the wheat.
We'll save our money for stamps of Thrift
To give Liberty's cause a hearty lift—
But, Uncle Sam,
We can't understand
Why you don't close the breweries.

Mr. President, every mail brings similar letters to me, together with resolutions from women's clubs, churches, commercial, and other organizations, urging, asking, and demanding that the use of foodstuffs for the manufacture of beer and wines be stopped during this war. These communications express the view of millions of our best and most patriotic citizens. These words come from hearts torn and bleeding by sacrifices gladly made for their country. These men and women do not understand why grains are not made into food to sustain strength and life instead of being used by the brewer to make beer to undermine strength, becloud the mind, weaken our arms, and threaten our success in this war. They want to win the war. They are willing to make any sacrifice to do it, but they do not understand why food is wasted when the need is so great and they want Congress to act.

The legislative situation, however, is this: A bill—H. R. 4961—was prepared by the administration to conserve food products and introduced in the House June 11, 1917. It must have expressed the views of the President. That bill gave the President full control over the "limitation, regulation, or prohibition of the use of food, food materials, or feeds in the production of alcoholic or nonalcoholic beverages." He could limit or prohibit their use if he saw fit. The President wanted that authority. He sought that responsibility. The House did not think this burden should be placed on him. It was willing to discharge its duty and declare by positive legislative action what it thought should be done. The bill was amended. The President was relieved of this responsibility. The House declared positively—

That no person shall use any foods, food materials, or feeds in the production of alcohol, except for governmental, industrial, scientific, medicinal, or sacramental purposes, or of alcoholic beverages—and provided severe penalties for the violation of this section. The bill came to the Senate with this provision in it. The Senate committee agreed to it with slight but immaterial changes. The Senate was prepared to adopt it, when the President asked the friends of the provision not to insist upon it and appealed to their patriotism. This request was acceded to, and the Senate simply prohibited the manufacture of distilled liquors. The bill went to conference. A compromise was agreed to, and the bill as it finally passed and became a law declared—

Whenever the President shall find that limitation, regulation, or prohibition of the use of foods, fruits, food materials, or feeds in the production of malt or vinous liquors for beverage purposes or that reduction of the alcoholic content of any such malt or vinous liquor is essential in order to assure an adequate and continuous supply of food or that the national security and defense will be subserved thereby, he is authorized from time to time to prescribe and give popular notice of the extent of the limitation, regulation, prohibition, or reduction so necessitated.

That provision gives to the President unlimited power to do whatever he considers necessary for the national security and defense and is substantially what he asked in the bill as originally introduced. It was a war measure and gives him absolute power over this subject as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. If making wine and beer hinders or delays our victory, he ought to know it better than anyone else and ought to stop it. Personally I think it unwise to use our foodstuffs and grains for this purpose. Others think differently. I believe we would add strength to our armies and our industries by stopping the making of wine and beer. Others believe that such action would weaken us more than it would strengthen us. It is asserted that labor will rebel if it can not get its wine and beer. I do not believe it, but I may be mistaken. That it will not do so has been demonstrated in the 27 States that have adopted prohibition. It has not rebelled there, and in those States among the strongest supporters of prohibition are leaders of union labor. If labor did not rebel in peace, surely it would not rebel when its country is at war. No loyal American laborer will relax his efforts for his country because he can not get wine or beer. The sooner the disloyal ones are known, the better, in my judgment. We have been in the war almost a year. The outlook is more terrible and desperate than ever. The President has not yet stopped the making of wine and beer under the power given to him by Congress. He must think it wiser to use our grain and foodstuffs for wine and beer rather than to use them for bread. I do not think so, but I may be wrong. He must believe that the use of grain for beer is better for the national security and defense than to use it for bread. I do not think so, but I may be wrong. He must think that beer and wine do not weaken our industry or endanger the support of our Army. I do, but I may be mistaken. He must deem it better to dishearten and discourage millions of the best and most loyal men and women in the land than to deny wine and beer to some who would put their appetites above their country's weal. I do not think so, but I may be wrong. He may think it wise to accede to the selfish if not unpatriotic ends of the pro-German alliance and brewers' organizations rather than to the unselfish and patriotic wishes of loyal American citizens. I do not think so, but I may be wrong. He may believe it safer to disregard the views of the temperance people of the country and impose upon them burdens and restrictions in the use of food because he knows their loyalty and patriotism can be depended upon to accept without lessened patriotism whatever is deemed necessary rather than to arouse the disloyalty of those who are not willing to give up their wine and beer for the sake of the country. That may be best, but it is not just. He must deem it more for the national security and defense that food products shall actually rot for lack of transportation to markets rather than stop the use of cars for transporting supplies for the brewer and for carrying their products. I do not think so, but I may be wrong. He may think it better that our schools and churches should close for lack of coal than that the fires should grow dim in the breweries of the land. I do not think so, but I may be wrong. The Brewers' Journal of March 1 says that "America is to send them [England and France] 52,000,000 bushels of barley and 13,000,000 bushels of corn, as soon as there are transports available, for that purpose" [the making of beer]; and in the same issue is its London letter, headed "Office of the Brewers' Journal, 46 Cannon Street E. C., February 14, 1918," in which it is said "There is great rejoicing among the trade over the order issued by the authorities in Washington that the shipments of American barley and malt to England be largely increased." The President must deem it wisest to allow our grain and our ships to be used for this purpose at this time. I do not think it is, but I may be wrong.

In passing, I want to call the attention of Senators, and I hope these facts may not be overlooked by the President, Secretary of War Baker, and Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, to the manner in which the makers and users of intoxicating liquors in a crisis like this are escaping many of the real hardships and sacrifices of war.

The men who drink liquor largely are not doing the fighting for the country. They are not physically fit. They are not wanted either in the Army or the Navy. They would be liabilities instead of assets in either. A soldier whose time is spent in either the guardhouse or the hospital is a positive hindrance intead of a help. We are asking for our cleanest and best and most physically fit young men for the Army, and the men who drink liquor therefore largely escape service in the trenches and elsewhere. Nor are they at their best in our shipyards or munitions factories or mines or other industries essential to our success in the war.

The men who spend largely of their means for liquor are not helping to finance the war. It is the frugal and the saving and the industrious who are at work among the masses of the people who are buying liberty bonds and war-saving stamps to furnish the money to win the war.

For the same reason that the masses of drinking men can not buy liberty bonds and war-saving stamps, they do not contribute largely to the Red Cross or the Y. M. C. A. or other laudable movements to relieve the suffering and provide for the comfort and contentment of the men in the service.

These facts show how the loyal, moral, Christian people in the churches and patriotic organizations of the country are bearing not only their own part in helping to prosecute the war, but the part of the slackers whose habits make it impossible for them to do so. The makers and distributors of beer also are quite content to see valuable foodstuffs destroyed in the manufacture of their products if thereby they can increase their output and augment their profits.

It has been suggested to me that the President recognizes that our food situation and that of the allies does not permit of the wastage of any kind of foodstuffs in the production of intoxicating liquors, but that he has felt unwarranted in decreeing prohibition of the use of foodstuffs in the manufacture of beers, and so forth, because of the large amount of whisky in bond and stock over the country, and the sale not being nationally prohibited, he may feel that the country might be put on a so-called "whisky basis."

If the President reaches the conclusion that it is not wise or just to let any kind of foodstuffs be destroyed by being made into beer and wine, to me his duty under the authority which he undoubtedly possesses by act of Congress is as clear as noonday. If he then feels that the sale of intoxicating liquors during the period of the war should be prohibited, in order to keep the country from going on a whisky basis, I think I know enough of the temper of the people throughout the Nation and of the Congress itself to say that a word from the President to this effect would result in the passage without delay of any needful legislation to stop the sale of all intoxicating liquor during the war.

Mr. President, I read an article in the Washington Times a few days ago that did my heart good. I hope it is true. It is by a correspondent who gives his name. It recalls to my mind the rather slighting references that were made on the floor of the Senate, when the Army reorganization bill was up, upon the attempts of some of us to prohibit the sale of liquor to soldiers in uniform. I remember some Senators declared that that was an unimportant matter; that it was an insignificant matter; that it ought not to be injected into that measure. In view of what I see in this article, I say it does my heart good to read it, and I am going to read it to the Senate. It is an article by Henry G. Wales, International News Service staff correspondent with the American Army in France, March 20, 1918:

Everyone is on the water wagon at the American front.

Assuming that this article is true, it will bring joy and comfort to thousands of American homes in this land of ours. It will bring joy and comfort to thousands of American mothers in this country who are viewing with greater anxiety the effect influences outside the battle line may have upon their boys than the effect of the bullets.

[From the Washington Times, Mar. 20, 1918.]

EVERYONE AT UNITED STATES FRONT IN FRANCE ON WATER WAGON.

(By Henry G. Wales, International News Service Staff Correspondent.)

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, March 20.

Every one is on the water wagon at the American front.

During the past month I have been at the front daily, and often twice in a day, seeing thousands of American soldiers. In that time I saw exactly one man drunk and one other who showed the influence of liquor. The American front is dry not only for the officers but the men of the ranks as well. Nobody comments upon the matter. Nobody apologizes to his guests for the lack of liquid entertainment; in fact, nobody notices it.

I have eaten at various officers' messes where the meals were excellent; better, in fact, than one gets ordinarily in London or Paris, and only mineral water is served.

But when one eats in a dugout with the detonations of shells fired from a near-by battery or the concussions of exploding German shells keeping up a continuous rattle of the chinaware and knives and forks, one's mind doesn't get far enough off the war to ask for liquor. So long as it is absent it is forgotten.

I have eaten with enlisted men often also. Never once did I find one with a bottle or a flask "on his hip." On the contrary, all paid particular attention to the coffee and tea served, drinking so much that it was evident they were entirely satisfied with these beverages.

The little French cafés in the villages occupied by Americans are frequented only by Frenchmen, who occasionally get a bottle of beer and play cards while drinking it. The French can not understand why Americans refuse to take a pull at their "pinard," as they call the red Algerian wine issued to the army.

The doughboys stick to tea and coffee, occasionally making chocolate.

The American officers take only light wines when in Paris on leave or official missions. They say that they find it agrees with them better than stronger drinks.

"I'll never buy another bottle of champagne in my life now that I have learned how to order good French wine," said one officer.

Mr. President, we see thousands of American soldiers here in Washington City, probably more here than in any other city in the country. I have observed them carefully. I have watched them closely, and I am proud of them. I am proud of what the American soldier is proving himself to be, and I am glad to send a message to the mothers of this land that the boys they are sending to the front are maintaining the habits here that they did at home. I have not seen yet a single drunken soldier on the streets of Washington. Three or four weeks ago I got on the train at Baltimore, one Sunday evening about 10 o'clock. There were five or six cars practically crowded with American soldiers in their American uniforms. I went through those cars from one end to the other. From the talk I gathered these men had gone on Saturday to New York and Philadelphia and were returning to Camp Meade. There was no loud talk, no swearing, no boisterous conduct, and not a single man who seemed to be under the influence of intoxicating liquor. That, Mr. President, is the record that is being made by the soldiers of the United States as they prepare for this world contest. I am glad that I had some little to do with getting the provision in the Army bill that helps to this, and I am glad to send this message to the mothers of the land.

Mr. President, I would not lessen our power, weaken our Army, or endanger victory in this war to secure prohibition, much as I would like to see prohibition all over this country. We must trust the President to stop the making of beer when he thinks this will do less harm than to make bread. We must rely upon our Commander in Chief to stop the use of grain for beer when it is best for the allies and our armies to use it for bread. He has the power to do so. We have given it to him for the national security and defense. We may doubt his wisdom, but his patriotism is not to be questioned. His devotion to our country and the success of its cause is not to be doubted. He thought he was the best judge as to what was wise in this matter as a war measure. Congress by a majority vote agreed with him. Without at all giving up my personal views I accept the decision thus made. Let us show our patriotism by relying upon our Commander in Chief to exercise the power given him in the wisest and most patriotic way, and trust that he will soon see that the wisest course is that believed in by the great majority of the very best, most enlightened, and most patriotic citizens of our beloved country.

Mr. President, this leads me to state what I have conceived to be my patriotic duty toward legislation in aid of the prosecution of war since war was declared.

There was a time when Americans could honestly and patriotically differ as to what course the United States should follow toward the war in Europe. That time is passed. That war has become an American war. We are in it. It is our war. Every man is for the country or against it. The only way for us to get out of the war is to go through it. We know no end but that of victory, no goal but an honorable and lasting peace. To that end we have dedicated all the wealth, all the resources, and all the manhood of this great Republic. Those whom the people have selected to lead and direct us in this great contest I shall uphold and sustain to the utmost. No partisanship shall control my action nor envenom my words in relation to anything deemed needful for the prosecution of the war, even though I am sure that those in control are playing politics to the limit and the only nonpartisanship they seem to know is Democratic partisanship. If I criticize it shall be to improve and uphold, not to obstruct or tear down. Mistakes will be made, unwise policies pursued, but no word or act of mine shall aid and encourage a foreign foe. Partisan criticism shall be withheld in the face of a foreign enemy and until we can point out mistakes and fix the responsibility for unwise acts and policies in a contest among ourselves to determine what is best for us in both domestic and foreign policies.

In the discharge of my duty as a legislator and representative of the people I shall do my best to perfect legislation and make it subserve the highest interests of our people and make us most efficient in the prosecution of the war. The sole test of proposed legislation for me is and shall be, Will it aid in the successful prosecution of the war? Will it make us stronger and more effective? I have supported and shall continue to support amendments which I deem wise, but when the majority of the Senate has made clear its will as to legislation to aid in carrying on this war it shall have my vote. Its verdict shall be my verdict, and no carping criticism shall fall from my lips. When laws are passed to aid in the prosecution of the war I shall uphold them to the utmost until the need of changes is clearly shown. In taking this position I do not desire by inference or otherwise to be understood as criticizing anyone who may take a different attitude. This is simply my conception of my patriotic duty in this hour of the world's greatest trial and of the supreme test of republican institutions and government, and this shall be my course till this war ends.

We are indeed making an autocrat of the President and an autocracy of the National Government. You can not wage war without it. Autocracy is the essence of militarism; militarism is the essence of war, whether prosecuted by a republic or an empire. We may be carrying it too far, but autocratic direction and control has been Germany's strength and the allies' weakness. I do not fear for our political institutions if we win. I do fear for them if we lose. Liberty and democracy will resume triumphant sway when autocracy has led us to victory against militarism. We make a mistake in assuming that democracy abhors autocracy at all times. On the contrary, it embraces it in war. The fathers of the Republic knew that autocratic power is necessary to a democracy in war. They had just come through a long war. They knew how it must be carried on and they made ample provision for it in the fundamental law of the land, and it became a part of the people's will. Congress can declare war; the President alone can carry it on and end it. When Congress declared war it made this Government a democratic autocracy and the President the greatest and most potential autocrat on earth. He directs our armies and navies at will. Congress has no power to thwart except by negation. It must give support or withhold it. It can not direct or control affirmatively. When war is once declared the President alone can initiate peace. Congress can not do it. The people can not do it, except by revolution. The President alone can give voice to the Nation's will for peace. We must trust him. We must believe in his patriotism. We must confide in his fidelity to the Government and his love for the people. We must uphold his autocratic power in war to preserve our democracy for peace. We must follow him until the people put another in his place, clothed with like power, to lead where his judgment and patriotism may direct until victory rests with our arms and the world is made safe for democracy to live in.

Mr. President, we are engaged in the most terrible and far-reaching war in the world's history. Our part in it will test our resources and power to the limit. All that we believe to be precious hangs in the balance and depends upon us. Militarism and autocratic government is triumphant in the world unless this offspring of European oppression can save civilization and liberty from its grasp.

In the conduct of this war on our part all great governmental agencies should cooperate fully and whole-heartedly. Congress is ready and anxious to cooperate fully with the Executive. It is composed of men who are as loyal and patriotic as those in executive positions. They will sink individual views, partisan opinions, and personal interests to aid the Executive. Their knowledge, experience, and opinion are at his service. They will gladly give him the legislation needed to do his task. They want to aid him in every way possible. The President should not only welcome but seek their counsel and advice upon the great problems which confront him. He does not do it. I do not say this in any captious spirit. It is the statement of a fact, a most lamentable fact, known to all here and regretted by all. He should realize that in a multitude of counsel there is wisdom, as Congress realizes that in unity there is strength. There are committees in Congress composed of men whose opinions would be of the greatest help to any man, no matter how profound his ability nor how wide his experience. The military committees of the House and Senate could aid by teamwork in smoothing out the difficulties of the Military Establishment and in solving the problems that confront it. The Committees on Foreign Relations could give advice and make suggestions of the greatest value and would be able to save us from many embarrassing situations. Each of these committees is composed of men learned and experienced along their respective lines and actuated by the one desire to aid their country. Such unity of effort would not only aid in a wiser solution of great and important questions but would establish a relationship between the executive and legislative branches of the Government that would be most beneficial. It would be helpful in the country and inspire the people with confidence in their representatives and make them feel that they are acting solely for the national good. It should be done, but it is not done. The President ought to coordinate himself, and the sooner he does it the sooner will governmental agencies be most effective. And, above all, will there be a feeling of patriotic unity throughout the country that I fear is now lacking but which ought to exist. To do this will not lessen the President's power and prestige, but will strengthen and exalt it and add to the Nation's efficiency.

Mr. President, do we know the largeness of the task before us? Do we measure the gravity of defeat? I fear not. The fight for gain is so fierce that it seems universal. Profiteering is everywhere. It is confined to no class or condition. The Nation's needs are the common prey. Why is this? It is not because we are not patriotic. It is not because we are wholly sordid. We have not come to realize what we must do to win this war. The people do not know the real facts. They will not cease their race for gain and profit till they do know the urgent need for sacrifice and self-denial. They have been told from day to day that things are going all right. They are assured that Germany is on the brink of collapse; that Austria will make a separate peace; that revolution is coming; that the German people are held to their Government only by the strong arm of despotism; and that the people of the central powers are on the verge of starvation. We are told that great armies are being formed, armed, equipped, and trained and that a million and a half men will soon be on the battle front; that submarines are being sunk faster than they are being built, and that this menace is being rapidly overcome; that millions of tons of shipping will soon be launched; and the sky will soon be darkened with aeroplanes. I do not minimize what has been done. We have done much, but it is not so much what we have done as what we must do that concerns me. This we have hardly begun, and this is what the people should be told. This they must know before they will forget self and gain and do what they must do to win this war.

I picked up a paper this morning which was published a short time ago, which contains an article I desire to read, because it simply corroborates what I have just said as to the reports which have been given out to the people. This was evidently an inspired article; it evidently came from information given to the correspondent by heads of departments or members of the administration. Listen:

Many encouraging features of the war situation have developed during the last few weeks. Aircraft construction is going forward satisfactorily—

Yet on yesterday, Mr. President, its progress was developed on the floor of the Senate. Is it possible that it is going forward satisfactorily when it is proceeding so that it looks like we shall get but 37 airplanes to France on the 1st of July? Did not the administrative officers of this Government know that situation when they gave out the impression that the airplane program is proceeding satisfactorily? If the progress shown yesterday is satisfactory progress, then God help our people—machine-gun construction is ahead of schedule.

We have had information on the floor of the Senate how the machine-gun program is proceeding and how we have delayed and delayed month after month trying to devise a new machine gun, when France had furnished to us full plans of her machine guns, that have proved their effectiveness in this great war, and how we have had finally, after months and months of delay and experimenting, to come back to the French guns.

Transportation of troops is going on with little interruption or loss, and a reorganization of the bureaus of the War Department promises increased efficiency.

This correspondent gets the same idea that I have advanced here—and I am going to read what he says—as to the importance of cooperation between Congress and the Executive.

But the most encouraging feature of all is the initiation of a working agreement between the Executive and legislative branches of the Government through the medium of conferences of members of the Military Committees of both Houses of Congress with members of the war council. If this is to be a fixed policy, as intimated, it is certain to result in great benefit to the United States.

I hope that these conferences will not only continue, but I hope that they will be extended until they take place between the Executive of the Government and members of the Military Committees of the two Houses as well as between members of the Military Committees and members of the war council.

"Nothing must be said that will aid and comfort the enemy" has met every suggestion of lack of progress heretofore. The time has come to stop that cry. It is the refuge of the coward and the craven or the shield of the enemy's friend. No greater aid can be given Germany in this dark hour than to lull our people into a false security. We are no craven cowardly people. The bigness of the task does not discourage us. Dangers do not appall nor difficulties dishearten. Let us know what we must do and we will do it bravely, heartily, and well. The way to nerve our people and bring out their greatest effort is to let them know what is needed and what dangers confront them. Christian Science does wonderful things, but it does not make us ready for war. It does not supply the Government needs for a department head to say he is away ahead with his program, when the program is hardly begun. I have sometimes thought that the worse things are the rosier the picture given out. That is not wise. It is time to stop it. Department heads know better, and it is time for them to give the people the truth. If the 22,000 aeroplanes that we were to get to Europe this year will not be more that 300, as has been stated around this Chamber from time to time and if it is not to be more than 37 by the middle of the year, as stated on the floor of this Senate yesterday, tell the people so, and tell them why it is so. If they are to blame for the delay, tell them what to do and they will do it.

If the submarine is sinking the world's shipping faster than ships are being built, let the people know it. If they are to blame for the delay in shipbuilding, tell them how and they will bend every effort to meet this absolute need. If our soldiers and the people of the allied countries are threatened with starvation because we are not saving enough food for them, let the people know it and they will not only hasten and enlarge production but they will deny themselves to the limit. Make them feel that we must win by our own strength rather than through Germany's weakness and the response will be full and prompt. French statesmen do not hesitate to tell the world of their need and their extremity. Every citizen of this country should read the account of the address by the French high commissioner at Baltimore on the evening of March 18. The more we study it the more we feel the heroic suffering of France and begin to know what we must face. The French high commissioner does not hesitate because what he says may reach Germany. He wants to reach us; he must reach us if the French people are to be saved.

FRANCE MUST GET FOOD—TARDIEU PLEADS FOR INCREASED CEREAL SUPPLY FROM UNITED STATES—MANY LONG WITHOUT BREAD—ONLY ONE-THIRD OF INDISPENSABLE SUPPLY SENT OVER IN PAST THREE MONTHS, SAYS COMMISSIONER—HORSES REDUCED 50 PER CENT AND CATTLE SLAUGHTERED.

BALTIMORE, MD., March 18.

America must do more toward reducing the domestic consumption of cereals and increasing exports of that food to France, declared Andre Tardieu, French high commissioner to the United States, in an address he delivered here to-night before the Southern Commercial Congress.

"You must do it because it is a case of necessity, because it must be done," asserted M. Tardieu. "For these past three months our shipments of cereals from America to Europe have been short about one-third of the supply recognized as indispensable to strictly compressed needs."

The speaker was given an ovation by the diners, and his remarks concerning the need of food restriction made a profound impression.

BREAD CARD GIVES 10 OUNCES.

Summing up some of the economies of food practice in France, and to emphasize his request for more food from America, M. Tardieu said:

"You are aware that the French nation has always lived mostly on wheat bread. Our prewar consumption was 700,000 tons per month. Our present consumption has been now reduced to 530,000 tons, a reduction of about 25 per cent.

"Of course it was impossible to reduce to any great extent the bread ration of the soldier. That ration, which amounted in the first years of the war to about 25 ounces, has been progressively cut down to a little over 21 ounces.

"But, on the other hand, as regards the civilian population, we had to establish the individual bread card, allowing only about 10 ounces per day, which means barely the third part of the average daily bread consumption of the French peasant or workman before the war.

"Feeding of horses and cattle on cereals which could be used for the making of bread has been prohibited. This resulted in a decrease of 50 per cent in the number of horses in France and in an important reduction of our cattle.

"PROHIBIT ALL PASTRIES.

"We have radically suppressed, on the other hand, all flour-consuming industries. The manufacturing of biscuits and of pastry has been completely prohibited. Strict rules have been imposed on hotels and restaurants, namely, absolute suppression of fancy bread.

"I heard that some Americans, who were in France a few weeks ago, have been wondering why we have not kept the meatless days.

"This suppression of meatless days resulted from the lack of cereals for the cattle feeding, which involved the killing of cattle, and the killing of cattle was meant, on the other hand, to bring about a reduction in the human consumption of these same cereals. I may be allowed to add that of late my good friend, Mr. Hoover, insisted that as far as possible we ought to try to substitute the meat consumption for the consumption of these same cereals.

"We have reduced our sugar consumption by 49 per cent, our rice consumption by 61 per cent, our imports of dried vegetables have been reduced by 52 per cent, of oils and fats by 48 per cent.

"SOME DISTRICTS WITHOUT BREAD.

"The people who have imposed such sacrifices on themselves are a people who have kept fighting for almost four years; a people who have mobilized 7,000,000 men from a population which, excluding the invaded territories, does not exceed 35,000,000 inhabitants; a people whose women and children have taken the burden of industrial and agricultural work left by the men who joined the army; a people whose army lost over a million men in killed, over a million men in maimed; a people whose army, nevertheless, is still holding with an unconquerable steadfastness over two-thirds of the western front.

"Within the last weeks, despite the restrictive measures I have stated, there have been in France agricultural districts which had for days to put up with a complete, absolute deprivation of bread, which could not go on without endangering the physical and moral health of the nation.

"I am aware of what you have done in order to reduce your domestic consumption and to increase your exports; but you must do more. You must do it, for it is a case of necessity. You must do it because it can be done.

"We and our European allies—the British, the Italians—have been taught to suffer. Americans, who are now sharing our burden of blood and of death on the battle line, we are requesting you to share as well in the rear our burden of suffering. In order that you and we win the war, it is necessary that you here in America should all agree to a new effort and to new privations."

The Washington Post, in an editorial on this statement, says:

Whether the enemy is comforted by these facts or not, it is absolutely necessary that the people of the United States should not deceive themselves as to conditions in France. The first step toward giving effective aid is to know that aid is imperatively needed.

That is a truth that should have been uttered long ago and it should be followed by those in authority as to our own conditions.

We must put men on the battle line in western Europe. We must supply them with munitions, food, and clothing, and we must feed the allied nations. We must furnish ships to carry all these things to them and especially to our own armies. No one of these needs can be said to be more important than the other. To fail in one is to fail in all. From the time we entered the war the cry has been "ships, ships, and more ships." The allies have sent that cry across the sea. We have done much to meet it, it is true, but we should have done more and we must do more to win this war. Glowing accounts have been given out of ships built, of contracts let, of armies of workmen enrolled, and of millions of tons to be available, and to make assurance double sure we have been also told that submarine losses are falling off and that this danger is being overcome. What are the facts?

Listen! Oh, that every loyal citizen would listen to these facts and weigh over and over again their significance. In 1915 over 1,800,000 tons of shipping were sunk by the submarine. In 1916 over 3,400,000 tons were destroyed, and in 1917 over 9,100,000 tons fell a prey to this terrible weapon of destruction. In 1915, 685 ships sank beneath the waves, and in 1916, 1,310 disappeared, while in 1917 over 3,000 were the toll of the deadly torpedo. The average for January and February of this year is practically as high as for the preceding January and February.

Mr. President, I have read hastily the address delivered by the chairman of the Shipping Board last night. It is a very interesting address and it gives interesting information; but, Mr. President, I think it falls short of the great duty that rests upon the head of the Shipping Board to tell us not so much how we are progressing but what the enemy is doing to endanger our success in this war. It is all right to point out in glowing terms the difficulties that the Shipping Board has been confronted with, and what it has accomplished toward solving those difficulties, but it is more important to impress upon the people of this country what we must meet and what we must do in order to get our ships across the sea.

If there is any one impression that a citizen of this country would get from reading that address, to my mind, it is that things are in good shape; that we need not worry; that we are meeting the submarine; but, Mr. President, the fact is that if every ton of shipping that Mr. Hurley says is contracted for was built to-morrow, it would not replace the tonnage sunk last year by the submarine. That is what the people of this country must know; that is what Mr. Hurley and those in authority ought to give to them.

Oh, Mr. President, we need not worry about Germany knowing about this; they have come more nearly giving the facts with reference to the sinking of ships to our people than we have done or the allies have done. Oh, Mr. President, must this democracy in the conduct of this war depend upon autocratic Germany, its enemy, to get the facts with reference to what is being done? Mr. President, why is it that we get news from Germany with reference to our boys at the front before our own people give it to us? Why is it that 48 hours before we knew it from our own sources Germany had told us that American engineers had been captured on the battle line in Europe? Why is it that for 48 hours our officials were giving out to our people that these were Canadians? Why is it, Mr. President, that 48 hours ago Germany told the people of this country that American soldiers had been met in this, the greatest of the world's conflicts, and that they had been driven back; and why is it that for 48 hours our representatives have been telling the people of our country that our men were not on the firing line, and this morning comes the dispatch from Gen. Haig that American troops are fighting shoulder to shoulder with the French and English?

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. I will ask him if he believes everything he hears reported from German sources?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No, Mr. President; I do not. But when the German reports are verified hours and days afterwards, then it is a strange thing to me that our own people, who control the cable lines and the telegraph lines, do not give us the facts themselves. That is all I am complaining about, that we do not get the facts. I want the people of this country to have the facts. Why? Because I believe it is the best thing; because I believe it will be better for us in carrying on this world contest; I believe it will inspire and nerve the American people to make the sacrifices that are absolutely necessary if we are going to do our part in winning this great struggle. But as to our shipping: With the demands upon it much greater, the world's shipping has diminished since the war began from twelve to fifteen million tons. What are we doing to offset this terrible destruction? Last year, with nearly 10,000,000 tons sunk, the world built only about 4,000,000 tons.

Senators, I want to impress that fact on you, that with all the progress that we can hope to make in building ships, it will be almost the fall of 1919 before we will be building ships as fast as the submarine is sinking them, if it keeps up its deadly work.

This year the world will not build more than 6,000,000 tons, if it does that; and if the submarine keeps on its deadly work through this year as it did last, we will be short a further 3,000,000 or 4,000,000 tons that are so much needed. Building in English and American shipyards is not progressing and has not progressed as it should. Deliveries are behind the contracts, and if the submarine keeps up its work as heretofore, we can not hope to equal its destruction before the fall of 1919, with the greater part of this year's production not coming available until the last of this year.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of California in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator has stated that we would probably produce—and I presume he means to include the allies—6,000,000 tons in 1918.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; the tonnage produced by the world—not more than that.

Mr. McCUMBER. Well, what tonnage is the Senator giving—gross tons?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; dead-weight tons.

Mr. McCUMBER. But the Senator has already stated that the world lost in 1917 nearly 10,000,000 tons.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I referred to dead-weight tons. The tons I am giving are dead-weight tons all the way through.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then, I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that he is in error.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I venture to say my figures are not too low.

Mr. McCUMBER. No, indeed; they are not; but the Senator has misread the tonnage given by the British Admiralty as dead-weight tonnage, when, as a matter of fact, it is gross tonnage. The gross tonnage sunk since the beginning of the war up to the present time is more than 13,000,000, which amounts to about 16,000,000 dead-weight tons; so that the Senator in giving the probable construction of 1918 in dead-weight tons and comparing it with gross tonnage is making a comparison that is not altogether fair. If he would give it in gross tons, he would find that we will not construct—and when I say "we" I mean this country and our allies—more than 4,000,000 gross tons in 1918, even according to the most roseate estimates that have been made, and not 6,000,000 tons.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am giving my figures in dead-weight tons, and I am taking my figures from statements made by our officials. They may be too low; I am afraid they are; but, as low as they are or as high as they are in some directions, they are bad enough; they make the outlook dark enough and are enough to inspire our people to greater effort. I am inclined to think the figures given by the Senator from North Dakota are nearer the actual facts, nearer the cold truth, but I am trying to be conservative in this matter.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will allow me, I take these figures from the British Admiralty figures which were published March 21, 1918, and the British reports are always in gross tons, and it is so stated: The gross tonnage lost in 1914 was 681,363; in 1915, 1,724,720; in 1916, 2,797,866; and in 1917, 6,623,623, making a total of 11,827,572 gross tons, nearly 12,000,000 gross tons; and that multiplied by 1.65 would give you your dead-weight tonnage, which would amount to about fifteen and a half million tons.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; more than 18,000,000 tons.

Mr. McCUMBER. And that is the real loss.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am glad to have those figures given. We will get the truth by-and-by; and the truth, I fear, will be nearer the figures of the Senator from North Dakota than my figures. My figures are, in round numbers, the official figures of the officials of our own Government.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MYERS. If the outlook is as bad and black and ominous as the Senator says——

Mr. JONES of Washington. Well, it is.

Mr. MYERS (continuing). If we are tottering and staggering on the verge of defeat and facing certain defeat, what good is accomplished by proclaiming it and dwelling upon it and spreading such disheartening doctrine to the people of our country?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, Mr. President, this is not disheartening doctrine. This is presenting to the people of this country the facts, and that is what they need. That is what they have not been getting.

Mr. MYERS rose.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I can not yield to the Senator.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to ask one more question: What are we to do about it?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish the Senator would ask a question relating to the facts. I am simply giving facts. The Senator can draw his own conclusion from the facts. The Senator may not agree with me that it is wise to give these facts to the people. I believe that it is the highest patriotism to do it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator what remedy he has to suggest? Criticism accomplishes nothing unless you suggest a remedy.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am going to come right to that in just a few moments.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will just say right here, that one of the best remedies is for the people in authority to tell the people of the country what the condition is, and what they must do and ought to do in order to remedy it, and then the people will do it.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to ask what the people can do?

Mr. JONES of Washington. If there is anything wrong with labor in our shipyards, let them know what is needed of them, and they will do it. No man can question the patriotism of the labor of this country. When they know what is required of them in order to win this struggle and save the world from autocracy and militarism you can depend upon them to do that, but as long as you tell them that everything is all right, that things are coming along well, that we are building ships faster than the submarine is destroying them, that everything is doing finely, they will take their days off; they will not work any harder than they feel that it is necessary to work.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I should like to ask, What can the people do? What is there that they can do?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, Mr. President, it is not so much what the people can do; it is what administrative officers ought to do to let the people know what must be done. When the people know it, then they will do it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. They tell them every day.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Arizona says that they tell them every day. I have not been able to find it yet, and I read this speech of Mr. Hurley, for whom I have the highest regard and the highest opinion. I believe he is doing splendid work with the shipbuilding program. I have not any criticism to make with reference to that; but I think that if Mr. Hurley would tell the people just exactly what the situation is and what is needed, he would not have any trouble about getting a response from the people of this country.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Did he not do that last night?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; he did not.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, let me read to the Senator just a line or two with respect to what was said.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, I have the speech right here.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I want the Senator to answer the very questions that are propounded here.

Mr. JONES of Washington. All right.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Here is what Mr. Hurley said:

When we took hold we found there was no shipyard in existence with which we could place an order.

Seventy per cent of the space in old yards was taken by the enlarged naval program; the remainder by private concerns.

There were 37 steel shipyards when we began. We have located 81 additional yards, and 18 others are being expanded.

We are building 235 new shipways, or 26 more than exist now in all the shipyards of England.

One concern in Seattle laid the keel of an 8,800-ton vessel, and it was launched in 64 days, and it made a voyage on January 14.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator is going to read all of the speech, I hope he will not do it in my time.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Here is just a summary of four or five lines more.

Mr. JONES of Washington. All right.

Mr. SHAFROTH (reading)—

It made a voyage on January 14.

The total of our steel construction on March 1 was 8,205,708 dead-weight tons, of which 3,045,408 were requisitioned.

Of this amount of tonnage, 28 per cent has been completed——

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SHAFROTH (continuing)—

This in addition to building our shipyards.

There are 332 wooden shipbuilding ways, which, added to the steel shipways, gives us a total of 739 berths for ships.

Mr. President, when you consider that we had nothing to begin with, that it was difficult to get men, that it was almost impossible to hire men, and is almost impossible yet to hire them, I say the record which has been made by this board is something that it seems to me is unequaled in the shipbuilding history of the entire world.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Why, Mr. President, declamation will not win this war.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Well, if it will not, why do we get it from that side of the Chamber?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Declamation will not meet the submarine's ravages. No questions are asked there to answer. That is simply a statement of what has been done. I am not questioning the facts that the Senator has read. I have not impugned them. Confess them all, for the sake of the argument. What impression does that give to the people? The very impression that I think is wrong. It gives to the people the impression that we are getting along all right; that we are able to meet the submarine. You will not find anywhere within the pages of that speech any statement with reference to the losses caused by the submarine; and I said a moment ago that granting the construction of every ton of shipping that Mr. Hurley says we have under contract—over 8,000,000 tons—still the submarines sank last year more than that.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. How are we going to stop that? The Senator says declamation will not help win the war. If declamation will not help us, why do we have it?

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from North Dakota rose first. I will yield to him, and then I will yield to the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to ask the Senator from Colorado what construction he places upon the words which he read from the speech of Mr. Hurley, quoting him:

> The total of our steel construction on March 1 was 8,205,708 deadweight tons.

Does the Senator mean to say that Mr. Hurley intended to convey to the American people the impression that we had actually constructed 8,205,708 tons of shipping?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No, Mr. President. It says there exactly what was done.

> The total of our steel construction on March 1 was 8,205,708 deadweight tons, of which 3,045,408 was requisitioned.

That is what it means.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then, that would leave a balance of 5,160,300 deadweight tons. Does the Senator contend that Mr. Hurley intended to convey to the American people the impression that we had actually constructed, outside of the requisitioned vessels, 5,160,300 tons of shipping?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I do not know what Mr. Hurley understood.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am asking the Senator——

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator asked me what Mr. Hurley understood. I do not know what he understood.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; I am asking what the Senator understands. What construction does the Senator put upon those words?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I put upon those words the construction that there are now in course of construction, completed in many respects, some of them, and some of them not, 8,205,708 tons of shipping.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then, why did not the Senator say that there are contracts out to construct that many ships? The Senator knows as well as I do——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I did not say anything. I simply read the statement that is made here. That is what I have read.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; and gave a wrong impression to the Senate. The Senate would draw from that statement the impression that there had been actually constructed that many million tons, when, as a matter of fact, there have been just two ships of less than 20,000 tons constructed and put afloat and in use.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, here is a statement which shows that enormous progress is being made in the line of shipbuilding. I do not care how many ships are being constructed if we are making as much progress as it is possible to make. That is the object and the purpose of this board, and that is what they are endeavoring to do. When a board takes hold of conditions where there are hardly any yards available, where nearly everything is being constructed for private ownership, where everything in the way of construction is occupied and can not be obtained, and yards have to be built, of course, it can not do this in a minute. It is mighty easy for a person by his hindsight to say what should have been done, and if our foresight were as good as our hindsight no doubt some errors would be corrected. But, Mr. President, the test as to whether this Government is doing things well is the test as to how the men are working, and if they are working faithfully and honestly and doing their very best in the matter then they ought to be free from criticism; and the criticism, instead of doing good, will do us harm.

What has England done during this time? What has France done during this time?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, Mr. President, I can not yield for a speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington has the floor.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to finish my statement with another quotation from the address that was just quoted by the Senator from Colorado?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will yield to the Senator to do that, because I take it that it is in answer to what the Senator read a moment ago.

Mr. McCUMBER. He also stated:

> Of this total steel construction 2,121,568 deadweight tons, or approximately 28 per cent, has been completed.

What do the American people understand from that? I know that Mr. Hurley did not intend to be understood as saying that 28 per cent of this shipping had been completed. What he really intended to say, and what he did say in his explanation thereafter, was that we had progressed to the extent of 28 per cent of what would be required to complete those contracts; but we have not put out a single ship under them, except two ships that have already been set afloat.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I now yield to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON]. He wanted to ask the Senator from Colorado a question, and I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. KENYON. No, Mr. President. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] asked a question as to what we were doing, or what we could do. I want to bear my testimony to the fact that we are doing tremendous work to end the submarine peril. The American Navy has cooperated with the British Navy, and is sending the submarines to the bottom about as fast as the enemy can make them; and our Navy has done great work.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am agreeably surprised at that contribution to this oratory. It seems to me a little higher and a little more American than this constant criticism.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I do not permit the Senator from Arizona to question my Americanism in connection with this matter.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not question the Senator's Americanism——

Mr. JONES of Washington. Well, I do not want any suggestions of that kind.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona (continuing). But I question the Americanism of his speech.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, there is more Americanism in my speech than there is in the suggestion of the Senator from Arizona that the truth be concealed, in my judgment. I may be wrong, and the Senator from Arizona may be right, but he is not any more patriotic than I am.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am more silent in the way of criticism.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Arizona has not any more of a patriotic purpose than I have. The Senator can not find, in the remarks that I have made, any criticism of the Shipping Board, or of the work that it has done. I defy him to find it there.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am not speaking of that, if the Senator pleases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington has the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I know it; and the Senator from Washington has not——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Arizona desires to interrupt, he will address the Chair Then permission will be accorded by the Senator from Washington for any further remarks.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am acquainted with that rule and have never violated it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair was laboring under the delusion that it was just violated, but he may have been in error.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I have seen the present occupant of the chair do the same thing on the floor.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have studiously and carefully avoided making a criticism against the Shipping Board and its work, but I have stated the facts which I think they ought to state to the American people. I admit that they have done great things. I was going to say it if the Senators had not interrupted me; but what I am calling attention to is the fact that in my judgment the officials of this Government are not giving the facts to the people that would nerve the people and spur them on to do more. I do not say that it is the fault of the Shipping Board that more ships have not been built. I will have my say with reference to the work of the Shipping Board when the time comes for the committee that is investigating it to make its report. I am not criticizing it now.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. Just a moment. I am not discussing the great patriotic work of the Navy, as suggested by the Senator from Iowa. He can not surpass me in praise and admiration of it. It can whip its equal of anything afloat that it can get at. Nobody questions the effectiveness of the Navy or its hearty, loyal cooperation with the navies of our allies. But, Mr. President, whether they are sinking the submarines faster than they are being built or not, the fact is that the submarine is sinking the world's shipping almost twice as fast as it is being built, and it is doing it to-day; and that fact ought to spur the American laborer and the American capitalist and the American people to redouble their efforts, under the control and direction of the Shipping Board, to build more ships, so that as the Navy sinks the submarine the world's shipping may grow and increase to carry our troops.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. WATSON. The Senator has said that he has not offered, nor has he to offer, any criticism of the Shipping Board. I should like to ask him whether it is not a fact that they quarreled for four months, and something over——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not care to go into that at this time.

Mr. WATSON (continuing). Four precious months, as to whether they should build wooden ships or steel ships, and as to whether Gen. Goethals or Mr. Denman should have his way about it, taking almost six months of precious time, with nothing accomplished?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I do not care to go into that. I did not intend to do anything of that kind in my address. It is not my purpose to criticize the Shipping Board. I have carefully prepared my remarks so as not to do that. I will say here that I believe the Shipping Board is doing its utmost to meet the situation; and if I have any fault to find at this time, it is just what I have said—that they are not telling the American people the real facts and the real conditions and problems that they have got to meet in order to win this war. That was the sole purpose of my address, and I am not going off into these other matters. That applies to all the department and bureau heads as much as to them.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a suggestion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. KING. The Senator adverted a moment ago to labor, and stated that——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am not going into details about that.

Mr. KING. I was just about to make this observation——

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well.

Mr. KING. The Senator indicated that he hoped that labor and capital would do their duty. I was sincerely desirous that the Senate would conjure labor, in view of the fact that we have had nearly 4,000 strikes during the past year, to address itself earnestly to the pressing necessities of the hour.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am not going into that phase of the matter at this time. Even if I grant—and I simply do it for the sake of the argument—the suggestion of the Senator from Utah, I am satisfied that it will be remedied if the Shipping Board will come to labor and tell labor of the danger that confronts us and of the need for it to put forth every effort—to work overtime in order to meet this danger. Labor will respond when labor knows what is needed and required of it.

Mr. President, when I was interrupted I was just going to say this: I saw my good friend from Minnesota here a moment ago, but he has gone; but I know his intense patriotism, and I was going to say this: I know my loyal, brave, intensely American friend the Senator from Minnesota will not admit that we are not going to curb the submarine. I hope to God we will, but it is not safe to count on that. Let us take the situation at its worst and redouble our efforts to meet it.

Now, I wish my friends would listen to what I intended to say when they got so anxious.

We are doing better. Things are running more smoothly. The investigation that we have conducted has done a great deal of good. It has spurred them to activity, and I think they feel we are trying to help them and not hinder; that we are not captious, but that we are trying to be helpful, and they are showing a desire for cooperation. And, right in that connection, Mr. President, I am going to refer to one or two matters that have been accomplished by this investigation. I know that some of the people in the country criticized Congress for investigating these different things. They say we ought not to be doing it; that it is hampering the Government. I venture to say that there is not a Senator on any committee that has been conducting any of these investigations that will not admit that every one of them has done great good and has made the Government stronger and more efficient to-day than it was when these investigations began.

Just as an illustration, contracts have been let much more promptly since this investigation began than they were before. There were applications pending from my State for contracts for the building of wooden ships, and this I know about personally. They were not acted upon. They had been before the Shipping Board a long time, with no action taken. I do not blame anybody; I am simply calling attention to the fact.

When this investigation was started and these matters were called to my attention I asked Mr. Hurley about them before the committee, and within two days I had an answer, stating that these contracts would be let. That was well, and other contracts have been acted on in the same way. I do not say that Mr. Hurley was to blame for the delay in connection with those contracts. Mr. Hurley was comparatively new at this work. I do not say that anybody especially was to blame, because these contracts had not been acted upon; the board has had a tremendous job to do. It is a fact, however, that they had not been acted upon, and it is a fact that they were acted upon promptly when the matter was called to their attention before the committee.

Again, Mr. President, what is the situation about contracts for wooden ships? We have been urging their construction. We need every ship that we can build. Mr. Hurley says that in his statement given to the committee. He says they are going to get every ship that can be built—steel and wood. We have the timber and the wood on the Pacific coast, but what is the report now? The report is that no more contracts for wooden ships will be let that involve the construction of new ways. There are shipbuilding companies on Puget Sound that are building ships for the Government that are doing the work satisfactorily. One company says, "If you will let us have the contracts, we will build five additional ways and put in the water 10 more ships this year," but they will not let the contracts. Why? It was stated a few days ago by a high official of the Shipping Board that they would not let these contracts because they did not know whether or not they would have engines to put in the ships when they are built.

My God, Mr. President! Is it possible that the people of this country can not build engines and machinery as fast as they can build ships? If that is the case, then we are in a bad way; but I do not believe that that is correct. I believe that we can marshal the laborers and the mechanics of this country, organize and mobilize our power and our skill and our labor to man every ship that is built and to build many more ships.

What do my people say? They say that if the Shipping Board will determine upon a definite program of building ships Oregon and Washington can furnish the lumber and the labor for 450 wooden ships every year, and they can do it. There is no doubt about it. I hope the board will soon adopt such a program. No one will criticize them for taking any reasonable risk in making contracts for ships in this hour of the Nation's need, but they will be criticized if they don't get the ships they could get.

We have done great things in the shipbuilding development. We have not done the best we could. When I say that I do not say it in criticism of the Shipping Board. It is more in criticism of the people of the country who have not responded to our needs as they should, because they did not know them.

We have not done the best we could, but grant that we have done much the needs are greater now than ever before. Our own needs are greater, the needs of the allies are greater. We need more patriotic and unselfish "know how," we need more energetic, faithful work, more earnest, faithful, patriotic workers, looking only to the performance of their task and a victory for our cause and country. Let those in charge of the work and who know the details and the needs tell the people frankly what is lacking or what is needed in the shipbuilding plants, in the engine-producing plants, and elsewhere and our people will do it. Trust the people. Have confidence in them. They will overlook mistakes honestly made.

I want to say to the Senator from Colorado there are mistakes, mistakes in action, mistakes in policy that I know are honestly and patriotically made, and I will never criticize them except to help correct them. The people will withhold harsh criticism in this hour of stress, but they will not condone hurtful and timorous concealment of real needs. They will not take boasting or self-glorification for genuine performance. Let department heads stop telling of what they think they are doing and do what ought to be done. The people will find out and give due credit for whatever may be accomplished.

Not only are we not building ships fast enough but we are not able to equip them as fast as we could build them. Not only is the present supply of foodstuffs very low but the prospects for the future are dark and full of danger to us and the allies. We are failing in aeroplanes. Steel is slow in delivery. Engines and machinery are lacking. We must follow Germany's course and coordinate our industries to one end and aim—the prosecution of this war. We have the man power, if properly directed and used, to meet all these needs.

Now, let me tell the Senator from Colorado what I would do if we keep falling behind, if we do not come up with ships, machinery, food, fuel, and munitions. If this man power will not apply itself it should be applied by the Government. We have taken the flower of the land to fight and to die. If those at home will not work and sacrifice to support them they will have to be made to do so. It may not be opportune, we may not be ready for it, but I would vote to-morrow to take every man and woman in this country between the ages of 18 and 60 years and assign them to that work where they are most needed, regardless of what they are now doing.

That is no proposal to conscript labor. I would not conscript labor as such. If we are to have conscription outside of the Army it must be the conscription of every man and every woman, no matter what their occupation or work may be, without fear or favor. This ought not to be necessary. It may not be necessary if the people can realize what must be done. Oh, that some tongue of fire could arouse them to the needs of the hour. I wish the President of the United States would come to us not to interpret the thought of the people but to tell them the needs of the hour and point out our duty to the boys at the front and to the Nation. What he would say the papers would print, the people would read, and the response would be prompt and full.

Not only should we know the facts at home but we must not minimize the situation abroad.

Let us not deceive ourselves. Let us weigh these facts carefully to determine what is necessary. Germany is in a better position to-day than ever. She has conquered Russia and Roumania and forced from them a humiliating peace. Her eastern armies are free to act to the south or on the west as they see fit. They can strike when and where they will. Oil and minerals will soon be available to them in abundance. Within six months the menace of starvation will be over. The granaries of eastern Europe will be open to her without fear of interruption. They feel that they are victorious. This is the critical time for us and the allies. If we can win the war this year it will save us years of war, billions of money, and thousands of lives. If this war is won for us, we must win it, and we must do it before the allies are defeated. I am no military genius, but unless we exert our utmost power I see the possibility that the Salonikan army may be destroyed; Italy may be overwhelmed; France, brave and glorious France, may be brought to her knees; England, proud and tenacious, may be compelled to accept peace; and our brave boys may be confronted 3,000 miles from their base of supplies by the conqueror of Europe.

Then we will wake up, but it will be too late. Our Army will be lost. The peace imposed upon us will dim the glories of the past and be a perpetual humiliation for the future, all because we have failed to do our duty. What shame, humiliation, sorrow, and regret will go with us to our dying day if our boys come home defeated and disgraced and point their fingers at us and say: "We did our best but we failed. We were defeated because you failed to keep us supplied with what we needed to bring victory." Then indeed will we call upon the hills and mountains to fall upon us. Then indeed will we wish that we had never been born.

This possibility emphasizes to me what we are fighting for and what the issue is that demands the sacrifice of so much wealth and noble manhood upon a foreign soil. We did not go into this war in the interest of the world. We did not go into it in the interest of Europe. We did not go into it to restore ancient boundaries nor to avenge the wrongs of foreign peoples. We went into this war for America. We went into it for the United States. We went into it for our own people. We went into this war to defend and maintain the rights of American citizens, to uphold the Nation's sovereignty, and to deserve the respect of the peoples of the earth. All these things are at stake now, and more. The very essence of our national life is in danger. The Pilgrim Fathers braved unknown dangers and death for the right to live the life they wanted to live. The priceless right to live and be governed in their own way carried Washington and his devoted band through the sufferings of Valley Forge to the glorious victory at Yorktown, and burst in full fruition at Gettysburg and Appomattox. We are threatened with the loss of that priceless heritage. The right to live our own national life in our own way is the issue at stake on the western battle line in Europe. It is more precious to us now than it was in the past, because it is enriched by the sacrifices, courage, and blood of those whose fame will never die. That right will be preserved. It must be preserved. Our people will preserve it no matter what the cost may be, and in preserving it for ourselves we will preserve it for a liberty-seeking world and the humanity of all time.

Mr. President, this is what our boys are fighting and dying for. May we nerve and cheer them by showing to them that the soul of this people is aroused; that we will make any sacrifice; that we will endure any privation; that we will forget self and forego gain; and that every resource and every ounce of the Nation's power is behind them until victory crowns their efforts, ennobles their sacrifices, and rewards their valor. Let the German people know that we hold them our enemies so long as they sustain and uphold a system that would impose upon us the burdens, the dangers, the brutality, and autocracy of militarism, and that we will wage this war with all our energy, with all our resources, with all our manhood, and with all our power until we are safe and secure from the dangers of that awful curse to freedom, liberty, and individual happiness and national life.

Mr. President, we have put our hand to the plow; we must go to the end of the furrow. If militarism is not destroyed abroad it will be enthroned at home. The issue is worth all the cost. Every resource and activity of our people must be directed to the production of food, fuel, clothing, guns, ammunition, war equipment, aeroplanes, naval vessels, railroad transportation, and ships, manned and equipped. The one supreme thought, purpose, and aim must be to wage this war. Let capital give up its gain and labor forego its reward. Let self be forgotten and personal ends forsaken until we are forever free from the danger and threat from within or without of militarism.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I should like to have the Secretary report the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRANCE in the chair). It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, under the heading "Suppressing liquor traffic," the House text reads:

SUPPRESSING LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

For the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors among Indians, $150,000.

At this point in the bill the committee proposes to insert the following:

Provided, That the sale of anhalonium or peyote to an Indian, or its introduction into the Indian country, shall be, and is hereby, declared to be a violation of the acts of July 23, 1892 (27 Stat. L., p. 260), and January 30, 1897 (29 Stat. L., p. 506), and punishable in accordance with the penalties provided for therein.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question for information? I anticipate a point of order against the amendment; in fact, three or four Senators have told me that they are going to make a point of order on this particular provision. I have been looking over the matter during the last hour, and I fear it is subject to a point of order. A point of order is not debatable. I ask permission, therefore, to include in the RECORD certain matter found at the bottom of page 7 and the top of page 8 of the committee's report, and also a letter from Dr. Wiley and some of the testimony from the Smithsonian Institution in reference to the drug called peyote. I ask that permission because I could not ask it after the point of order is made, as it would not be debatable.

Mr. OWEN. I now make my point of order and submit for the RECORD the following letter in justification of it.

Mr. ASHURST. Let me ask the Senator, Is the letter a petition of the Osage Tribe?

Mr. OWEN. No; it is from the Arapahoe, Cheyenne, Kiowa, and Comanche Tribes.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Arizona submitted a mass of material that I think he ought to have summarized and told those of us who know very little about this matter exactly what the argument on that side has been. The Senator from Oklahoma offers a paper. I ask that that paper be read, whatever it may be.

Mr. OWEN. I shall be pleased to have it read. It is a letter from these Indians asking that this legislation be not passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 23, 1918.

To the Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN,
United States Senate:

The undersigned delegates, representing the Arapahoe, Cheyenne, Kiowa, and Comanche Tribes of Indians in the State of Oklahoma, hereby respectfully present to you, and through you to the Oklahoma delegation in Congress, Senators and Representatives, their petition requesting the Oklahoma delegation to regard the wishes of our tribes in the matter of pending legislation on the use of peyote.

The people of our respective tribes believe that the use of peyote is not only harmless but that it is positively beneficial to us, and that the prohibition of its use by Congress would be a sad misfortune to our people.

Therefore we ask that when the bill relating to this subject is brought up for consideration in the Senate and in the House of Representatives the wishes of our tribes will be given due consideration by you, and that, if consistent with your judgment, the pending bill be opposed.

Very respectfully,

JOCK BULL BEAR,
CLEAVER WARDEN,
PAUL BOYNTON,
Arapahoe Delegates.
REUBEN TAYLOR,
JOE WILLIAMS,
CHIEF LITTLE HAND (his X mark),
JOS. MIGUEL,
Cheyenne Delegates.
J. W. WALDO,
CHARLEY JACKSON (his X mark),
KIOWA CHARLEY (his X mark),
Kiowa Delegates.
WILBUR PEAWO,
Comanche Delegate.

Mr. ASHURST. I will ask the Senator from Oklahoma to withhold the point of order just long enough to have read a letter from Dr. Wiley on this subject. It is a very short letter, and I ask that it be read.

Mr. OWEN. I withhold the point of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the letter sent to the desk by the Senator from Arizona.

The Secretary read as follows:

FEBRUARY 6, 1918.

DEAR SENATOR ASHURST: I have just been called on the phone and told that a hearing is to be held before your committee this afternoon on the subject of peyote or mescal button.

I made some investigations of this deadly drug a few years ago by administering it to one of my assistants, Mr. E. E. Ewell, who consented to make the trial. Mr. Ewell is now dead, so could not be called as a witness.

I am suffering from a very severe cold and can not appear before your committee in person. I desire, however, to make an earnest plea to your committee to prohibit the use of this insidious drug among the American Indians. It is driving many of them to ruin. Its effects may be compared in some particulars to those of cocaine. It causes the victim, who becomes semiconscious, to have the most wonderful sensations of delight and pleasure, especially through the visions of flowers, sunshine, and verdure, which rise before him. The intoxication lasts from 24 to 48 hours and then gradually passes away. During its continuation the person is totally unfit for any useful purpose. It is a typically habit-forming drug, and to those who indulge in it the desire for its use becomes uncontrollable. The active principle is probably a resin or a glucoside. It probably is of the same nature of the poison in Indian hemp. Its use can no more be regarded in the light of a religious rite than that of alcohol, morphine, or cocaine. Its entire prohibition would conserve the financial, physical, mental, and spiritual welfare of the Indians.

I ask you to read this letter to your committee and to have it appear in its proceedings.

Respectfully, H. W. WILEY.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. ASHURST. I send to the desk and ask, without reading, that the report of the committee on this subject, found at the bottom of page 7 and the top of page 8, be included in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Arizona is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SUPPRESSION OF LIQUOR TRAFFIC (GRATUITY).

Estimate, $150,000, and allowed by House and the committee.

Two amendments have been added to the House provision, one prohibiting the sale of "peyote" to an Indian, or its introduction into Indian country, and the other making possession by a person of intoxicating liquors in the Indian country, where prohibited by treaty or Federal statute, an offense.

Respecting "peyote" or anhalonium, some of the Indians seem to regard the use of this herb or plant as sedative and not harmful and others object to its prohibition upon the ground that it is used by the Indian as a part of his religious ceremonies. The weight of the testimony heard before your committee seems to justify its exclusion from the Indian reservations, because its effect is harmful. It appears to be a dried bean, round in shape, and is smoked, eaten, or taken as a potation when made into a liquor or tea. Some written objections to this provision prohibiting its use appear in the record of the committee hearings. Several briefs and arguments against the use of the drug and justifying the amendment are incorporated in the committee's hearings.

In the Indian appropriation act approved May 18, 1916, Congress provided that—

"The possession by a person of intoxicating liquors in the country where the introduction is prohibited by treaty or Federal statute shall be prima facie evidence of unlawful introduction."

This legislation has helped very much in this important work, but we are often confronted in the prosecution of these cases with the defense that the liquor was found or purchased from some one within such territory, and therefore no action can be taken because the real offender is not known. This plea is oftentimes without foundation, but it is impossible to rebut same. It therefore becomes necessary to make more stringent the law on this subject.

The Indians in Oklahoma, and especially at Osage, have considerable funds, and because of their wealth and the valuable oil and gas lands it becomes necessary to protect them to the fullest extent against intoxicating liquors. Intoxicants are often used for the purpose of debauching the Indian and to procure his signature to a lease or deed of or to valuable land. With legislation indicated making it an offense to have liquor in possession within the Indian country, this traffic would be reduced to a minimum and it would afford greater protection to the Indians.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the point of order presented for the determination of the Chair?

Mr. SHAFROTH obtained the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. I am willing to leave the point of order to the determination of the Chair. If the Senator from Colorado will pardon me, as he has been recognized, the question whether the sale to Indians or the introduction into Indian country of a certain substance called peyote should be prohibited is one that has been before the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs a number of years. In this bill the Senate committee, after voluminous hearings, included a provision that this drug, sometimes called peyote, or anhalonium, should not be imported into Indian "country."

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me for a moment?

Mr. ASHURST. I have not the floor; I am speaking in the time of the Senator from Colorado. I will yield if I can do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. The question I wanted to propound is this: We are trying to conserve the health and the lives of the Indians. It is a phrase that is frequently used, that they are the wards of the Nation. Am I correctly informed when I am told that this particular drug is so intoxicating that it inflames the brains of the Indians and is even worse than whisky, for instance?

Mr. ASHURST. The testimony shows that this drug is sometimes eaten like dry tobacco. Peyote grows on a small cactus plant. It is eaten or it may be brewed into a tea and drunk as a potation. The point of difference, or the line of cleavage, as to prohibiting its use arises in this way: Most of the Indians that use it, as far as I am able to learn, use it in the nature of a sacrament at some of their religious ceremonies. It is not used as is tobacco; it is not used as is alcoholic liquor by the American people; but it seems to be used by the Indians as a sort of sacrament in some religious function, some religious rite.

The testimony seems to be conclusive that the drug, when drunk as a potation or when taken in the dry leaf or button, produces a most agreeable and felicitous state of feeling, a rapturous delight on the part of the one who takes it; that is to say, to a person filled with peyote a cloud that in fact was dark would turn into a rosy sunset of pastelle shades, and a mountain of insignificant proportions would become one of gigantic proportions and of symmetrical outline. In other words, peyote produces an exhilaration of imagination, followed by a nervous reaction that sinks the patient into sullen gloom.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator know whether or not they use it at the snake dances?

Mr. ASHURST. No; I am not aware that it is used at the snake dance, unless it be that it is made into a potation and drunk at or during that ceremony.

Your committee took the view that the use of this drug should not be allowed if possible to prevent it. Your committee took the view that this drug should not be allowed to be imported into the Indian country. Your committee felt that the sale of peyote to Indians should be prohibited. In my judgment, from a practical standpoint, it is almost impossible to prevent the Indians from using it, because it grows on our side of the Rio Grande and we can not prevent the Indian from gathering it. He knows where it grows, and how you can prevent him from secretly gathering, drying, and using it I do not know.

Our amendment does not penalize an Indian for gathering and using it. It simply penalizes the sale of peyote to the Indians or the importation of it into the Indian country.

Mr. OWEN. At the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Colorado I shall renew the point of order on parliamentary grounds, not on the grounds of health or other consideration.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I have been astonished at the course of the discussion in this Chamber during the proceedings of yesterday and to-day. I must say that I do not like the criticisms that have been made, because I think they are unfair. I do not think they are made in the spirit which should animate a Senator of the United States in this crisis. It seems to me these attacks are prompted by passion little short of madness.

Mr. President, it must be remembered that the United States was not a warlike Nation at the beginning of this war. We had lived in peace. Our people were opposed to enormous armies. Ever since the Civil War there had been a continued policy to hold the size of our Army down to the minimum and to prevent every effort to enlarge it. We did not at that time realize that any nation would willfully disregard our rights on the high seas or ever attempt to destroy those rights. We believed nations were honest in their intentions and in their purposes, and, consequently, when this war came upon us we were not prepared. We could not have been prepared except through action of Congress in the various matters of legislation that were necessary to change our settled policy years in advance of the time of present need.

When on the 6th of April, 1917, we declared a state of war existed between the United States and Germany there was begun the most tremendous task of equipping our Army and Navy, and in every way making ready for this great struggle. Contracts of hitherto unimagined dimensions, involving expenditure of most stupendous amounts, were made. Because the terms of some of those contracts have not completely been carried out are our officers to be held up to ridicule and scorn? Is it possible that men will not recognize that it is only elementary justice to accord commendation and encouragement to officers who are giving the very best that is in them, and that to withhold condemnation is a duty?

A great uproar has been voiced over the delay in aeroplane construction. It was repeated yesterday time and again that about 20,000 aeroplanes, or a very large number, were to be finished by the 1st day of July of this year, but that their completion had been delayed 90 days. Senators have had experience with contracts, they have had experience in building, and they know it is most difficult ever to get a contract performed in the time that the agreement prescribes.

Is it to be contended that because a contractor can not comply with his covenant the officer of the Government who is straining every nerve to complete the war equipment must be blamed for it? What is there fair in a contention of that kind, and what result does it bring? What is the remedy proposed? There is no remedy proposed. The officers are doing the very best they can, and when they are doing that we should commend them.

Mr. President, we know that the steel plants at the beginning of the war were crowded with orders. We know that minerals even could not be found that were necessary to go into the construction of the metal parts of aeroplanes. We know that the wood for the frames was still growing in the virgin forests. When contractors undertook to manufacture this large number by the 1st of July the only expectation that could reasonably be entertained was that they would use every effort and every endeavor to accomplish that result. It is said that in order to get the proper timber in sufficient quantity for the aeroplanes and ships it was necessary to build railroads to the forests to cut the timber, after which it had to be seasoned and prepared for use.

Is it to be the rule that where the contractor failed or where delay was encountered in procuring material that officers are to be held up to scorn? What is the object of criticism of that kind? It is that those in authority must be removed. That is the only logical conclusion to be deduced.

Those who know Secretary Baker know that he is an incessant worker; they know that he works day and night upon the problems constantly arising and pressing upon him for solution. Mr. President, we know that at night in the War Department there are hundreds of persons diligently working to hasten these contracts and to carry forward the multifarious undertakings designed to furnish our Nation with a proper military equipment. It is but just and proper that we show consideration for the official who refuses to be swept off his feet and demand time when it is available before rendering a weighty decision.

Suppose it is decided to build wooden ships. Instantly there is criticism. It is declared to be an economic waste to build wooden ships when steel ships are the only ones which should be constructed. When the question arises as to whether a certain type of ship should be built and an interval is taken for consideration, even though the delay is not serious nor the question clear, and the net result means the difference of only 15 or 20 days, it is complained that the decision should be entered in a moment. Are we to condemn an official in such a case as that?

Mr. President, we find that when some contracts were awarded there was a great protest about their being let at too high a price. Yet there would have been greater criticism if the usual time of advertisement for bids had been given than that insufficient time was not given for bids. Any number of such objections may be made. The only thing that we can say with fairness is that the officers have done what seemed to them best. They exercised their best judgment.

Suppose you were to remove Secretary Baker; is it possible that you could put a new man in that position who would be as well qualified as is he? There has been criticism about military men letting contracts of this kind when they have not had proper experience and are not skilled in business affairs.

Mr. President, some people objected very strenuously to military men doing this work, and made a demand for business men of large experience. We created various boards with civilian membership, and they were criticized.

Then there was criticism to the effect that perhaps the best man was not selected as Secretary of War. Mr. President, if you were to select a new Secretary of War to-day, have you any assurance that the man you select would be any better than the present Secretary of War? The testimony before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs shows that a wonderful amount of work has been done by Secretary Baker, and he deserves the highest praise and commendation.

Six or eight months ago there was a campaign of abuse against the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Daniels. Yes; he was held up to scorn and ridicule; but, Mr. President, no voice of criticism is raised against him now. Everybody concedes that he is making one of the best, if not the very best, Secretaries of the Navy who has ever filled that high and important office.

Suppose you turn out one official and appoint another, are you going to better conditions? Is it not true that in such a case you would be removing a man who has had experience, which is most valuable, and substituting one without such experience? Is not it still true that it is unwise to swap horses in the middle of a stream?

Mr. President, take the question of shipping: I want to repeat and read what I read before; I think it is a marvelous statement, proving the speed and the effectiveness of the Shipping Board in its vital task of ship construction.

The statement is:

> The total amount of our steel construction on March 1 was 8,205,708 dead-weight tons. This is made up of 5,160,300 dead-weight tons under contract with the Emergency Fleet Corporation and 3,045,408 dead-weight tons of requisition vessels.

Of this amount of tonnage 28 per cent has been completed.

Mr. President, what does that mean? It means an enormous amount of tonnage has been completed, according to the statement of the chairman of the Shipping Board. He says here in the text of his speech:

> Of this total steel construction 2,121,568 dead-weight tons, or approximately 28 per cent, have been completed.

That is the amount.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. What does the chairman of the Shipping Board mean by "have been completed"—that the steel has been completed?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I suppose it means what it says—completed.

Mr. GALLINGER. The ships are not completed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; that is as I understand it; that is what he says.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, well.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know. These are the people who, as a matter of fact, know what they are doing when they say that it has been completed. I do not know why——

Mr. GALLINGER. But he was talking about steel.

Mr. SHAFROTH. About what?

Mr. GALLINGER. He was talking about steel, not steel ships.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No. The statement is:

> The total amount of our steel construction on March 1 was 8,205,708 dead-weight tons. This is made up of 5,160,300 dead-weight tons under contract with the Emergency Fleet Corporation and 3,045,408 dead-weight tons of requisition vessels.
> Of this total steel construction 2,121,568 dead-weight tons, or approximately 28 per cent, has been completed. That means that in addition to the building of our new yards, we have also been building ships; that is, the program for steel ships has advanced 28 per cent toward completion.

I want the whole truth to be known. I have not read this entire speech as yet, but I have read the synopsis of it. How can you build completed ships inside of six or eight or nine months?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me—I am not going to get into a controversy over that—the Senator led us to believe, or at least intended to lead us to believe——

Mr. SHAFROTH. No.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think he believed himself that 28 per cent of the ships have been built. If we go up one of the streets of Washington where they are constructing a great office building, we may find the steel construction up, but nobody would think of occupying that building, although the steel work has been completed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have not read this entire statement; it was handed to me while the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] was speaking, and I did not have time to read the text of the speech, but there was a synopsis of it here, which would seem to show great activity, and it is not open to the construction which the Senator from New Hampshire places upon it. The statement is that 28 per cent of the steel construction—put it in that way; I care not what it is—has been completed. That shows activity; it shows that there has been as much work done as could possibly be done. For that reason this should not be the subject of criticism.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator from Colorado has gotten a misunderstanding of that, judging from his discussion with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. I think Mr. Hurley makes the matter very clear. After making the statement that "2,121,568 dead-weight tons, or approximately 28 per cent, had been completed," he then states:

> That is, the program for steel ships has advanced 28 per cent toward completion.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. That does not mean that he has completed a single ship.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Of course, the ships are in various stages of construction; there is no doubt about that; they are not all in the same stage of construction.

Mr. McCUMBER. It simply means that, taking the entire contract, they have completed about 28 per cent of it in actual work. That does not mean that a single ship is afloat.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That may be; but, Mr. President, there can be no doubt that that exhibits great activity; that it demonstrates the fact that there has been energy and activity displayed which is remarkable, indeed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I sincerely hope that the future will show greater activity than has been shown in the past, because, if it has taken over a year to arrive at the point where 28 per cent of the program has been completed, then before the program is completed it will take, at the same rate, nearly four years; and I am quite sure, if the Senator from Colorado will think the matter over, he will ask that greater activity be shown in the future than has been shown in the past.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Of course, we want these ships constructed as rapidly as possible, but it requires time to get ready to build them. Mr. President, look at this statement in regard to the condition which confronted the Shipping Board at the start. The statement is:

> Seventy per cent of the space in old yards was taken by the enlarged naval program, the remainder by private concerns.

So when the Shipping Board began its operations there were no slips upon which could be built either wooden ships or steel ships. Is it expected ships will rise as if by the touch of the lamp of Aladdin? You can not build ships in that way. You have got to take time to prepare the ways, and you have to take time to get the steel. The steel plants were busy; they had orders months ahead and could not take these contracts and manufacture and fabricate the materials into the proper shapes in a month's time. Mr. President, this statement says:

> There were 37 steel-ship yards when we began. We have located 81 additional yards, and 18 others are being expanded.

Mr. President, what more can be asked? Congress is ready to appropriate all the money that is necessary to win this war. There is no doubt that these men are anxious and ready to put these ships in commission and to get them over where they can be an effective force.

Mr. President, in the construction of ships great difficulties have been encountered. For a long while sufficient men could not be obtained. Are the members of the Shipping Board to be criticized because men will not work? Again, the employees of the shipyards at times went on strikes. Are the members of the Shipping Board to be criticized because some of the workmen engaged in the construction of ships quit their jobs? Is there any fairness in making a charge of that kind?

Mr. President, it seems to me that when we take into consideration the fact that we were unprepared—the fault of Congress and not the Shipping Board—and that when they took up their task the conditions were deplorable, the Shipping Board should be criticized or commended according to the conditions as they found them and according to how they have improved the opportunities that have been given them.

There has been a demand for a great Army. I have heard criticisms made as to the manner of raising the Army. Some have said that the men were called out too quickly before the ships were ready to transport the troops oversea. Others have complained bitterly that we have not a large force in France. Others have said that they were organized before we had guns ready to place in their hands. Others have uttered criticism because the bore of the Springfield rifle was changed and modified so as to accommodate ammunition made and used in Europe. Others have stated that we ought to have adhered to the old bore of the Springfield rifle and continued to grind out the rifle which we were prepared to manufacture.

Why, Mr. President, no matter which side of any proposition was presented, it has been made the subject of criticism; but it is not fair; it is not right, when men are doing their best, that they should be subjected to criticism because of conditions over which they have no control. If any officer, agent, or employee of the Government has willfully done something wrong, then, of course, there should be criticism, and there should be removal.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FALL. I desire to understand, if I can, the Senator's position with reference to this matter. It seems that he is expressing his opinion, and, I judge, that of others. Does the Senator take the position in a republic, a democracy, where the business is purely the people's business, that, right or wrong, there shall be no criticism of the acts of public officers, although they may, in the judgment even of the Senator himself, tend toward public disaster?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no, Mr. President, I do not take that position. There is such a thing as fair criticism and such a thing as unfair criticism, in my opinion.

Mr. FALL. Undoubtedly; I thoroughly agree with the Senator as to that; but I understood the Senator to say that, unless it was apparent that some public official was willfully pursuing a wrong course, he should not be criticized. Why, Mr. President, in my judgment——

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I did not go to that extent.

Mr. FALL. I was simply going to say that, in my judgment, in the office of the Secretary of War or in any other great department of the Government from this Chamber to the White House, ignorance is more to be condemned than willful intent.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There is no question that if there is negligence, if officials are loafing upon their jobs, or if there is a clear intention of avoiding work or anything of that kind, of course there ought to be criticism; but what seems to me to be unfair, Mr. President, is that men who are straining every nerve trying to get the Nation in a condition to make an effective fight instead of being encouraged are subjected to severe criticism for things beyond their control. Such critics do not take into account the difficulties we had to encounter at the beginning of this war; they do not take into consideration the fact that those difficulties were almost insurmountable. It seems to me that the weight of that fact ought to be kept in mind in any discussion of these problems.

Mr. President, I did not rise to make a speech. These suggestions have come to me since I have been on the floor, and have come largely from the newspaper containing Mr. Hurley's speech in New York last night that was handed to me while the Senator from Washington was addressing the Senate. It seems to me from the statements that are made concerning the Shipping Board, the Aircraft Board, and other war work of the Government, that the results have been truly wonderful, especially when we consider that it has taken us less time to accomplish the results achieved than it took England, although England was much further advanced toward a war footing than we were. It seems to me that we should be congratulated upon the fact that such good and effective work has been done. Let us stop such unfair criticism and bend every energy toward the winning of the war.

Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. OWEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair promised to recognize the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not rise to interrupt the Senator. I rise to take the floor.

Mr. OWEN. I have made a point of order against an item on page 5 of the appropriation bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That can be withheld for a while, can it not?

Mr. OWEN. How long does the Senator wish to occupy the floor?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know; that depends on how much I am interrupted.

Mr. OWEN. Will not the Senator let me make the point of order? It will only take a moment to dispose of it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. OWEN. I make the point of order that the amendment to which I have referred, on page 5, is general legislation on an appropriation bill. There is no question about the point of order being well founded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask that the next passed-over amendment be read.

Mr. OWEN. I now offer an amendment to come in on page 66, after line 4.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 66, after line 4, at the end of the item relating to the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians, it is proposed to insert the following:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, from funds on deposit to the credit of the Chickasaw Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma, the sum of $15,000 to be used for construction and equipment of dormitories at the Murray State School of Agriculture at Tishomingo, Okla., and to be immediately available in addition to the sum of $50,000 provided for the same use by section 18 of the Indian appropriation act of March 2, 1917.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I send to the desk a letter from the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs justifying this item. The purpose of the amendment is to use funds of the Chickasaw Nation for the Murray State School of Agriculture at Tishomingo. I ask that the letter from the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the request will be complied with.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, March 25, 1918.

MY DEAR MR. HASTINGS: Referring to your inquiry in regard to the proposed construction of the dormitories for the Murray State School of Agriculture, Tishomingo, Okla., I wish to say that bids have just been received for the construction of the two dormitories in accordance with the plans and specifications which had been presented by the authorities of the school, and the lowest bid so received is in the sum of $54,400. You will recall that the appropriation carried in the Indian appropriation act of March 2, 1917, was for $50,000, for constructing and equipping these buildings, and therefore the bid in question is $4,400 in excess of the amount which is available for construction of the buildings, exclusive of equipment, and approximately $10,000 will be required for this purpose.

Very truly, yours,
E. B. MERITT,
Assistant Commissioner.

Hon. W. W. HASTINGS,
House of Representatives.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I understand from the publication of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this morning and from reports in the newspapers of what occurred yesterday that there was a most pathetic appeal from the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] for "pitiless publicity," and that the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] exclaimed in terms that thrilled everybody: "Let the truth be known." But for that fact I would not communicate what I am now going to communicate to the Senate, and through the Senate to the country. I have just received a cablegram from the front in France. It is in my own private cipher, unknown to Germany, or the allies, or President Wilson, and I therefore can not send it up to the desk and ask to have it read at the desk because the Secretary can not decipher and read it. I shall, therefore, be forced to read it myself:

MARCH 26, 1918.

Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
Senior Senator from Mississippi:

Most critical day of this long and hard battle. Withstood attacks of the Teutons here with comparative satisfaction. Huns attacked with infantry, cavalry, heavy and light artillery, aeroplanes, and gas. Had to give way a bit, but are not downhearted. Rumor of attack on Washington. How about it?

To which I sent this reply:

Purely a gas attack—poisonous, of course, if it had got us. Enemy was carefully prepared; we were in a measure taken unawares; most of us not present; but, in the providence of God, the wind shifted and the enemy was stifled.

(Signed) JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS.

[Laughter.]

Mr. President, it just so happens that while the Wisconsin election is taking place, between loyalists and disloyalists of the United States, this attack by poison gas in the Senate of the United States was made, and I am sorry to say not only made upon the Republican side, but partially followed up upon the Democratic side—just about the time when we were trying to determine whether in Wisconsin a man in the past lukewarmly attached to America and the allies was to be elected to the Senate or a man who all the time has been outspoken and absolutely patriotic. There was no connection, of course; I do not charge that there was; it was just accidental; it was just incidental; it just happened that way; and it just happened that what aid and assistance was given to it on this side was the aid and assistance of those who also had been in the past somewhat lukewarm in their support of the administration and therefore in their Americanism.

Mr. President, the men at the head of the Shipping Board, the Aircraft Board, and the other boards of the Government preparing for the war are, as a rule, prominent Republicans of the country. They are true, patriotic, and honest in every sense of the word. It is not against them that they are Republicans; it is in their favor under a Democratic administration that they are; but I mention the fact merely to show that these men, who were probably recommended by Republican Senators, are the people at fault, if anybody is. As a matter of fact, I do not believe that anybody is, except that, of course, now and then we find a man put in charge of a job who is not equipped for the job. He may be a Republican; he may be a Democrat; he may be a Populist; he may be a Socialist; he may be anything.

The peculiarity of this entire attack consists in this, that there is no attack on the patriotism or the motives of any man who is trying to do this war work; we are all trying to do it; but upon the very day that is the most critical day in this long and hard fought battle in Flanders and France, which the house of Hohenzollern is carrying on against the forces of civilization, it happens that this gas attack was made in the city of Washington in the Senate against this administration.

Who doubts the honor, who doubts the honesty, who doubts the patrotism, who doubts the earnestness of the head of this administration? Who dare utter publicly such a doubt? I pause for a reply.

If anybody is to blame, Democrats and Republicans both are to blame, but neither of the two parties is to blame as a party at all. If anybody is to be blamed, it is the American people, and the American Congress representing the American people. Whether you blame them or not depends upon your standpoint. I do not blame them, because I think their conduct in the past has been right. It has been the conduct of a people prepared for peace, for progress, for industry, and unprepared for war, believing in their hearts, as I myself believed before this war began, that the time had passed when any autocracy or aristocracy or dynasty could plunge the world into murderous assault. You thought so as well as I; it was the American policy; and the American policy was right. It was to keep unprepared for war in order that we might be prepared for peace, for industry, for progress, for education, for civilization; but here you stand upon the 26th of this month with the Kaiser and the Huns, in more senses than one the descendants of the men who worshipped Woden and Thor and who are worshipping Woden and Thor to-day, rather than the gentle Jesus that walked by the lake of Galilee, with these Huns while they were making a final last effort to prove that might was right; that strength and force and discipline and effectiveness could overcome righteousness and mercy and love and civilization in this world. It just so happened that you selected that day to make an evidently prepared attack upon this American administration.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask the Senator to yield to me because I know of the patriotism of the Senator from Mississippi, and I am certain that he recognizes that I am as patriotic and as earnest for winning this war as any man in the United States, and that I will not recognize any party during this war in the matter of conducting the war; that we must win, and we must win unitedly; and we must lay aside our party prejudices and our affiliations wherever and whenever they conflict with our duty to support our Government. But I want to ask the Senator if he does not think that possibly he may have been a little unfair in a statement which he has just made concerning the battle in Wisconsin, in which he says, if I understood him correctly, that it is a battle to determine whether one who has been merely lukewarm shall be made a Senator of the United States, or one who has been for the Government and right and patriotic all the time?

I want to say that I agree with the Senator that if either one of those two men that are pitted against each other has been lukewarm in this great battle, then he ought to be defeated. We do not want anyone in the Senate of the United States today who is lukewarm. But I have understood that both candidates have conducted their campaign on the standard of Americanism and the battle for Americanism; and I have understood, also, that both Mr. LENROOT and Mr. Davies have at all times been earnest, patriotic American citizens, each of them ready to do anything in his power to win this war. If that is true, then any statement that goes out from so patriotic a Senator as the Senator from Mississippi which would challenge the patriotism of one of these candidates, if it is not well founded, is an injustice, and I know that the Senator himself would be the first to correct it if he thought it was.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota and I know one another well enough to know that neither one of us has ever been from the beginning of this controversy, from the sinking of the Lusitania down to now, in the slightest degree lukewarm toward the cause of the American Government. He has not been; there is too much Scotch in him. I have not been; there is too much Welsh in me. But, Mr. President, I am not prepared to apologize or explain what I said a moment ago, if I am correctly informed. The gentleman in whose behalf this attack upon the administration has operated—whether it was so intended or not I can not say—was the gentleman who, I understand, voted in favor of an embargo against our sending food or munitions of war to Europe, on the ground that it all had to go to the allies, while Germany could not receive any. The same man, if I understand his record correctly—and if I misunderstand it anywhere I hope to be corrected—is a man who voted against allowing our merchant ships to arm themselves for self-defense while they were subjected to the villainous and assassinative attacks of the German submarines. The same man, if I understand correctly—and about that I may be mistaken—voted against the declaration of war against Germany after we had received the injury of the sinking of the Lusitania, and the insult of telling us that we could have a little part of the high seas to sail in and trade in, provided our vessels went painted like a barber's pole! If I find that I am incorrect about any of that, I shall stand corrected; but if I am not incorrect about any of it, then I say he was lukewarm. It is too late when he is seeking a Senatorship to profess ultrapatriotism.

The Senator says that after the campaign started in Wisconsin both candidates placed themselves upon record as being ultrapatriotic. One of them went so far as to say that patriotism alone was his platform.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait a minute. But "as the twig is bent, so the tree grows"; and as the man before we declared war was prepared to defend the honor of America or otherwise, so he remains biased, pro or con, later, and he can not help it.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. The only reason I interrupt the Senator is because he asked to be interrupted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that Mr. LENROOT did not vote against the declaration of war with the Imperial German Government.

Mr. WILLIAMS. So much of that statement which I have made, then, is a mistake, and is acknowledged as one, because I know that the Senator from Utah would not tell me it was an error unless it was; but the other facts remain. Here we were with out rights upon the high seas, American citizens insisting that a neutral had a right to his life when he sailed upon the high seas; and here were these men, including Mr. LENROOT, asking the Government of the United States to tell an American citizen that he should not sail upon a neutral ship, or upon a belligerent ship owned by a private party. Here were these men insisting upon an embargo to keep us from sending food or fuel or munitions to Europe, our undoubted neutral right. Here were these men voting against arming our merchant ships to defend themselves against deep-sea assassins. Am I mistaken upon either one of those positions? If I am upon either, I will correct it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not looked that up; but I did look up the other question when the charge was first made in the public press, and I know that the first charge is not true.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the first charge?

Mr. SMOOT. As to the declaration of war.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, that is all right; I have corrected that. The Senator's statement is sufficient.

Mr. SMOOT. But the Senator asked me if he was correct in the other two charges.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The other three.

Mr. SMOOT. I say I have not looked up that question; but I want to say that if the charge is correct, there were Senators here who voted for it——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Wait just a moment; and there were Members of the House——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Democratic Members of the House——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Who voted for it; and since then the President has appointed them to responsible positions in the Government.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Now, Mr. President, I want to say this: I am no longer a Democrat nor a Republican while this war lasts. I am not a partisan at all. I will vote against any Democrat nominated for office in the State of Mississippi, Bourbon Democratic as I am and as it is, if the Republicans nominate a man more loyal than he is. Now, that is a good deal, coming from a Bourbon Southern Democrat. I will face every situation that can put itself forward in my own State; and I am not condemning any Republican who is lukewarm in this war any more than I am condemning any Democrat who is equally so. I do not care a continental cent about his partisan politics, and I am asking you not to care. I am asking you to take the same position that I take—that if one man has been either unpatriotic, or even lukewarm, and another man of the opposite party to yours or to mine runs against him, support the man in the opposite party; and I am pledging you a word that so far has never been consciously violated that I will follow that course, even in the State of Mississippi, Southern Bourbon Democratic State as it is.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that there has not been a power asked for, there has not been an appropriation made——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, well, the Senator must pardon me. If the Senator rises to ask a question, I will yield. I did not rise for the purpose of discussing the relationship of the Republican Party toward the appropriation bills and the tax bills and all that. The Republicans as a whole have been patriotic and true to the country. Take that admission. Now, I decline to yield any further.

Mr. SMOOT. I just wanted to make this explanation to the Senator——

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I decline to yield any further, unless the Senator wants to ask a question. I did not get up here to make a long speech.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator asked me a question, and I simply rose to answer it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, what is it?

Mr. SMOOT. Now, I do not care about answering it nor do I care whether the Senator asks the question or not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What was the question? I do not remember asking the Senator any question.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator refuses to yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if I asked the Senator any question which he has not either answered or attempted to answer, I do not remember it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. As Mr. Davies has never been a Member of either House of Congress, how does the Senator know what Mr. Davies would have done had he been a Member?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not, of course, know what he might or might not have said on the floor of either House.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; exactly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Nobody except God knows what a man who has never been a pig would have said if he had been a pig.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all right; but let the Senator answer my question civilly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am answering it civilly. No man can answer a question as to what a man would have said if he had been a lawyer, if it be admitted that he was not a lawyer.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well. If Mr. LENROOT to-day puts himself on the same platform of patriotism that Mr. Davies does——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course he does.

Mr. GALLINGER (continuing). What right has the Senator from Mississippi to go back and find out that Mr. LENROOT exercised his judgment precisely as some Democrats exercised theirs?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes; and the Democrats who exercised their judgment in the same way that Mr. LENROOT did were lukewarm to America.

Mr. GALLINGER. But one of them, at least, has been appointed by the President to high office since then.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I can not help that.

Mr. GALLINGER. No.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That may be. It may be that it was done with the hope that he would prove less lukewarm in the future. I do not know. I am not criticizing your party. I am not criticizing mine. I am merely trying to show that Republican criticisms of the Democratic administration are unwarranted whenever they are partisan.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi further yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator seems to put himself on a plane of patriotism higher than other men. I do not agree to that at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no; not higher than other men, but upon a plane of patriotism very much higher than men placed themselves who voted against letting American merchant ships arm themselves to prevent assassination, and upon a plane of patriotism very much higher than men placed themselves who wanted to vote for an embargo against America's exercising her neutral rights of sending munitions and arms and fuel to Europe. Now, in that much I place myself upon a superior plane, yes; I do not care whether it affects Democrats or Republicans.

Mr. GALLINGER. With the permission of the Senator from Mississippi, I want to say that it is a trifle late in the day for the Senator to be putting himself on a higher plane of patriotism than some of the rest of us.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not put the Senator from New Hampshire on a lesser plane. He voted right all the time, so far as I know.

Mr. GALLINGER. I support Mr. LENROOT. The Senator supports Mr. Davies, as the Vice President does.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, I suppose the Senator is supporting Mr. LENROOT simply because Mr. LENROOT is the Republican candidate; and if Mr. LENROOT had been the Democratic candidate and our man had been the Republican candidate he would have voted to support Davies.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I assume, if the Senator will permit me, that the Vice President of the United States, who has left his seat in the Senate and is now on the stump in Wisconsin advocating Mr. Davies's election, is doing it because he is a Democrat.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That was the cause of all this.

Mr. GALLINGER. I assume that he is supporting Mr. Davies because he is a Democrat.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That reminds me of something which I had very nearly forgotten. I believe perhaps the occasion, if not the cause, of this outbreak against the administration was that the Vice President of the United States has gone to Wisconsin to make speeches.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no; we do not care anything about that. It is not important.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr WILLIAMS. One moment; I will yield in a minute. I am not sure of that; the Senator from New Hampshire denies it, but it is another of those remarkable coincidences where one of two things may be the cause of the other and one the effect of the other, or where it may be a mere accident that they coincide. But, at any rate, the objection of the Senator from New Hampshire, and his mention of the fact that the Vice President had gone to Wisconsin, rather strengthens me in the suspicion that I had to a slight degree formerly entertained, of partisan Republican bias in the attack of March 26 evidently concerted.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is oversuspicious on that point.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. CALDER. The Senator has intimated, or the Senator has said, that Mr. LENROOT'S vote on the McLemore resolution was unpatriotic. Does the Senator know that his own representative in the House voted the same as Mr. MCLEMORE did?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Who is my own representative? I did not know I had any.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. SISSON.

Mr WILLIAMS. Oh! Oh! [Laughter.] Mr. President, I did not know I had any representative in the House, and I have not learned so yet.

Now, Mr. President, I am making no partisan speech, unless a speech in defense be a partisan speech.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; although I wanted to conclude.

Mr. CALDER. May I ask, Does the Senator imply that the Representative from the district in which he resides is also disloyal because——

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman whom the Senator mentions is not the Representative from the district in which I reside.

Mr. CALDER. At least, he is from the Senator's State.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes; from the same State; but the Senator calls him my representative. I never made him my representative. He is not my representative yet. I do not want to be reduced to the point of talking about men by name. I have not done that thus far.

Mr. CALDER. But the Senator referred——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have not defended anybody that cast that sort of vote, and I am not going to defend him; I do not care where he came from, nor to what party he belongs; and the Senator can not charge any of it up to me, no matter how anxious he may be to do it.

Mr. President, I do not know that I know the American people any better than anybody else does. I am rather inclined to think that maybe I do not know them as well as a great many other people in the Senate and House know them, because if there is a man living who recognizes the fact that he is to a certain extent a provincialist, I am the man. It may be that I can not size up public opinion in the far North, Northeast, and Northwest as well as some other men from some other sections of the country. I am a southerner, with a southerner's prejudices, and a southerner's traditions, and a southerner's ideals, and a southerner's limitations, which are great. But, Mr. President, if I do know the American people, I know this about them, that they are ready to forgive errors when errors are ascertained by the makers of them and rectified; and that, whether ascertained and rectified or not, if the entire policy comes out successfully, and upon the whole is efficacious and effective, they are ready to give praise to the policy rather than quarrel with it on account of its little defects. That is my opinion of the American people.

There have been those who have said, "Do not judge other people by yourself"; but I have always thought that there was no other way of judging other people except by myself. That would be my way of judging this thing, and I therefore believe it is the way of every fair and honest and patriotic American to judge it.

Now, of course, it is an easy thing, with a million or two million men called from the pursuits of peace to warlike endeavor and high daring; with a Navy to be increased two or three fold; with airplanes to be built, even without factories in which to build them; with guns to be manufactured; with clothing manufactories to be deflected from the ordinary clothing of the ordinary people to uniforms and overcoats of the soldiers; with troops to be sent abroad before the troops had the big guns and the airplanes; with our ally, France, begging us to send them, begging us to send them without guns or appliances, and saying that she could supply them just as well and more cheaply—of course it is easy, under all that state of affairs, to go around and find where John Thompson sometimes suffered from the inefficiency of this entire, great, revolutionized system, and where Jim Smith fell helpless in a hospital because a Government calling millions of men into camp, organizing improvisotorially—if I may manufacture a word—a force of surgeons found now and then a man who has got a commission as a surgeon who did not know anything about medicine and did not know anything about surgery. Of course, when you come forward with the case of Jim Johnson or Billy Thompson and face me with it, and you are a truthful and an honest man, I take it for granted that you know all about the case of Jim Johnson or Billy Thompson, and I can not meet it. You can go out and get 10 more cases like it, and I can not meet them. I could arraign the Union Government and the Confederate Government during the War between the States, if I did nothing but go out and hunt mistakes and incidental cruelties and sufferings falling to the lot of individuals on one side or the other because of inefficiency and ineffectiveness of men in high station, or in comparatively high station; and I could forever damn the Federal Government and the Confederate Government, both. But history will forever recite the fact that the Nation that "rose and fell without a stain" rose and fell as a very effective fighting force on this earth, and that the Nation which conquered her was still more effective in spite of all the little faults of both. Yet there were men in the Federal Army and in the Confederate Army who mistook measles for scarlet fever, and mistook rash for one or the other, and there were men who went out under Mr. Lincoln's commission as brigadier generals and colonels that were not fit to command a company, as there were men who went out under Jeff Davis's commissions in the same way.

Mr. President, you can take your choice and have it one way or the other, but you can not have it both ways. You can not "keep your cake and eat your cake," both. You can either be a great, civilized Nation, devoted to progress and to the happiness of the human race, consecrated to the cause of liberty, worshiping Jesus of Nazareth, the God of mercy and of love, pursuing the avocations of peace, and preparing in peace for more peace as God shall give it to you, with still greater prosperity—you can be that, or you can be, upon the other hand, a military Nation, prepared off the bat to fight the world if the world dares come, sacrificing education, sacrificing religion, setting aside mercy and righteousness and love in the great business of being ready to whip the other fellow, or to attack and conquer the other fellow. You can be that; and if you are, you would be very much more efficient for war than you would be if you occupied the former standpoint. But, Mr. President, after you get through, and after you have trained a generation or two of men in that sort of so-called efficient way, they are—these men whom you have trained and mistaught—no longer American citizens, dedicated to the cause of liberty and consecrated to the cause of humanity, but they are machines—they are not even machines, they are bolts in machines; and the country which they would constitute would not be worth the trouble of any man's dying for it, much less the trouble of any man's living for it.

Of course, we were a people prepared for peace, and not prepared for war; and I thank God that except when we had to go into war in self-defense in the days gone by, we determined rather to take our chances when war should come, to "muddle through" as best we could two, three, four, maybe seven years—hardly longer—than to keep oppressing the people with the down weight of taxes, of financial and home burdens, taking not only the money of the citizen but the life of the citizen for two or three years to train him to whip somebody when a war came.

Now, we are going through it all right. Upon the 26th, which was yesterday, the Teutons on the other side of the water—these people who worship the god of military efficiency and of might, who are the descendants of the men who worshiped Thor and Woden and who are still to-day substantially worshipping Thor and Woden—made their attack in all their magnificent panoply, superior in coordination, superior in discipline, superior in efficiency, man for man, to the men who stood in front of them, no matter how superior the men who stood in front of them may have been as men and not mere bolts in a military machine.

They made their attack with all that superiority, and up to the last hour we have heard from, thank God, we are still holding them, in spite of guns that shot 66 miles, in spite of a long 40 years' preparation of airplanes and machine guns, and big guns, and infantry, and Uhlans and other cavalry inferior to them, man to man and company to company, in discipline, in military efficiency, although their superiors, as we are, in intellect and in the love of righteousness and mercy and devotion to the cause of love and humanity on this earth.

It is long since we English and Americans and French passed the period when we believed that might was right. It is a long time ago since we passed the period when we believed that if you wanted anything from your neighbor all you had to justify yourself was to have troops enough to go and take it. We stood the battle there in Flanders on the 26th. Suppose it goes against us.

There is too much pessimism in America here lately. I am tired of it. Suppose the worshippers of Woden and Thor break through between the French and the English? Suppose they throw the French back upon Paris and throw the English back upon the coast? Suppose, what I do not believe is possible, that they surround and capture the French Army, with the city of Paris! Suppose that Italy gets discouraged and quits! Suppose the English Army has to make embarkation at Dunkirk and Calais and Bordeaux and get back to the "tight little island" as best it may and leave a whole lot of dead and prisoners behind them! Suppose it all happens, am I downhearted? No. I believe that the two great English-speaking races can withstand the attack of the entire continent of Europe, even if they made Russia and France active allies, and they will have a hard time doing it. They may do it with Russia; they can not do it with France.

Mr. President, for God's sake, why is it that we can not obey the injunction of Charles Kingsley and "hold our hearts up higher for those who are fighting afar," instead of coming into this Senate about once a week in an apparently prepared and preconceived way for the purpose of throwing doubt upon the efficiency and the ability of our governmental machinery?

We of this generation are not responsible for our governmental machinery. The Constitution tells us how we shall elect a President and Senators and Representatives and how all the other officers shall be appointed. We find some of you complaining about machinery who do not want to give the President even the liberty to swap machinery. I find some of you holding the Senate back when the President is asking you when here is a round peg in a square hole or a square peg in a round hole to let him swap them. One of these pegs happens to be in one department and the other happens to be in another. He, the President, says, "I can use them both if you will leave me free and give me some elasticity of authority," and while you enemies of the administration are criticizing out of one corner of your mouth the inefficiency of his executive force you refuse out of the other side of your mouths to give him power to help himself.

Mr. President, it is a sad day for America when upon the 26th of March there ought to have been heard pæans of praise, not for success, for no man can claim or boast of success, but every man can deserve it—not for success, but for the fact that our allies and our own boys, as far as they were in it, had at least deserved success. Instead of this Chamber ringing with pæans of praise upon that day, telling how nobly and steadfastly our allies have stood, how bravely they have died, how the God of their religion, the God of love and mercy and righteousness and civilization might have taken them up under His two hands and lifted them to heaven as they died; instead of all this, so richly deserved, this great Nation, as it is represented in the Senate of the United States, presented the spectacle of a debate as to how many airplanes we had a year or something else—hypercriticism, supercriticism, mere partisan quarrelsomeness.

Now, I can not go into details about airplanes and things, because I do not know anything about it. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] has gone into the details to some extent. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] did it the other day, and some of the other Senators did. Mr. Hurley has made a statement to the House committee. I do not know much about it; but I do know this and you know it, too, every one of you, and not one of you dare deny it—I pause for denial—it is that if there has been any falling down, if there has been any failure, and of course there must be both, with all this great revolution of an entire people in the revolution of aspirations, ideals, and purposes, from peace and progress to war and destruction—you know as well as I do, and not one of you dare say to the contrary, that every man charged with the responsibility was doing the best he knew how. If you had been in his place, you could not have done any better than you knew how.

What greater devotion can a man give to his country than to do his best? Who says that any of these men has not done his best? It may be true that some of them are square pegs in round holes and somebody else ought to be put in their places, and that they ought to be kicked out; but it is also true that the administration has been following the weeding out process as well as it could and has weeded out thousands upon thousands; and it is also true that whenever a man was weeded out that, if he got a pull, he came to his Senator or Representative to get weeded back. Is not that true?

Mr. President, I want to repeat one more thing and then I am going to sit down. As far as I am concerned, for the balance of this war I know no Democracy and I know no Republicanism. I am for men who are hot-bloodedly and aggressively and offensively, if necessary. Americans, antihyphenates; and I am against men who are lukewarm, cold-hearted even when they are not unpatriotic, or who, recent converts, have been so in the past. I will vote against any Republican in the class I have described, upon the one side, for any Democrat in the class I have described, upon the other. A Bourbon southern Democrat by tradition and environment and aspirations and love, as I am, if the Republican Party at the next election would nominate a man who had been absolutely patriotic and true from the beginning, not only from the declaration of war but before it took place, aggressively and absolutely in favor of American rights and American honor, and the Democrats were to nominate a man whose record upon that subject I considered doubtful I would vote for the Republican and ask God to forgive me for the first offense of that sort I had ever committed in my life. [Laughter.]

Mr. FALL. I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi a question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have surrendered the floor.

Mr. FALL. The Senator is making a declaration now as to whom he would vote for. I should like to know what the Senator would do if confronted with the record of a Republican who had supported the President in every instance according to the Senator's own ideas, and——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not contending that the support of the President——

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator allow me? I speak of one who in every instance had voted with the Senator. Suppose the Senator in a State was confronted with the candidacy of that man upon the Republican ticket and an unknown man with no record whatsoever upon the Democratic ticket, for whom would he vote?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I answer very frankly, I would try to find out the unknown man. [Laughter.] If I found that the unknown man, from my inquiries, even though he had not been hallowed as a Member of the House or the Senate in his entire life course, had shown the utmost patriotism and the utmost aggressive Americanism, I would vote for him against the Republican, because as between the two equally meritorious I would stand by my party, and so would the Senator stand by his party.

Mr. FALL. But suppose the Democrat had no record of any kind or character but was unknown.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator does not hit this case. The Democrat in this particular case has a record.

Mr. FALL. I am not hitting at any case—far from it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I go further. If I found in the case the Senator mentions that that so-called Democrat pretending to the utmost loyalty and patriotism and Americanism had never displayed any until after he was nominated, I would not vote for him.

Mr. FALL. The Senator means that if there had been no opportunity for the Democrat to proclaim his loyalty from the housetops.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I do not.

Mr. FALL. The only politics injected here has been injected by the Senator this afternoon, in so far as I have heard, and he has persisted in his entire speech to inject politics.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will take one minute more to answer that. That statement is absolutely incorrect. There is not a man within the sound of my voice who does not know that in committee service and in service upon this floor I have attempted to the best of my ability to avoid partisan politics since this war began, and that so far as I have entered that field to-day I have entered it only in defense of an attack of an iron hand in velvet gloves, in my opinion largely induced by partisan motives made upon the 26th of March, while the other enemies of this administration were attacking us in Flanders. I may have been mistaken, but that was my motive.

Mr. FALL. No one else referred to the Wisconsin election, and the Senator, giving full play to his imagination——

Mr. WILLIAMS. In other words, Mr. President, if a man attacks me sub rosa and with velvet gloves and does not say the why nor wherefore, and if I undertake to tell that I suspect his why and wherefore, then I am to be put in the attitude of attacking and he is to be put in the attitude of defense?

Mr. FALL. Any possible word that may be uttered here, not in laudation of some candidate upon the Democratic ticket, or in laudation of some act of some Democratic official, but in any way tending to criticize the acts of such official, or tending to call attention to some one, is called disloyalty. If any attention is called to any act of omission that such act may be corrected, if it happens to be a Democratic official who is guilty of the omission or the commission, that is disloyal.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I just want to say this, and then I am going to give up the floor. If the object of the criticism is to correct and rectify, then the criticism should be made first not upon this floor but to the executive department, to the proper official. I have had several cases, in two of which I demanded a court-martial and have gotten it, and in both cases the persons of whom I complained as misusing their authority have been removed, one of them by an agreement to resign and the other otherwise. If the object of the criticism of the Government in time of war is to rectify mistakes, then at least the privilege ought to be given to the head of the department under which the mistake has been made of reporting it to him and trying to get relief there before it is exploited here as a cause of complaint and attack, and aid and comfort to the enemy.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. OWEN. Where is my amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is before the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to occupy two or three minutes.

Mr. OWEN. I was in hopes that we could have a vote on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, in view of the partisan speech made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], I desire to occupy only a few moments of the Senate's time.

I hold in my hand the document entitled "First Session of the War Congress," October, 1917, issued by Charles Merz, and printed as a public document. This is a document issued by the Committee on Public Information. I want to call the attention of the Senate and, in view of what has been said by the Senator from Mississippi, the attention of the country to this record on page 10.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has gone out of his way to attack a Republican candidate for the Senate in Wisconsin, and yet on page 10 of this document, when that candidate was a Member of the House and was not a candidate for the Senate, this administration quotes from one of his speeches in the House and gives to the country an expression from him showing of its loyalty. I challenge any man upon the other side to point to any document issued by this administration praising the Democratic candidate, Mr. Davies, for any expression of loyalty uttered by him.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is that from the Creel bureau?

Mr. CURTIS. It is from the Creel bureau; and on page 10 they quote the following from Mr. LENROOT. The first is a quotation from Mr. SHERLEY; the second is a quotation from the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]; and the third and only other quotation is the one from Mr. LENROOT, of Wisconsin, and I want to read it.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator if he can name the members of the Publication Bureau?

Mr. CURTIS. They were appointed by the President, and the bureau is composed of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and Mr. Creel, as I am informed.

> When a man is selected under the draft there will be no stigma upon him. He will walk out from his community, and his neighbors will point to him and say, "There is a man who has been chosen by our country for distinguished service. He is going to fight for us." That is the selective draft. But upon the failure of the volunteer system when conscription is resorted to what is the situation? The finger of scorn and of shame is pointed at the conscript then, and he has the mark of a coward and a slacker upon him. Which shall we choose?

Those are the words that this Bureau of Information quotes with approval from the distinguished Member of the House, spoken while a Member of the House, and now this administration seeks to discredit him because he is the Republican candidate for the United States Senate.

I hope the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] will read to the Senate a letter that was written by the President of the United States in behalf of a Democratic candidate for Congress in an Indiana district to fill a vacancy where he vouched for that man's loyalty and asked for his election, and yet that man in the House, as shown by the RECORD, voted the same as did Mr. LENROOT upon the McLemore resolution referred to. I hope that letter may be printed in the RECORD by the Senator from Utah.

In addition to that I want to call the attention of the country to this fact: I have in my hand the record of every vote cast in the Senate during the war Congress, and of the votes cast on the Republican side 76 per cent plus were for the war propositions, while on the Democratic side the votes cast for these same war measures were 75 per cent minus. That is the record upon which we Republicans stand. It is the best evidence of our loyalty, and we challenge the other side to contradict it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, for the last three years there has never been a Republican Senator speak in opposition to any administrative program but immediately some Senator upon the other side of the Chamber would arise in his seat and charge the Republican Party with disloyalty and with playing politics, and it has generally fallen to the lot of the Senator from Mississippi when not preempted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE].

Mr. President, I think more of my country than I do of my party, and if ever the welfare of America conflicts with the principles or policies of my party I will be found defending the former. Practically all the Republicans of the Senate and House have laid aside party lines since the declaration of war and have voted for legislation asked for by the President, though much of it has been revolutionary and socialistic in character and in some cases unjustifiable and unnecessary. No Republican has sought to secure party advantage by calling attention of the country to the admitted blunders of the administration in power. No word of warning of the extravagant and wicked waste of the people's money or weaknesses in the efficiency of the administration have been even intimated in debate, but some Democrat would immediately arise and claim no good could come to the country from such warning and would only bring joy to the Kaiser; also that the present was not the time for partisan action. Every request for power or money must be granted without question.

How different the course of our Democratic brethren when an election of a Democrat is at stake in any part of this country! The very first election after the declaration of war developed that nonpartisanship was to apply to Republicans only and that every Democrat, from the President to the lowest and least officeholder, was to direct his efforts, in Congress and out, to the advancement of the interests of the Democratic Party. I grant that neither by expressed utterances or by implication, neither by precept nor by example has the President advised the American people to diminish their interest in party welfare or their activity in the promotion of party interest.

From the day of his inauguration as President of all the people of the United States down to March 20, when he wrote a letter to the Democratic reorganization meeting in Newark, N. J., President Wilson has regarded himself as the head of that party, and that party as the necessary agency for efficient and loyal administration of the affairs of this Government. No man while occupying the White House has ever uttered strictures against his political opponents as severe as those President Wilson uttered in his Indianapolis speech on January 8, 1915; and nothing that he has since said, either as President or in his private capacity as a citizen, nor anything that he has since done by official or private act, has indicated any change in his distrust of the Republican Party.

This much, therefore, may be said in his praise, that while he is a most intense partisan, and persists in that partisanship in time of war just as he did in time of peace, yet he makes no pretense of being other than a partisan, and in this respect is dealing frankly with the American people. From first to last he has shown his partisanship by his appointments; by his refusal to accept the proffered service of a most capable man affiliated with that party which is the leading rival of his own. By his active support of partisan candidates not only national but local he has demonstrated his belief that not even the exigencies of war require the laying aside of partisan lines, partisan organization, and partisan activity. In fact, his own party, under his direction, was the first to organize extensively for the campaigns of 1918 and 1920, and is to-day far more active than has been any other political committee, either Democratic or Republican, at this distance of time before an election. The only rumored instance that I now call to mind in which there was even a semblance of abandonment of partisanship on the part of President Wilson was in his reported expression of a desire that a strong and popular Republican Senator, whose reelection was unquestionable, should be returned.

From the fact that a great many of President Wilson's admirers and fellow partisans have urged the abandonment of party activity during the continuance of the war, it has been assumed that President Wilson himself entertains such a view as to the policies that would best promote a unification of the American people in the great task of winning the war. But this has been an assumption unjustified by anything that the President has said or done. In every instance in which there is a possibility of Democratic success, and even when that possibility is very remote, the President's attitude has been such as to indicate a desire that his party leaders enter and continue a partisan contest with a determination to ask and give no quarter.

President Wilson deems the economic principles and policies of the Democratic Party superior to those of the Republican Party; he deems its chosen representatives better qualified to enact laws, interpret them, and administer them; and he looks upon both the principles and the personnel of the Republican Party with distrust. Judging by his utterances he believes that loyalty to America begins and ends in the Democratic Party, with exceptions only in cases where members of other parties have been of temporary local service to him. Entertaining those views, it is to be expected that he would consistently advocate the election of Democrats to office. With equal consistency he will expect that all men who believe in the superiority of Republican principles and policies, and in the superiority of the representatives and personnel of the Republican Party to legislate and administer the affairs of Government, will support the candidates of that party as earnestly and as continuously as he supports the candidates of his own.

His most recent utterance in behalf of a Democratic candidate was his letter to Mr. Joseph E. Davies, who was nominated by the Democrats as their candidate for the senatorship in Wisconsin. That letter will serve to disclose the fact that not only was the President willing to use the prestige of his high office for partisan purposes in time of war but he was willing to cast aspersions upon the loyalty of members of his own party, and even to condemn his own actions in order to accomplish the present partisan task of electing a Democrat to the United States Senate.

The President declared in his letter to Mr. Davies that "the McLemore resolution, the embargo issue, and the armed-neutrality issue presented the first opportunities to apply the acid test in our country to disclose true loyalty and genuine Americanism." A resolution to which Mr. Davies sustained no relation, he not having been a Member of either House of Congress, and it was a resolution of Congress and therefore there was no opportunity to apply to Mr. Davies any test whatever. Yet the McLemore resolution received the support of then Representative Kent, of California, whom the President subsequently appointed to a position of trust and responsibility under the Government. Thus the President gave his official approval to a man who, according to his estimate of what constitutes an "acid test," had failed in true loyalty and genuine Americanism. It must not be forgotten that among the principal advocates of the embargo were a number of the Democrats of the Senate, who, if the President's estimate of what constitutes an acid test is correct, are lacking in true loyalty and genuine Americanism.

This present effort on the part of the President to secure the election of a strongly partisan Democrat in a strongly Republican State is entirely consistent with his previous partisan activities. In a congressional contest in New Hampshire over the election of a Representative to fill a vacancy, the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], who is the Democratic whip in this body and who is recognized as the spokesman of the President, went upon the stump and was so extreme in his appeals for the election of a Democrat that he declared that a vote for the Republican candidate would be a vote "for Prussianism and the Kaiser." I might add that Mr. LEWIS is at the present moment on a similar mission in Wisconsin. In the campaign of 1917 for the election of a governor in the State of Massachusetts, one of the active Democratic speakers was Mr. Carl A. Vrooman, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, who was proclaimed as the voice of the administration's opinions relating to the issues involved in the campaign. He declared that the Nation would regard it as a demonstration of patriotism if Massachusetts should elect for governor a member of the President's party. I admit that the appeal of the honored gentleman resulted in a Republican governor receiving a plurality of nearly 90,000, and the Massachusetts troops are still at the front.

The fact that in both New Hampshire and Massachusetts the voters disregarded these specious appeals and elected loyal and capable men of the Republican Party demonstrates that the majority of the people do not accept the assumption that patriotism and honesty and efficiency are the peculiar possession of members of the Democratic Party.

We must not forget the case of Hon. Finly H. Gray, of Indiana, whom the President claimed in a letter of indorsement dated June 19, 1917, had given his administration the most generous and cordial support during his two years' service in the House, notwithstanding Mr. Gray was a member of the Naval Affairs Committee of the House and supported a minority report in opposition to the administration's policy of building more battleships, and that he made a speech against the administration's plan for an increase in the Navy, and declared that the building of more battleships was ridiculous, and that the proposition was monstrous and absurd. Mr. Gray's record shows that he opposed all manner of preparedness during his incumbency as a Representative, and yet his reelection would have afforded the President the greatest gratification, as admitted in his letter of June 19, 1917.

In his recent letter to the Democrats of New Jersey President Wilson concedes that his work can be properly done only if he devotes his whole thought and attention to it and thinks of nothing but the immediate task in hand. Nevertheless, he states that he can not overlook his responsibility as the leader of a great party and feels impelled to point out what he believes to be "the duty of the Democrats in New Jersey now and in the months to come, in order that the exigency of a great hour or crisis may properly be met." In his opinion the exigencies of this great hour and this crisis can properly be met only by the election of Democrats to office. He has made the issue; he has thrown down the gauntlet to those Americans who believe in the superiority of Republican principles and policies and in the greater ability of those men who constitute the Republican Party. It is an issue which Republicans have been willing either to ignore or to minimize. It is common knowledge, not only in both Houses of Congress but to the country at large, that in the consideration of measures either directly or indirectly bearing upon our war problems no Republican has permitted his party affiliations to influence in the least the opinions he expressed in debate or the vote he cast upon the passage of a measure. Republicans have been ready to come to the assistance of the President at any time and in any manner.

After Republicans have made such a splendid demonstration of their readiness to subordinate party interests and to join with the members of any and every other party in any and every effort to speed this war to a victorious end, they can now, in the maintenance of their own self-respect, take no course other than that of accepting the gage of battle as the President has drawn the battle lines and urge the election of Republicans as the representatives of the governmental principles and policies which we deem best for the permanent interests of the American Nation and most likely to contribute most effectively to the successful prosecution of the war and the wisest solution of the innumerable economic, financial, and social problems which will confront us.

Mr. President, we can only regret that our Commander in Chief in this stupendous war, around whom we rally to a man in his efforts to achieve victory, has not seen fit to abstain from partisan activities in contests for specific offices, and thereby reciprocate in spirit and deed the real nonpartisanship so essential to ultimate success.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I call for a vote on the pending amendment.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I think I have the floor. I call attention to the pending amendment, which amendment appropriates $15,000 out of the Chickasaw funds for the Murray Agricultural School, at Tishomingo. The item has been favorably reported by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; there is no objection to it from any quarter, and I see no reason why it can not be disposed of now.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I had thought during the address this afternoon of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] to give utterance to a few thoughts at the conclusion of his remarks, but other business intervened; and, although it is late, I will now give utterance to a few of the thoughts that then occurred to me. I shall be very brief in doing so, owing to the lateness of the hour, and in what I may say there shall be no politics.

During the last few days there have been repeated accusations made on the floor of the Senate that executive officials of the Government have been deceiving the people. The charge has frequently been made here that officials of the executive branch of the Government were deceiving the people. That is a very serious charge, and I do not believe there is anything to justify or warrant it. The assertion that an official of the Government is attempting to deceive the American people should not be made without some proof. I can not conceive of any reason why any official of an executive department of this Government would undertake to deceive the American people, to tell them falsehoods, and to put them under false impressions; and there has been nothing offered here as proof of those assertions, which are wholly unjustified and unwarranted. Not a scintilla of proof has has been offered.

For weeks past there has been almost daily a perfect tirade of criticism launched upon this floor against nearly every executive branch of the Government. Investigations have been set on foot as to nearly every branch of activity in the executive departments of the Government. A few weeks ago the people of this country were regaled by Members of this body with harrowing accounts of the suffering and neglect of our troops in the training camps and cantonments of the country. The people were told that the soldier boys of the country were not receiving proper medical attention and care, and the appeal has been loudly made to let the people of the country know the facts. Let the people know the truth, is daily vociferously demanded in the Senate. Now, I want to tell a few facts and make known a little truth.

Dr. Charles H. Mayo, of Rochester, Minn., is one of the greatest medical and surgical authorities in this country. A short time ago he testified before the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate that up to the time of our entrance into this war the Japanese Army, at the outbreak of the Russo-Japanese War, received the best medical care and attention and had the best sanitation that had ever been received by any army in the world; and he said that during the period when troops of the Japanese were in training in the training camps and cantonments of that country in preparation for war the deaths in the Japanese Army amounted to twenty to the thousand. That he said was the best record that had ever been made in the world up to the time of our entrance into the present war. He further stated that last winter, when weather and climatic conditions were at their worst in our training camps and cantonments, the deaths among our troops were less than ten to the thousand, and that thus our record in that respect was more than twice as good as the best that the world had ever known before.

I do not believe that anybody will gainsay Dr. Mayo's authority, his knowledge, or honesty in such matters. His great and unsurpassed ability is well known to the people of this country. He has proven his patriotism by giving up his great surgical practice, and he is now serving the people of this country as a surgeon with the rank of major in our Army, at a salary of $3,000 per year, devoting his great talents to the care of our soldiers and the welfare and defense of our country. There is an illustration of how unjust and unfounded are many of the wild charges and bitter criticisms that are launched by Senators against the War Department and its operations. Yet we continue to be treated daily to a perfect tirade of criticism by the Members of this body of the War Department and its officials, who are even accused of deceiving the people. Nearly everything that the War Department does is savagely attacked and criticized. This body seems to devote a large part of its precious time to criticism, denunciation, investigation of nearly everything that the War Department does, and of nearly every other executive branch of the Government, and, in this connection, I here and now call attention to the fact that it has now been more than six months since charges of unfitness to serve in this body were filed in the Senate against a Member of this body, and nothing has been heard in this body about those charges since then. The people of the country are loudly demanding to know what has become of those charges and what will be done about them, but nothing is heard of them or said about them in this body.

I am not now saying anything about the merit or lack of merit of those charges. I want that understood. I have nothing to say as to that. I have no expression of opinion to make about it. I merely refer to the indisputable fact that the charges were filed here more than six months ago, and that this body is so busily engaged in criticizing, denouncing, and investigating other departments of the Government that it either has not the time or has not the disposition to investigate charges against one of its own Members. I believe that it would be far more becoming in this body to investigate charges against its own Members than to indulge in daily tirades of criticism and denunciation and demands for investigation of other branches of the Government.

The United States Senate may be the only perfect branch of this Government. The only perfect body in the world may be the United States Senate. The only perfect body, the only body which never makes any mistakes of judgment, may be the United States Senate. The only body of men which has no shortcomings, no failings, no faults, no derelictions, and has nothing to do but to point out errors, faults, and neglect in other branches of this Government may be the United States Senate; but I do not believe the people of this country believe it. I, for one, do not believe it.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. OWEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m., Wednesday, March 27, 1918) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, March 28, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

During the executive session,

EXTENSION OF ARBITRATION WITH FRANCE.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Arizona, the injunction of secrecy was removed from the following:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith, to receive the advice and consent of the Senate to its ratification, an agreement between the United States and France, signed at Washington on February 27, 1918, extending for another period of five years the duration of the arbitration convention concluded between them on February 10, 1908.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
March 1, 1918.

The President:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, with a view to its transmission to the Senate, if his judgment approve thereof, to receive the advice and consent of that body to its ratification, an agreement between the Government of the United States and the Government of the French Republic, signed at Washington on February 27, 1918, extending for another period of five years the arbitration convention concluded between the two Governments on February 10, 1908.

Respectfully submitted.

ROBERT LANSING.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 27, 1918.

AGREEMENT EXTENDING THE DURATION OF THE ARBITRATION CONVENTION OF FEBRUARY 10, 1908, BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.

The Government of the United States of America and the Government of the French Republic, desiring to extend for another five years the period during which the arbitration convention concluded between them on February 10, 1908, and extended by the agreement concluded between the two Governments on February 13, 1913, shall remain in force, have authorized the undersigned, to wit: Robert Lansing, Secretary of State of the United States, and J. J. Jusserand, ambassador of the French Republic to the United States, to conclude the following agreement:

ARTICLE I.

The convention of arbitration of February 10, 1908, between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the French Republic, the duration of which by Article III thereof was fixed at a period of five years from the date of the exchange of ratifications, which period, by the agreement of February 13, 1913, between the two Governments was extended for five years from February 27, 1913, is hereby extended and continued in force for the further period of five years from February 27, 1918.

ARTICLE II.

The present agreement shall be ratified by the President of the United States of America, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and by the President of the French Republic, in accordance with the constitutional laws of France, and it shall become effective upon the date of the exchange of ratifications, which shall take place at Washington as soon as possible.

Done in duplicate in the English and French languages at Washington, this 27th day of February, 1918.

ROBERT LANSING. [SEAL.]
JUSSERAND. [SEAL.]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 27, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who hearest and answerest prayer, our God and our Father, hear and answer our prayers, mingled with the prayers of our allies.

Our heroic sacrifices mingled with the heroic sacrifices of our allies, our patriotism mingled with the patriotism of our allies pours itself out in deeds of heroism and valor, in defense of human liberty.

Our tears and sobs mingle with the tears and sobs of our allies for the precious dead and dying, the wounded and mangled on the field of carnage.

These are our prayers which spring spontaneously and fervently from the heart in behalf of human rights.

Thou art the God of justice, mercy, and love; all our faith and confidence are centered in Thee. In this hour of supreme trial, forsake us not, we beseech Thee, in the name of the world's great Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REPORTING OF ILLNESS OF SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent for three minutes in which to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent for three minutes in which to make a statement. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have asked for this time in order to have read at the desk a letter in regard to the illness and death of a sailor, statements having already been made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] in regard to the illness of soldiers and the reporting of such illness.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

TACOMA, WASH., March 20, 1918.

HON. ALBERT JOHNSON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: A friend of mine named Anderson Knowles enlisted in the Navy at Bremerton about eight months ago. He bought a $50 liberty bond, took out $5,000 worth of insurance, and sent all his spare money to his mother as long as he was stationed at Bremerton.

Quite a while ago he was sent East, and his mother heard nothing from him for many weeks. Finally she received a telegraphic notice of his death somewhere in Massachusetts from pneumonia, and word that his body would be sent to her. She does not know whether he was sick for a long or short time, and is in much distress.

I do not wish to publish any complaint, or, in fact, to make any complaint, but I have a boy at Bremerton likely to be sent away any day, and I should like to feel that should he be taken down by sickness I would be notified of his condition.

Yours, truly, ———.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to the Members that I understand that the Army is undertaking to send notice to parents of the serious illness of their sons. This is in line with what the Reavis resolution sought to accomplish. It is right and proper. I sincerely hope that a similar policy may prevail in the Navy.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. I have made several applications to the Bureau of Navigation in the Navy Department to learn of the condition of sailors in different parts of the world, and at no time have I failed to receive the information promptly, even though it was obtained by cable. I suggest to the gentleman—and I am in entire sympathy with the movement which he generously desires to make—that if he desires the information for any of his constituents he will ask the Bureau of Navigation to furnish the information, when I am sure it will be supplied cheerfully and readily. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman permit? If the parents of a sick sailor boy are not notified, certainly his Member in Congress can not be notified by the parents.

Mr. BUTLER. That may be true, but why does not the parent or some one interested in the parent apply to the Bureau of Navigation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. They have had no notification of his illness, which is the very point.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I wish to state that my experience in getting information in relation to sick and deceased soldiers is the same as that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER]. A short time ago a young man of my district who had enlisted in the marines lost his life on one of our battleships at sea. I went to headquarters, and they did everything that could be done, not only the chief clerk but the officer in charge. At the Navy Department they took pains to send a wireless message, and furnished me with immediate information. I was not denied information in any way. And not only the officers themselves but also their secretaries took a personal interest in furnishing all possible information.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 9867. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes.

CORRECTION IN ENGROSSMENT OF BILL (H. R. 9414).

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, on page 4104, where the section making appropriation for the bill that passed yesterday occurs, the motion was made—

That additional compensation granted by the provisions of this bill shall be paid out of the revenues of the Post Office Department.

I want to ask unanimous consent, before the bill is printed, to strike out the word "bill" and insert the word "act." That is the usual provision.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that in the engrossment of the bill that was passed yesterday that the word "bill" be changed to the word "act" in the connection stated by him. Without objection, the correction will be made, and the enrolling clerk will take notice.

There was no objection.

THE BUDGET SYSTEM (H. DOC. NO. 1006).

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

Mr. BARNHART. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Colorado yield to me in order to place a small privileged resolution before the House?

Mr. KEATING. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Colorado in a minute.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 289 (H. Rept. No. 416).

Resolved, That there shall be printed 1,000 additional copies of A Brief on the Adoption of a National Budget System for use in the House document room.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, has consent been procured?

The SPEAKER. It does not take consent.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. I do.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to ask the gentleman if this resolution that is being presented is predicated upon any reasonable expectation that some action is to be had during the present session looking to the adoption of a budget system?

Mr. BARNHART. I am not authorized to speak as to that. It is a very feasible proposition. I can say, so far as I am concerned personally, that I would be in favor of taking up such a proposition.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I have any objection to the resolution, but I call attention to the fact that this is Calendar Wednesday, and no business is in order except Calendar Wednesday business, unless that is dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will not insist on it if it takes only a short time, but——

Mr. McCORMICK. I hope the gentleman will not object. This matter interests all the Members of the House.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman is going to make a speech the Chair will rule this out of order.

Mr. WALSH. If you have got to act upon resolutions without information, I suppose a request for information is out of order.

The SPEAKER. Well, the rule is——

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman was attempting to answer a question that I propounded when this interruption came.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can answer the question.

Mr. BARNHART. He had answered it before this interruption took place.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following personal request, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MARCH 25, 1918.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I ask a couple of weeks' leave of absence from the House, on account of the illness of myself.

I am, respectfully, CALEB POWERS.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request will be granted.

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF THE WAR-RISK INSURANCE BILL.

Mr. RAYBURN rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. RAYBURN. I want to make an inquiry of the Speaker. The Senate, on Senate joint resolution 133, refused to concur in the House amendments and asked for a conference. That is the resolution authorizing the granting of insurance under the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended by the act approved October 6, 1917, on application by a person other than the person to be insured. The House agreed to the conference. This morning we met, and when the House amendments were explained to the Senate committee they asked the privilege of going back to the Senate and moving that they rescind their action in asking for a conference, stating that they were going to move that the Senate concur in the House amendments. I do not know in what shape that leaves it.

The SPEAKER. That automatically kills the conference.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that ought to be laid down as a rule.

The SPEAKER. Did not the Senate agree to the House bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. No. What the gentleman from Texas reports is that they met in conference, and, without having made any report at all, the Senate conferees proposed to go back and recede from their position.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought they had gone back and receded.

Mr. SHERLEY. No. The papers are in the hands of the conferees, and not in the hands of either House, and there ought to be a report made by the conferees to the respective Houses.

Mr. RAYBURN. That was what I was going to ask. I do not know what the practice is in the premises.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, the House agreed to the conference report, and therefore the papers are in the possession of the House conferees.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Therefore it is necessary, as I see it, for the conferees on the part of the House to make a formal report.

The SPEAKER. But the House conferees can not make a report until they know what the Senate does.

Mr. SHERLEY. They can report a disagreement and have the conference ended in that way. But the Senate can not act, not having the papers. It can not dispose of a conference simply on its own accord.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the Senate has such rules that they can move to reconsider the matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that the matter be allowed to go over until to-morrow.

FUEL ADMINISTRATION.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for seven minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to address the House for seven minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LEVER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I shall object to further speeches this morning.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may we know on what topic?

Mr. KEATING. It is on the order of the Fuel Administration.

Mr. McCORMICK. As it affects Colorado?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, on March 11 the National Fuel Administration reduced the price of bituminous lump coal at the mine in Colorado 50 cents a ton, and announced that on April 1 there would be a further reduction of 70 cents a ton. Other varieties of coal were r 'uced in proportion. I was notified of the action of the Fuel Administration through the following letter from Mr. Harry D. Nims, assistant to Dr. Garfield:

UNITED STATES FUEL ADMINISTRATION,
March 8, 1918.

Hon. EDWARD KEATING,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. KEATING: We have telegraphed to Colorado a new schedule of prices effective 7 a. m., March 11, 1918, as follows:

Bituminous domestic coal:
Run of mine	$2.25
Prepared sizes	3.50
Slack of screenings	1.25
Bituminous steam coal, Trinidad district:
Run of mine	2.35
Prepared sizes	3.25
Slack of screenings	1.65
Lignite coal:
Run of mine	2.25
Prepared sizes	3.25
Slack of screenings	1.00

The above prices are subject to the following summer reductions:

Bituminous domestic coal:
Apr. 1	$0.70
May 1	.50
June 1	.35
Aug. 1	.15
Bituminous steam coal, Trinidad district:
Apr. 1	.40
May 1	.30
June 1	.20
July 1	.10

I hope this will meet your approval and that you will agree with us that it should iron out most of the difficulties which have been involved in the situation

Very truly, yours,

UNITED STATES FUEL ADMINISTRATION,
By HARRY D. NIMS.

The moment it became known that the Fuel Administration had ordered a reduction in the price of coal in Colorado the coal mine operators of that State began bombarding Congress and the Fuel Administration with telegrams of protest. They asserted that the reduction would close scores of mines and seriously curtail the output of the State. In fact, one earnest protestant went so far as to say that thousands of miners had already been dismissed and that the State's coal production had been cut in two.

These statements found their way into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and, as I had urged the National Fuel Administration to cut the price of coal, I was naturally curious to ascertain just how much truth there was in these alarming stories. I wired to friends in Colorado asking for the facts, and received many replies. Among those I addressed was John A. Rush, a prominent attorney of Denver and the president of the Consumers' League of that city. This league was formed for the purpose of protecting the people against the exactions of the coal interests, and it has done much excellent work. As Mr. Rush was out of the city when my telegram reached Denver his law partner, Mr. Foster Cline, replied as follows:

John Lawson, John McLennon, the State mine inspector, and others say there are more coal miners now at work than ever before for the month of March. Some few mines are closed as usual for this time of the year because their coal can not be stored. Some smaller mines are short of orders because the consumers are waiting for lower prices on April 1.

John Lawson and John McLennon, referred to in the telegram, are leading officials of the miners' organization, and therefore in a position to know conditions at the various mines.

One of the leading newspaper men of Colorado wired me, denying the alarming reports circulated by the coal operators and concluding with the expressive, if not elegant, expression, "It is all bunk."

Mr. Speaker, no one wants to injure the coal-mining industry in Colorado or elsewhere, but it is just as well that gentlemen should understand that the coal consumers of this country have some rights which the Fuel Administration and the coal-mine owners are bound to respect. When Congress enacted the law which gave the President control over the coal mines of this country I am sure it was not our purpose to have that law administered exclusively in the interests of the men who own coal mines. If I understood the purpose of Congress, it was that the Fuel Administration should fix the price of coal at a figure which would insure every one engaged in the business a generous profit, but which at the same time would safeguard the public against extortion.

I think that was the thought that Dr. Garfield had in mind when he accepted the position of Fuel Administrator; but I am also convinced that at times he has been sadly imposed upon by representatives of the mine owners and that he has been led to issue orders which were not in the public interest.

In that connection Colorado's experience may prove illuminating. Some time in August last the President of the United States fixed the price of bituminous lump coal at the mine in Colorado at $2.70 a ton. At that time the people of Colorado were complaining that the price of coal was unreasonably high. This complaint, by the way, was not confined to Colorado but was quite general throughout the Nation, and the justice of it was largely responsible for the passage of the bill placing coal mines under governmental control. The people of Colorado, in common with the people of the rest of the country, looked for relief through governmental regulation. You can therefore imagine their surprise when on the 1st of October, instead of reducing the price of coal, the National Fuel Administration issued an order advancing the price of bituminous lump coal from $2.70, the figure fixed by the President, to $4 a ton. This was done at the urgent solicitation of a committee of coal-mine owners which had been sent to Washington from Colorado. The coal consumers were given no chance to present their side of the case, and the first they knew of the decision was when it was announced in my home town—Pueblo, Colo.—that the retail price of lump coal, instead of being reduced, would be advanced 50 cents a ton.

I immediately began to receive protests by letter and telegram, and I suggested to the Fuel Administration that the order advancing the price of coal be suspended until such time as all the parties in interest could be heard. This was not done, but Mr. H. D. Nims, representing Dr. Garfield, assured me he would be glad to make an investigation. When he learned that I was about to leave for Colorado he suggested that I examine into the situation "from the consumer's point of view" and let him know the result.

I agreed to do this, and on my arrival in Colorado went to some trouble to get at the facts. I found that the city of Denver was operating a municipal coal yard, having been compelled to enter into the coal business because of the unreasonable prices charged by the coal dealers. The city purchased its coal from two independent coal operators and paid $2.20 a ton for lump coal at the mine. The leading paper of Denver, the Post, was also in the coal business, and I found it was purchasing its coal from three different companies on the basis of $2.10 a ton for lump coal at the mouth of the mine. Here were five companies selling lump coal at the mouth of the mine for $2.10 and $2.20 a ton and making money, while the National Fuel Administration was insisting that $4 a ton was a reasonable price.

Mr. SLAYDEN. At the mine?

Mr. KEATING. At the mine.

Mr. SHERWOOD. For the same class of coal?

Mr. KEATING. In some cases.

Mr. FARR. Does the gentleman say it was the same class of coal?

Mr. KEATING. Yes. In some cases it was the same kind and in some cases not.

Mr. WHEELER. As I understand, the Fuel Administrator fixed $4 a ton, and the dealers raised the price to the consumer 50 cents?

Mr. KEATING. Yes; the price——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given such time as he requires.

Mr. KEATING. It will require only a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEATING. I transmitted these and other facts to the Washington office of the Fuel Administrator, and urged that an investigation be made and that the price of coal be reduced.

The exactions of the coal interests aroused deep resentment among the people, and organizations were formed all over the State to assist in the fight for fair coal rates, but nothing definite was accomplished. Instead the President ordered an additional advance of 45 cents a ton to cover the cost of an increase of wages which he had authorized. There was little opposition to this, because the people felt the money was going to those who actually dug the coal, but they continued to insist that the original increase authorized by the Fuel Administration of $1.30 a ton was without justification.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. During the confusion I did not hear the early part of the gentleman's remarks. Did I understand him aright that he contends that the people have some rights that the Fuel Administrator is bound to respect?

Mr. KEATING. Yes. Not only that, but I am trying to demonstrate that the Fuel Administration is recognizing the rights of the people.

When I returned to Washington in December I again presented the facts to the Fuel Administration, and after many conferences was told that the entire subject would be referred to a board made up of experienced coal men, who would go over the cost sheets of the coal companies and all other data which might be available. This board devoted much time to the work, and I am sure was in no sense unfriendly to the coal-mine owners. It was on the recommendation of this board that Dr. Garfield finally ordered the reduction in the price of coal in Colorado to which I have referred.

Therefore the reduction was not made hastily. It was not suggested by inexperienced men who had only an "academic" knowledge of the coal business. It was made after the people of Colorado had been compelled to pay exorbitant prices for a period of five months, and after the facts had been so clearly proven that they could no longer be controverted.

In support of this latter statement permit me to quote from a letter written to Senator CHARLES S. THOMAS, of Colorado, by Dr. Garfield on March 20, 1918. After stating that he had based his action in the Colorado case on a report submitted to him by a committee of engineers, consisting of Mr. Cyrus Garnsey, jr., Mr. R. V. Norris, and Mr. James H. Allport, all experienced coal men, Dr. Garfield writes:

> I have examined the costs reported by 13 of the mines reported by Mr. Nash to have shut down; the sheets of the others, apparently, have not been turned in to the Federal Trade Commission. The costs reported reveal the fact that not in a single instance did the August costs reported by the mine exceed the price fixed. Indeed, the highest cost for August showed a profit of 2 cents per ton and the lowest 89 cents per ton. In September two of these mines reported costs slightly in excess of the price fixed. In one case only was the cost excessively high, and that was of a mine which produced only 298 tons. This mine reported $1.69 less cost per ton on a still smaller tonnage for August.
> An examination of the costs available of these mines does not warrant the assumption that they have closed down because of inability to produce at a profit.
> Sincerely, yours, (Signed) H. A. GARFIELD,
> United States Fuel Administrator.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman tell me the highest price he knows of that any consumer paid for soft coal in Colorado?

Mr. KEATING. That would depend on the location. In the mountain districts it went very high.

Mr. SNYDER. About how high?

Mr. KEATING. In my own town, which is in the valley, it was $7.25.

Mr. SNYDER. I just want to say that there are some consumers in the East who are now paying as high as $4.50 at the mine.

Mr. KEATING. The situation in the East and the situation in the West are not at all alike. In the West we had no coal shortage worth mentioning. There it was entirely a question of price; and our contention was that the price charged by the coal-mine owners was unreasonable and extortionate.

Mr. SNYDER. I think the gentleman is quite right. I just asked for information, that is all.

Mr. KEATING. My only criticism of the Fuel Administration is that it was unreasonably slow in responding to the complaints of the coal consumers of Colorado; but, in explanation of the administration's conduct, it is only fair to state that Dr. Garfield and his lieutenants were so busy endeavoring to straighten out the coal situation in the Northern and Eastern States that they had little time to devote to Colorado's problems.

My object in making this statement to-day and in taking up the time of the House in this fashion is to indorse the order of the Fuel Administration and to express the hope that Dr. Garfield will not be influenced by the clamor of the profiteers. [Applause.]

When I returned from Colorado last December I submitted the following statement to the Fuel Administration at the request of Mr. Nims, Dr. Garfield's assistant:

DECEMBER 6, 1917.

Mr. H. D. NIMS,
United States Fuel Administration,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. NIMS: When I was leaving for Colorado early in October you asked me to report to you on the coal situation in that State "from the consumer's point of view." I endeavored to comply, and from the 14th to the 20th of October submitted to you by wire the results of investigations which I conducted in Denver, Pueblo, and other Colorado cities and towns.

Permit me to again summarize my findings, which I assure you can be supported by ample evidence:

COST OF COAL AT THE MINES.

President Wilson fixed the price of bituminous lump coal at the mines in Colorado at $2.70 per ton. At the solicitation of the coal-mine owners, your office on October 4 advanced this price to $4 per ton and, later on, the President added another 45 cents to cover a general advance in wages which he authorized. Corresponding advances were made in the Colorado lignite fields. I will not burden you with all the figures, as I know you have them in your office. For the purposes of this letter, I will deal with the price of bituminous lump, which is the coal used by the people of my home city—Pueblo, Colo.—but the argument which I will make for the reduction of the price of bituminous will apply with equal force to lignite, the coal largely used by the people of Denver and other northern Colorado towns.

In my judgment the Fuel Administration's action in advancing the price of bituminous lump from $2.70 to $4 was without justification and should be rescinded.

When this advance was ordered, and for weeks thereafter—or until the President directed the last advance of 45 cents per ton—the Denver Post was purchasing both lignite and bituminous lump at the mine for $2.10 per ton and carrying on an extensive retail trade in the same in the city of Denver.

Mayor Robert W. Speer, of Denver, on behalf of the municipal coal yard, was purchasing lignite lump from three different companies for $2.20 per ton and selling the same to the people.

Mayor Speer and the Post took practically the entire output of five coal mines at the prices indicated, and my information leads me to believe that the coal operators made a reasonable profit.

If five companies—operating under union conditions and without any material natural advantage—could afford to sell lump coal at the mine for $2.10 and $2.20, why was it necessary for the Fuel Administration to authorize an advance to $4 a ton?

On April 1, 1917, all the retail coal dealers of Pueblo were purchasing bituminous lump at the mines for $2.75 a ton, and the coal companies were prospering.

What occurred between April 1, 1917, and October 1, 1917, to justify an advance of $1.25 a ton? I have endeavored to ascertain the facts and am convinced that 25 cents a ton would more than cover any increase in cost of production.

Bituminous lump should be reduced $1 a ton at the mines and a similar cut should be made in lignite.

I have received a number of complaints from granges and other organizations which have been accustomed to buying coal in carload lots and distributing it among their members. They allege that since you issued your regulations, the dealers' combines have induced many of the coal companies to refuse to sell to them. Other citizens have had similar experiences.

I hope it will be possible for you to break up these combines and to restore free competition. There should be no question about the citizen's right to purchase at the mine in carload lots.

As I stated to you in my telegram of October 18, I am sure that an investigation will show that the consumers of Colorado are paying not less than $1.50 a ton too much for their coal.

They have submitted to this extortion with marvelous patience, hoping that the National Fuel Administrator, exercising the ample powers vested in him by Congress, would eventually afford relief. That relief, if it is to be of value, must be granted at once. Already many of our citizens have purchased their winter's supply of coal. You can not return the money which has been unjustly taken from them, but you can protect the pocketbooks of the others.

Sincerely, EDWARD KEATING.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the business in order to-day under the rule.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what the attitude of the majority leader [Mr. KITCHIN] is on that question. I have not talked with him personally, but representing him here in his absence I think, from what understanding I have of the matter, I shall have to object to unanimous consent.

Mr. LEVER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with the proceedings in order to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves to dispense with the business in order on Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to five minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I have five minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman does not care to debate it, I do not care to do so.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina to dispense with Calendar Wednesday business.

The question being taken, on a division, demanded by Mr. STAFFORD, there were—ayes 104, noes 24.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 299, nays 47, not voting 85, as follows:

SALE OF SEED GRAIN TO FARMERS.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report (H. Rept. No. 417) from the Committee on Rules, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 281.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the following bill reported from the Committee on Agriculture as a committee substitute for H. R. 7795:

"A bill to provide for the national security and defense and further to assure an adequate supply of food, by authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to contract with farmers in certain areas for the production of grain through advances, loans, and otherwise, and by providing for the voluntary mobilization of farm labor, and for other purposes.

"Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, for the crop of 1918, to make advances or loans to farmers in spring-wheat areas of the United States where he shall find special need for such assistance for the purchase of wheat, oats, and barley for seed purposes, or, when necessary, to procure such seed and sell the same to such farmers. Such advances, loans, or sales shall be made upon such terms and conditions and subject to such regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe, including an agreement by each such farmer to use the seed thus to be obtained by him for the production of grain during the crop season of 1918. A first lien on the crop to be produced from seed obtained through a loan, advance, or sale made under this section shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, be deemed sufficient security therefor. The total amount of such advances, loans, or sales to any one farmer shall not exceed $450. All such advances or loans shall, as far as practicable, be made through the agency of State and National banks. For carrying out the purposes of this section there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $7,500,000, available immediately.

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to provide for and secure the voluntary mobilization and distribution of farm labor for the production and harvesting of agricultural crops for the year 1918, and to advance railroad fares and other actual traveling expenses for the transportation of such labor, upon such terms and conditions and subject to such regulations as he shall prescribe. For carrying out the purposes of this section there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500,000, available immediately.

"SEC. 3. That, in carrying out the purposes of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate with the Secretary of Labor or any other Federal, State, county, or municipal department, agency, or officer, or with any person or with any association of farmers, board of trade, chamber of commerce, or similar organization.

"SEC. 4. That until the purposes of this act have been accomplished the Secretary of Agriculture shall, as soon as possible after the close of each calendar year, cause to be made to the Congress a detailed report showing all proceedings and transactions under this act during such calendar year. Such report shall, in addition to other matters, contain a statement of all persons employed, the salary or compensation of each, the aggregate amount of loans, advances, or sales, and the total amount thereof unpaid, and all receipts and disbursements under this act. All moneys collected by the United States under this act shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

"SEC. 5. That any person who shall knowingly make any false representation for the purpose of obtaining an advance, loan, or sale under this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both.

"SEC. 6. That not exceeding $100,000 of the moneys appropriated by this act may be expended for the payment of such administrative expenses, including such rent, the expense of such printing and publications, the purchase of such supplies and equipment, and the employment of such persons and means, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary for the purposes of this act."

Resolved further, That there shall be not exceeding two hours of general debate, the time to be controlled, one hour by Mr. LEVER and one hour by Mr. HAUGEN; that all debate shall be confined to the subject matter of the bill; that at the expiration of the general debate the committee substitute shall be read section by section for amendment under the five-minute rule; that at the conclusion of such reading the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House, whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the bill and amendments to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the rule by striking out "two hours" and inserting "four hours."

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman can not get the floor to make that motion.

Mr. WALSH. I have been recognized, I submit. I was asked why I rose.

Mr. FOSTER. Under all parliamentary rules the gentleman has no such right. I was on my feet just as the Clerk completed the reading of the rule.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman was on his feet, but not seeking recognition.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman was seeking it at the proper time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois had had recognition.

Mr. POU. The motion is not in order.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman can not supersede me by getting up and "hollering" out in that way.

Mr. WALSH. It is necessary to "holler" out to obtain recognition from the Chair, and I received recognition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois already had recognition. The gentleman from Illinois had the floor.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, does the Chair rule that my motion is out of order?

The SPEAKER. Yes. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is entitled to 20 minutes.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, this rule provides for the consideration of the committee substitute for H. R. 7795, which is for furnishing of seed to farmers by the Government to increase the supply of food for the coming year. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], the ranking Republican member of the Committee on Rules, has just been called to the War Department, and he requests me to state for him that he is in favor of the rule and also for the bill.

Personally, I think this rule simply makes it in order for this House to consider another one of those radical measures that we have been accustomed to consider during the present session of Congress under the caption of war-emergency legislation. Last week when we were discussing the war finance corporation bill that measure was characterized, as I remember it, by both the leader of the minority and the majority as one of the most radical measures that had ever come before the House, and as a measure that would not receive a moment's consideration in time of peace. I believe this measure is even more radical than the war finance corporation bill, and goes further toward committing the Federal Government to the policy of paternalism than any measure yet considered, and when we have once committed this Government to the principle of paternalism it is going to be mighty difficult to get away from it. Personally I am against this Government adopting that principle, but as long as we have adopted it, as far as big business is concerned, shipbuilding, public utilities, and the railroads, I do not believe we can consistently refuse to comply with the request from the farmers when their request is a moderate one, when we consider that they are conducting the most important business in this country at the present time, not only from our own standpoint, but from the standpoint of our allies. [Applause.] And if loaning them a small amount of money will in any way increase the food production during the present season, I think we are under obligations to do it, no matter how radical the measure may seem to be at the present time.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Certainly.

Mr. LANGLEY. Does not the gentleman think that this bill would accomplish the end more effectively if it were broadened so as to include other farm products?

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman will wait a moment, I shall come to that.

Mr. SNYDER rose.

Mr. LANGLEY. I wish the gentleman would discuss the corn-seed problem.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. To the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER].

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if he has had any particular deluge of requests from farmers in his district for this measure?

Mr. SNELL. Not a one, as far as seed is concerned, but many on subject of labor shortage.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I want first to finish my statement, and then I will yield. I consider that when we adopt the provisions carried in this bill we are committing this Government to the wildest kind of wildcat banking, and I doubt if much of this money will ever be returned to the United States Treasury. But, on the other hand, if we are going to consider this legislation at all, it should be considered at this time, because if we wait a little longer it will not do any good to the farmer and not in any way help to increase the crop for 1918.

Now, just a moment on the provisions of the bill itself. Section 1 appropriates $7,500,000 for relief of farmers in the spring-wheat areas of the United States. This, of course, to a large degree confines the relief to the Northwest. As I look at the whole bill, if it is good for the Northwest, it ought to be good for the Northeast; if it is a good thing for the State of Montana, it ought to be a good thing for the State of Maine; and, whether the people of my district have requested it or not, if it is the proper thing that this Government should loan $450 to any individual farmer to buy seed in the spring, it is certainly a good thing to loan it to any farmer in any part of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. In just a minute. When the time comes I propose to offer an amendment to the bill making it applicable to any and every farmer in any and every part of the whole country. [Applause.] The second provision of this bill, in my judgment, is by far the better part of the bill and a step in the right direction. It appropriates $2,500,000 for the mobilizing and distribution of farm labor, the only help the farmers, as a whole, need and the only part of the bill I am deeply interested in. As far as I have learned the needs of the farmers of the whole country, they are more in need of labor to help them put in a crop, cultivate and harvest it than they are in need of seed. [Applause.]

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. SNELL. I will.

Mr. WHEELER. In view of the gentleman's statement about not confining it to any particular area, why not include corn, timothy, and clover seed?

Mr. SNELL. It is perfectly agreeable to me, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why not include clothes to the farmer?

Mr. SNELL. I represent an agricultural district. The people in my district are so busy they do not bother their Representative about matters unless they are important. I have received more letters from the farmers in my district in the last 60 days than in the previous 3 years of my service here, and every letter I have received has been along the lines of the shortage of farm labor, and, as far as I am able to learn, there is almost an entire disappearance of farm labor in all rural parts of this country. You must remember the farmer can not compete in question of wages with the munition manufacturer, shipbuilder, and contractor who is working for the Government on a cost-plus basis. In addition to this, you have taken during the last year over 200,000 of the best young men from the farms and put them in the Army; so it is up to us, if we want them to continue to furnish food supply for the world, to do something definite in the way of relief for the present labor shortage in rural communities. I am assured by the Labor Department here in Washington that there is plenty of labor in this country, but that it is simply a matter of distribution. Now, this bill provides $2,500,000 for this distribution of farm labor, and I trust that the Agricultural Department will get to work at once and, if this labor is available, see that it is distributed where it is most needed. Thus they will be rendering a real aid to every farmer in every part of the country.

The President and Mr. Hoover are all the time appealing to the patriotism of the farmers to raise more food products. Their advertisements are in every newspaper and magazine in the country. The farmers do not need to be appealed to on the ground of patriotism. What they need is more actual man power to help put in the crop, cultivate, and harvest it. [Applause.] You must understand that it takes more than patriotism to hold a plow and follow a drag on the farm. They have got the patriotism, but they lack the man power. The second part of this bill to a certain extent provides for that man power, and for that reason I am in favor of the bill and I hope that the rule and bill will be approved by the Members of this House. [Applause.]

I reserve the balance of my time. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman used eight minutes.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, with that portion of the bill which provides for the making of advances or loans for the purpose of purchasing of seeds I am not in sympathy. I have not been convinced from such study as I have had the opportunity to give the question that the exigency is such as to require this extremely radical legislation, but I may be mistaken about it; I know that a great number of my colleagues who have given much thought and attention to it feel that it is a necessary measure and for that reason I have not felt disposed to undertake to wage any very bitter fight upon the rule or upon the bill itself, but I did not wish it to go by without at least stating my attitude toward the matter, because I may want to refer to it in the future when other legislative matters shall arise here upon the floor of the House. I yield back whatever time I may have left.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker and members of the House, having the honor to be a member of the Committee on Agriculture that presents this bill I feel it my duty, having the opposition point of view, to present that point of view. I am opposed to this bill as being one of the most dangerous precedents that could ever be established by any legislative body on earth. I do not believe in the principle involved in the bill. I did not support it in the committee, and I shall not support it here. We need not try to deceive the country. We are now pretending to pass a bill appropriating $7,500,000 to be given to the spring-wheat section of the country—three or four States. We are engaged in that important work in this House the last of March. April is the planting season, and you are holding out here, this great body of legislators, that we are going to get $7,500,000 loaned to the individual farmers during the month of April when another legislative body must deal with this proposition and April will be passed before it can be reached, and you know it. You will never get any legislation in the first place——

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. No; I have but five minutes. In the next place, if you get the legislation, then this money is to be loaned by the Secretary of Agriculture, loan $450 to an individual allotment, through the $7,500,000 that you are giving. Where is your machinery that you are going to be able in a few days' time to make these loans to the individual farmer? You need not try to fool the country. You can not get the machinery together to do it, and every Member of this House knows it. Now, what is the proposition? One hundred and sixty-six thousand six hundred and sixty-six families will be entitled to the loan. Who is going to find those people and who is going to draw the contracts? You know it can not be done; it is a perfect impossibility. The Secretary of Agriculture knew it. He is opposed to the legislation and so stated in the committee, and yet we engage in this foolish piece of conduct.

Now, another thing: Some four or five States up there are involved. I sympathize with those people who have had droughts. My State has had the most severe drought in its history, and yet they have not asked anything on this floor. Let Texas take care of Texas is my slogan. Let these States that have suffered these droughts exercise their ability to take care of the situation, if it is possible to do it, but not go on the principle of coming to the Federal Government and ask that the Secretary of Agriculture go out to Tom, Dick, and Harry and make these loans. And what is the security? That, in his judgment, he need not take any further security than a loan on the crop. And there, gentlemen of the House, you run into the proposition of separate and distinct laws in the several States involved. I presume that every State involved in this matter has its landlord-and-tenant statute. My State has. The landlord has preferential liens on all the crops grown, and nobody can get in under that lien. It is statutory. I understand that a great deal of this land is owned by absent landlords, and they have not sufficient confidence in their own land and in their own tenants to advance this seed with which to seed the land. Are you going to be engaged in the foolish proposition of advancing to various people when the landlords will not advance to them, and let him step in with the statutory lien that is prior to the lien of the Government, collect his debt, and let the Government stand the loss? That is what this bill does. It lets the absent landlord reap the reward upon the taxes of the American people, who must be called upon to contribute this $7,500,000. And with these principles involved in the bill I can not give it my support.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I am not so much interested in the feature of the bill that provides for the loan of money to farmers as I am for the part of the bill that provides for the purchase and reselling of the seed. I am not sure that I can support this bill in its present form, because I do not think we ought to take care of the spring-wheat area alone. In my State last year practically 75 per cent of the corn was frostbitten, and the question of seed corn in Indiana is a serious one to our people. They can not get it. I do not care so much about the loaning of the money with which to buy it as that the Government get it and sell it to the farmer.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman know that $6,000,000 was appropriated to sell seed for cash to farmers in that country?

Mr. BLAND. Then why is there necessity for this bill at all?

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no necessity for it at all, then.

Mr. BLAND. This bill——

Mr. HAUGEN. And I might add that a bill is to come in in the near future that will take care of the proposition the gentleman refers to.

Mr. BLAND. I am confining my remarks to this bill. Unless it was amended to include corn for the Middle West, I think it would fail in its purpose very largely. If there is necessity for seed anywhere in the world, it is in the corn districts that were frostbitten last year. I do not see why the committee should overlook such an important proposition as this. If I have an opportunity I am going to offer an amendment to strike out the words "spring-wheat area," so that the bill will apply to all of the United States, and then insert the word "corn," because I think if there is any necessity for anything to be furnished it is for seed corn. Recently we had the food department of the State over here investigating this question, and the secretary told me they were having an awful time trying to locate seed corn. They tried to prevent the farmer from selling their good corn on the market, and were trying to get what they could saved for seed purposes. The price was so attractive that most of the good corn for seed was sold and no doubt consumed.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure that the membership of the House voted erroneously a few minutes ago, under the impression that the Congress had not provided ample funds to purchase seed and resell it to the farmers in those districts of the country where there was a drought or where there were poor crops. In the bill that was signed by the Speaker this morning, the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, $4,000,000 was provided as a revolving fund to the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out, in addition to the $2,500,000 that was provided last year, the very purposes which the gentleman from Indiana and others have in mind to accommodate the farmers. But this bill goes further. This bill is a reflex——

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. This bill is a reflex of the opinions of the Nonpartisan League in securing radical and socialistic legislation in North Dakota. The legislature of that State in special session this spring authorized all the counties to advance money by loans to the respective farmers for the very purpose which is embodied in this bill. And this Congress now is emulating the socialistic principles of this Nonpartisan League for the first time, by establishing a policy of loaning money to farmers. Where will we stop?

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] says we have a precedent in the action taken the other day in authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to loan money to various commercial and industrial activities. Why, the very warrant for that legislation was that the Federal reserve banks did not have authority, and that the Federal Reserve System would break down in making long-time loans.

If I had not had some experience with North Dakota in years back, during periods of excessive droughts, I would not to-day be so strongly in opposition to this measure; but I am somewhat acquainted with the conditions out there, and know the conditions when they have suffered successive droughts by reason of the Chinook winds coming from the south and blighting their crops. And yet in those days, when wheat was less than $1, less than 75 cents, less than 50 cents, they were able to meet the conditions. And since then we have passed the Federal reserve act that brings relief to the farmers from the local banks for short-time loans, and we have passed the Federal farm-loan act that brings relief for long-time loans, and notwithstanding these, as a sop to this Nonpartisan League, at the instance of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER], a bill is introduced in here, and Congress is asked to ratify the fundamental principles of this new socialistic party, which is running wild in the western prairie States and which has not the courage of its principles to announce that they are socialistic fundamentally.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. BLAND. In the legislation that has already been passed on this question does the gentleman take the position that the spring-wheat field area has been taken care of as well as the corn question?

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to say that the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations show that the Agricultural Department has been doing everything in its power to meet the drought conditions in the various parts of the country by furnishing at cost not only seed wheat but seed corn. The department has been doing everything, and the committee has just voted $4,000,000 additional to the $2,500,000, which it makes a revolving fund, whereby adequate means are furnished for that very purpose.

Mr. BLAND. For what purpose?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, the resolution making in order this proposed legislation is a very simple one. It is not the character of rule that I objected to a few days ago, under which the Post Office salary-increase bill was taken up. There are no riders or jokers introduced under this rule. It provides simply for the consideration of the bill reported from the Committee on Agriculture as a committee substitute for the bill H. R. 7795, and the committee substitute, including the title and enacting clause to be considered, is set out fully in the rule. The rule does not provide for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7795.

The committee substitute that is to be before the House for consideration if this rule is adopted may be divided into two parts. The first part provides for an appropriation of $7,500,000, to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture to encourage the production of wheat, oats, and barley in the spring-wheat growing areas of the United States. It is provided that the Secretary of Agriculture may make contracts with farmers to increase the production of wheat, oats, and barley and to advance them money for seed in connection with these contracts, or the Secretary may loan to farmers outright an amount not exceeding $450 to each farmer, to enable him to secure seed to put in a crop and increase the production of wheat, oats, or barley.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield, or would he rather not yield?

Mr. NORTON. Not just now. If this war has made clear anything, it has made clear the fact that agriculture and the production of foodstuffs is one of the things most essential to the success of our Nation and our allies in this war. If any of the industries are to be helped and encouraged by the Government during this war, agriculture is deserving of the first and highest consideration.

One of the questions which has arisen in the discussion of this bill is as to whether there is any necessity for this legislation, or whether it does not come too late. If there is necessity for it, I dare say there is not a single man in this House who will object to this legislation or who will oppose it.

Mr. RAGSDALE. A married man may do it? [Laughter.]

Mr. NORTON. Well, I think, on the merits of the proposition, both the married men and the single men of the House will support it.

If there is a real necessity for this legislation—and I believe there is—if under the authority proposed to be granted by this bill to the Secretary of Agriculture it will enable him to give aid and encouragement to farmers in the spring-wheat growing areas of the United States to such an extent that a material increase will be made there this year in the production of wheat, oats, and barley; if, as it clearly appears, the enactment of this bill as drafted in the Committee on Agriculture is likely to result in an increased production this year of more than 20,000,000 bushels of wheat, the bill merits the support of every Member of the House interested in a sufficient supply next year of wheat for the people of our own Nation and for those of our allies in this great war. If, on the other hand, the Secretary of Agriculture finds that the aid to be extended by this proposed legislation comes too late or is not needed, then the appropriation of $7,500,000 provided in the bill for seed will simply not be used and the money will remain in the Federal Treasury to be used for other purposes of the Government. By the terms of the bill it is left wholly within the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture to make contracts with farmers for increased production of wheat, oats, and barley or to advance or loan them money to secure seed, so that they may sow and produce this year a greater amount of these grains than, without such aid, they otherwise would be able to do.

The second and most important part of the bill provides for the mobilization of farm labor and the distribution of it to different sections of the country where it may be most needed. An appropriation of $2,500,000 is proposed for this purpose. Surely everyone who knows anything about how the attraction of new war industries and high wages in the cities has depleted farm labor in many sections of the country will give his support to this feature of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. I should like very much to yield to my friend, but I have but a few minutes of time—not enough even to permit me to conclude my own reasons why this rule should be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. EVANS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of the principle of this bill. It may be that this bill will need amending. It may be that it is not broad enough to cover all sections of the country. But the amount of money appropriated will not go very far It will not wreck this Government. We are daily appropriating money here to carry on the war of the ages. We are here to-day asked to appropriate some money to produce foodstuffs to feed the men, and we are told, "This is revolutionary; this is unprecedented."

My friends, within a year we appropriated $800,000,000 for aeroplanes. I wonder if anybody thinks we are going to get any of it back? Of course it is unprecedented. Of course nothing was ever done before of the kind, nor did you ever see upon the floor of this House a bill to furnish money to munition factories, to shipbuilders, to railroads, until now.

Mr. Speaker, there is a class of people that need financial help just now. Let me speak to you about my own State, because I know more about my own State than I do of other sections of the country. Our people are a wheat-growing people, largely in all eastern Montana. They have settled that country within the last few years. Last year there were 20,000 homestead entries made in the State of Montana and the year before probably as many. There are 60,000 land entries in Montana to which people have no title yet. There is nothing that they can give as security to any bank or financial institution, because they have no title to the land. Six years ago we raised about 5,000,000 bushels of wheat in Montana. Five years ago we raised about 12,000,000 bushels. Three years ago we raised about 18,000,000 bushels. Two years ago we raised about 25,000,000 bushels. Last year we had a failure of crops for the first time. If we had raised what we planted we would have raised 50,000,000 bushels of wheat. Our people lost their crops last year. They borrowed from every bank and financial institution all that they would lend them for the purpose of putting in seed, but they now have no finances; they have no title to the lands. The entryman who has not yet secured title can not go to his merchant or banker and obtain a loan, because he has no security to offer.

He can not go to his banker or to his merchant and borrow anything, because he has no title to his land. There are at least 60,000 of these men in the State of Montana, and every other Western State is to a greater or less degree in the same situation.

Mr. BUTLER. Will we be in time to help these people make a wheat crop if we pass this bill promptly?

Mr. EVANS. I think we will, but not if the bill suffers from the usual inertia of Congress. This bill has been before the Agricultural Committee for two months. It should have been acted on long ago. I introduced a similar bill last fall in the hope that it might be passed before this, but the inertia of Congress is almost beyond belief.

Mr. SWITZER. How late do they plant spring wheat in Montana?

Mr. EVANS. Probably until the 1st of May.

Mr. SEARS. Does the gentleman remember that it took the Federal farm-loan banks more than a year to get started before they could pass on titles and make loans?

Mr. EVANS. I suppose it did, but in this case there is no title to pass upon, except the mortgage on the man's crop.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. How late can they seed barley in Montana?

Mr. EVANS. I do not know. I should say all through the month of April and part of the month of May.

Mr. FOSTER. Gentlemen say that this action is unprecedented. Yes; but we have done things during this war and during this Congress that were unheard of before, and that no one of us would do in time of peace; but when it comes to doing something to help the farmer increase the food supply of the country the farmer is entitled to consideration. This action is unprecedented, of course, but we ought to give it fair consideration.

I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I think it unnecessary for me to say that under ordinary circumstances I would be the last man in this body to support a proposition of this kind. I recognize that it is carrying paternalism almost to the breaking point, and I am not a paternalist in my political or economic views. But our country is at war, and in the successful prosecution of this war bread is proving itself to be as important as cannon, munitions, bullets, and the like. [Applause.] We can not afford, because of any squeamishness, to take the risk of reducing the bread supply of this Nation. When I say the bread supply I have in mind especially the wheat-bread supply.

Mr. LANGLEY. Does the gentleman believe——

Mr. LEVER. I can not yield. It came to the attention of the Committee on Agriculture that in certain sections of the United States, notably in North Dakota, South Dakota, portions of Montana and Minnesota, the so-called spring-wheat area of the United States, they had suffered during the last year from a rather severe drought. It was argued to the committee with great force that in certain sections of that country many homesteaders were without means to buy wheat seed. It was argued that with proper encouragement from the Government, with a sufficient amount of seed for the purpose, the spring-wheat acreage of the United States could be increased three or three and one-half million acres during the 1918 crop year. If the yield from that acreage should be normal, it would add anywhere from 30,000,000 to 40,000,000 bushels of wheat to the wheat supply of this country. That amount may be critical. I have been very much encouraged at the sowing of winter wheat. The figures show that we have in already one of the largest crops of winter wheat that has ever been sown in this country. For quite a little while the reports as to the condition of the winter wheat were anything but encouraging. I am very happy to tell the House that reports received within the past few days from reliable sources convince me that there is nothing in the situation at this time, so far as the winter wheat is concerned, to give us any alarm. On the contrary, the situation is quite encouraging. If we should have a normal production of wheat from the winter-wheat area, we should increase the amount of wheat in this country during this crop year. But we can not afford to take any chances. We ought, if possible, to sow this year in spring wheat not less than 23,000,000 acres. If we can do that and no unfortunate accidents happen because of unfavorable weather, or something of that kind, we should be able to harvest in the neighborhood of a billion bushels of wheat this year. We shall need between 850,000,000 and 900,000,000 bushels of wheat if we are to supply our own civilian population, our armies, and the armies and navies of our allies, and the civilian population of our allies. If there is any one thing that this country can not afford to neglect, if there is any one thing that this Congress can not afford to neglect, if there is any one thing the overlooking of which would be fatal to the successful prosecution of this war, it is the proposition of wheat bread.

You say, "Why wheat bread?" For the reason that wheat flour is practically the only material out of which you can make Army bread. You say, "Why not feed our allies with corn bread?" The answer is that probably 99 per cent of the bread consumed by our allies is baked in bakeries. More than that, the populations of our allies know nothing of corn bread. They have never been taught to use it. They are a wheat-bread-eating people, and we have got to recognize that if we want to deal with the situation intelligently.

There is another proposition in this bill which I think ought to challenge the attention of this Congress. As chairman of the Committee on Agriculture I have received complaint after complaint about the farm-labor situation throughout the country, regardless of section or location. I presume every Member of Congress has received these complaints. I confess that I have no patent upon the solution of that problem. I think the Government is doing something that is going to help the situation somewhat. We are providing in this bill a fund of $2,500,000 in the hope that the Department of Agriculture may find some way out of this difficult labor situation. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the resolution.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH), there were—ayes 97, noes 15.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas, 279, nays 40, not voting 112, as follows:

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I voted "nay" on the first call of the roll, but I understand the bill is to be broadened so as to make it more equitable, and I want to change my vote from "nay" to "yea."

The result of the vote was announced, as above recorded.

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The House will automatically resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7795, with Mr. POU in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the substitute for House bill 7795, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7795) to provide for the national security and defense and further to assure an adequate supply of food, by authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to contract with farmers in certain areas for the production of grain through advances, loans, and otherwise, and by providing for the voluntary mobilization of farm labor, and for other purposes.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY].

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri reported the bill and is in a position to advise the House what it contains, and I ask for order.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this bill which is reported to you to-day from the Committee on Agriculture has had very earnest and serious consideration by that committee. It might not be out of place for just a moment if I were to give you some of its history. It was first referred to a subcommittee. That subcommittee went over it very carefully, revised it, rewrote it, and reported it back to the full committee. Even then the full committee was not satisfied. The bill went to another subcommittee, was again rewritten and redrafted from the beginning to end, considered from every viewpoint, and that subcommittee reported the bill to the Committee on Agriculture, and the Committee on Agriculture presents this bill which is before you to-day. In that connection permit me to say that we had extensive hearings in regard to the subject matter contained in the bill. There came before our committee a number of gentlemen from the Northwest and from other sections of the country who presented to us the facts and needs of the communities to which this bill applies. Now, I want to call your attention to the further fact that this bill presented here to-day is a workable measure. I want to call your attention to the fact that this bill has the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, notwithstanding the statement as made upon the floor of the House to-day that the Secretary of Agriculture is opposed to this measure. He is not opposed to it; he is in favor of the proposition. I hold in my hand a letter from the Assistant Secretary to the Secretary of Agriculture. The Secretary of Agriculture was called away about the time this bill was reported. He was attending a series of war conferences which were being held in the South under the auspices of the Committee on Public Information. I have here a letter from the Assistant Secretary to Mr. Houston from which I want to quote just a few words. I will not take up the time of the committee to quote it all. The Assistant Secretary, Mr. Harrison, says:

I have called his attention to the bill (H. R. 7795) which was reported favorably by the Committee on Agriculture on March 8. I have received word from him that he believes the plan proposed would be workable, and that he favors the new measure and urges its immediate passage.

Now, I am quoting from the Secretary of Agriculture, and that is where he stands upon this proposition. I will here insert the correspondence for the information of the House:

THE SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, March 20, 1918.

DEAR GOV. RUBEY: I take pleasure in sending you herewith a copy of a letter which I have just written to Mr. LEVER regarding H. R. 7795.

Very truly, yours,

F. R. HARRISON,
Assistant to the Secretary.

Hon. THOMAS L. RUBEY,
House of Representatives.

MARCH 20, 1918.

DEAR MR. LEVER: As you know, when the Secretary recently appeared before the Committee on Agriculture he stated that he would be sympathetic with any plan that could be devised and operated on a business basis for assisting farmers in the spring-wheat areas who are unable to secure credit for the purchase of seed. The Secretary, as you know, is attending a series of war conferences which are being held in the South under the auspices of the Committee on Public Information. I have called his attention to the bill (H. R. 7795) which was reported favorably by the Committee on Agriculture on March 8, and I have received word from him that he believes the plan proposed would be workable, and also that he favors the new measure and urges its immediate passage. Of course, if the bill is to be passed, it should be passed immediately. On account of the lateness of the season it is impossible to say just how much money can be advantageously utilized in carrying out the provisions of the bill or to what extent relief can be furnished. It seems desirable, however, to provide the full amount, especially in view of the fact that whatever is not required will remain in the Treasury.

Very truly, yours, (Signed) F. R. HARRISON,
Assistant to the Secretary.

Hon. A. F. LEVER,
House of Representatives.

Here is another thing: It has been stated upon the floor of this House that this bill is not workable; that if we pass it, it can not be put into effect. Let me say to you that the Department of Agriculture is getting ready to put this bill into operation. It has made an investigation of the State laws between tenants and landowners in every State to which this bill is applicable. All the blanks—the blank forms and agreements and everything of that sort which will be used when this bill goes into operation—are being formulated, and the Department of Agriculture will be ready to put this measure into operation immediately, just as soon as it passes this House and the Senate and becomes a law. I make that statement now to show you that the Department of Agriculture wants this measure and is getting ready to put it into operation. If you pass it and give the opportunity it will be put into operation at once. In every State in the northwest country we have the agents of the Department of Agricu'ture and we have the boards of national defense; we have the banks; and this bill provides that they may utilize both the State and the National banks to get the information in order to put this measure into operation.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. RUBEY. I will.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman explain to the committee this: This morning some gentleman raised the question that this bill applied only to the spring-wheat area of the country. Will the gentleman tell the committee why his committee limited it to that area?

Mr. RUBEY. As every Member of this House must know, we can not always grant what each individual Member wants. There were some members of that committee—I was one of them—who wanted it extended to the entire country, but a majority of the committee in its wisdom confined it to the spring-wheat area for the reason that that was the only part of the country that we could reach at this late day.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RUBEY. I will.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman stated the purpose of this bill was to grow wheat so we could feed our allies with wheat bread. Now, if that is true, why are oats and barley included in this bill?

Mr. RUBEY. For this reason, we want to raise all the foodstuff we can. We want to raise everything that will help in raising foodstuff that is possible, and we are told that there is some land in that section of the country where they can raise barley, some land where they can raise oats, new ground where they can raise oats the first year and where you can not raise wheat the first year. That is the reason we were willing to extend the provision so that we could raise all the foodstuff and feed possible.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question? The gentleman regards corn bread as good food, and there is plenty of time yet to plant corn?

Mr. McKENZIE. I do not like to take the gentleman's time——

Mr. RUBEY. I will have to answer one at a time; I can not answer both at once.

Mr. LANGLEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I thought he had finished.

Mr. McKENZIE. I do not want to take the gentleman's time, but it strikes me, knowing something about farming, that if the Government is to furnish seed for wheat alone that the farmer will be induced, perhaps, to sow wheat instead of oats or barley.

Mr. RUBEY. That question can be discussed, I will say to the gentleman, better by those who come from that section of the country and who will speak for it and possibly answer that question better than I can.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. RUBEY. For a question.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Of course, the gentleman knows that corn is as much a substitute for wheat as barley. Now, in the great corn belts of the country, by reason of the premature frosts of last year, seed corn that is good is selling at $20 a bushel. Why did not the committee include corn as well as barley?

Mr. RUBEY. I answered the question when I stated a moment ago that the committee decided after mature deliberation that the best thing to do in order to get the bill through this House and get it through quickly was to bring in a bill that would apply to the spring-wheat area, and for the further reason that we want the wheat to feed the soldiers.

It has been stated here to-day that this bill is unprecedented, that this matter of furnishing seed to the farmers on credit, and so forth, is something that we have never done before. I want to say to the gentlemen of this House, and if you will think for a moment you will remember it, that we passed through this House last May the bill H. R. 4188—I think it was the latter part of May—known as the food-survey bill to assist and stimulate production. That bill had in it a provision appropriating several million dollars and authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to furnish seed corn, seed wheat, and every kind of seed for the farmer, and as that bill passed this House it contained a provision in it that this seed should be furnished to the farmers on credit. That bill was voted upon by you gentlemen here on the floor of this House. I do not know how many voted for it or how many voted against it, but it passed this House about the 25th of May last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. RUBEY. I will take five minutes more. I have control of the time in the absence of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. RUBEY. I can not yield. I have only five minutes, and I want to call your attention to the provisions of that bill. The bill to which I have referred and which was passed last May appropriated several million dollars, and the Secretary of Agriculture was authorized to purchase, grow, or to otherwise secure such seed, and store them and furnish them by sale to farmers on credit or on other terms at cost, including the expense of packing and transportation. Now, this House voted for that proposition. This House said to the people of this country that we were going to furnish the farmers of the country seed, and were going to furnish them seed on credit, and that is what we are asking you to do to-day. In this hour, when we need to produce wheat and other crops, we come here and ask that the Congress of the United States do everything in its power to see that every acre of land is put into cultivation, to see to it that the farmers produce just as much as possible, to the end that we may have the foodstuff necessary for our armies and to carry on this war.

I must not take further time, Mr. Chairman; there are other Members of the House who desire to speak, but I want to urge upon the membership of this House that they vote for this bill for another reason. The second section of this bill appropriates $2,500,000 to help out the farm-labor situation, and we all know that the question of farm labor is the most serious one confronting our farmers to-day. Let us pass this bill to-day, and enable the Secretary of Agriculture, in cooperation with the Secretary of Labor, to mobilize the farm labor of this country, transport it to the places where it is needed, and give the farmers relief along that line. I am sure this is something in which we all are very deeply interested. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, as has been stated, the bill carries $7,500,000 for the purchase and distribution of seed, $2,500,000 for voluntary mobilization of farm labor. I believe we all agree that there is need for foodstuffs, especially wheat. We had a short crop of wheat last year, probably less than 600,000,000 bushels, and when we consider the world's limited shipping facilities and loss and danger from the black rust and drought, it is up to us to encourage this production. We are expected to supply a large portion of the world with foodstuffs, and there is urgent need of increasing production. I trust that this bill will pass and that we may get through with it this afternoon.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. Does not the gentleman think that the committee has been very generous in providing for the expense of the mobilization of farm labor $2,500,000?

Mr. HAUGEN. I think we all appreciate that if we are going to increase the production it is necessary to provide the farmers with farm labor.

Mr. HAMLIN. You are not going to pay these laborers for their work?

Mr. HAUGEN. We are going to pay the transportation and whatever expenses the Secretary may determine.

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman does not think it will take $2,000,000, or even one-tenth part of it, to pay the transportation, does he?

Mr. HAUGEN. That depends on how extensively the Secretary goes into the scheme.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think $2,500,000 would pay about all the farm laborers in the wheat-growing sections of the country.

Mr. HAUGEN. If $2,500,000 is not needed, it will not be expended.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Is not there enough wheat in the spring-wheat States for seed purposes that may be purchased?

Mr. HAUGEN. There is possibly plenty of wheat. There is no question about that; that is, for seed, but there is a question whether we will have enough wheat for seed and food, too. We may have to substitute other cereals for the wheat.

Now, as to the wheat situation, it is this: Our yield for 1917 was probably less than 600,000,000 bushels, though the department estimated 668,000,000 bushels. Compare that with the yield for 1915—1,025,801,000 bushels—and you will see the shortage.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I thought the committee had investigated and found that the farmers could get seed wheat, but they could not get credit through the banks to purchase the wheat.

Mr. HAUGEN. The purpose of this bill is to supply the homesteaders and other people in the spring-wheat area, who have not money to purchase their wheat. There are other sections in this country where there is as much need of seed as in that section of the country, but they have money and credit, and do not need this legislation. What we are now trying to do is to supply the people without seed and without credit. We propose to take chances in loaning this small amount to the farmer in that section of the country where crops are uncertain. In other words, if he will take the chances on planting and harvesting, we propose to take a chance on loaning him the money to buy seed with up to the amount of $450.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think where those conditions exist we can well afford to do so. The other day we appropriated $50,000,000 to house the workmen in our shipbuilding plants. The laboring men of this country must be fed, and their Representatives on this floor can well afford to appropriate this money to provide the food with which to feed them.

Mr. HAUGEN. It is but a drop in the bucket compared with the total annual appropriation.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, while the roll calls indicate that there is some opposition to this bill, up to this time only two gentlemen have spoken against it. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG] opposes it on principle, because it is proposed to sell seed on time; but if I am not mistaken, he voted last year for the bill H. R. 4188, which passed this House, authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to sell millions of dollars' worth of seed on time. And on this side I am glad to see that there is only one gentleman who has talked against it, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], and he happens to be a gentleman who does not know from what direction the Chinook winds come. He seems to be obsessed with the idea that the Chinook winds come from the south, while everybody knows, at least those in the West know, that they come from the west. They get the name because there is a tribe of Chinook Indians near the mouth of the Columbia River, and the warm winds come east along the river. Again, these winds come in the winter, and not in the summer, as the gentleman seems to think.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] also claims that this bill is without precedent. It is the first time, so he says, that the Government has ever undertaken to loan money to farmers for seed or otherwise. The State of South Dakota, or at least the Territory before it became a State, passed such a law something like 35 years ago, and did business under it. The State of North Dakota has a law that is over a quarter of a century old under which seed has at different times been sold to the farmers under terms similar to those proposed in this bill. The State Safety Commission in Michigan has purchased, as I understand it, a couple of million dollars' worth of farm machinery to sell to the farmers on time this very year, and the corresponding commission in the State of Wisconsin is spending a large sum of money to sell various kinds of farm machinery to the farmers on time.

A year ago we passed in this House what is known as the bill H. R. 4188, which authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase, grow, or otherwise procure seed grain, to store same, and to furnish same by sale to farmers on credit.

Now, we passed that bill in this House last year. It was changed in the Senate to read "for cash"; but, so far as this House is concerned——

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. No; I regret to say I can not yield, because my time is so limited.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. But, so far as this House is concerned, we went on record for the bill authorizing the Secretary to sell seed on time.

Another objection raised is to the inclusion in this bill of oats. In the State of Montana it is known that many of the farmers will want to raise a crop on new breaking. Wheat will not grow on new breaking, but oats will, and it is better to have oats grow on the land than no crop at all. Besides, it will get the virgin sod ready for a wheat crop in 1919; and it is not inconceivable that this war will continue throughout next year. Prairie land seeded in oats this year will be ready next year for seeding to wheat.

I was glad to hear the statement of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] to the effect that the Secretary of Agriculture, who has heretofore withheld his approval, has decided to indorse this bill. The Food Administrator, Mr. Hoover, is strongly in favor of it. He indorsed it before the committee and he has indorsed it since, and he has called attention to the very great need for its passage in order to increase food production.

The food-conservation campaign of Mr. Hoover has been a great success, but that does not remove the necessity for increased food production. Mr. Hoover was himself one of the first to point out that fact. When Roumania fell into the hands of the central powers they captured 1,400,000 tons of cereal grains, and it is believed that very large quantities of foodstuffs have come into the possession and control of the central powers from Russia. That is an added reason why it is necessary for us to increase the food production in the United States.

It is not proposed, as some think, to make a gift of the seed to farmers. The bill proposes to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to contract with farmers to grow wheat, barley, or oats and advance a part of the cost in the shape of seed grain at a reasonable price. If the bill is passed it will bring about a substantial increase in grain production—perhaps 40,000,000 bushels—and will tend to reduce the cost of living. The labor feature of the bill will also greatly increase agricultural production. Some seem to think that we may have too great a production—too much wheat, too much barley, too much oats, and so forth. Yes; and we may get too many bullets, too many guns, and too much ammunition if the war ends suddenly, which will, much of it, be little better than junk after the war is over. Gentlemen, it is high time to get down to business. Let us quit using smooth phrases such as "food will win the war." Instead, let us say in tones loud enough to be heard all over the United States, that bread, barley, beefsteak, bacon, and beans will win the war, and then boost it along by passing this bill quickly and by putting it into operation without delay.

If the wheat acreage is decreased this year no one should jump at the conclusion that it is by reason of a lack of patriotism upon the part of grain growers. There may be causes beyond their control. Some of these reasons will be:

First. If this bill is not passed quickly many of them will be without seed.

Second. Many of the farmers are short of feed because of the high price and other reasons. This will mean that they can not get the usual amount of work out of their horses, their work will be delayed, and it will be necessary for them to seed coarse grains or none at all.

Third. The shortage of labor will have the same effect. It will retard the seeding.

With an almost certain decrease in the wheat acreage in sight, is it not the part of statesmanship to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to contract for the growing of 3,000,000 acres of wheat which would otherwise grow to weeds?

The problem of securing farm labor is causing our farmers much concern. They are wondering if they put in the seed whether they can secure help to harvest the crop. Five hundred thousand men have gone from the farms to the Army and Navy. More than that many have gone from the farms into the war industries. While other much more ambitious schemes were being talked of to obtain labor for the farms we concluded to report an item in this bill of $2,500,000 to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in mobilizing farm labor upon the voluntary basis. All the big employers of labor in the United States find it necessary to furnish railway transportation to obtain and keep up their working forces. How can the Secretary of Agriculture hope to compete for men against such corporations if we do not arm him in the same way?

Mr. Chairman, with the great cause of humanity hanging in the balance, with the health and even the life of our American public involved, we should speed the passage of this meritorious bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I would like to have permission to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the lady from Montana.

The CHAIRMAN. The lady from Montana is recognized for five minutes.

Miss RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to talk to you a few minutes about the conditions in Montana; not that I wish to interest you in the farmers in one part of the country more than in another, but so that you may know the details of the wheat situation.

Within the last 10 years Montana has changed from a grazing State to an agricultural State. But the farmers are new. They have taken up homesteads. There are still about 60,000 farmers who are in the homestead stage. Others have just "proved up." The business men—the merchants and the bankers—are new. They are not guided by an approved knowledge of the business integrity of their patrons, as in most other parts of the country; they are giving their credit on faith—faith in the country, and faith in the men with whom they deal, and faith in the possibilities of a good crop.

Our farming is different from that of other sections of the country, in that we have not diversified farming. Wheat, alternating with other grains, is the specialized crop. We have all the difficulties of a new country; great distances of the farms—50 or 75 or 100 miles—from the railroads.

But in spite of these difficulties our production of wheat has been remarkable. In 1910 Montana produced 7,000,000 bushels of wheat; in 1911, 10,000,000 bushels; in 1912, 12,000,000 bushels; in 1913, 20,000,000 bushels; in 1914, 18,000,000 bushels; in 1915, 42,000,000 bushels. That was the banner year all over the country. In 1916 we produced 30,000,000 bushels. Last year, in the drought year, we produced 18,000,000 bushels.

These figures mean more, when they are compared with other States, when you realize that in 1916 Montana produced almost a third as much wheat as the State of Kansas, which is the largest wheat-growing State in the Union, Montana producing 30,000,000 bushels and Kansas 98,000,000 bushels. We produced more wheat than the State of Minnesota and more than the State of Pennsylvania, and almost as much as the State of Oklahoma. Last year, in a drought year—and you can see from the figures given that last year was the only year we had a drought—we produced 18,000,000, while North Dakota produced only 39,000,000 bushels. Nobody doubts that North Dakota is a wheat State, a State that grows wheat successfully. Yet even in our drought last year we produced almost half as much wheat as North Dakota, and more than the State of Michigan, and more than the State of Virginia, and more than the State of Texas.

Last year the farmers all over the State wanted to put in war crops. They borrowed money far beyond what their judgment dictated. The bankers and the stores gave credit, more credit than they ever gave before, and then there was no crop. Now the bankers and the merchants can not give credit because they have not the credit themselves. The farmers have not even a title to the land. The title still belongs to the Government.

The State has recognized the seriousness of the situation. An extraordinary session of the legislature was called and bills were passed making it possible for the counties to use $10,000 in the purchase of seed wheat. In counties where $10,000 would not be enough they made it possible for the counties to bond themselves for the proper amount. In some of the counties they have already held elections. One county telegraphed me that their returns were 934 to 30 votes in favor of bonding the county.

But this bonding is only possible so long as they stay within the constitutional limit of the authorized total indebtedness. The wheat counties are new counties and are already bonded almost to their constitutional limit of indebtedness. These counties can not meet the situation. They can not furnish the necessary amount of seed wheat even by bonding to the total indebtedness provided by the Constitution, and they must have Federal aid.

These counties have their land in perfect condition to plant the wheat, because last year they had no crop and there was no harvesting, and no hauling of the crop to the market. So they devoted their energies to putting the ground in condition for the spring planting. But they have no credit. There is no way in which they can get the credit, not even with all that the State can do. There are about 15 of these new counties that need aid from the Federal Government, and they must have it if we are to have wheat from those counties next fall. I urge the passage of this bill that we may have wheat to win this war. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the lady from Montana has expired.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMPSON].

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, we are involved in war. Without regard to the views we may have entertained as to the propriety of entering the conflict, it is now too late to debate the question. As patriotic Americans, we must stand as one in front of the advancing foe. While all, I am sure, are hoping and praying for the dawn of the day that will bring an end to the ugly struggle, I am wondering if the people realize the seriousness of the situation. We are engaged in a mighty conflict; on its result depends the happiness of mankind. If the forces of democracy win, this world will move forward with the same rapid stride that has witnessed its progress during the past century. The peoples of the world will be free to determine their own destiny. If we lose, the clock of time will be set back and the iron heel of military despotism will dominate for many troubled centuries. Our brave boys—your sons and mine, and the sons of our friends—are going forth to sacrifice their lives in the holy cause, the cause of liberty. They are willing to die that liberty may live. I would to God that some one might rise, who could speak in a voice that would awaken the Nation and arouse it to a sense of its imperious duty. A great world tragedy is in progress beyond the sea. Congress has done its duty. With practical unanimity and without political division it has responded instantly to every request from the President, and placed without restraint under his control the wealth of the Nation. Into his hands it has given more power than that hitherto possessed by any man. If the sentinel on the watch tower is unable to report "All is well," the blame can not be laid at the door of Congress. In the future there will be no hesitancy in granting whatever authority is needed to successfully and vigorously prosecute the war.

We are engaged in an undertaking that will tax all our resources and demand undreamed sacrifices on the part of all. The quicker the Nation awakens to a realization of this dreadful truth the sooner we will be able to put the whole unhappy affair behind us. There must be no division in our ranks now. The time for united and energetic action is here. This can only be accomplished if all classes of our citizenship are convinced that there has been no discrimination in the distribution of burdens. Every person, every item of property, every dollar of wealth must be made to bear its just portion of the sacrifice. In no other manner can the voices of discord be hushed. Perfection can not be attained, but we should spare no effort to approximate it. The contribution by a citizen, safe in his home, of all his property is not comparable to the sacrifices of the brave lads who will surrender their lives in the struggle. In the presence of such sacrifice it is regrettable that any of us are capable of thinking in terms of profit and loss. As no one is being asked to give all his wealth, it behooves us to see that everyone contributes in the ratio of his ability. When another revenue act is prepared, profiteers must come through. Industries accumulating vast riches from war contracts must be made to pay. Eighty-five cents of every dollar of war profits is collected by Britain to pay the expenses of her war. There is no reason why profiteers here should not receive the same treatment. The war should not be a period of profiteering. Capital should be given a fair return sufficient to stimulate production and maintain itself. The same fair profit should go to the working man and the farmer; all should fare alike. If this is done, all will be well; if not, the inequality will sooner or later plague us.

In normal times this bill would not be proposed. It is brought before the House with the favorable recommendation of the Committee on Agriculture because we are living in unusual times and laboring under extraordinary and unprecedented conditions. All admit that it is of supreme importance that sufficient food for the armies and peoples of our own and allied countries be produced. In this connection I invite attention to the conflicting views expressed by the Department of Agriculture and the Food Administration on the food situation.

The Secretary of Agriculture says we have an abundance of food to satisfy present and future needs. The Food Administration proclaims "meatless and wheatless days," requires the use of flour substitutes, commands us to keep the hens, to increase pork production, to increase wheat production, warns us there is a great shortage and we and our allies are facing starvation. I agree and disagree with both. There is no danger of immediate starvation. I am not, however, so optimistic about production. It is idle to boast at this time of an abundant future supply. It is not the part of wisdom to dodge unwelcome facts. We are engaged in a monstrous undertaking and should prepare for it. Food is as indispensable for our success as bullets and men. It is folly to arm, equip, and send our boys across the sea without food. It is foolish to spend billions on transports if there is no food to carry. It is idle to hunt down submarines if there is no food to destroy. Food is vital. With an abundance the war will be won; without, the fight is lost. Wheatless and meatless days and the elimination of waste will help, but will not prove a substitute for decreased production. An abnormal demand can not be supplied by a normal yield. It can be satisfied only by supernormal production. The problem is to increase production. The people are told food will win the war. It is therefore pertinent to inquire, What has been done to insure such supply?

The American farmer is a man of ordinary intelligence. He realizes during these years of war every business engaged in manufacturing war materials has grown enormously wealthy by reason of the war. He knows that no restrictions have been placed upon them. He knows what we all know, that there is a shortage in the food supply of the world. He knows that several causes have contributed to this shortage; that it has come about in part by scant production in the warring countries, but more largely because of lack of transportation to make available the yield in Australia, India, and Siberia. He knows that the world's need presents an opportunity to reap a rich reward of good prices for his products. The prospect for that reward was sufficient incentive to stir the farmers of the Nation to unparalleled activity, and it had that effect. They were willing to risk the prices they would receive for what they grew.

Mr. AYRES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. AYRES. Is it not a fact that the wheat producer is not complaining so much of the fixing of the price of wheat as he is of the fact that the prices of other articles that enter into the cost of wheat producing are not fixed?

Mr. THOMPSON. I think the gentleman from Kansas is absolutely correct about that.

Mr. AYRES. It is a fact that the wheat producer would be perfectly willing to have the price of wheat fixed if the prices of other articles that enter into the cost of the production of wheat were also fixed.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think that is correct. So far as I know, the farmer is not complaining of the prices fixed on his products, but he is complaining because the prices of other commodities have not been fixed in comparison with his prices.

Without suggestion from him, prices have been fixed on a part of what the farmer grows, but he is left to the tender mercy of the profiteer when he comes to purchase. Naturally this has produced much complaint, and the farmer has gradually become convinced that he is being treated unjustly. I am surprised that the Secretary of Agriculture and the Food Administration do not realize such feelings prevail. Whether there is reason for it is beside the question. We are concerned about the fact. If such a feeling exists, it means less effort on the farmer's part and a correspondingly decreased yield. This should not be permitted, if avoidable, in these perilous times. The farmer had many lean years before the war and feels that he is entitled to sufficient profit now to care for those losses. He knows that when this war ends, guaranteed prices end also, and henceforth his product will go on the market in competition, not only with the product of the world but also with the unlocked supply now accumulating in Australia, India, and Siberia. He feels that when he is producing at a profit during these war times, it is not fair to select his product alone and fix a price on it without considering his prewar losses, and the situation he will face after the war, when forced to compete with the hoarded surplus of the world.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. MORGAN. My colleague is one of the members of the Committee on Agriculture, perhaps the most important committee in Congress in the interest of the farmer I know that he has been of great service to the farmers not only of his own State but of the Nation in that capacity. Inasmuch as it does not seem fashionable for some reason to equalize the prices of the things which the farmer has to buy, does not the gentleman in his position as a member of this committee think it would be proper, if we can not equalize these other prices, to raise the price of wheat a little?

Mr. THOMPSON. As far as I am concerned, I am in favor of raising the price of wheat to $2.50 a bushel.

Mr. AYRES. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. AYRES. I will ask the gentleman if he does not think the price of other products ought to be fixed the same as that of wheat, and if the price of other products is not fixed, should the price of wheat be fixed?

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, in response to the gentleman from Kansas I will say that the farmers are not complaining about $2 wheat. The complaint that they make is that the price of their product is fixed, while the prices of the articles which they are compelled to purchase are not fixed. They are perfectly willing to accept any price that is fixed on their products, if the prices of all other articles are fixed at the same time, but they do not think it is right to fix the price of their product and let the profiteer get whatever he can, according to the law of supply and demand on every other product. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that it is not a matter of selfishness with the farmer, or with me, or with my colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN], or the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. AYRES], or with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], who injected a question into this debate, or with anybody else in this House. I am sure we all want to win this war. That is what we are interested in. If we win this war we must have a sufficient amount of food to supply our forces in Europe. Unless you take care of the farmer you will not get a sufficient amount of food to supply the boys who are fighting our battles on the front.

Mr. AYRES. Another question, if the gentleman will yield. Is it not true that consumers have been advised to use substitutes for flour, such as corn meal and other things that have advanced anywhere from a cent to a cent and a half a pound above flour?

Mr. THOMPSON. A little later on in my speech, if I have the time, I will be glad to touch upon that, because they advise us to use corn meal, oatmeal, rye, and other substitutes. Now, the only man who gets any advantage in this price-fixing matter is the man over in Europe to whom we loan money to buy our food supply. He takes our money and comes back over here and buys our wheat. The price of wheat is fixed, but the prices of rye, oats, barley, and other wheat substitutes are not fixed. Therefore the man who produces wheat in this country has got to go to the store and purchase these substitutes at greatly increased prices. He does not get the benefit of this decreased price of wheat.

Mr. WELLING. Will the gentleman yield for a moment right there?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. WELLING. Among the things which enter into the cost of wheat production are the sacks in which the wheat crop is carried to market. Those sacks are brought from Calcutta, and the price of Calcutta sacks for this year's wheat crop will be about 32 cents apiece.

Mr. THOMPSON. The gentleman is absolutely right in his statement. The farmer in this country gets no benefit from the fixing of the price of wheat. That is what I am trying to impress in these few remarks I am making here. Now, I have got to hurry along.

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that the usual price of sacks is about 8 or 10 cents to the farmers of America.

Mr. THOMPSON. I thank the gentleman for the information. Our soil is rich, our farmers are patriotic, but the soil will not yield unless seeded and cultivated. Farmers are ordinary men, and will seed and harvest those crops that yield the most profitable returns. They tell us it is wheat and pork that are most needed to win the war. The question then is, How can their production be stimulated? The answer is easy—make their production profitable. Their production must not only be profitable, but it must be more profitable than the production of substitutes. One dollar and ninety cents for wheat and 15½ cents for pork under normal conditions would enrich the farmers and result in increased production; not so now. According to the Department of Agriculture it requires 13½ bushels of corn to produce 100 pounds of pork. Corn costs in my district from $1.75 to $2 per bushel. The farmers can not produce pork from this high-priced corn except at the cost of bankruptcy. If he purchases the feed, he is loser from $8 to $12 on every hundred pounds; if he produces the corn, there is more profit in selling it. This condition has resulted in the wholesale shipment and slaughter of immature hogs, and a totally paralyzed industry in my State. The Oklahoma Council of National Defense has just completed a live-stock census and found seven sows to every nine farms in the State. It found the same alarming condition was true of other meat-producing animals. The farmers write me the cost of feed is so high that they have been compelled to dispose of their herds. This may account for an abundance of pork now, but it does not indicate a future supply. The farmer can not produce meat at the price fixed without loss. If he is blessed with a bank account, he may engage in the pleasant pastime, but it is certain he can not operate on borrowed capital, because banks do not make advances to finance losing enterprises. The farmers say the price on articles they purchase—farm machinery, farm wages, and supplies have advanced to such a point that prices fixed on wheat and pork are not profitable. They write me that disk harrows that sold for $21 when wheat brought 97 cents now sell for $75; a three-and-a-quarter wagon that sold in 1916 for $80 now costs $175; harness that cost $35 then, now sell for $80 and $90; a 7-foot binder with fixtures cost wholesale f. o. b. Chicago in 1915, $120.50, now $203; a 12-foot harvester with attachments cost f. o. b. Chicago in 1915, $210, now costs $395. In 1915 a three-bottom tractor-engine plow cost, wholesale, $80; the manufacturer now demands $186. The farmers advise me they sell their wheat at a fixed price, but there is no limit when they purchase the same wheat in manufactured form. I have investigated the matter. On January 28 I addressed a letter to Hon. J. M. Aydelotte, chairman Oklahoma State Council of Defense and chairman of the board of public affairs of my State, which does all the purchasing for the State's activities, and who, prior to accepting this position, was for 25 years one of the State's most prominent and active dealers in grain and grain products, a man of high character and recognized ability. Here is what he said:

> Answering your favor of January 28, in reference to the food situation and the recent food law enacted fixing the price on raw products, wheat mainly. Now, they can not regulate conditions when the raw-product price is fixed only. If the department will authorize the fixing of the price of the finished product, then something can be done. Consequently the farmers are suffering, also the consumer of food, as well as the consumer of concentrated feeds for stock.
> Dr. Brooks, the food administrator for the State of Oklahoma, has no jurisdiction over the milling interests. They are selling through jobbers and brokers and not complying with the law; that is, a great many of them. The price of bran, shorts, and by-products of wheat are being sold at enormously high prices compared to the price paid for wheat. The corn prices have not yet been fixed. The grain men and millers have filled up their storage capacity and now are raising the price.
> I have been manufacturing various kinds of feeds for 20 years before I accepted this position with the State, and I well know that no one can control food conditions as long as they only fix the price of the raw material.

I have a letter from a farmer, who tells me that he has been compelled to pay $52.40 per ton for bran; that he had his hogs on feed, and this was the only way that he could market them; that the price he paid not only wiped out all his profits, destroyed his work, but that he lost about 50 per cent of the money invested. There is no excuse for such a price for bran while the farmer receives only $1.90 for his wheat. Fifty-two dollars and forty cents a ton for bran is 100 per cent in excess of the price he ought to pay if the price for his wheat were carried through the transaction. Farm labor, I am informed, can hardly be obtained at any price. Day laborers are charging from $3.50 to $5; farm hands paid by the month are charging from $60 to $100, and this includes their board. Two years ago they could be obtained from $25 to $40 per month. The farmers do not object to price fixing if it is applied to all articles, those they purchase as well as those they sell. What they object to is being singled out and saddled with the whole burden of the war. They are willing to bear their part, but they do not want to pull the whole load. The food bill passed a year ago was not a price-fixing bill; Congress was not asked to enact such a law. When that bill passed it was intended to destroy speculation and profiteering, and in that way increase the price to the farmer and reduce the cost to the consumer.

Here is what Mr. Hoover said in his testimony before the Senate Committee on Agriculture on June 19 last with reference to the bill:

> From a number of current illusions about the legislation proposed, the first is the illusion in some quarters that the bill is directed against the producer. It would not be necessary to traverse this statement to anyone that had read the bill. It especially excepts the producer from every one of its provisions, with the exception of one section, and that is the provision for a guaranty, and this section is designed to entirely benefit and secure the producer. The savings of the American consumer ought not and should not be made by a sacrifice on the part of the producer. They should be made by the exclusion of speculative profits from the handling of our foodstuffs.

In the same hearing, and to show the effect of excluding speculative profits between the producer and the consumer Mr. Hoover gave as illustration the price for bread to the consumers in Belgium, France, and England. He said:

> Practically the entire wheat supply to Belgium is to-day imported from the United States, and despite the extraordinary costs of transportation the price of bread is 60 per cent of the price in New York City. A large portion of the wheat of France comes from this country, and yet the price of bread is, again, 40 per cent below our own. In England, where food control was started too late, the price is 30 per cent below our price, and in Canada, again, we see a lower range of prices to the consumer than in our own country, although the producer realizes the same price.

Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] if he will grant me a little more time.

Mr. HAUGEN. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. THOMPSON. About 10 minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. I regret exceedingly that every minute is taken of my time.

Mr. RUBEY. All of my time and more, too, is spoken for.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that I can not get an extension of time, because I think this is the most important bill that we are considering during this entire Congress. Here we are talking about billions and spending hundreds of billions——

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Millions.

Mr. THOMPSON. No, hundreds of billions; and when it comes to taking care of the farmer we can not spend 10 or 15 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does not the gentleman realize the rule provides for only two hours of general debate, and that the effort of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] to extend the time to four hours is ruled out of order?

Mr. THOMPSON. I voted to extend the time, and I would be glad to have the time.

The farmers must be relied upon to increase production. They are dissatisfied. They do not feel they have received fair treatment. Under these circumstances increased production can hardly be expected. There should have been universal price fixing or no price fixing. The Food Administrator has the same authority to fix prices on corn and farm implements as on wheat and pork. Why has he not done so? I tried to find out. For that purpose I addressed a letter to both the Secretary of Agriculture and the Food Administrator. The one addressed to the Secretary of Agriculture reads:

Section 1 of the act of August 10, 1917, commonly called the "food bill," defines the word "necessaries" as embracing foods, feeds, fuel, including fuel oil and natural gas, fertilizer and fertilizer ingredients, tools, utensils, implements, machinery, and equipment required for the actual production of foods, feeds, etc."

Section 5 of the same act authorized the President, from time to time, whenever he found it essential, to license "the importation, manufacture, storage, mining, or distribution of any necessaries."

Under these provisions of the food bill the price of the 1917 wheat crop and the price of meat was fixed. The bill did not confer specific authority to fix the price of any article.

The Food Administrator licensed the elevators. One of the provisions of the license was that no more than a specified price should be paid for wheat. If the elevator violated that regulation, its license was revoked and it went out of business.

The Food Administrator also licensed the packing houses, and one of the regulations of the license was that a price not exceeding 15½ cents per pound should be paid for hogs. If the packer paid more, his packing house was closed.

The farmers of the country have not complained at this exercise of authority in fixing the price of their products—wheat and meat.

They have wondered, however, why the authority to fix the price on "tools, utensils, implements, machinery, and equipment required for the actual production of foods, feeds, and fuel" has not been exercised and the price of these articles fixed so that they can continue to produce wheat and raise hogs without becoming bankrupt.

Harness, plows, mowers, wagons, farm labor—practically everything required for the production of wheat and hogs—has increased in price from 200 to 300 and in some cases 400 per cent. The farmer has had the price of his products fixed, but he has been compelled to pay two, three, and four times the normal price of everything he used in making possible that production.

The President pointed out this injustice to the farmer in his address to the Congress delivered December 4 last. He said:

"The farmers, for example, complain with a great deal of justice that while the regulations of food prices restrict their incomes no restraints are placed on the prices of most of the things they must themselves purchase."

At this time when an increased production is so necessary and when your department is appealing to the farmer to increase the production do you not think it would be wise to remove this just complaint by fixing a fair price on those articles required for the actual production of foods and feeds and which the farmers are compelled to purchase?

I am convinced that no other action you could take would quite so hearten the farmers and stimulate them to increased effort.

If price fixing on farm products is continued and the farmer is left to the tender mercies of the profiteer in his purchases, I greatly fear it will result in discouragement and the consequent reduction of production of farm products.

I take it for granted that the authority conferred in the food bill is ample, if exercised, to take care of the situation I have described. Otherwise, I feel sure you would have already suggested to Congress the necessity of conferring additional authority. Congress has always stood ready to give you all the authority necessary, and had additional power been requested it would have been granted for the asking.

In conclusion, may I ask if the farmers can hope for any relief from the extortionate prices they have been and are being compelled to pay for "tools, utensils, implements, machinery, and equipment required for the actual production of foods, feeds, etc."

I will thank you for the courtesy of an early reply.

Though the letter was written on the 23d day of February, the Secretary has not yet replied. For that reason I am unable to state the Secretary's position on the matter of price fixing.

A letter dated January 31 of this year, addressed to Mr. Ed Hockaday, Kingfisher, Okla., and signed by Arnold P. Yerkes, assistant agriculturist, I presume represents the views of the department. It reads:

Your letter of January 1, addressed to Mr. Victor Murdock, care Federal Trade Commission, has been referred to this office for reply. However, the question of prices for farm machinery is one over which this department has no jurisdiction whatever.

You, of course, realize that the price of raw material is only one item which is involved in figuring the cost of producing any machine. The cost of labor is also a large item, and this has increased tremendously. The price for fuel and other supplies necessary have also increased greatly. It is not meant by this to defend the prices which you mention, but merely to call your attention to the fact that it is not fair to judge the cost of production by the cost of raw materials.

On the whole, while farm machinery has advanced tremendously during the past few years, it has not increased proportionately with the price which the farmer is receiving for his products. This you can easily prove to your own satisfaction by taking the price of any of the staple farm products for the past three or four years and figuring the number of bushels of corn or other crops it required to purchase any machine. To-day it actually takes fewer bushels of corn or wheat to purchase a plow, corn planter, or any other machine than it did three years ago, or, in fact, for several years past. Looking at the matter from this standpoint, the prices do not seem out of proportion. However, if you still feel that some other action is necessary in the matter, it is the writer's opinion that you should take it up with the legislators, for, as above stated, this department has no authority in the matter.

I judge from this letter that the Department of Agriculture believes that the prices which the farmer is compelled to pay is not out of proportion to the prices he receives.

On the same day I addressed a letter to Mr. Hoover. I said:

Section 1 of the act of August 10, 1917, commonly called the "food bill," defines the word "necessaries" as embracing "foods, feeds, fuel, including fuel oil and natural gas, fertilizer and fertilizer ingredients, tools, utensils, implements, machinery, and equipment required for the actual production of foods, feeds, etc."

Section 5 of the same act authorized the President from time to time, whenever he found it essential, to "license importation, manufacture, storage, mining, or distribution of any necessaries."

Under these provisions of the food bill the price of the 1917 wheat crop and the price of meat was fixed. The bill did not specifically authorize the fixing of the price of any article.

The Food Administrator licensed the elevators, and one of the provisions of the license was that the elevator should not pay more than a fixed price for wheat. If the elevator violated that regulation its license was revoked and it was no longer in business.

The Food Administrator licensed the packing houses, and one of the regulations was that not exceeding 15½ cents per pound should be paid for swine. If the packer paid more than 15½ cents for hogs his packing establishment was closed.

The farmers of the country have not complained at this exercise of authority in fixing the price on two of their products—wheat and pork. They have wondered, however, why a price has not been fixed on the manufactured products of their wheat—shorts and bran—and why a price has not been fixed on corn and its products—meal, etc.—and why a price has not been fixed on oats and rye and barley.

The Food Administrator has the same authority to fix a price on these products as he had to fix a price on wheat and pork. Prices on these articles could have been fixed in the same way. The failure to fix prices on these products has resulted in my State in practically the complete destruction of the live-stock industry. Bran is selling to the farmer at $52.40 per ton. The farmer is paying from $1.75 to $2 per bushel for corn. Feeding 13 bushels of $2 corn to produce 100 pounds of pork and selling that pork at 15½ cents per pound is not a very profitable business, and the same is true of feeding $52.40 per ton bran.

The food bill confers ample authority to protect the farmer from the conscienceless greed of a lot of profiteers. I am convinced that one of two courses must be pursued. The law of supply and demand must be permitted to control and govern when applied to what the farmer sells if it is to be applied to what the farmer is required to purchase.

May I ask, in conclusion, if any action is contemplated looking to the fixing of prices on what the farmer is compelled to purchase?

Will you be kind enough to reply at your earliest convenience?

To this letter Mr. Hoover replied under date of February 26:

I have your letter of February 23, 1918. I believe that you have somewhat misunderstood the power conferred by the food-control act in regard to the fixing of prices and the method by which the price of wheat has been stabilized.

The food-control act does not authorize the fixing of a price even by regulations issued under the license system. No regulation has ever been issued prescribing the price which elevators must pay for wheat, nor has any license ever been revoked because of the price paid for wheat. The result accomplished was made possible only because of the power to purchase wheat and to enter into voluntary agreements conferred by the food-control act.

In regard to hogs, no regulations have been issued forbidding the packers to pay more than 15½ cents per pound, nor has any packing establishment ever been closed because of the payment of a higher price. The price of hogs has, in fact, averaged more than 16¼ cents per pound during the past three months.

I inclose herewith a pamphlet showing what has been done in the matter of hogs in order to assist the producer.

You will see from this explanation that the Food Administrator has no authority to stabilize the price of corn and other grains. I can scarcely believe that the price of corn is as high as $2, for the average price paid at country stations in Nebraska, for instance, during the last week has been $1.10 to $1.30 per bushel.

In regard to the price of bran, our chief difficulty has been to prevent the jobbers and retailers from running up the price to meet the very high prices of other feeds. As you know, we have required all mills to sell bran at not more than 38 per cent of the price paid by them for wheat, and I inclose a copy of the regulations governing feed dealers which have been recently issued. I have sent a special agent to Oklahoma and the Southwest to investigate the numerous complaints regarding the price of bran, and I am very hopeful that we will be able to enforce strictly the regulations as drawn. We are somewhat handicapped in this matter by the absence of control over retailers, who are specifically excepted by section 5 of the food-control act from the license provisions.

If the licensing section does not give him that power, what does the last paragraph of his letter mean? He says:

We are somewhat handicapped in this matter by the absence of control over retailers, who are specifically excepted by section 5 of the food-control act from the license provisions.

The food bill conferred no authority on Mr. Hoover to fix prices. However, he has exercised the authority with reference to certain products desired for over-sea shipment—wheat, sugar, and pork—and it was done not only by virtue of authority conferred by the licensing section but by reason of the fact that he became the purchasing agent for our over-sea allies. It does not make any difference to the farmer whether the price was fixed by virtue of authority conferred in the bill or by manipulation outside of the bill's provisions. The fact is he has been compelled to accept prices for his product that makes it unprofitable to continue its production. Mr. Hoover does not desire to fix the price of other articles than those I have mentioned. Here is an interview he gave out on the 25th of February to counteract the effect of a published statement that the Government might set maximum prices on all the farmer's products. He said:

There appears to be a good deal of misinformation circulated among the agricultural communities as to the policy and scope of the Food Administrator with relation to price fixing.

I wish to say at once, and emphatically, that the Food Administration is not a price-fixing body, except with regard to certain commodities which are to-day dominated by wholly abnormal over-seas commercial relations and the surrounding factors with regard to which are such as to project great dangers both against the farming community and at the same time the consuming community.

The two commodities under regulations are sugar and wheat. With the further exception of cases in which it has intervened purely as a friendly intermediary between organized producers and consumers, the Food Administration has no authority and no desire to fix prices on the products of agriculture.

This interview discloses Mr. Hoover is aware the farmers are not satisfied with price fixing. It was intended to reassure them, so there would be no decrease in their activities. It will perhaps have that effect as applied to every farm product except wheat and pork. It is likely to have the opposite effect on these two articles—the most necessary of all. When the farmer comes to plant he will take into consideration two things: First, that wheat substitutes—corn, oats, rye, and barley—are not controlled by fixed prices; and, second, that they command a price which will make their production more profitable than the production of wheat.

The farmer is as patriotic as any of us; he is ready to do his part. A few weeks ago the national Red Cross officers sent down word that Oklahoma would be expected to furnish 190,000 Red Cross members in the great drive in the week before Christmas. When the smoke had cleared away, it was found that more than 750,000 had been enrolled. This is not only four times the number expected, but it is the largest number in proportion to the population that was returned by any State. The farmers of Oklahoma did it. There was a great and almost unfailing response in the towns and cities, too, but listen to this from one of the head officials in charge of the membership campaign:

The farmers of Oklahoma responded even more nobly than the city people. There was a greater membership rolled up in the country than in the cities in proportion to their relative population. Many whole country townships furnished as many members as there were people in the township, and everywhere in the country there was general enthusiasm and interest in the great campaign, which means so much for the relief of the war sufferers.

I congratulate the farmers of Oklahoma. The fact is, the farm folks did just what they always do when there is a worthy cause that is properly put before them.

Farm, Stock, and Home, an agricultural paper published at Minneapolis, Minn., having a circulation of 140,000, principally in spring wheat growing States—Minnesota, the Dakotas, and Montana—has compared the value per acre at prices prevailing February 16, 1918, at Minneapolis, taking the average pre-10-year period yield. The average yield with present value per acre is:

Wheat, 11.9 bushels	$23.80
Oats, 28 bushels	24.77
Flax, 8.7 bushels	32.80
Barley, 21.7 bushels	36.32
Rye, 16.9 bushels	37.18
Corn, 28.4 bushels	49.70

The farmers will be guided when they come to sow by the profits promised by different wheat substitutes. The result will be a decreased wheat acreage. We are spending billions for ships, for ammunition, for transports, for equipment, and for training our men; we are opening wide the doors of the Treasury to every war industry except agriculture. Would it not be well in the midst of these lavish expenditures to make sure of our food supply? Here is the way one of the great papers of Great Britain views the peril. The Daily Telegram in its issue Friday, March 15, 1918, among other things said:

We are approaching the supreme test of the issue which depends on the merchantmen. It may be a matter for serious consideration by the United States Government, whether it may not give more essential aid at this moment by holding back temporarily further reinforcement for their Army, with a consequent increase in the quantity of ocean-borne supplies.

The paper asserts that if American soldiers continue to come over at the present rate, tonnage which might be devoted to food will be utilized for military instead of economic purposes, and while both soldiers and food are required, food is the more urgent matter.

Another important item to be considered is the labor situation. Wheat is a crop that must be harvested immediately when ripe. It will not stand in the field for a long period, like corn and cotton. Farmers consider this when they sow. The scarcity of farm labor and high prices for that available will make the farmer timid about planting wheat he is not sure he can harvest. High wages paid in war industrial activities, manufacturing, munition making, lumbering, carpentry, shipbuilding, railroading, and many others, with immunity from military service, has stripped the farm of workers. Farm laborers receive less pay and no deferred classification. Agricultural experts tell us 2,000,000 workers have been taken from farms in the past year for the Army and war works. It seems to me this is a colossal blunder. It is impossible to increase production with decreased man power. The administration of the selective service act has not been satisfactory to the people. Honorable men with dependents, men engaged in producing food on farms that now lie fallow, have been taken while men without encumbrance have been left at home. Personally I know of many such cases, and have repeatedly called them to the attention of the authorities. These authorities have uniformly shifted the blame to the local and district exemption boards.

After nearly running my legs off in an effort to get some relief, I finally placed the matter before the Provost Marshal's Office in record form so that the people might know where the blame belongs. On February 23, 1918, I addressed a letter to Gen. Crowder, as follows:

I desire to emphasize what I said to you yesterday regarding the labor situation as it affects the farmer and farming industry. I regard the classification given farm laborers as unfair, and believe if it is permitted to stand will shortly result in a paralysis of the farming industry. Farm laborers without dependents, unless graduates of an agricultural college, are classed as nonexpert laborers.

It may be said "anyone can break a furrow," but running a furrow is not all there is to farming. Every farmer must also be a business man and a small stock raiser. He must possess, if successful, unusual intelligence along many lines. He must know live stock, their habits, their dispositions, the diseases that commonly affect them. He must know how to care for them; how to feed them with the least possible loss and the greatest economy. They must be kept and raised on the farm at the same time the crops are planted, grown, and harvested. The crops must be so diversified as to produce a yield, and at the same time they must mature at different periods so that the live stock—the hogs, cattle, horses, and sheep—can be cared for. A successful farmer must not only possess great industry and high intelligence, but he must also be a good business man if he avoids bankruptcy. He must know how and when to plant; how to cultivate; and the proper time and method of harvesting. He must also know what to do with his yield; whether to sell, to hold for future market, or to feed and dispose of the same in live stock.

This knowledge can not be acquired overnight. It accumulates slowly and as the result of long years of training. You can not make a farmer out of a doctor, lawyer, baker, merchant, bank clerk, store clerk, a railroader, a carpenter, a painter, a factory worker, or a day laborer by waiving a wand and repeating the words "Presto change."

A large per cent of the persons following these different occupations could not stand the physical strain; the hours of labor and the exposure required of the farmer, and practically all of them would be compelled to learn the manifold and changing labors of the farm.

So, when a farm laborer is classified as "nonexpert" and sent to the trenches, he leaves a vacant place on the farm that is impossible to be filled. When the laborer on the railroad, in the factory, where guns and ammunition are made; in the factory, where clothes are cut and shaped; in the forest, where the timber for ships and aeroplanes is cut; in the yards, where the rivets are driven in the ships, aeroplanes, motors, freight, and passenger cars, is classified as "expert" and exempted from military service, a situation is produced which necessarily draws the farm laborer away from the farm.

The farm laborer can, by changing his occupation, change also his classification from that of a nonexpert laborer subject to military duty to that of an expert laborer exempted from military duty. The preferred classification, together with higher wages paid in the factory and shop, over that received on the farm, has already depleted the farms of their laborers and brought about a situation which presents a serious national menace.

The farmers are not asking to be exempted from military service. They are quite willing to bear their full share of the burdens of this war. It is the duty, however, of those in command to look ahead and see that the farms are not stripped of their laborers. Bullets without bread will not win this war. I do not think the laborer on the farm should be preferred over any other class of labor. At the same time I do not think it fair nor in the interest of the public that he be discriminated against. I think the class of work he is performing is quite as important to the success of our arms as the labor performed by those engaged in any other industry.

If available, I would be glad to have a statistical report showing from what occupations the soldiers already called have come; the per cent from each, and particularly would I like to have this information as it affects my home State, Oklahoma.

On March 7 he replied:

In response to your letter of February 23, permit me to say that your analysis of the agricultural situation as affected by the selective-service law has had careful consideration.

With reference to the work of the district boards of your State in classifying farm laborers, the attention of the district boards has been invited through the adjutant general of the State to the fact that the definition of skilled labor is not to be restricted to graduates of agricultural schools or to those who have scientific or highly technical knowledge.

The adjustment of the labor supply on our farms as related to the necessities attendant upon the enrollment of our Army is the more difficult, because of the fact that before the enactment of the selective-service law the trend of labor was away from the farms.

The selective-service act and the presidential regulations issued pursuant thereto have placed the problem of relief from military service in respect of industrial and agricultural workers primarily in the hands of the district boards. The rules for deferred classification have been carefully worked out, with a view to providing a degree of protection for agricultural interests coextensive with that provided other industries, and it is believed that the district boards in general, especially in agricultural regions, have keen interest in the maintenance of the farm-labor supply.

However, in farming communities it can not be expected that quotas can be raised without interference with farm labor, which in individual instances may seem severe.

As you are doubtless aware, a bill is pending before Congress which will authorize the granting of furloughs for agricultural workers already in the service for their temporary return to the farms. If this legislation is enacted, it may afford a considerable degree of relief to many farmers.

In your letter you requested statistics showing the occupations from which drafted men have been taken. Permit me to invite your attention to the report of the Provost Marshal General to the Secretary of War on the first draft, which gives many statistics. On page No. 62 of this report you will find a chapter headed "Industrial necessity as a ground for discharge." The tables there given will throw much light on the operation of the first draft in respect of agriculture. It is interesting to note the relatively small inroad made on agriculture as shown by these figures.

It is hoped that this will give you the information desired.

He continues to place the responsibility for errors on the local and district boards. The tragic part is they continue taking the farmers. Last week in one county in my district 16 out of 19 called were farmer boys. If this is continued, it does not promise increased food production.

The Committee on Agriculture has also reported a bill authorizing the Food Administrator to restrict the consumption of food in hotels and public eating houses and to prohibit the use of foods in the manufacture of nonessentials, and so forth.

I doubt if it will assist to any appreciable extent in solving food difficulties. I shall, however, gladly support those provisions desired by the administration. There is one provision, however, to which I wish to direct your attention. It is the clause giving the Food Administrator power to ration. It reads:

(e) Prescribing the more equable and economic distribution of foodstuffs and feeds by limiting and regulating the sale, purchase, and distribution by any manufacturer or person engaged in the business of distributing foodstuffs, feeds, or materials or equipment necessary for the production, manufacture, or preservation of foodstuffs or feed: Provided, That this paragraph shall not apply to any farmer or gardener, including live-stock farmers, with respect to the products of any farm, garden, or other land owned, leased, or cultivated by him.

The proviso excepting "any farmer or gardener, including live-stock farmers, with respect to the products of any farm, garden, or other land owned, leased, or cultivated by him" makes it possible for one who can deal direct with the farmer, gardener, and live-stock raiser to evade the law. The bill will not affect the rich who can purchase direct from the producer. The authority conferred is unlimited. He may "regulate the sale, purchase, and distribution by any manufacturer or person engaged in the business of distributing foodstuffs, feeds, or materials or equipment necessary for the production, manufacture, or preservation of foodstuffs or feeds." If the Food Administrator can limit the amount of sugar, salt, or any other food the retailer can sell and the amount a person can purchase, he can ration every man, woman, and child in the country. I do not believe it necessary or wise to enact a rationing statute at this time. The effect will not be wholesome. If, in the future, it should become necessary, Congress will be in session and can act. The President has not asked it. Mr. Hoover, before the committee, said he did not desire such authority. Rationing has proven a failure wherever tried. England, France, Italy, and Germany so report. Its enforcement is expensive and irritating; it requires an army of petty officers nosing and prying into the kitchen affairs of every household. It consumes a large part of the people's time forcing them in line with bread cards.

There are two classes of folks who can not be reached by rationing legislation; it does not reach them in Germany—the producer and the wealthy. The producer manages in some way to hold out sufficient for himself and family and the wealthy are able to deal with the producer direct, and thus avoid the law. The Government can not keep a policeman in every farmer's door. The only classes reached by this legislation are the poor, the workers, and those unable to sport the luxury of automobiles. There is no necessity for such legislation. The farmers will produce and produce abundantly if properly encouraged. Prices that yield a profitable return will stimulate and increase production. In this connection it might be well to recall that prices are always high in war times; everything is abnormal and prices therefore are out of the ordinary. We think prices are high to-day when we are fighting the war for democracy, but they are not so high as in the days when our forefathers were winning our independence. Here are a few prices in 1776:

Meat	per pound	$1 to $2
Rye	per bushel	30
Molasses	per gallon	12
Butterine	per pound	3
Corn	per bushel	25
Potatoes	do	10
Flour	per pound	5
Cheese	do	2
Sugar	do	3

In 1779 sugar sold for $4 per pound; in 1780 butter sold for $12 per pound and tea $40 per pound. I do not give these figures to justify such prices now and I hope prices will not mount higher as the war proceeds. War, however, is but a manifestation of an unusual upheaval and high prices always follow in its wake. If it continues for any considerable time, prices will soar far higher than any heretofore known. If production is not increased, I greatly fear the question will not be so much the price of a loaf, but can a loaf be obtained at any price?

Those who would visit all the burden of this war on the producer may say if the farmer's price is raised the cost to the consumer will be increased. The answer is, "The burden of this war should not be borne by any part of the people but by the whole people equitably distributed. In England, France, and Italy the people are paying less for flour than the people of the United States, where it is produced. On the 23d of February, 1918, I addressed a letter to Mr. Hoover, which in part reads:

If available, I would be glad to be furnished with the following information:

1. The price the consumer is required to pay for flour in Great Britain, France, and Italy.

On March 1 Mr. Hoover sent me an inter-office memorandum, which reads in part as follows:

In compliance with the request of Hon. JOE B. THOMPSON in his letter of February 23, I may say that the retail prices of flour in the countries named is as follows, according to the latest reports:

GREAT BRITAIN.

(1) Flour: On a sack of 280 pounds of flour the maximum retail price is $11.91, equivalent to $8.33 per barrel of 196 pounds, the American unit.

ITALY.

(1) Flour: The market price on November 1, 1917, was 54 lire per quintal, equivalent to $6 per barrel at the rate of exchange prevailing on that date.

FRANCE.

(1) Flour: No retail prices are available. The wholesale price of flour, 61.3 francs per quintal is equivalent to $9.53 per barrel.

Why is this possible? It is because they are doing across the sea what we have not done. They fix the price paid the producer and the cost to the consumer; they squeezed out the profiteer and took care of the differential between producer and consumer from the national treasury. They refused to visit upon any part of the people the burdens of the war; they make all the people bear these burdens equitably. In this way they have been able to pay better prices to the producer than our producers receive and to sell to the consumer for less than our consumers pay.

The Commerce Reports, issued by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce, on February 2, 1918, contained this information:

Food controller fixes prices for grain harvested in United Kingdom in 1918. Wheat and rye will be based on average price of 75s. per quarter of 504 pounds; barley, 65s. per quarter of 448 pounds; oats, 46s. 3d. per quarter of 336 pounds. Higher prices will be allowed for better classes of oats for milling purposes.

Translated this means 2.17\frac{3}{4}$ for wheat, 2.02\frac{7}{10}$ for rye, 1.69\frac{1}{2}$ for barley, and $1.27 for oats. These prices are better than the American farmer receives. This is done by reducing the profit of middle men and making the differential a charge against the national treasury. Since 1914 Great Britain has paid out of its treasury more than half a billion dollars to care for this differential. That Government has also stimulated production by paying a bonus on every acre of wheat planted regardless of the amount produced.

This has been done across the sea to stimulate production, and if the war continues, as in my judgment it will, Congress will soon be forced to some such measure here.

We should not forget in considering this question it is necessary for us to think in relative terms. Gold has increased many fold. The Federal Reserve System authorized a 60 per cent asset currency; billions of bonds have been issued. The modern method of doing business has created what for lack of a better term might be called "check currency." All these concurring have produced an enormous expansion in our currency. Dollars have multiplied, but their purchasing power has decreased in the same ratio.

Nor should we lose sight of the fact our consumers are not profiting by the fixed price of wheat. Every time they buy a pound of flour they are required to purchase a pound of flour substitute—meal, oatmeal, rice, and so forth. While it is true the price of flour was slightly reduced when the wheat price was fixed, the price of meal, oatmeal, rice, and other wheat substitutes has increased, and the consumer finds the cost of living on the whole as high now as before. Those who have benefited by the operation are the consumers living oversea. We loan them money, and with it they purchase our bread at a price less than it costs our own people.

Mr. Chairman, two distinct and antagonistic forms of government are facing each other in a life and death struggle. Somewhere on the battle fields of Europe will be determined whether justice and liberty or brute force shall rule the world. We can not lose. It would be contrary to the laws of God. Let us so coordinate our every activity that there will be unity in spirit and purpose among all classes of our people. In this faith and under the guidance of our matchless leader we will go forward to certain victory. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, when the urgent deficiency appropriation bill was being considered in the House on the 18th of last month I offered an amendment to an item in that bill for the purchase and sale of seeds for cash, providing that those seeds might be sold on credit. That bill will become a law within a day or two, and had my amendment been adopted the farmers would soon be receiving seed. It was not adopted, however, and I hope that this bill will pass. When the proper time comes I desire to offer an amendment adding to the cereals enumerated in the bill, the purchase of which is proposed, rye, which is the surest cereal crop grown in the semiarid sections of the Northwest. It should be added to those mentioned in the bill. I hope this bill will become a law, but I regret that it has been so long delayed. I fear if there is any delay in the Senate the season will be so far advanced before the bill becomes a law that it will be of very little benefit to the farmers this season.

I discussed at length on the 15th of last month, during the general debate, and later, on the 18th, when I offered the amendment to the deficiency bill, the need of seeds on credit by the farmers of certain portions of the West. Drought has been severe in certain sections and seed is scarce and high. I hope this bill will help, and regret the plan I proposed more than a month ago was not adopted.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. DOOLITTLE].

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to address my remarks particularly to section 2 of the bill under consideration, authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to provide for and secure mobilization and distribution of farm labor. To my mind a prime requisite, so far as the production of food and feed in the country at this time is concerned, is that of farm labor. In my native State there is no such thing any more as sufficient farm labor. It is extinct. The farmers have to compete in bidding for hands with manufacturing concerns, munition plants, and others engaged in the making of war materials and other merchandise. The result has been that the farms have been drained of the labor they once had by the young men and the older ones going to the cities where the hours of labor have been more inviting and where eight hours are considered a full day's labor; whereas, on the farm, as we all know, it is a question of work from sunup until dark. Volunteer enlistments and the draft have also cut deeply into the labor supply.

Mr. Chairman, a survey has been made in a general sort of way of the farm-labor situation in some of the States, and report has been made thereon in some of the leading farm journals. Those reports show the widespread shortage and requirement of farm labor. This bill will help out, we think, to some extent. It is not expected by the proponents of the measure that it is a cure-all, but it will help some. To show how Nation wide is the demand for farm labor I desire to read the following summary of reports that have been turned in from the various States:

"Maine: Great shortage of farm labor; acreage probably will be reduced by one-fourth or one-third. Texas: More labor needed than ever before, but supply is much below normal. North Dakota: Alarming shortage; farmers discouraged and can not plant for normal crop. Vermont: Shortage means a cut in production. Massachusetts: Serious situation; farmers can not go ahead with only the help of boys and untrained workmen. Connecticut: Depressing conditions; farmers may try to raise only enough for their families. Rhode Island: Many will not plant as much as last year. New Jersey: Farmers think that planting of even the usual acreage will be very hazardous. Pennsylvania: Very great shortage of skilled farm labor; the exodus from farms has been continuous. Delaware: Unless relief comes, the usual acreage can not be prepared. Maryland: Labor situation is acute. Virginia: Lack of labor, and acreage reduced accordingly. Georgia: Impossible to cultivate as much land as last year's area. Florida: Affected by loss of negro workmen drawn to the North; hope the Government will bring Porto Ricans. Ohio: Farmers discouraged and at their wits' ends. Indiana: Probably a reduction of acreage. Illinois: The number of idle acres will be increased."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If all of these localities are so short of labor, how is the money, two and a half million dollars, to be expended in finding labor to be sent to other localities that are also short?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will say to my friend that there are many people in the country who may make good farm labor, who could be collected under the provisions of this bill and sent to places where they could do the most good. They may be taken from unnecessary occupations.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am quite serious about this. In western Washington the lumber labor shortage was so serious that soldier labor had to be sent in there to make up the deficiency.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON].

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I hope what I say will not be misunderstood, for it is not my intention to criticize the administration or in any way to oppose legislation that will help in winning the war.

This is a time when everybody is required to do their utmost in their particular line of duty whether it be on the battle field, in the factory, or on the farm.

The legislation under consideration has to do with the farmer or producer of food for all mankind, and there is not a man in this Congress who will do more to help that class of citizen than myself.

We all know when bountiful crops are produced the farmer not only helps himself, but it is the consumer as well that receives the direct benefit of his efforts, and I feel that an injustice has been done to the man who toils for the production of crops when we singled out the result of that toil and by price-fixing legislation placed a limit on what he shall receive for his product and permit the charging of unlimited prices for what he must buy and what is essential to make his crops possible.

The price-fixing arrangement is confused by rules and regulations adopted for a good purpose, no doubt, but so far from being practical that the manufacturer of food products does not know where he stands, and the farmer also has become discouraged and has lost sight of the importance of his mission simply because he has been chosen as the one expected to do the most for the least return, when, in fact, the law under which the price of his product has been limited is supposed not to regulate or control his effort.

I recall the speech I made in this House on June 20 of last year, in which I predicted just what the result would be, and at that time I was strongly opposed to price fixing unless it was made to apply to both producer and consumer.

Under the license feature of the food-control law the President fixed the price of wheat, and if he can say what is to be paid for wheat and what the products of wheat shall be sold for certainly he can do the same with other grains and foods.

Our farmers are to-day asked to plant a larger acreage of wheat, and to show the unfairness of such a request I quote the prevailing prices of relative grains:

No. 1 spring wheat, $2.20, Chicago, for 60 pounds.

No. 1 winter wheat, $2.17, Chicago, for 60 pounds.

No. 2 rye, $2.91, Chicago, for 56 pounds.

No. 2 white corn, $2.25, Philadelphia and New York, for 56 pounds.

No. 2 yellow corn, $2.25, Philadelphia and New York, for 56 pounds.

No. 3 yellow corn, $1.90, Philadelphia and New York, for 56 pounds.

No. 2 white oats, $1.08, Philadelphia and New York, for 32 pounds.

From these prices you will see that with the exception of oats wheat is the lowest of all grain, and the farmer knows that with the same effort he can produce from two to three times as much corn, oats, rye, or barley per acre, and he will be a hard man to convince that this sacrifice is necessary when the coarser grains are being used instead of wheat and will yield such greater return.

The consumers have been appealed to to cooperate in the saving of wheat, and have willingly accepted the ruling of the Food Administration to buy a pound of substitute with each pound of wheat flour, but they, too, are becoming discouraged when compelled to pay a premium for the substitute or inferior article, much of which is wasted for want of knowledge as to its best use. Let me quote what the consumer must pay for grain products:

	Per barrel.
Wheat flour	$11.00 to $12.00
Rye flour	14.50 to 15.50
Corn meal	11.00 to 14 00
Oat meal	13.00 to 15.00

From the above I am convinced that the Food Administration, by lack of complete regulation, has placed a penalty rather than a reward on the consumer for the sacrifice he is making.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. I would like to do so, but I have not the time.

Mr. SNYDER. I would like just to get a comparison of those prices.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. I have not the time; I will later if I have the time.

We have a new proposition before us, one that unless handled properly will stand out in future years as a rebuke to our judgment, and rather than spend money for seed wheat, to be sold to the farmers on credit, I would be willing to advocate the appropriation of $10,000,000 for the purchase and free distribution of seed wheat under the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture, such seed to be available to those who are unable to purchase seed or any farmer who would be willing to cultivate such a crop under rules and regulations prescribed by the Department of Agriculture.

By an arrangement of this kind our Western States could be made to increase their yield of spring wheat at least 50 per cent, which would remove all question of a wheat shortage.

I have before me a publication called the Seed Reporter, issued by authority of the Secretary of Agriculture, which shows how the Grain Corporation proposes to take care of the seed-wheat business on a small profit for the purpose of increasing production. We are told by the Grain Corporation, which, by the way, is a child of the Food Administration, that they have 500,000 bushels of Marquis spring wheat to supply Indiana, Ohio, Michigan, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, New York, Vermont, New Hampshire, and Maine, all winter wheat States, and in which the planting of spring wheat would be an experiment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield? I want to ask the name of the publication.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. The Seed Reporter, March 20, 1918.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is a Government publication?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Yes, sir. Bureau of Markets, Department of Agriculture.

This wheat is in Buffalo, and has cost the Grain Corporation about $2.25 per bushel, and they propose to sell it by the car to any dealer or elevator man at $2.35 per bushel f. o. b. Buffalo, and the dealer or elevator man has the privilege to resell the grain to the farmer for 15 per cent increase over that price, or a profit of 35 cents per bushel. If a man is unable to purchase a full carload he may buy a less quantity, but the price will be $2.65 per bushel, and by the time this reaches the farmer, with the 15 per cent added, it will cost him $3.05 per bushel sacked.

When you consider these profits, compared with those allowed by the rules of the different exchanges dealing in wholesale grain, you can get an idea that the Grain Corporation has gone far from the policy of doing business at cost, especially when the Government furnishes the capital without interest, which amounted to $150,000,000, in the food-control bill for a revolving fund, and also $2,500,000 for administration expenses, and a further appropriation of $1,750,000 in the recent urgent deficiency bill, making a total of $4,250,000 for expenses from August 10 to June 30 of the present year.

In normal business the brokerage on grain permitted by the different exchanges usually run from ¼ to 1 cent per bushel, which, together with interest, insurance, and storage, seldom makes more than 3 cents per bushel.

Mr. Chairman, I contend that the Grain Corporation has no right to conduct business for a greater profit than will pay their expenses, especially when its chief function is to encourage the production and regulate the distribution of grain, and if the situation is so serious as to require the furnishing of seed wheat the Department of Agriculture should be authorized to make free distribution, and with their efficient organization keep strict supervision over the planting and growing and use every possible means to see that the results desired are accomplished. [Applause.]

I now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNYDER. I was going to ask the gentleman if the gentleman could give the relative difference in price between wheat and corn, wheat and oats, wheat and rye, say, three years ago?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. I can not recall just what it was.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman insert it in his extension?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. I will.

On page 30 of the Monthly Crop Report, published by authority of the Secretary of Agriculture, issue of March, 1918, the following figures are given as the average prices paid to producers, based on reports from 7,000 country buyers. This table does not include commissions, insurance, elevator charges, or freight to destination.

	Wheat.	Corn.	Rye.	Oats.	Barley.
Mar. 1, 1915	$1.336	$0.751	$1.051	$0.521	$0.677
Mar. 1, 1916	1.029	.682	.856	.427	.595
Mar. 1, 1917	1.644	1.009	1.26	.569	.969
Mar. 1, 1918	2.027	1.543	2.01	.862	1.161

Mr. WALDOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. I will.

Mr. WALDOW. This grain corporation of which the gentleman speaks is a corporation authorized by Mr. Hoover, is it not?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Yes, sir. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time, and ask the privilege of extending and revising my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? (After a pause.) The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I think that some of the gentlemen present do not understand just what this bill is and the principle on which it is framed. Appropriating a comparatively small sum, $7,500,000, it is solely for the purpose of supplying seed grain to the farmers of the spring-wheat area where they are not able to buy it. It has been urged that it ought to be extended and that seed grain ought to be made available all over the country. I think gentlemen who are urging that really do not mean what they say. This amount of money will not cover the entire country. This is for a part of the country in which, on account of failure of crops, the people are not able at this time to buy the wheat or other grain, nor have they credit with which to buy it. When a gentleman from one of the other States asks that his State be put in with the spring-wheat States he does not mean what he says, and he loses sight of what has been done and is being prepared for other sections. Other bills that have been passed and have become laws, other bills that are pending, that will be passed provide for more money and authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to dispose of seed grains at cost. The other States in which it is difficult to get seed grain will be accommodated by those laws. I am sure that the great State of New York, from which we hear opposition to this bill; the great State of Massachusetts, and some others, do not wish to come to Congress and ask for Federal aid.

In the first place, I think the farmers of those States are abundantly able to buy seed if they have an opportunity to do so, and that business and financial interests of those States are abundantly able and ought to be willing to help their farmers who are not able to buy and have no credit. They are not in the unfortunate condition in which the people whom this bill will help are now placed. Now, the Committee on Agriculture refused to approve this bill when it first came before the committee because it did not approve the principle of indiscriminate loaning of money by the Government to the farmers or supplying seed on credit, whether they need it or not; but, after extended hearings and testimony brought before the committee to the effect that the spring-wheat section of the country is in great need and must have this help, a majority of the committee yielded and prepared and reported this bill. I early urged financial assistance to farmers to enable them to procure seed, but the majority of the committee were tardy in taking that position. That is the situation in which the bill in its present limited scope comes before the House, and that is the reason the committee has reported it.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I do.

Mr. CANNON. This provides for spring wheat?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. For the spring-wheat area.

Mr. CANNON. I am informed by the Representative from South Dakota that his State has fully provided——

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. North Dakota.

Mr. CANNON. And also North Dakota.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. North Dakota, as I understand it, Mr. Chairman, has at a session of its legislature authorized the counties to bond for that purpose, and they have pretty well taken care of the needs of their people. There has been some action by the people of South Dakota, and they have given as far as they are able——

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from South Dakota informed me that they had fully cared for it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I do not understand the situation has been fully taken care of in the State of South Dakota, but shall be pleased to be corrected if I am wrong.

Mr. DILLON. If the gentleman will yield, I might say that South Dakota has had no failure of crops and that our legislature convened last week and provided by resolution that we did not need this aid. They are only taking care of their own people.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Well, this "last week" was since this bill was reported. This bill was reported to the House by the Committee on Agriculture nearly three weeks ago.

Mr. Chairman, I am altogether unable to account for the attitude of gentlemen of this Congress who oppose almost every measure calculated to assist the farmers of the country. They realize, as every sane man does, that there must be increased production of farm crops, particularly wheat. They join in the demand for larger crops, and swell the popular cry that "food will win the war." They are sensible enough to place food on a level with munitions and men for the Army and Navy; they vote for appropriations carrying billions of money, and authorize the departments to enter into contracts with private corporations for munitions, ships, aircraft, and material and supplies of all kinds; to make contracts by which money and material are advanced and supplied by the Government, and in addition, in many cases, the corporations are guaranteed a profit on all their operations. But as to the farmers, the Congress and the administration appeal to their patriotism and let it go at that; the suggestion of contracting for production of wheat or other farm products or of financial assistance in procuring seed is scoffed at; or if help is given it is given grudgingly and not in sufficient measure. I do not forget that the food-control act of August last guarantees a minimum price of $2 a bushel for wheat of the 1918 harvest, but the failure in any manner to regulate the prices farmers pay for machinery and equipment, or prices of other things farmers must buy, has so increased the cost of farm operations that $2 wheat is not very profitable. A minimum price of $2.20 was fixed for wheat, the crop of 1917, but the manner in which that price was fixed or the manner of control of the wheat market by the Food Administration has resulted in making that price the maximum as well as the minimum price. The result has been, further, that prices of all other grains, in no way regulated or interfered with by the Food Administrator, have risen very high, out of all proportion to the price of wheat, and during 1918, at least, the farmers will find larger profit in growing the other grains than in growing wheat. In the face of this novel and unfortunate situation the farmers are urged to continue to sow wheat; their patriotism is appealed to, but substantial assistance is refused—assistance, if promptly given, that would encourage them and enable them to overcome some of the serious difficulties confronting them.

This bill was prepared and reported in the hope that this substantial assistance might be given.

The bill provides that the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized—> * * * to make advances or loans to farmers in the spring-wheat areas of the United States where he shall find special need for assistance for the purchase of wheat, oats, and barley for seed purposes or, when necessary, to procure such seed and sell the same to such farmers * * * upon such terms and conditions and subject to such regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe.

And provides further—

> That a first lien on the crop to be produced from such seed obtained through a loan, advance, or sale made under this section shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, be deemed security therefor, and that the total amount of such advances, loans, or sales to any one farmer shall not exceed $450.

It seems to me the amount of money to be here appropriated for this purpose, $7,500,000, is small, when we consider the urgent and immediate need of assistance to farmers of the spring-wheat section of the country, the only section in which an increased production of wheat can be had this year; and as we take into consideration the immense sums of money expended or provided for other war operations, some of them of no greater importance than is the growing of grain for food.

It has been said here that as the Secretary of Agriculture would be authorized by this measure, if it shall become law, to loan money or supply seed grain to farmers "upon such terms and conditions and subject to such regulations" as he may prescribe, he would virtually be authorized to enter into contracts with farmers for the production of grain. And why should not contracts for foodstuffs be made? Money so used will produce larger and better results than will expenditures in many of the other of the activities in which we are engaged during this war emergency. There will certainly be abundant return to justify the expenditure of this money—or for its investment, as it surely is—and in my humble judgment the bill, more restricted in its terms than it ought to be, ought to be passed, and it must be passed and become law without further delay if it is to be of use this year.

Mr. CANNON. I ask that his time be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. The time is under the control of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER].

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, I want to take this opportunity to thank the Committee on Agriculture for its patience, its hearty cooperation and support of this measure.

Its indorsement of this bill is sufficient argument for its passage. This bill was considered from every angle and entirely upon its merits. It is not a partisan measure. It is a war measure, and there is no partisanship in patriotism. I believe that Congress will act with the same high spirit of patriotism and nonpartisanship with which it has met all the war emergencies.

Critical conditions without parallel have compelled me to urge the passage of this resolution. I believe that you realize the gravity of the situation and the imperative necessity of food at this time. This war will be won by the gradual process of attrition; that is the gradual exhausting of the enemy's resources. Victory rests with the side that has the last bushel of grain in its bin; and I want to see that Uncle Sam is on that side. [Applause.]

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield? I am not antagonistic to the bill. I shall vote for it. You provide by this bill that this money shall be loaned through State and national banks. Are the banks of your State refusing now to make these loans, as they are authorized to do under the Federal reserve act?

Mr. BAER. There is no authorization for loaning money for seed under the Federal reserve act unless the bank guarantees it.

Mr. WINGO. You have got to make a showing that it is for agricultural purposes, and, of course, properly indorsed. Under the Federal reserve act when any farmer gives his note for getting seed or implements or fertilizer for the purpose of the production of food, such a note is eligible for rediscount at the Federal reserve bank, and against it Federal reserve notes may be issued.

Mr. BAER. I want to say to the gentleman that in North Dakota——

Mr. WINGO. Are your banks refusing to grant that relief?

Mr. BAER. No. They can not give the relief, however, because they have not sufficient money. The liberty loans and other conditions have taken the money out of the State. They will loan on land and chattels.

Mr. WINGO. I am not talking about loans on the land. That is under the farm-loan act. But I am talking about the agricultural paper provision of the Federal reserve act. Unless I am misinformed, your Federal reserve bank is in Minneapolis?

Mr. BAER. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Unless I am misinformed, that bank has already loaned $1,700,000 on this character of paper. If your banks are not granting the relief they should if able, and as they seem unable, I can see the necessity for this relief, and for that reason shall vote for it.

Mr. BAER. I have the reports, in which they say they can not get the relief.

Mr. WINGO. If the banks will not grant the relief——

Mr. BAER. The banks have got to guarantee it. That is another reason, in addition to lack of funds. I can not yield further.

There is plenty of authority in support of this measure. Mr. Hoover says that Congress should make considerable appropriations to farmers who need advances against animals and crops. Mr. Lubin, of the Agricultural Institute of Rome, says that the allies are depending upon the United States for food.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BAER. I can not yield further.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. One question.

Mr. BAER. I can not yield.

Lord Rhondda, the food controller of England, says if we do not ship England more wheat he can not take the responsibility of assuring his people that they can win this war.

I have received 14,000 answers to questionnaires showing the need. In fact there are 40,000 homesteaders and twice as many needy farmers in the Northwest who require credit. They have the land and the man power, but need seed on time.

Our farmers have striven and will strive to support our Nation, and those who have seed and are guaranteed labor will raise every possible bushel of wheat they can.

True, the Agricultural Department has made arrangements to have seed on the ground to be sold for cash, but this seed will be of no value to the farmer who has not sufficient funds to buy it. The farmer who has sufficient funds usually carries over enough seed grain for the spring seeding. It is the farmer who has not the seed and has not the credit of whom I am speaking.

There can be no question as to the imperative necessity of increased production. The winter wheat has been planted. The poorest average condition of winter wheat on December 1, 1917, ever reported in the history of the country. On December 1, 1917, the average winter wheat was 79.2 per cent as against 81.4 per cent in December, 1895, the lowest condition ever hitherto reported, and as against 85.7 per cent in December, 1916, when the crop of winter wheat at the following harvest was wholly inadequate to meet our needs. It does not show a yield of over half a billion bushels. The Department of Agriculture has stated that they need a billion bushels. This is impossible. The highest yield of spring wheat in history was 340,000,000 bushels; the average is about 240,000,000 bushels. With the decrease in farm labor and other discouragements it is impossible to raise 250,000,000 bushels of spring wheat, but we must come as close to this as possible. The only way we can approach this need is by passing this bill, which will insure the planting of 3,000,000 acres of wheat with a possible production of 50,000,000 bushels of grain.

If we neglect to pass this measure thousands of acres will remain untilled. Thousands of plowshares will rust and will stand as a reproach of our negligence. To you men who represent city populations I want to say that if you are anxious to decrease the cost of living, vote for this bill. Increased production means the lower cost of living, and food shortage in this country or among our allies would be a very serious problem at this time. Dissatisfaction and social unrest the world over is caused by the lack of bread.

True, we are conserving and we will conserve, but conservation alone will not solve the problem, even if we conserve to a point that endangers the virility of the Nation. Our workers in factories and war industries have been asked to work longer hours to increase production. This raises the question of stamina. If we expect these men to work harder, they naturally will eat more. I believe the conservation problem is a splendid one, but I also want to urge the greatest production. This is the hour of decision. If we do not act, I believe a famine faces the world.

We have basked in the fancied security of our statistics long enough. Let us face the fact and wake up. Let us plant every idle acre. Let us mobilize labor to get the crops out in due season. Agriculture is the chief basis of national prosperity and credit. Let us support this measure; first, to produce more food for our allies and ourselves; secondly, as a vote of confidence in the American farmer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. I am sorry that I can not yield to the gentleman more time. I have about 30 on the list here.

By unanimous consent, Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan, Mr. MCFADDEN, Mr. FARR, and Mr. FOCHT were granted leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise, and upon that I ask for tellers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise, and on that I demand tellers.

Mr. CANNON. Does that motion take precedence of the gentleman's point of order that there is no quorum present?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion for the committee to rise, the Chair thinks, would take precedence.

Mr. LEVER. I insist on my motion, Mr. Chairman, that the committee do now rise, and on that I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. LEVER and Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania took their places as tellers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, did the Chair state the question?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the question. Those who favor the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] will pass between the tellers and be counted.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 2, noes 81.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee refuses to rise.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, not a quorum is present.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, there is not a quorum present. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. It is evident from the vote that there is not a quorum present, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. POU, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the committee substitute for the bill H. R. 7795, had found itself without a quorum, and he had caused the roll to be called, whereupon 300 gentlemen had answered "present"; and he submitted a list of absentees to be recorded in the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The committee will resume its sitting.

The committee resumed its sitting.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself three minutes.

Mr. Chairman, for four solid days this House spent its time in the very important matter of fixing the salaries of postal clerks, post-office officials, and the like. A quorum was always present when that bill was being considered. That was a bill taking something out of the Federal Treasury in the way of salaries for somebody else, mostly somebody else who are organized and have votes. [Laughter.] Here is a proposition which a great committee of this House believes is important in the winning of this war, and yet gentlemen come in here and make a point of no quorum, and, after the Chairman of the committee exhausts every parliamentary expedient to get a quorum here, we are not able to find it. We have killed 25 minutes in calling the roll because there was no quorum present.

I am not scolding the House at all, and I rise only for the purpose of saying that if the friends of this measure are sufficiently in earnest and are in the majority in this House to put this bill through, and will stay with me, we will keep this committee running until the break of day and put it through. Now, will you stay? [Applause.]

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. EVANS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Montana is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, this bill appears to me to be very important to the country. In the hour or more of discussion of it several objections have been made to it. One of them was that it applied to only a limited section of the country.

Another was that the bill was fathered by the Nonpartisan League. Another was something else.

Now, I beg to suggest to this House—and I may repeat some things that I said this morning in discussing the rule—the question of authorship of this bill should not enter into it at all. This is not the bill of the Nonpartisan League, I may say. Last August I introduced a bill practically like this. I foresaw that the drought in that western country would cause a shortage of crops, and I introduced a bill and hoped to get it through in time for last fall's planting.

Mr. GORDON. What would you do in case you had another drought? What would you do for these men to whom you have loaned the money?

Mr. EVANS. There would be a greater shortage of wheat than there is now.

Mr. GORDON. And there would be a shortage of the money. [Laughter.]

Mr. EVANS. But what will you say if you lose your aeroplanes? Will you get them back? What will you say if you lose your ships? Will you get them back? What will you say if the soldiers are killed? Will you get them back? We are trying to save them, not trying to get something back.

In all that western country, as I said to you this morning, there are thousands of people—and they are not beggars—who can not give any security except the crop. They do not ask the Government to give them anything, but the Government asks them to raise the wheat, and they say, "We will go you fifty-fifty. If we get a crop, we will pay you back." If they do not get a crop this year, they may not pay it back this year, but——

Mr. MORGAN. Because they do not pay it back this year, that is no sign that they will not ever pay it back. I object to your saying they will not pay it back.

Mr. EVANS. I say if they get a crop they will pay it back on this year's crop.

Mr. GORDON. It is not proposed to take security, but take a chance on this year's crop?

Mr. EVANS. Great God! If they had security they could go to the bank or to the financial institution and borrow the money. That is the kind of men we are trying to help—those who have not the security to give.

Gentlemen, in that section of the country thousands of homestead entries are being made. I am sure 80,000 a year are being made in the public-land States. Those men can not get title in one, two, or three years.

If there are 60,000 a year, there are at least 180,000 of these homestead entrymen of the last three years that have not got title to their lands. They are new people. They have just recently come into that country. They have nothing but their courage and the muscle of their arms to start with.

Mr. CRAMTON. While the Government takes a chance on a few dollars to furnish the seed, the farmer takes the chance of his farm and all his time?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; and the Government does not take a chance longer than six months.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the Government preferred to treat the farmer as he treats the manufacturers of munitions—furnishing material and paying a per cent of profit on the cost of production—if it would make the same arrangement with the farmer, furnishing material and paying him a per cent or measure of profit on the production, the farmer then taking no chances, I suppose your farmers would not object to that arrangement.

Mr. EVANS. They are not even asking that.

Mr. CRAMTON. But then they would be on an equality basis with the munitions manufacturers?

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. The only difference is that the munition manufacturer in every instance has got property to secure the loan the Government makes to him.

Mr. MORGAN. How much?

Mr. GORDON. The Government does not advance any money unless it is secured.

Mr. CRAMTON. But they are dead sure of a profit.

Mr. GORDON. The Government is dead sure of getting its money back, too.

Mr. EVANS. Let me suggest that in the section from which I come we do not gauge citizenship by the amount of money a man has in his pocket or the credit he has at a bank. [Applause.] We have thousands of these men, who are without title to their property.

They are a courageous, patriotic, self-reliant people. They have just settled in that broad expanse of territory. They are building homes and schoolhouses and roads and bridges. There are no cities of importance. There are no financial centers there, no financial institutions able to extend credit to these people. Anyone conversant with the settlement of a new country knows that if in the period of two or three years, three or four hundred thousand people migrate into a new farming country, that their greatest drawback is money with which to do business. Ten years from now these people will all be well to do. They have lands—productive lands—but they have not title to these lands and they therefore have nothing to give as security to the man who has money to loan. And, as suggested, there are exceedingly few men in that section who have money to loan because they, too, are new in the country. I hope no one will gain the impression that the people of Montana are mendicants or beggars. There are no more courageous, self-reliant, or patriotic people in the world than these people, half of whom have come into the State within the last two or three years; and everyone knows that as a rule the man who leaves his home and comes to take up land in a new country is a man without money. If he had already gotten a start in life, if he was in good circumstances, he would probably have remained at his original home and not gone into a new country to endure the hardships that are always entailed with such a settlement. Western Montana, the older settled part of the State, is amply capable and willing to take care of any demands made upon its people. The territory to which I here refer is that great expanse of eastern Montana, a territory 400 miles long and 200 miles wide. The men of this House do not seem to grasp the situation. Again I say the people of Montana are not lacking in patriotism, nor are they beggars. When the call to arms was sounded in this country, Montana furnished more men in proportion to her population than any State in the Union. When both liberty loans were placed before our people, we oversubscribed the same to a greater extent than the people of any other State in the Union in proportion to our assessed valuation. When the Red Cross call was made, we oversubscribed our allotment 250 per cent. To show you how that State has grown I beg to say that in two years the voting population increased 143 per cent. That State has two Representatives on the floor of this House based upon the census of 1900, and yet we registered more men under the selective draft than did either of the Dakotas with three Representatives, more than the State of Colorado with four Representatives, more than the State of Washington with five Representatives, almost as many as the State of Kansas with six Representatives. We were able to do this because a large percentage of the newer population are young, sturdy, single men who have come into that State to build homes out of a wilderness. This is the class of people that proponents of this bill ask that seed may be furnished this year that they may double the production of wheat in that section. These people are pioneers—real pioneers—and they are not asking any charity at the hands of the Government.

They want to do their bit. They want to pay for everything they get. When a crop is made they will pay for all seed furnished them, and above all they are patriotic and want to win the war. They want to raise wheat because they are on wheat land and because the American people need the wheat. It is just as important to the American people that we have wheat as it is that we have guns and ships and munitions. Last year we spent nearly twenty billions of dollars in an effort to terminate the war. The President, the Food Administrator, and all other farseeing men are begging and urging the people to conserve the bread supply and to produce more foodstuffs, and we here in Congress haggle over the proposition of appropriating seven and a half million dollars to furnish our armies with bread. We have appropriated money to furnish the capital for the conduct of the railroads, for shipbuilding, for munitions of war, for fertilizer, but we balk when it comes to furnishing money for seed to produce foodstuffs. This is not a "pork-barrel" measure; it is a war measure; and I confidently believe that in proportion to the money carried in this bill it will bring as much or better results than any similar amount of money expended elsewhere in the twenty billions of dollars already appropriated.

Mr. GORDON. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Montana be extended five minutes. He was interrupted by Members, including myself.

Mr. WALDOW. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. RUBEY. I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DILL] two minutes.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, I come from that part of the wheat country which lies between the Rocky Mountains and the Cascades, known as the dry-wheat section, and I can say that there are literally thousands of farmers in that country who will be able to raise greater acreages of wheat if seed wheat can be furnished them on short credit. The conditions that have been described as existing in the State of Montana because of the drought exist to a large extent throughout eastern Washington and the adjoining regions. That country has been producing about 20,000,000 bushels of wheat each year. Unless there is some help given to these farmers much of the land that was broken last summer for wheat this spring will not be planted. Because of the drought last year the wheat crop was a failure in many sections. There was a small acreage of wheat planted last fall, and I have received large numbers of letters from farmers asking for this legislation.

Mr. KEARNS. Why can they not go to their local banks and borrow this money?

Mr. DILL. For the simple reason that many of them are tenant farmers who have no security on which to borrow money from the banks. A large number of others are homesteaders or are too poor to give the necessary security.

Mr. KEARNS. What security are they going to give the Government?

Mr. DILL. They will give simply the security of the crop that they will raise.

Mr. KEARNS. Why can they not go to the banks and get the banks to loan them money on that same security?

Mr. DILL. Because the banks will not accept it.

Mr. KEARNS. Why should the Government do something that the banks will not do?

Mr. DILL. Because the Government is in a world war, and it is the business of this country to raise all the food possible. [Applause.]

Mr. KEARNS. The banks are interested in the winning of the war, are they not?

Mr. DILL. Yes; but they can not loan out the money under the State laws controlling banking, nor with safety to their stockholders. As the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] suggests, they are in the business of banking for the purpose of making money. The Government is going into this business for the purpose of producing food to win the war.

Mr. KEARNS. The banks of that section of the country are a part of the Government, are they not?

Mr. DILL. Oh, no.

Mr. KEARNS. They are interested in it.

Mr. DILL. Yes; they are interested in it. I have no complaints to make against the banks in this regard, because I doubt whether it would be advisable, from a business standpoint, for the banks to loan money on such security. I do not support this bill from a business standpoint, but I do support it from a patriotic standpoint. [Applause.] We can not afford to haggle and delay at a time like this. We must act, and act in the manner that will result in the production of as much wheat as possible.

Mr. RUBEY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG] five minutes.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I do not know that I can add very much to what I said in the discussion of this question while the rule was being considered, but I have such a deep conviction as to the wrong that is about to be done and as to the farce that is about to be perpetrated that I rise for the second time to enter my protest against this kind of legislation. [Applause.] I stated in my speech before that the Secretary of Agriculture opposed the original Baer bill when it was before the Committee on Agriculture. I stand here to reaffirm that he opposed that bill and said it was not a good proposition and not good business, and advocated that it be not reported out of that committee, and no member of that committee will dispute my statement. This is a revamp of the original Baer bill, cutting down the amount from $50,000,000 to $10,000,000, because they think they can get $10,000,000 through. That is all there is to it. But it is the same principle, and the committee killed that Baer bill when it was considered before. Now, how did they camouflage and get it back into the committee and on the floor of this House? They did it by inserting one new proposition. That proposition is a mobilization of labor. God knows we have got a Labor Department down here. We have given them millions of dollars to do the very work that this $2,500,000 is supposed to do. Here you come and offer to duplicate that expenditure and have another force of employees camouflaging in this bill by bringing a new item into it in order to offer a $7,500,000 proposition to loan money to 166,666 people to make a crop this year. There are just 30 more days in which to plant spring wheat, and another body has got to pass on this bill. Are you fooling yourselves? Are you not intelligent men? Do you not know that this bill can not pass the other body, if they were favorably disposed to it, and then this machinery be set in motion to loan to 166,666 people $450 apiece to buy wheat to sow on their land? I will tell you what is the truth. Why do you not go and do like Texas did? Our legislature appropriated millions in order to relieve the drought-stricken section of that State, where 144 counties were stricken barren. That is the course that ought to be pursued. Oh, I have a feeling for the people in the drought-stricken section, but that feeling can not run away with me and make me violate a governmental principle and perform a farce in this House in saying that we are going to give you $7,500,000.

I believe in raising this wheat, and here is a sensible proposition. The Secretary of the Treasury will back every one of these banks down there with public funds, as he has done in the industrial centers, and as he has done in my State to relieve the cattlemen who have lost their all, but he made the banks get behind these loans, and he makes it a banking proposition, so that the Government will not lose one dollar of the money, and it will be paid back because these banks back up that credit; and let me tell you a man who is worthy of credit in the country where I come from, and I believe it is true of every other section of the United States, is able now, if he is honest and industrious, to go to his local banks and borrow money with which to buy seed in order to raise a crop. You talk about the bankers not being patriotic. They are patriotic.

Miss RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. They are patriotic and they will advance this money if the man on the farm is worthy of the credit, because in order that the bank may succeed, the country in which they are located must succeed. I yield.

Miss RANKIN. Has the gentleman any bank in a homestead district in his State that can loan $1,000,000 to the farmers?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. We have no homestead districts in my State, but it does not change the principle of the thing. I take it that in the homestead districts the banks are anxious that the homesteaders shall succeed, because, unless they do succeed, the banks ultimately will have to go out of business.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman please explain the difference between the principle involved in this bill and the principle involved in appropriating every year $500,000 for the eradication of the Texas cattle tick? [Applause]

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. If the gentleman can see any comparison between the two items, he sees more than any other person in this House can see.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY].

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor, and especially when we are at war, as we are now, and when food is so important to the winning of that war, of the Government aiding the farmers as liberally as possible in producing the maximum of foodstuffs of which the soil is capable. Indeed, at the risk of being called a paternalist, I will say that I think the subject of agriculture is so important to the country, not alone in war times but in peace times as well, that I am in favor of still larger appropriations for the distribution of seeds and the dissemination of literature to aid in their proper planting and cultivation. But, Mr. Chairman, returning to this bill and having in mind the discrimination and sectionalism which it embodies, I wish to say that I believe in equal rights to all and exclusive privileges to none. I am that much of a Jeffersonian Democrat. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. I will not. The gentleman ought to know that he should not seek to interrupt me when I have such a brief time allotted me.

This bill in its present shape reminds me of what a fellow said to his partner who had charge of the cash register and who was using too much of the net profits of the concern When the other partner complained about that, he said, "Oh, that will be all right in the end. We are in cahoots, you know"; to which the complaining partner replied: "Yes; I know we are in cahoots, but the hell of it is that you are getting the money and I am getting the cahoots." [Laughter.]

This bill as it now stands gives all of the benefit to you fellows who are in the spring-wheat areas, while we of the corn belt are getting the cahoots. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of amending this bill so as to include Kentucky, which I beg to remind you is still one of the States of the Union. [Applause and laughter.] We raise comparatively little wheat in Kentucky, and what we do raise we sow in the fall of the year. We raise some buckwheat, and if I have a chance I believe I will offer an amendment to strike out the word "spring" and insert the word "buck."

[Laughter.] That would come nearer to helping us in Kentucky if the bill is to be confined to the current year. We raise a good deal of tobacco in Kentucky, too, and we also raise some cane in spots. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. And some rye?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes; and some rye, too. [Laughter.] But our great staple is corn, and I shall not vote for this bill unless it is amended so as to include corn, because we are short of seed corn there, especially in the mountain section, and my information is that the price of good seed corn is practically prohibitive. There is another reason why I think this bill should include the loaning of money to farmers for the purchase of seed corn, and that is that I think our soldier boys who are over there fighting for us are entitled to the very best of everything. [Applause.] I am in favor of them having biscuit and all of the wheat bread they can eat. Corn bread is good enough for us back here, and I am in favor of us eating corn bread exclusively here at home in order that we may be able to send more wheat "over there." The best way to accomplish that is to amend this bill so that our farmers may be able to purchase more seed corn, which is so scarce in Kentucky and other sections of the country, and thereby enable our farmers to raise more corn, not to be used in producing what Kentucky formerly utilized a great deal of corn for, because the old Commonwealth is going dry pretty soon, but to raise it in order that we may be able to send all of our wheat across the sea to our allies and our soldiers. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there is only one excuse for this kind of legislation, and that is the Nation's extreme necessity for more bread material. We are the food providers of the civilized world to-day. A few millions of bushels of wheat or corn may mean the winning or losing of this war. The President, the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Hoover, the Food Director, and the members of the great Agricultural Committee say that this is a war measure of great and imperative importance, and I shall support it on the theory that it is a war measure.

Complaint has been made here by certain Members that this bill means that the Government will take a large part of the $7,500,000 appropriated and lend it to grain growers without the usual kind of a security which good business men would require. I do not attempt to justify the passage of this bill to enable the Government to go into the business of buying and selling seed or lending money to grain growers and taking a lien upon their crop as security as a banking or money loaning proposition, but as a means of increasing the bread supply of the world, which in my judgment is the most important factor in winning the war if it lasts any considerable length of time.

But, gentlemen, I personally think you could justify the passage of this act better if you did not make it so sectional in its provisions. It is true you have cut out the words "in the spring-wheat areas" and made its provisions apply to the whole Nation; but since it only applies to the crop of the year 1918 and only provides for wheat, barley, and oats, it will have little other application than to the districts where spring wheat is planted.

I have proposed an amendment to the first section of the bill, which would authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase and sell either on time or credit, as he deems best, seed corn in the corn belt of the United States. If any of you gentlemen know any good reason why you should not include seed corn in the districts of the United States where last year's corn crop was frost bitten to the extent of 75 per cent I would like to hear it.

Some one has said that there is already an appropriation to take care of the seed question. If this is true, and if that appropriation is adequate, then why the necessity of this bill for the spring-wheat area? That argument affects this whole bill and should not be used alone against one section of the country any more than another.

And while we are on the subject I want to say to you that you have not treated the farmer of the great Middle West fairly in this and the last session of Congress. The farmers of my district and State are patriotic and are not opposed to their sons going to the battle front to fight in this death struggle for the life of this Republic. They would resent congressional action that would deny to them the privilege of sharing in the glory of this great cause. I think, and many of them think, that there are instances where boys have been taken from farms who could have served their country best following the plow. Congress authorized the President to exempt farmer boys from the draft where they were essential to the conduct of the operation of the farm. In some communities little, if any, regard was given by exemption boards to this important question. Thousands of young men sorely needed to produce bread are now in the training camps. The cry for farm help is heard on every hand; and I am told that back in my district in Indiana, in every county, auctioneers are busy selling farm implements and farm stock, and that there is great fear that the farmers will not be enabled to produce as much grain as they have been accustomed to producing. Since the world is looking to us for food it is unfortunate if this condition actually exists.

Practically everyone agrees that in instances where boys are essential to the planting, cultivating, and harvesting of this year's crop they should be furloughed and permitted to go home and do this important work before taking up further military duties. By a unanimous vote, as I remember it, two weeks ago we passed a bill authorizing the Secretary of War, under rules and regulations to be made by him, to furlough this class of boys. I have worn the soles off of my shoes and worn out a couple of telephones, figuratively speaking, in the different war departments, trying to find out if there is going to be any rules and regulations made for furloughing these boys, and, gentlemen, I finally gave up in despair. No one in any of the war departments knew anything about whether such provisions and arrangements were being made, and I venture the assertion that no such arrangement will be made. The President signed the bill, although I am informed that The Adjutant General prepared and submitted a brief in an attempt to prevent him from doing so. The General Staff is against it. This is not a political matter; the General Staff are only looking to the question of getting an army together. We are trying to look not only to the question of getting an army together, but to raise food to feed them and all of our people and our allies. If they delay much longer, it will be too late to do the farmer any good. He ought to know what to depend upon now.

A large part of Indiana's last year's corn crop, which was frostbitten, was in the field in December and January. The Indiana Federal food director came over here, and the Hon. LINCOLN DIXON, my colleague, introduced a bill authorizing the distillation of this corn into alcohol to make war munitions out of. For some reason the bill never got out of committee, but after the corn had rotted in the field the President made an Executive order permitting it to be distilled.

The Federal food director in Indiana tells me that the seed-corn question in my State is acute. I fear that worthless seed will be planted, and if seed corn is selling for the fabulous prices reported I fear, in many instances, some good corn land will lie idle. If seed corn is imported into our State from territories north or south of us it may mature too early or too late. If my amendment is adopted, it will leave it up to the Secretary of Agriculture, probably through Mr. Christie or Dr. Barnard, of the Federal food commission of Indiana, to buy the right kind of seed corn, and then through the county councils or county agents get it to the right place at the right time. When I was on the farm I think we planted from 6 to 8 acres with 1 bushel of seed corn. It does not mean a great outlay of money, but it is important that the right kind of seed corn is thoroughly scattered among the corn growers of the Middle West. They ought to be distributing this seed corn now, and if this amendment passes I hope the Senate will quickly act upon this bill, and that it will be put into operation at once.

I am willing to help the great Northwest produce more wheat. I do not begrudge them the money the Government will lend them. If the wheat is planted and we never get the money back, it is, in my judgment, a good investment. About every appropriation made so far has missed the Middle West. I think it is time that you were giving a little consideration to the Mississippi Valley, and unless you adopt my amendment and give us an opportunity at once to get properly tested seed corn for our corn growers at actual cost to the Government, you are doing my people a grave injustice.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON].

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, according to the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture in area production Kansas is 25 per cent short, Oklahoma is 20 per cent short, and Nebraska is 20 per cent short. I come from a congressional district that raises every year 42,000,000 bushels of corn, 11,000,000 bushels of wheat, and 22,000,000 bushels of oats, and yet I have seen the time in my life in which these same farmers that are producing these immense crops were mortgaging their crops to buy seeds. This is a question of shortage and of drought; it is not a question of sectionalism. In 1911 there were some five or six counties in the northwest part of my State that by reason of drought had a shortage of crops. We had a law upon our statute books by which the county commissioners could loan to the farmers and take back a crop mortgage. I want to give you the experience of four counties in 1912. In Perkins County the commissioners loaned $67,000 to 1,292 farmers, and there remains uncollected only $5,700. Meade County loaned $9.000 to 125 farmers, and only $680 remain uncollected. In Pennington County they furnished 8,190 bushels to 117 farmers, and there has not been a dollar lost of the loans in that county. In Butte County $10,000 was loaned to 200 farmers, and there remains only $1,500 uncollected. It is a question of drought in certain sections of the country. You can not produce more winter wheat because the day has passed, but you can produce more spring wheat to feed our armies abroad. Now is the time to do it, and you can do it by granting the provisions of this bill. Out in some of these sections of the Northwest we have had droughts and they are unable to buy seed for cropping purposes. It was stated here by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. EVANS] that there were 20,000 entrymen on homesteads under the homestead laws last year. Many of those people who have taken homesteads went out there without machinery, without teams, without credit, and without money. You can not raise anything the first year; it takes time to open up a farm.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I ask that the gentleman be given a half a minute in order to ask a question. Sixty thousand homesteaders in Montana?

Mr. DILLON. I mean 20,000.

Mr. CANNON. But 60,000 throughout the United States; is that it?

Mr. DILLON. I do not know the number. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. EVANS] made the statement there were 20,000 homesteaders last year in the State of Montana.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, my support of this measure will not be given it on the ground that I anticipate that this measure alone will win the war, but because I believe it is one that will help to win the war, and because it tends to recognize certain conditions that exist which this country must come to realize more clearly before we do win the war. In that winning we must have men, munitions, food, and ships. If we have not come to realize it yet, we will come to realize before this Nation is a year older that the question of a proper supply of food is not a question in which the farmer alone is interested. [Applause.] It is a question in which the whole Nation is interested; it is a question in which our allies are interested. This bill recognizes the idea that it is not improper, but is highly desirable for the Government to cooperate with the producer of foods to increase the food production the same as the Government coperates with the producer of munitions or the producer of ships in order to increase the production thereof. In the production of munitions the Government will furnish a contract by which it agrees to furnish the materials and take the product. Under the finance bill recently passed by the House money will be advanced to such manufacturers. Such contracts give the manufacturer a sure thing that he will get a profit of 10 per cent upon the cost of those munitions. They say, of course the Government is sure of the munitions, and therefore can not lose. Even so. But the Government must stand all the wastage of time and material, and is not sure that after the munitions are produced it will want them. If there is a change of conditions it may not want those particular shells, but it will have them on its hands. Will anybody say that the possibility of such loss must prevent the Government from contracting for the munitions it must have and taking such course as will secure the greatest production? But food is just as great a necessity as ordnance or shells, and the prospect for a serious shortage for us and our allies is now dire and threatening.

These are not days for the slavish following of precedents. We must do the things necessary for the winning of the war. The fact that such things have not been done before, or that in peace times hereafter should not be repeated, should not deter such action by us if the thing proposed strengthens our resources or cements our forces for winning the war. Our present critical necessities must guide us.

The Government must encourage the farmer by needed cooperation in any feasible way to increase the production of food. If through this measure the Government happens to lose the cost of the seed, the farmer has lost his labor, the interest on his investment, and his year's efforts. The serious loss to the Government will be not the seed advance but the crop failure. It is to prevent such crop failure that the Government must take the chance. And if, on the other hand, the Government through that small chance does increase the production of wheat by 100,000 acres or more, the Nation gets its return in that increase for the chance that it has taken. Personally I believe the time is close upon us when a greater share of the chances in food production must be taken by the Government in order to insure sufficient for our absolute necessities. Contracts out and out for production of food are as logical as contracts for production of clothing or ordnance, and are at this moment as necessary to the winning of the war. As yet the country has not realized it. Within a year stern necessity will teach us.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this is a question of favoring the citizens of Montana or North Dakota. The sole question is whether or not we shall set at work a potentially capable set of people who can not without this assistance render the best that is in them. The winter-wheat crop is not what the Government expected, either in acreage or quality. The one opportunity to increase for America and her allies wheat bread, which has been the war bread for thousands of years, is to increase the spring-wheat acreage. It will not affect my district. It will not affect my State, but it will affect several States where there are tens of thousands of homesteaders. And as the Government desires to make most efficient its soldiers in the field it ought to render efficient the farmers wherever they lack the tools or the means.

I am somewhat familiar with the banking situation in the new parts of Montana, and I know the banks have loaned to their utmost capacity. And this is simply a loan you are making in your own interests to increase this wheat product. I have no doubt that if the Government will make these loans its losses will be very slight. I am confident that if we loan these few millions to the farmers of these Northwestern States we are just about as liable to have it paid as the loans we are making, not by millions, but by billions, to our allied friends in other countries. And while I trust the allies, their Governments, and their people, I would rather trust our friends in our neighboring States and expect to get full return from them than from people of whom we know but little. [Applause.]

I desire simply to say this, and ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, that I believe by helping those people to-day we are helping the Government in obtaining that which during the coming year will be more efficacious than powder or shell. [Applause.] There has been some question about where this measure came from, or who are its sponsors. These questions do not strongly appeal to me. It is written in the English language. Its terms are understandable. Its purposes and objects are patriotic. It is recommended by the Agriculture Committee. I have in my service here voted for measures on a basis of their merits rather than their origin. I have heard no valid reason for opposing this bill. I expect to vote for it, because it is not a case of aiding Montana citizens. If that were the case, I should say, "Montana, do your duty." But Montana as a State is not at war. The United States is at war and needs the wheat. We should do our share in producing it.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I am for this bill, first, because one of the great committees of this House, after careful consideration, have reported in favor of it; second, I am in favor of it because it is for the purpose of aiding in the successful carrying on of this war; and I believe, Mr. Chairman, that when we have those facts before us we ought to brush aside every other consideration, whether it affects our own locality or not, and look only to the welfare of the Nation at this hour, when our soldiers upon the battle fields of France to-day are fighting and giving up their lives to save the very Republic that we are here to serve. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill, and a letter I have just sent to the Clerk's desk, which I will ask to have read in my time, indicates very clearly the situation that obtains in regions where there has been drought.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

AMERICAN FALLS, IDAHO, March 8, 1918.

HON. BURTON L. FRENCH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Power County Farm Bureau, with the University of Idaho and the United States Department of Agriculture cooperating, has completed a survey for spring seeding. Over 700 farmers were questioned and individual reports secured covering over 200,000 acres of farm land in Power County. I beg to hand you herewith a partial summary of this survey:

Number of acres now seeded to fall wheat	95,411
Number of acres intended for spring seeding	59,910
Number of farmers who have no seed	269
Number of farmers who have some seed but not enough for requirements	179
Number of acres ready for seeding for which there is no seed in the farmers' hands	26,045
Number of farmers having no feed for work stock	179
Number of acres to be summer fallowed and seeded to wheat in fall of 1918	58,616

From a careful scrutiny of the above you will readily see that a serious condition exists in Power County. This condition is the result of three years of short crops due to drought. Many of the farmers are without funds to even buy the necessities of life, and, while a patriotic sentiment is evident and the people want to do all they can in the way of raising more wheat, the failures of the past three years in certain sections of Power County and the cash system that now prevails in purchase of supplies have put many of them in a position where they must have financial assistance to carry them through another crop period. The banks here are anxious to help but the situation is a little beyond them, and we must have outside help, either from the State or Federal Government. The time is short. The facts are known. The seed wheat is available if funds can be secured to move it. Many of the farmers will be compelled to desert their farms and go to work in the shops or elsewhere unless immediate action is taken to prevent it.

There should be at least $250,000 deposited in the banks of Power County to be loaned to the farmers needing help upon the recommendation of the farm bureau and county council of defense after thorough investigation and inquiry into each individual case.

What do you think can be done?

Very truly, yours,

POWER COUNTY FARM BUREAU,
By JOHN R. WRIGHT, Secretary.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, this letter is from Power County, one of the counties in Idaho that is farmed for the most part by dry-farm methods. The same condition exists in some other belts where dry farming prevails. The letter is clear-cut and tells in striking manner of a situation that this bill will relieve.

Several objections have been made to the bill. It is objected that it is too late to do good. Gentlemen, it is not too late if we act now and if the Senate will immediately ratify the bill.

It is objected that the machinery can not be put into motion that will meet the situation with promptness. The letter that I have had read indicates the careful survey of one county. I have no doubt that somewhat similar surveys have been made in almost every region that is in need of help. Through those surveys and with the aid of the agents of the Agricultural Department and the members of the county councils of national defense we shall have the machinery at hand with which to proceed with the work under the bill.

Again, it is objected that the idea is novel and would be a bad precedent. Do we forget that even in days of peace we have spent millions to fight the boll weevil of Texas? That we have spent millions to aid the sufferers through floods in the Ohio and the Mississippi Valleys? That time and again when disaster has visited one section of our country or another our Nation has helped as a Nation to bear the burden? Well, that is in part what is proposed here. The regions to be benefited are regions that have suffered and where drought has greatly reduced or wiped out the normal yield of grain. In normal times this loss could be borne locally. To-day the price of seed is high, the cost of farm machinery has been tremendously advanced, labor can be had at only a high wage. The farmer who has suffered through drought can not bear the burden alone.

But if this legislation would be justified in days of peace, how much more imperative is it now? The farmer is not the only one interested. The country is interested, the world depends upon food, and as a war emergency this bill should pass.

To provide advances of money for the purchase of grain is only one feature of the bill.

There is another feature. The bill provides that $2,500,000 shall be made available for mobilization and distribution of farm labor; and, as important as is the first feature of the bill, I am inclined to think that this feature is more important.

From all over my district I am receiving letters calling attention to the labor problem. Farmers are working hard to meet the situation, but they are discouraged. Here is a letter from Mr. G. H. Brayton, of Jerome, Idaho, the chairman of the Lincoln County Farm Bureau, from which I quote:

There are many thousands of acres in this county that within the last 10 years have been reclaimed from the desert and put under cultivation, at the cost of from $25 to $50 per acre, that are going to be abandoned during 1918 for the want of labor or on account of the increased cost of the same.

This letter is one of many, and our Government must bend every energy to locate available labor and then to place it. An officer of the Department of Labor told me this morning of 3,000 men in one small city who have been thrown out of employment, but whom the department will place where they will be needed with little delay. He told me of another 200 men whose work terminated on Saturday night and who through the aid of the department went to work the next Monday morning in another city.

I mention these two cases to show that already the Government is a clearing house for labor. It will become more important as such. In one region is a dearth of labor, in another are idle men. Let us provide an agency that will bring the two together, and that, in fact, is what is contemplated in the bill for the farmers of the country.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill. There is one point which I do not believe has been brought out. Now, this is largely for the aid of wheat farmers. It does not cost but a trifle, so to speak, to furnish seed for a field of corn. But an ordinary wheat farmer in the western country may plant from 200 to 300 acres of wheat. It will cost from $300 to $500 to furnish seed for that crop, and when you are in a section where wheat is the chief crop and there has been a failure of wheat the local banks do not have the money to furnish the credit to buy the necessary seed wheat, because in a year when there has been a wheat failure that affects the credit of the local banks. A year ago we passed the food-survey bill. In the form in which that bill passed the House there was a provision which provided that the Secretary of Agriculture might furnish seed to farmers on credit and to any section of the Union when conditions made it necessary.

Mr. GORDON. For cash.

Mr. MORGAN. No, sir; not for cash, but on credit. And when that bill went to the Senate for some reason unknown to me that provision was struck out of the bill. This House never had a right to vote on that proposition. I do not know who is responsible for taking that out. If that provision had been left in the bill whereby the Secretary of Agriculture could have helped the farmers of western Oklahoma and western Kansas and western Nebraska in purchasing seed wheat, we would have had several million additional acres of wheat growing to-day. I am surprised that some gentlemen in this House look upon this bill as merely a special favor to wheat farmers. It would aid some poor farmers, but the chief thing is it would aid the Nation; it would mean more wheat and more bread, and would strengthen us and our allies and aid us to win the war.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, supplementing what my colleague has said with reference to the needs of the farmers of Idaho in the dry-farm sections, I wish to read two telegrams, the first from R. J. Leth, the State seed commissioner, as follows:

BOISE, IDAHO, March 22, 1918.

Hon. ADDISON T. SMITH, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

How soon can relief for farmers unable to purchase seed wheat in northeast Idaho be expected? Wheat in given section too foul to pass State law.

That is, the seed which they have raised in the eastern part of the State can not be used because it is unfit for seed and it is necessary to purchase seed from outside. He says further:

Must buy elsewhere to insure passable seed. Farmers unable to pay cash. Immediate action imperative. Please wire reply.

R. J. LETH,
State Seed Commissioner.

I have also the following telegram from the chairman of the farm market bureau:

BOISE, IDAHO, March 1[illegible], 1918.

Hon. ADDISON T. SMITH, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Two hundred thousand dollars now set aside by Idaho Bankers' Association to loan farmers for buying seed. Two counties alone have already called for $250,000. Five hundred farmers or more would be benefited in wheat alone.

HARVEY ALLRED,
Chairman Farm Market Bureau.

I yield back the balance of my time. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I would like to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, some gentlemen who have spoken in opposition to this bill seemingly do not understand its purpose or the conditions which demand it. The purpose of the legislation proposed is to help the farmers throughout the country, to enable them to produce for the Nation more foodstuffs, to do the very thing that the Nation needs and wants done.

There is no man who has made any study of this question during the past few months but knows that in the Nation to-day and in the world there is a great shortage of wheat. We are not, in passing this legislation, doing more for the farmer than we are doing to-day for other industries. While we are supplying in the lumber regions money to lumbermen and contractors to build railroads and wagon roads, while we are advancing to them money sufficient to meet every expense connected with cutting down and getting out timber for aeroplane construction and shipbuilding, and while in addition we are furnishing enlisted men to do much of this work is it unreasonable to ask the Government to supply credit to needy farmers in the spring wheat growing section of the country to assist them to procure seed wheat so they may put in a maximum crop acreage of spring wheat during the next six or eight weeks? If we are to give credence to the official reports which reach us from our Food Administration and from the food administrators of France and England, an increased production of wheat during the coming season is not much less important than an increased production of aeroplanes and of ships. If the Secretary of Agriculture finds that there is no need to advance this money and no necessity to make these contracts with farmers for increased wheat production, then the money appropriated in the bill will not be used.

I want to say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG] that I quite agree with him in his suggestion that the appropriation here is not large enough. I believe the Secretary of Agriculture should have come into this House with a broad, comprehensive plan for increased food production throughout the Nation. I believe he should have come to Congress and asked for $100,000,000 to be available to the Department of Agriculture to help every agricultural section of the country, and to encourage to the largest possible extent increased food production in every section of the country where the aid of the Agricultural Department would accomplish this. The Secretary of Agriculture has not yet awakened to the real needs of the Nation and of our allies in the war for greater food production this year. Let me say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] that if this bill is soon enacted into law and it results in increasing the production of wheat even a few millions of bushels his constituents in Cleveland may not be so hungry next winter as they are likely to be if there is a shortage of food products in this country this year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. GORDON. Would you lend this money without any security at all?

Mr. NORTON. I would lend it on the best security that can be given, and that is the security and the certain assurance that the farmers to whom it is advanced or loaned will cheerfully and patriotically invest their time, their labor, their skill, their experience, and the use of their lands and all their expensive farm machinery and equipment in an earnest endeavor, combined with nature, to produce for you and other citizens of the Nation more wheat, which is so greatly needed to be ground into flour, which experience has shown is the very staff of the Nation's life.

Mr. GORDON. But you would have to buy them in order to get them to do this. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORTON. That statement is gratuitous. It is unjust and unworthy of the gentleman. The farmers in the spring-wheat growing sections of the country do not have to be bought or subsidized by anyone to cooperate to the very maximum of their power, ability, and resources with the Government in this crucial time of our Nation's life. Without this aid that is being asked for they will do all that lies within their power and resources in the production of food products; with this aid given them they can and will be able to do more for the Nation. They want to do more. The President, the Food Administrator, and the Secretary of Agriculture tell them that more wheat is needed to be produced this year in this country than it appears now will be produced. The food administrators of Belgium, of France, of England, and of Italy are calling upon them to produce this year every possible bushel of wheat that can be produced. In the face of this will anyone in this House vote to deny them this pittance of assistance and encouragement which will enable them to respond more fully to the demands for greater wheat production which is being made upon them by this Nation and by all the nations with which we are allied in this war? In view of the facts presented by the very able chairman of the Committee on Agriculture in support of this measure it seems to me that the measure should have the immediate and unanimous support of this committee and of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] has five minutes remaining.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAGSDALE].

Mr. RAGSDALE. I ask permission to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized for one minute.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I expect to support this measure because it is reported from the great Committee on Agriculture as a military measure, and I believe it to be such. The men at the front can not fight unless they are fed. I do not expect that we shall win this war with "dough," either wheat or financial, but I recognize that both are munitions of war, and because I believe the increased production of wheat is essential in the prosecution of the war and the chairman believes this bill will help in that direction I am for it. Because I believe that the labor engaged in agriculture and every other form of essential war industry is a vital factor in the situation that confronts the country and for the further reason that it is a bill that will affect all labor in the country in the gravest degree I am for it.

I ask unanimous consent to insert certain matter in the RECORD for the information of the House. As most of the Members know, a bill has been reported from the Military Committee which proposes to change fundamentally present law for determining the basis of obtaining the quotas called from draft districts under the draft law. The minority of the committee have directed me to prepare an amendment, which I will offer to that bill. When it is up for consideration before the House I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the change in present law proposed in the new legislation, and the amendment which I expect to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the subject matter indicated in his statement. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT AS TO PROPOSED CHANGES IN THE DRAFT LAW.

S. J. Res. 123, which has passed the Senate and has been reported by the Military Affairs Committee of the House and referred to the House Calendar, providing for certain changes in the present draft law for calling men into the military service under the terms of the act of Congress of May 18, 1917, after defining the act to be amended upon the first page, provides, on page 2 of the resolution as printed, as follows:

"No provision of said act shall prevent the President from calling for immediate military service under regulations heretofore or hereafter prescribed by the President all or part of the persons in any class or classes except those exempt from draft under the provisions of said act, in proportion to the total number of persons placed in such class or classes in the various subdivisions of the States, Territories, and the District of Columbia designated by the President under the terms of said act; or from calling into immediate military service persons classed as skilled experts in industry or agriculture, however classified or wherever residing."

It will be noted that the resolution as reported changes the basis of the quotas from population as it is in existing law and bases it upon the number of persons placed in any class or classes. The amendment proposed by Mr. SHALLENBERGER and which is printed below for the information of Members of the House proposes to base the quotas upon the number of persons liable for military service in the draft districts as determined by the registration of persons so liable when the same has been completed by the War Department.

Amendment as proposed by Mr. SHALLENBERGER: On page 2, line 5, strike out all after the word "act," down to and including the word "act," at the end of line 8, and in line 11, after the period, at the end of the bill, add the following:

"Quotas for the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, or subdivisions thereof, called under the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 18, 1917, shall hereafter be determined in proportion to the total number of persons registered and liable for military service therein, including resident aliens who have waived all claims for exemption, and credit shall be given on its quotas to any State Territory, District, or subdivision thereof for the number of men who have entered the military service of the United States from any such State, Territory, District, or subdivision thereof since April 1, 1917, including members of the National Guard who were in Federal service on that date."

The amendment proposed above continues the provisions of existing law, which allows credit for volunteers, which the Senate resolution, if enacted without amendment, will no longer permit.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I understand that there is just one more minute left of this general debate. I yield that minute to the chairman of the committee, the little giant from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER]. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, in the minute remaining I desire to say that many Members, talking to me personally, have made objection to section 2 of this bill, which authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to secure the voluntary mobilization and distribution of farm labor. No one seems to object to the idea of mobilizing farm labor and utilizing it to the best advantage in this country, but there seems to be some fear that the Secretary of Agriculture might be given the power to go into a State and very largely take from that State labor that should be used in the State. My colleague [Mr. STEVENSON] has prepared an amendment which he has submitted to me, which I think makes it absolutely certain that that kind of thing can not happen. When the bill is read under the five-minute rule for amendment, if my colleague [Mr. STEVENSON] will offer that amendment, as I am sure he will, I shall have no objection to it, and I think that will relieve all objection to this section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired. All time has expired.

By unanimous consent Mr. LANGLEY, Mr. NORTON, Mr. MCFADDEN, Mr. YOUNG of Texas, and Mr. RUBEY were given leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, for the crop of 1918, to make advances or loans to farmers in spring-wheat areas of the United States where he shall find special need for such assistance for the purchase of wheat, oats, and barley for seed purposes, or, when necessary, to procure such seed and sell the same to such farmers. Such advances, loans, or sales shall be made upon such terms and conditions and subject to such regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe, including an agreement by each such farmer to use the seed thus to be obtained by him for the production of grain during the crop season of 1918. A first lien on the crop to be produced from seed obtained through a loan, advance, or sale made under this section shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, be deemed sufficient security therefor. The total amount of such advances, loans, or sales to any one farmer shall not exceed $450. All such advances or loans shall, as far as practicable, be made through the agency of State and National banks. For carrying out the purposes of this section there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $7,500,000, available immediately.

Mr. HELVERING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 1, page 2, the words "spring wheat."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HELVERING offers an amendment, on page 2, line 1, to strike out the words "spring wheat."

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MORGAN. Are we considering the resolution or the bill introduced by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER]?

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is considering the substitute bill, contained in House resolution 281.

Mr. NORTON. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NORTON. Under the rule the bill H. R. 7795 is not being considered. The only bill being considered is the bill that is written in the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The text of the bill is contained in the rule.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, this is an important amendment. I do not know how much time gentlemen may want on it, but I should like to sound out the committee to ascertain how much time is desired on this one amendment to strike out the words "spring wheat."

I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this pending amendment may be closed in 15 minutes.

Mr. MORGAN. This is a matter about which there is a great deal of controversy.

Mr. LEVER. At the request of gentlemen around me, I will modify my request and ask unanimous consent that debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

Mr. MORGAN. I hope the gentleman will not press that.

Mr. LEVER. Make it 45 minutes, then.

Mr. CANNON. There has been no discussion on this. It is too early to fix a limit.

Mr. ROBBINS. Some members of the committee have talked two or three times. I want five minutes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I would like five minutes.

Mr. LEVER. I will modify my request by asking that the debate on this pending amendment shall close in 30 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. There has been no consideration of the pending amendment. Let it run a while and see.

Mr. LEVER. I will modify my request further by asking unanimous consent that debate on this pending amendment, the importance of which I recognize, shall close in 30 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Does that cover other amendments?

Mr. LEVER. No; just this amendment.

Mr. NORTON. There has been no debate on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The request of the gentleman from South Carolina is made pending the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HELVERING], who is entitled to the floor for five minutes. Will the gentleman from South Carolina please state his request?

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent that debate on the pending amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HELVERING] may close in 30 minutes.

Mr. MAPES. Who is to control the time?

Mr. BAER. How is the time to be controlled?

Mr. LEVER. The Chair to control the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment close in 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MORGAN. I object.

Mr. HELVERING. Mr. Chairman, do I understand that we are considering the bill as printed or the resolution?

The CHAIRMAN. House resolution 281, reported by the Committee on Rules, contains the bill that is under consideration.

Mr. HELVERING. Therefore my statement of the page and line where my amendment occurs is correct?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. HELVERING. Mr. Chairman, my object in offering this amendment is to make available this fund for the purpose of securing greater production of cereals necessary for the feeding of the people of this country. I realize that the greater part of this money undoubtedly will be used in the spring-wheat area, yet oats and barley as well as wheat are very necessary to be produced. It is very necessary that they be produced at this time.

There are large areas where spring wheat is not raised where this money might be used to advantage. I do not expect that any appreciable amount of money expended under the first provision of this bill will be expended in my State, yet I believe that if it becomes important that the people of that State may be furnished seed to produce oats, barley, or wheat, not being in the spring-wheat area, they should be given the same privilege as people who live in the spring-wheat area. Therefore I make the motion to strike out the words "spring wheat," so that this bill will provide that the loans may be made to the farmers in any area of the United States when the Secretary of Agriculture shall find special need for furnishing seed for agricultural purposes. I realize that it is necessary to stimulate production. I believe that without the necessary increase in production in this country one of the most important factors in winning the war will be eliminated; that is, the proper furnishing of foods for our people. I would like to see this bill with this amendment, and such other amendments as may be offered that the House decides will improve the bill, adopted at an early time.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELVERING. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Would the gentleman object to modifying his amendment so as to strike out the word "areas"? That would provide wherever you can find a farmer that can make good or who ought to be given a chance, irrespective of an investigation, whether there is an area or not.

Mr. HELVERING. I would have no objection to that, except that I understand the department in administering this act wants it to be in areas sufficient to justify the Secretary of Agriculture in considering it. I do not think the Secretary would be justified in considering an isolated case of one farmer.

Mr. RAKER. Suppose a man furnishes the security, ought he not to have the right to have oats and barley for seed the same as those where there is a large area that is easily accessible?

Mr. HELVERING. I think the gentleman is correct, but whether it would be logical or practical I do not know.

Mr. RAKER. The Secretary is not going to send an expert to determine in advance whether he is going to make the loan, is he?

Mr. HELVERING. I do not know.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELVERING. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. In the confusion I could not understand the gentleman's amendment. Does his amendment mean that this relief is applicable to any farmer in any part of the State that needs the relief?

Mr. HELVERING. Yes; in any part of the United States. Everyone concedes the necessity for increased production. There is no question about that. I do not think there is a man in the House who questions the advisability of facilitating production if we can possibly do it, but I believe this should be universal. Therefore I submit to your fair consideration that the Secretary of Agriculture should be allowed to furnish this help at any place in the United States where he thinks it is necessary.

From all sides we hear the cry that there is an urgent need for an increase in our wheat production, and wheat is needed not alone by our men in the Army and by the civilian population at home, but it is of vital necessity to the soldiers and to the civilians who are united with us in a gigantic struggle against a common enemy.

The resolution now before us seeks to increase production. It seeks to enable us to grow needed crops where the chances are that no crops will be grown unless this Congress takes action. The individual farmer may have all of the patriotism in the world, and he may be as anxious as you and I are to do his full share in behalf of the country, but the individual farmer is powerless if he has only the land and lacks the means to secure the seed and the labor to attend to the planting, to the care, and to the harvesting of a crop.

The need of seed on the part of those who are unable to buy it, either because of lack of finance or lack of supply, is a need which we should take care of now. Every agency of this Government should be utilized in seeing to it that the supply shall meet every demand, and if we can be so considerate of "big business" that we can afford to make financial advances on contracts for war material, surely we can show equal consideration for the little fellow by making a limited advance to enable him to utilize available land in the production of crops which are absolutely necessary in the successful conduct of the war.

But it will be a waste of money and a waste of our resources if we merely provide seed and make it impossible for the farmers to take care of the crop. I have been and am a firm believer in the selective draft as the fairest and the best method of raising an army; but in the operation of that law it is certain that essential farm labor will be taken. We know that this has been done, and no matter how careful we may be in administering the law hereafter along the lines now laid down, and I want to stop long enough to say that the method now adopted should have been put in force at the start, nevertheless what has already been done is certain to curtail production unless we extend needed aid in legislation here.

And what is it that we are asked to do? Merely to give authorization for the voluntary mobilization of farm labor and its distribution, to the end that essential farming activities may be aided. In order to do this we will have to advance railroad fares and other traveling expenses, but rules and regulations can be made so that this expense will be a loan and not a gift, and in the end it will not be a direct charge upon the Treasury.

Gentlemen, this is cheap insurance which we are called upon to buy. It is the insuring of our future agricultural production, and without that production we will paralyze all of our war work. The farmers of the country are not asking this Congress for charity. They have listened to our plea that an increase of production is necessary in order to win this war. They have given heed to that plea, and they are behind our Army and our Navy prepared to do everything that Americans can do to hold up the hands of the fighting forces and to supply the things which are so urgently called for. But they call attention to their limitations, physical limitations, for there can be no limitation of their spirit of patriotism or desire to help, and they ask us to aid them in securing the seed and the labor, without which they can do nothing. It is for us to answer them by our votes here and show to them that we will do all that human effort can do to aid them in this work, and thus with our cooperation they will be able to do their full part in the work of winning this war and in preserving all which America holds dear.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection; and the Clerk again reported the Helvering amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer to that amendment in the way of a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WINGO: Page 2, line 1, strike out the words "in spring-wheat areas."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest to the members of the committee that if they will send to the Clerk's desk and obtain a copy of House resolution 281, reported by the Committee on Rules, they will find therein the bill now being considered by the committee.

Mr. FERRIS. The clerks are distributing H. R. 7795, and the amendments do not fit.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. When this bill is passed and has been sent over to the Senate, will it be in the form of House resolution 281 or as H. R. 7795?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it will be sent as H. R. 7795.

Mr. BARKLEY. Then ought we not to consider H. R. 7795, as amended by the Committee on Agriculture? In offering amendments it strikes me they ought to be offered to the text of the bill as reported by the committee. The rule merely provided for considering the substitute, and the fact that it is set out fully in the rule does not change the rule that amendments ought to be offered to the bill as reported by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that amendments should be offered to H. R. 7795.

Mr. HELVERING. In that case I would have to modify my amendment and make it apply to line 15, page 3, of H. R. 7795.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the modification will be so made.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, the only difference between my amendment and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HELVERING] is that he wants to limit this by areas. My amendment, if adopted, would make the text read "to farmers of the United States." Then it would be available to any farmer anywhere in the United States, ragardless of whether he was in a drought area or otherwise.

Mr. CANNON. Has the gentleman's amendment been reported?

Mr. WINGO. Yes. It is to line 16, on page 3, of the bill we are now considering. I will say that I am going to vote for this bill, although I do not think it is absolutely necessary, and I shall only vote for it because it is contended by some gentlemen that in their districts there are isolated cases where some farmers, by reason of some extraordinary distress or by reason of lack of ordinary credit facilities, as in homestead areas, for illustration, who can not get the ordinary accommodations now available to farmers in other parts of the country.

That they can not get the benefit of the provisions of the Federal reserve act, that they can not get the benefit of the provision which has been included in one of the appropriation bills by which the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to spend millions for seed and sell them to farmers at cost. I am going to vote for it, because I can recognize there are some instances here and there of a peculiar character which the Secretary, through proper agencies, could give relief under this bill where he finds it. But, most of all, I am in favor of my amendment because the legislation is general and not sectional. Now, I am not going to vote for the bill for the same reason that 90 per cent of the gentlemen are going to vote for it. I regret argument made upon this floor by which continually the farmer is made, or tried to be made, to believe that we are taking care of everybody else under the sun except the farmer. There is a propaganda going over this country, as I stated the other day, to mislead the farmer into the belief that we are granting relief to everybody and we are not doing anything for him. I repeat what I said then. When we passed the Federal reserve act he was given better provision for his paper upon longer terms than the manufacturer or the merchant. In addition to that, we passed the farm-loan act to take care of his long-time capital needs. In one of the appropriation bills we gave to the Secretary of Agriculture millions of dollars to spend on seeds that may be needed to supply the farmers. In the great Agricultural appropriation bill, which the able gentleman from South Carolina brings into the House every session, we make extraordinary provisions, and there is not a desire by any man in this House, whether coming from a city district or a farming district, to neglect the farmer of the United States or not to do anything that is necessary, proper, practicable, and feasible to try to build up the farming industry of this country, and I, for one, decry the propaganda that is going around trying to make the farmer believe that we are not making earnest efforts to meet his needs.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following substitute for the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, has debate been exhausted on this amendment? The substitute is not in order until the end of the 20 minutes' debate.

Mr. MORGAN. There is no time limit fixed.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Oklahoma will withhold until the pending amendment is disposed of——

Mr. MORGAN. But this is a substitute for the pending amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. My amendment is an amendment in the nature of a substitute and the gentleman can not offer a substitute for a substitute.

Mr. MORGAN. I offered it as a substitute for the amendment, and I understood the gentleman to offer his amendment as an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WINGO. I beg pardon; I offered it as an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. STAFFORD. May we have the amendment reported to see whether it is in order or not?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MORGAN: Page 3, line 15, after the word "eighteen," insert the following words: "and nineteen and nineteen"; and in line 15 strike out the word "spring"; and in line 25 insert, after the word "eighteen," the following words: "and nineteen and nineteen."

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of order that the amendment is not a substitute nor an amendment to a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The point or order is sustained.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, what is the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say, as far as the Chair is concerned, every effort will be exerted to see that every proposition that is in order is fairly considered, and the fact that the Chair ruled on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma simply means that it is not in order at this time.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for information. I have a right to know what the point of order against my substitute is. I wanted to know upon what grounds the gentleman raised the point or order, and I did not get the information.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have already stated, I regret the gentleman did not hear me, that the gentleman's amendment was not an amendment to a substitute. If the gentleman from Arkansas offers his amendment as a substitute, it is in order to offer an amendment to the substitute. There are four processes in different parliamentary stages that are all well known. An amendment may be offered as an amendment to that amendment; a substitute to the principal amendment, and an amendment to the substitute. Now, the gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment——

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not; I am addressing the Chair by the privilege of the Chair. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment. The gentleman from Arkansas offers, as he states, a substitute to the amendment. Now, it is in order to offer either an amendment to the original amendment of the gentleman from Kansas or an amendment to the substitute, but the amendment that is offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma is not either.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment as a substitute for both the amendments. Now, I should think that would be in order. That is the way I offered it.

The CHAIRMAN. For the reasons stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin, the Chair was compelled to hold that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma was not in order at this stage of the proceedings. The Chair will endeavor to deal with every proposition as presented to the committee and see that it is acted upon at some stage of the proceedings.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer my amendment, then, to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HELVERING]—an amendment to his amendment.

Mr. CANNON. That is not in order. I make the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. I make the point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN The Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer it as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order it is not germane to that amendment at all. The gentleman will get his time later on on this proposition.

Mr. MORGAN. I will, if I insist on it, I suppose.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on the pending amendments be closed in five minutes.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. LEVER. I move that the debate on the pending amendments be closed in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that debate on the pending amendments close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the purport of the amendments of the gentleman from Kansas and the gentleman from Arkansas is, in effect, to spread the area over which these purchases and advances may be made. Now, I want to say very frankly to the committee that if either of these amendments prevail I shall vote against this bill. The Committee on Agriculture did not bring this bill in here as a "pork-barrel" proposition. We brought it upon the theory that there was a section of the country, limited in area, where by doing certain things we might increase the acreage in wheat by 3,000,000 acres.

Mr. WILSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. LEVER. I can not yield.

Now, these gentlemen intend to take the bridle off. And while we in South Carolina raise a very limited amount of wheat, my South Carolina farmer will be coming here, probably, to ask for his share of the "swill." The Committee on Agriculture does not regard this appropriation as "swill" at all. We look upon it as something vital in the winning of this war, and if I thought that this House, thinking only of local conditions, was going to run away with this bill to the extent of taking the bridle off, increasing these appropriations regardlessly and only upon the theory that "my State wants its share," I would not be a party to that kind of legislation.

I want to beg the members of this committee as earnestly as I can to vote down these amendments, because it puts the Congress of the United States in an attitude which it can not afford to assume in the eyes of patriotic people in this country. I had hoped that these amendments would not be offered. I had hoped it for the reason that I know how strongly men feel when they have got to defend themselves in their district against the fact that they did not get "their share of it." Gentlemen, there is not any "share-of-it" proposition in this bill. [Applause.] If I thought there was, I would vote against it if I never got another vote in my district for Congress or any other position. I want to beg the men here to stand with the committee and limit this so that they can go to their constituents feeling that this is not a grab-bag proposition, but that it was regarded by the Congress of the United States as a vital proposition in the winning of this war. Will you do it? I hope you will. [Applause.]

Mr. BARKLEY. If this bill was limited to furnishing seed alone I might agree with the gentleman, but what reason is there for furnishing oats and barley seed to this area of spring wheat?

Mr. LEVER. For the reason that this area was struck by a drought and for the further reason that there is no more speculative section for farm purposes in the world than this country, and for the further reason that we can now at this moment sow oats and barley in this area. You can not do it practically anywhere else and get the best yield.

Mr. BLAND. The administration of this law, after all, is left to the Secretary of Agriculture, is it not?

Mr. LEVER. That is very true. But let me say this: I think this House has gone exceedingly far in trusting administrative officers. Are we not in a position to say how far we ought to go and how far we do not want to go in this matter?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes?

Mr. CANNON. There is another amendment in the way of a substitute. Debate is not closed on the substitute to the amendment.

Mr. LEVER. There is no substitute pending.

Mr. CANNON. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. LEVER. If the Chair will permit, I think I can straighten the situation out. My motion was to close debate on the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas and the gentleman from Arkansas, and that was carried.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; although I have not the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. Do I understand that to those gentlemen in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas all debate is cut off and that we have no time on that proposition?

Mr. LEVER. The committee did that. I was not responsible.

Mr. MORGAN. The gentleman made the motion.

Mr VENABLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute in order to ask a question.

Mr. LEVER. I am satisfied that the gentleman will get opportunity to interrogate me a little later on this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee voted to close debate on the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas and the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas.

The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out the last word of the substitute for the second amendment.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VENABLE. Does the fact that the House has voted to close debate in five minutes preclude me from asking for time by unanimous consent of the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. LEVER. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the debate on these two amendments is closed.

Mr. CANNON. But there is a substitute pending for the second amendment.

Mr. LEVER. A point of order was sustained on that. Later I made a point of order and it was sustained.

Mr. CANNON. Let us appeal to the Clerk and see what is pending.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may proceed for five minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VENABLE] for one minute.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I couple with that a request to speak for five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Let us find out the status at the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HELVERING], and also the amendment in the way of a substitute offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HELVERING: Page 3, line 16, strike out the words "spring wheat."

Substitute offered by Mr. WINGO: Page 3, line 16, strike out the words "in spring-wheat areas."

Mr. HELVERING. Upon those two amendments the debate was closed, as I understand, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the action of the House.

Mr. CANNON. Was it offered by way of a substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. It was.

Mr. BARKLEY. The gentleman from Illinois can amend the substitute by striking out the last word.

Mr. CANNON. That is what I propose to do. Does all debate close upon the substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no desire to cut off anyone, but the Chair has no control over the action of the House.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois will indulge me for a moment, I think the gentleman from Illinois realizes that I am endeavoring and trying to close the debate on these amendments which affect this particular proposition, not on the section.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. And the debate has been closed on the amendments and the substitute for the amendment. All debate has been closed on those. If the gentleman has an amendment which goes to one of these, I do not see how it could be in order because it would be a substitute, because there is a substitute pending, unless it might be an amendment to the substitute.

Mr. CANNON. I offer a pro forma amendment. The debate was not shut off by unanimous consent, as I understand it, to the substitute?

Mr. LEVER. The Chair differs, and I differ with the gentleman myself. The debate was closed on the amendment and the substitute, as I understand it.

Mr. SNELL. Regular order!

Mr. CANNON. This is a vital amendment, and I do not think the committee understands it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Is there any amendment pending to the substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. Not that the Chair knows of.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Then an amendment to the substitute is in order. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] shall have five minutes, within which to offer an amendment to the substitute and proceed in that time to discuss the same. That is in order. I ask unanimous consent that he shall have five minutes within which to offer an amendment to the substitute and discuss the same.

Mr. CANNON. I take it for five minutes; but I think your first proposition is correct, that an amendment to the substitute is in order.

Mr. LEVER. But the point is that the debate has been closed.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Even if the matter in debate has been closed, it is perfectly competent for this body, by unanimous consent, to give the gentleman from Illinois five minutes or any other time it chooses. The fact that the debate has been closed does not cut off the right from this body by unanimous consent to extend time. Of course, it is competent to anybody to object.

Mr. VENABLE. Does that apply to the gentleman from Mississippi as well as to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It applies to everybody.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] may have five minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VENABLE] five minutes and the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] five minutes.

Mr. SNELL. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The regular order is to put my request that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] may have five minutes in which to offer an amendment to the substitute and discuss the same. That is the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] may have five minutes in which to offer a substitute and discuss it. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois for five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have sought recognition, but did not receive it, for which I have no complaint, because the members of a committee are always entitled to preference in the consideration of a bill, and, for that matter, preference in opportunity to offer amendments, and so forth. But I do want to talk a little about this bill. I do not know that I can say in five minutes what I want to say. But what is this proposition? This bill proposes at the expense of the United States Treasury to furnish wheat, oats, and barley for seed in spring-wheat territory for the crop of 1918.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. CANNON. I will have to ask for a further extension of time. I want to be courteous, and I will be. I think the House will give me five minutes more.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. What is "the spring-wheat district"? That is what I want to know. What is "a spring-wheat district," "a spring-wheat area"?

Mr. CANNON. I suppose that is a matter of fact to be ascertained. I have an idea what it is, and the gentleman has an idea.

Now, the amendment to this bill is to make this appropriation available everywhere in the United States for these three favored articles—wheat, barley, and oats—for seed. I think I have it right, have I not?

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Now, then, I want to call the attention of the committee to what has been done and what is the necessity for this appropriation. Nearly a year ago, under the leadership of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], $2,500,000 was appropriated for use anywhere in the country for seed. I think I am correct in that. Now, that is a revolving fund. It has not been expended, except in part. Now, $4,000,000 is appropriated in the urgent deficiency bill for the same purpose, a revolving fund, to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture. He goes to work, no doubt, and has organized and ascertained about the wants of the different parts of the country. Now, what is the use of appropriating this $10,000,000?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. If I can get a little more time, I have no objection to yielding.

Mr. LEVER. I just want to ask a question.

Mr. CANNON. All right.

Mr. HELVERING. The gentleman says these appropriations were made under the direction of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. CANNON. The first one was. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture advocated both of them.

Mr. HELVERING. And they were general in their nature—all over the country.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. HELVERING. And they were not pork barrel then, were they?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no. They covered the whole country.

Mr. Chairman, I was a pioneer boy. I know something about the hardships of pioneering. I know the want of markets. I know it was worth a man's life to clear 80 acres of land of that heavy timber in the Wabash country. There never was better manhood in the same number of people on this earth than among the pioneers in the settlement of the West. They had good manhood. They never were debauched by getting something for nothing. They drank sassafras tea and spicewood tea, and ate corn bread, and lived in lean-tos, and they raised strong, healthy children, and they cut down the forest and founded a civilization. You may say, "Oh, they have had such droughts out in this western country!" Why, good God, they had too much rain in the early spring all over the northern section of the corn belt. But they planted the corn. There was not one-quarter of a crop raised in Michigan. There was not much of a crop raised in Minnesota or in northern Illinois. The corn was of poor quality and much of it of little value, and down in central Illinois, the best corn country on earth, 25 per cent of the corn was soft, and they could not make alcohol or whisky or beer out of it. The bad season came, and we could not get transportation, and the corn spoiled. Now let us be honest with each other. Is it necessary to relieve Montana? Then let us relieve her. There is plenty of money to relieve Montana, to furnish seed wheat, barley, and oats.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. NORTON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

Mr. CANNON. I do not think I shall talk again about this bill. I should like really to have 10 minutes.

Mr. NORTON. I make the request for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Now, what is the fact? Does Minnesota want anything from this proposed legislation? No. I speak with assured certainty. Does Michigan want anything? No. Does Wisconsin want anything? No. Does North Dakota want anything? No. Does South Dakota? No. Now, that is as far as I can go, but I have good authority so far as I have gone. Then there is by this bill an additional $10,000,000 to be spent for seed wheat, oats, and barley for Montana and Idaho—anything else?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. North Dakota.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, North Dakota is cared for.

Mr. FERRIS. How?

Mr. CANNON. By an act of the legislature, and the money is substantially expended. I asked a North Dakotan about it, and he said North Dakota was cared for by action of their legislature. The same is true of South Dakota. I will tell you about this if you want to know. This is a competition among some of our people in two or three States, who are scared to death about this new organization that believes the farmers never get anything. It is farming the farmers for the benefit of self-constituted champions of the farmer for the political benefit of the champions. That is the truth about it. [Applause and laughter.] There is a revolving fund for the Secretary of Agriculture, with his force all organized, $2,500,000 for a year. The money is not all spent. It is a revolving fund. It is back there still—$2,500,000, and $4,000,000 added by the vote of this House for the same purpose, a revolving fund. Yet we say, "The poor farmer!" My God, do you know that one-third of the farmers in this country own more than one-third of the wealth of the country? I am speaking by the book, of things whereof I know, if there is any truth in figures and statistics.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; I will; but make it short.

Mr. NORTON. Does the gentleman distinguish any difference between the appropriation of the $2,500,000 that he speaks of and the $4,000,000 which provides for the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase seed and sell for cash, and this bill which authorizes him to make advances on time? Does the gentleman see any difference between those two propositions?

Mr. CANNON. That is a foolish question. If you want to give it to these people, most of those who want these advances can get them now. Nine-tenths of them can get them now.

Mr. NORTON. What are you going to do with the other tenth?

Mr. CANNON. If you want to pauperize nine-tenths of the people, or nineteen-twentieths of the people, give them something for nothing. [Applause.] You can increase the paupers. Oh, I defend the pioneer. I was one of the pioneers, from the time I was 4 years old until I grew up to manhood. They have got good stuff out West. I defend them against political demagoguery. [Applause.] Who introduced the bill? Why, our friend, wonderfully bright, wonderfully handsome. Why, good God, he does not belong to the Democratic Party. He does not belong to the Republican Party, although he sits on our side of the House. He introduced a $50,000,000 bill. And so we go, competing with him and others like him. He is an estimable gentleman. Do not take it that I am speaking disrespectfully of him. I am calling by their right names political policies that I think are vicious. That is what I am doing. You appropriated $20,000,000,000 in the last session of Congress—appropriations and authorizations. Now you are running at railroad speed, appropriating, appropriating, with $4,000,000,000 to be collected by taxation by the 1st of July next, and the taxation comes from all sections of the country. Another liberty loan is just being started. Our boys are in the trenches. Eight hundred and forty million dollars for aeroplanes. It is claimed—God knows whether it is true or not; I do not know—that it has not resulted in aeroplanes. I am not saying that it has not so resulted. But here you come, with all these things coming upon us, with insurance of $10,000 for every soldier at a nominal rate. That is all right. I voted for it. I believe in it. We doubled their pay. I voted for it. I believed in that.

Good God! Let us be practical, and let us stop playing these little peanut politics—everybody getting up and crying, "I am going to stand by the farmer; oh, yes!" Mr. Chairman, I have an agricultural district. Two-thirds of my district are farmers. I was a farmer when I was a boy myself.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Does the gentleman distinguish between the farmers living in Illinois, all of whom are probably wealthy, and homesteaders on the public domain?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the homesteader, in my judgment, is not asking for this, if it is a gift. I do not believe there is a homesteader in Montana, if he were to raise wheat and had to borrow the seed, who could not get that seed from the citizens of Montana or the Department of Agriculture if he possessed good manhood. You do not want to go through the form of giving something to somebody who will not utilize it. I am not speaking harshly of the people of Montana. I have every sympathy with them and with everyone else. A homesteader! Do you think he would want $450 for seed wheat? A man settles on a homestead of 160 acres, and does he want $450 for seed wheat?

I want to say something further about this.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I wish the gentleman would say something about these spring-wheat areas, including wheat and oats and barley.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, wheat and oats and barley are very important; cotton is very important; everything is very important that is raised on the farm. What I want to speak about is the provision in this bill that not to exceed $100,000 shall be expended for the payment of administrative expenses. Mr. Chairman, the man in the trench, the man in the Army, the man on the railway, the man in the mine, the farmer on the farm, and the pioneer doing his part are all doing well; but, good heavens, think of the men whom you see in Washington, think of the men whom you see in New York, whom you see in Illinois, whom you see all over the country who are rushing here wanting to be employed to do something for the Government other than to go to war. If you keep on you will have so many people here and elsewhere employed by the Government that you will not have anybody to draft or to enlist. You will have less people to farm, you will have less people to build ships. The greatest industry that I know of is the industry that brings them here. The greatest industry that I know of is this, and it brings the least profit to the Government. Let us keep our heads, gentlemen. If the $4,000,000 plus the two and a half million dollars' revolving fund are not enough now, when the spring planting commences in March in the spring-wheat belt, and March is almost over and April upon us, and the spring wheat is probably in large part in the ground, then what is to become of us or the farmers?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes in connection with that.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon these two amendments and the substitute close at the end of 15 minutes, 5 minutes to be occupied by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VENABLE], 5 minutes by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN], and, if I deem it necessary, 5 minutes by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Chairman, when the chairman of the committee was addressing the committee a few moments ago he made an appeal to the House to vote down the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HELVERING] upon the ground that this was not a "pork-barrel" bill, and in his remarks he stated that he thought we had gone far enough in conferring general powers on the Secretary of Agriculture in the disbursement of these funds. Yet in this bill, whose benefits are confined to a small area of the country, the gentleman himself and his committee, presumptively with his approval, has brought out a bill that provides for the laying out of $7,500,000 under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall promulgate, himself giving the very widest and amplest powers conceivable.

In addition to this it is provided that a lien upon the crop shall be considered sufficient security, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture. What is your lien? Under that language it is nothing. As far as the legal effect of it is concerned, your advances to these farmers are gifts unless the farmer wishes to pay them back or has property out of which a judgment can be satisfied. Why? Because your act does not provide for a positive lien. This crop will pass into the hands of purchasers free from the incumbrance of such a lien unless you specifically provide that the lien shall follow the crop into the hands of purchasers, which would defeat the very purpose of the bill. So there is only one way to enforce your security, and that is for the Government to demand payment before the sale of the crop, and if not paid, to enforce the lien; and there is no man here who believes that the Government will do any such thing. As a legal proposition, your provision for a so-called lien is without any effect, and as a practical proposition, in my opinion your bill provides, in substance, that the Secretary of Agriculture, if he will—and it is all left to him, though the committee is not in favor of conferring broad powers—may advance this money to the tune of $7,500,000 without a bit of security on earth.

Is that all? No. This bill proposes furthermore to constitute your Secretary of Agriculture a labor agent to go out in all the sections of the country and drum up labor to go to work in the planting and harvesting of this wheat crop. They will come to the South, they will come to the East, to the North, and West with the boys gone from the farms into the Army, with your farm labor—I know it is true of the South, and I judge it is true in other parts of the country—gone to the great manufacturing centers to take advantage of the high wages. There is not a farming section of the United States that has enough labor now, and yet you are going practically to direct your Secretary of Agriculture to constitute himself a labor agent to go into sections of the country already depleted of labor and offer the inducement of railroad fare to take away their labor to this favored section of the country. And I prophesy what will be the result. You will have the greatest wave of discontent, the greatest wave of revolt against this thing all over the country that you ever saw. Every day I get letters from the South stating that the conditions are such that while the Government is calling upon the farmer to increase production that he can not do it because the boys are gone and the negroes that constitute the great body of labor in the South have gone to the industrial centers in the East.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VENABLE. I would ask for one minute more in order to finish the sentence.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Would the Secretary of Agriculture in drumming up labor run into competition with the Secretary of Labor, also drumming up labor for the same purpose?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request for one minute? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. VENABLE. The answer to that is that when you provide $7,500,000 to plant and harvest a particular crop in a particular section of the country and couple with that an appropriation to get labor, it is tantamount to a direction that the Secretary of Agriculture must go out and get this labor and plant and reap that particular crop.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. While the Secretary of Labor is also drumming up labor.

Mr. VENABLE. Not farm labor. They have not done it, and I hope will not do it. But you are directing—you are taking all discretion from the Secretary of Agriculture——

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman from Mississippi yield?

Mr. VENABLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. RUBEY. Does not the gentleman know that the Secretary of Labor and the Secretary of Agriculture together for the last eight months have been doing this very thing, and that the President of the United States gave to them $800,000 from the sum which was given to him for the purpose of mobilizing labor, and they have been doing that all last summer?

Mr. VENABLE. Going into rural sections to get farm labor?

Mr. RUBEY. Doing the same thing we are authorizing to be done here.

Mr. VENABLE. Does the gentleman mean to say they are going to the rural sections of this country to get farm labor?

Mr. RUBEY. No; and I do not mean to say they will do it under this bill.

Mr. VENABLE. I do.

Mr. RUBEY. They will not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Chairman, I say that the Secretary of Agriculture must necessarily go to the farming sections to get farm labor for the planting and reaping of this proposed crop in the favored section of the West for the reason that he must go either to the country or to the cities. Those in the cities who are familiar with or who will engage in farm labor are those who have left the country or rural communities because they have been attracted by the high wages paid in industrial trades and manufacturing plants. They have good places paying high wages. No one is idle who wishes to work. Do the gentlemen of this committee think that the wages offered by these wheat farmers in the spring-wheat area will be so attractive as to induce men who have already rejected similar wages to take more attractive places in the cities to again go to the country? Certainly not. Perforce, then, the Secretary of Agriculture must get his labor supply from those already in the country engaged in farm labor, and this is sought to be done by offering free transportation. If this reasoning be true, it comes to this: That the Secretary of Agriculture is practically directed to go into the farming communities of the country, already depleted of necessary labor, and induce this labor by the attraction of free transportation and the allurements of a promised land where homestead is possible, to leave other sections of the country to work for farmers of the so-called spring-wheat area who are, according to the confession of this bill, unable to obtain credit from local business men or financial institutions to the extent of the price of their seed wheat.

In every agricultural section of the country there is a scarcity of labor. The farmer boys have been taken into the Army. Thousands have gone to the cities to work in industrial plants, attracted there by the high wages offered.

Now, it is suggested to have the Government engage in the business of taking away the labor that remains in order to provide for one particular section of the country.

The growing of wheat is necessary. So is the growing of corn. We must eat either wheat or corn or some other substitute. It is necessary that corn be grown in order that we may substitute it for wheat so that the wheat may be sent abroad. What profits it if to grow wheat we destroy corn so that we are forced to eat the wheat and so will have none to sent abroad? Are we any better off than if we had not grown the wheat?

But the crass injustice of the thing! Here it is proposed to send the Government out on a mission of taking away the little labor that is left to the farmers of other sections of the country, producing products just as essential as wheat. Corn is as essential as wheat because it substitutes for wheat that we send abroad. Cotton is essential because it is necessary if we fight this war at all. But more than this. Contrary to all theories heretofore held, it is proposed and the Secretary of Agriculture is practically instructed to advance $450 to every man who says that he intends to plant wheat and whose standing in the community is such that his neighbors will not trust him for this amount. In short, lack of financial credit is made a sine qua non of governmental relief and the bill is careful to provide that no security may be taken if the Secretary of Agriculture so desires. What security is there that the man who gets the money will plant wheat? What security is there that he will not invest in oil of joy which maketh temporarily glad the heart of man and converteth him temporarily into an ass?

These proposed borrowers admittedly can not get credit in their local communities, else why the necessity of Government aid? If without credit, it must be because they either lack character or assets out of which a judgment can be enforced. If such is their condition, what security can the Government take which will insure either the planting of the crop, the repayment of the loan, or the payment of simply interest on the debt, which, by the way, a generous committee does not provide for in the bill?

It has been asked, What difference, if any, exists between this proposed gift and the appropriation for the purchase of seed carried in a former bill? I will answer, The greatest difference in the world.

The former bill provided for the purchase of seed by the Government which was to be sold to the farmer. This provides for the gift of seed, not for the purpose of introducing improved varieties in which the whole country will benefit, but any old seed for the purpose of getting a crop. In the first bill the Government furnishes a facility for getting a thing—a perfectly legitimate function. In the second the Government practically makes a gift. As I see it it is proper for the Government to make available a source of supply without loss to the Government and without taxing the citizens for the benefit of a particular class, furnishing facilities, in other words, for the doing of a thing. As I see it it is not proper to make a gift such as is proposed in this bill, as I construe it.

My colleague, Mr. JOHNSON, interpolated a remark the significance of which was that this bill proposed to have the Secretary of Agriculture go out in the country and solicit farm labor, while the Secretary of Labor was soliciting labor for other purposes, thus presenting the admirable spectacle of departments of Government competing with one another, with the Secretary of Agriculture having the advantage of a fund for holding forth the inducement of free transportation to the laborer that he may go out West and work for a farmer who can not get credit for enough money to buy his seed. I trust that this suggestion by my colleague of the effect of this bill will receive consideration at the hands of this committee.

I am neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet, but permit me to say to gentlemen of the committee who live in sections of the country other than the so-called spring-wheat belt, that when the Government in the guise of a labor agent comes into your communities where labor on the farms is already much too scarce, offering inducements of free transportation, appealing to the wanderlust in men, urging them to go to unseen countries, even though it be to work for men who admittedly can not raise $450 or less, this measure is destined to be about as popular as a polecat at a nigger camp meeting, and its supporters will not be altogether in the odor of sancity.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate very much the courtesy extended to me by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture in having this five minutes, although taking the opposite view from that which he takes. We all love the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], and we have confidence in him and in his leadership. I regret that I can not follow him now and approve the position he takes on this bill. I am in favor of striking out this word "spring," so that the bill will not be confined to the spring-wheat area. I am in favor of making this a general proposition that will apply to Maine, Texas, California, or to Virginia, or every other State, and leave it to the Secretary of Agriculture to determine where it is necessary to use these funds or where these funds can be used to best advantage. That would make it a national proposition. In this form, in my judgment, it would be more acceptable to the people of the United States. In its present form it is sectional. Now, then, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture said, as I understood him, that he would vote against this bill if the word "spring" were stricken out and this bill was made to apply to every State. I wish to remind the gentleman that only last year, in April or May, he introduced what is known as the food-survey bill. As chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, he reported the bill favorably. He conducted the measure through the House. And that bill as he introduced it and as it passed the House contained a provision appropriating about $6,000,000 to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in aiding farmers to purchase seeds. It authorized the sale of seeds to farmers on credit, and to farmers in any section of the United States. Now he says he can not support this bill if it is made to apply anywhere except in the spring-wheat area. It strikes me that the position the gentleman takes now is inconsistent with the position he held on the food-survey bill. In view of this fact, the argument the gentleman makes should not carry the weight which ordinarily goes with views which he always presents to the House with such clearness, candor, and force.

There are some distinguished gentlemen on both sides of the House opposing this measure, whether it applies to the spring-wheat area only or to the United States generally. I have great respect for their views, but they are clearly wrong. The trouble is they have no true conception of the wheat country of the West. Now, the fact is this: In the western half of Oklahoma, Kansas, Nebraska, and North and South Dakota approximately one-third of the wheat of the United States is produced. This is in what is known as the semiarid regions. Crop failures there are possibly more frequent than in some other sections. Nevertheless, one year after another these sections produce a large percentage of all our wheat. We can not supply ourselves and our allies with wheat without a liberal production from these sections. To aid the farmers out there to produce the largest amount of wheat is both wise and patriotic, for without the wheat produced by these farmers we would not have a bushel of wheat to export unless we took it from what our own people needed.

But the provisions of this bill as reported would confine the use of the money appropriated to the spring-wheat area. Suppose this bill passes as reported—we aid the spring-wheat States. Suppose that in certain sections of Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, and other States there should be a failure this year in the wheat crop. The wheat farmers in these winter-wheat sections would be in exactly the same condition that the spring-wheat farmers are now. They would not be able to purchase seed wheat. The local banks could not furnish the necessary credit; but Congress might be adjourned. The Secretary of Agriculture could extend no assistance. The Government would be in the position of discriminating against one section of the country. This would be bad enough, but the worst of it would be the wheat acreage would be reduced millions of acres.

Now, this bill should be made general in its application to the country, and it should be made so as to apply to crops sown this season. Why legislate for a day? Why not look ahead? Why not plan for the future? Why not take a comprehensive view? Why not broaden our vision so as to include at least the war period? Why not pass an act that will enable the farmers to secure the necessary credit to purchase seed at any time during the war?

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not think it unwise to have this lien in this bill to make the farmer give the first lien on his growing crop?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not.

Mr. HOWARD. Which will destroy his credit. Do you not think we ought to do away with that?

Mr. MORGAN. Many, many times in the West, in the homestead districts, the railroads have furnished wheat by millions of bushels to the farmers. Can not the United States do what a railroad corporation can do?

Gentlemen, strike out "spring" and make this a national measure, and the people of the United States will approve it. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I shall take only a few minutes of the time of the committee, and then I intend to ask for a vote on these two amendments and the substitute therefor, and then, if the committee is willing, we shall rise and go home.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] seems to think that the Committee on Agriculture, at least its chairman, is inconsistent because of the fact that last year in the food-production bill we brought in a proposition appropriating $6,000,000 for seed to be furnished farmers for cash or on credit. I have not made any complaint about this bill, because it is a credit proposition, although as a peace proposition I would not vote for it for half a second. The complaint I am making now is against these two amendments which are endeavoring to take from this bill its real character and, to my mind, make it of a character smacking of "pork-barrel" legislation.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. No; I can not yield. As I said a moment ago, there is but one purpose in the mind of the committee, and that is to furnish this seed on credit to certain sections of the country where the evidence before the committee shows that the situation is critical and that by furnishing of these seeds we might possibly, and very probably, increase the production of wheat in this country in the spring-wheat area as much as from 30,000,000 to 40,000,000 bushels. The committee recognizes, of course, that the bread line of this country across to its own soldiers and the soldiers of its allies is as absolutely as important to be held intact as it is important for Haig and Pershing to hold their line intact in this great struggle which is going on.

Now, that is all the committee had in mind. And I want to repeat, that if I thought this committee was going to be unwise enough to throw this proposition wide open, and say to wheat growers here and there, in Virginia, in South Carolina, and in Oklahoma, and in other places, whence there is coming absolutely no demand for this legislation, and giving them the opportunity to run to the Treasury and buy a few bushels of wheat on credit, hamper the administration of this law, and make it almost impossible to administer it with anything like effectiveness, I would vote against this bill.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I will.

Mr. RAKER. What particular territory now is involved and that would be included in this bill?

Mr. LEVER. The spring-wheat area of the United States; that would include North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, Montana, probably a portion of Washington, and Idaho.

Mr. RAKER. And with the language of the bill as it now stands, if it went through, the rest of the country would not be able to get any wheat?

Mr. LEVER. No; I would not say that. I will say that the rest of the country would not get the benefit of this bill. The rest of the country has all the wheat it wants and can have all it wants.

Mr. RAKER. I mean, to get the benefit of this bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. Do I understand the gentleman to say that he is in favor of limiting the operation of this bill to the particular section of the country where there is special need of this favor?

Mr. LEVER. Absolutely.

Mr. STEAGALL. Then let me ask the gentleman another question. The amendment now pending is to strike out the words "spring wheat areas," is it not?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. STEAGALL. With those words out, would not the bill read:

That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, for the crop of 1918, to make advances or loans to farmers of the United States where he shall find special need for such assistance?

Mr. LEVER. Exactly. And that is just the point.

Mr. STEAGALL. May I ask one other question? Then, if there is special need for this legislation in any part of the United States, ought not the Secretary of Agriculture to be permitted to grant the favors there as well as to a particularly limited section of the country where there is special need? [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman, of course, realizes that the time for the planting of fall wheat has gone by. The only area which can be sown to wheat now is the spring-wheat area in this section that I described. Now, if you throw this open and cut the bridle reins and turn the horse loose, every farmer in South Carolina that thinks he ought to buy wheat on credit, whether he ought to do it or not, every farmer in Pennsylvania who thinks that it is up to him to get wheat on credit from the Government next fall, will be coming in here, flooding the Department of Agriculture and hampering the administration of this law and defeating its purpose. I therefore hope the committee will vote it down.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARKLEY. A few moments ago, in response to a question by myself, the gentleman stated that there had been a drought in this section which had cut down the crop of oats and barley, which are included in this bill.

Mr. LEVER. I think I said "wheat."

Mr. BARKLEY. No; the gentleman said "oats and barley." Now, referring to the record, Wisconsin last year produced 92,000,000 bushels, Minnesota 120,000,000 bushels, and North Dakota 61,000,000 bushels of oats. What became of those oats if they have no seed out there?

Mr. LEVER. The testimony before the committee was to the effect that the average yield of wheat in these States—and if I am wrong in these figures I hope the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] will correct me—this year was about 4½ bushels per acre. Is that right?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Five and a half bushels.

Mr. LEVER. As against 10 or 11 bushels to the acre heretofore.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. If they do what the gentleman seeks to prevent and you allow these other sections to get the benefit of this act, will it not result in increasing production?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman does not understand, because he is from Boston and does not know anything about farming [laughter], that the fall sowing of wheat has passed long ago, and we have 42,000,000 acres now in wheat. This is to take care of next year.

Mr. WALSH. Could they not do that in barley and oats?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. And would there not be production of those products?

Mr. LEVER. Not so much as wheat.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman admits that the Pennsylvania farmer who does not need seed wheat might come to the Department of Agriculture and get it on credit. Is not that the vice of the bill?

Mr. LEVER. I admitted that in my opening statement—that this is not a bill that anybody would support in peace times. But I have tried to show that there is a situation existing that ought to attract the attention of this House.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the substitute be reported, as there seems to be some confusion in regard to it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Is there not an amendment pending to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Just one amendment and a substitute pending? I understood that there was an amendment to the original amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute is spoken of as an amendment.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, may we have that reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HELVERING: On page 3, line 16, strike out the words "spring wheat."

Substitute offered by Mr. WINGO: Page 3, line 16, strike out the words "in spring-wheat areas."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 43.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers are demanded.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. LEVER and Mr. WINGO to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 81, noes 45.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise. [Cries of "No!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the committee do now rise. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. LEVER. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it not proper to vote upon the amendment as offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HELVERING]? We only voted on the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] moves that the committee do now rise.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Was the vote by tellers announced?

The CHAIRMAN. It was. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the committee do now rise. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 69, noes 60.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Mr. GARNER. I demand tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. LEVER and Mr. WINGO to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 53, noes 78.

So the committee refused to rise.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I move to strike out the enacting clause of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. YOUNG of Texas moves to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONDON. Is a motion in order to lay this motion on the table?

The CHAIRMAN. That motion would not be in order.

Mr. LUNN. Mr. Chairman, is this motion debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. LUNN. Then I want to debate it.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, my recollection is that the motion to strike out the enacting clause is not debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is in error. As the Chair is advised, the motion is not debatable. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to strike out the enacting clause.

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas, Mr. HOWARD, and others demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 65, noes 67.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas and Mr. SHERLEY demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. RUBEY and Mr. YOUNG of Texas.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 74, noes 65.

A MEMBER. One more in the affirmative, Mr. Chairman.

ANOTHER MEMBER. One more in the negative, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is bound by the report of the tellers. On this vote the ayes are 74, the noes are 65. The motion of the gentleman from Texas to strike out the enacting clause is agreed to.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. POU, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill reported from the Committee on Agriculture as a committee substitute for H. R. 7795 to provide for the national security and defense and further to assure an adequate supply of food, by authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to contract with farmers in certain areas for the production of grain through advances, loans, and otherwise, and by providing for the voluntary mobilization of farm labor, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment in order to enable me to present a conference report?

Mr. LEVER. I will withhold the motion for a moment.

SOLDIERS' INSURANCE.

Mr. SIMS presented the following conference report, which was ordered to be printed under the rule:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 419).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 133) authorizing the granting of insurance under the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended by the act approved October 6, 1917, on application by a person other than the person to be insured, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House, and agree to the same.

T. W. SIMS,
SAM RAYBURN,
S. E. WINSLOW,
Managers on the part of the House.
JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
HOKE SMITH,
REED SMOOT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

SEED GRAIN FOR FARMERS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONDON. What would be the effect of the adjournment upon the bill reported from the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. None whatever. The first thing in the morning would be the vote on the report of the committee.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my speech on the pending bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on this bill. Is there objection?

Mr. SHOUSE. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas objects. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. RUBEY) there were—ayes 69, noes 78.

Accordingly the motion to adjourn was rejected.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves the previous question. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken.

Mr. LEVER. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. RUBEY. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and forty-one Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SHERLEY. I make the point that that motion is not in order. The House has not transacted any business since that motion was voted down.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 120, nays 123, not voting 188, as follows:

So the motion to strike out the enacting clause was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On the vote:

Mr. TINKHAM (for) with Mr. WASON (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. DRANE with Mr. CLASSON.

Mr. MOON with Mr. FREEMAN.

Mr. NEELY with Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan.

Mr. POU with Mr. HICKS.

Mr. STEVENSON with Mr. PORTER.

Mr. WATKINS with Mr. SANDERS of New York.

Mr. BOOHER with Mr. JUUL.

Mr. ASWELL with Mr. MUDD.

Mr. CARAWAY with Mr. BRITTEN.

Mr. PADGETT with Mr. LONGWORTH.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia with Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present in the Hall listening?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I was present, but I guess I was not listening very well or I would have heard my name called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has already voted, and voted in the affirmative. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I did not vote, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will scratch his name off if he did not vote. Does the gentleman want to vote?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes; I did not vote and I want to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall listening when his name was called.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No; I was not; if I was listening, I did not hear my name called, and I do not know whether I was listening or not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "aye."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall listening?

Mr. BURNETT. No; I do not think I got here in time.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The report of the committee is not agreed to, and the bill is automatically referred back to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union [applause], and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] will take the chair.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, pending that may I make a request for unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the pending bill?

The SPEAKER. Do it after we get through with this. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] will take the chair until Mr. POU can return.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7795 with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7795) to appropriate $50,000,000 for the purchase of seed grain and feed for live stock, to be supplied to farmers and stockmen, and to create boards in the respective States to assist in carrying out the provisions of this act, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7795) to appropriate $50,000,000 for the purchase of seed grain and feed for live stock, to be supplied to farmers and stockmen, and to create boards in the respective States to assist in carrying out the provisions of this act.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7795) to appropriate $50,000,000 for the purchase of seed grain and feed for live stock, to be supplied to farmers and stockmen, and to create boards in the respective States to assist in carrying out the provisions of this act, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the pending bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on this bill. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title:

H. R. 9867. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 7 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, March 28, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. BANKHEAD, from the Committee on Education, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11047) to require the Commissioner of Education to devise methods and promote plans for the elimination of adult illiteracy in the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 418), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SCHALL: A bill (H. R. 11085) to amend section 3 of an act approved June 25, 1910, amending paragraph 2 of section 4 of an act entitled "An act to establish a bureau of immigration and naturalization of the aliens throughout the United States," approved June 29, 1906; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. SLOAN: A bill (H. R. 11086) to amend section 13 of the Federal reserve act so that maturity of paper drawn for agricultural purposes or based on live stock may extend to one year; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. LUFKIN: A bill (H. R. 11087) to prescribe the personnel of the Army Nurse Corps, the qualifications for appointment and the method of appointment therein, the pay, allowances, and leave of absence of members of said corps and the conditions under which they may be retired; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FIELDS: A bill (H. R. 11088) providing for the construction of ice piers in the harbor of Louisa, Ky., on the Big Sandy River; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. BROWNING: Resolution (H. Res. 292) to pay to John E. Nicol, clerk to the late John H. Capstick, a Representative in Congress, $166.66; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. RIORDAN: Resolution (H. Res. 293) providing for the immediate consideration of bills on the calendar from the Committee on Labor; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. CLARK of Florida: Resolution (H. Res. 294) to pay Gardner Anthony, son of W. H. Anthony, late an employee of the House, a sum equal to six months' compensation; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. MONDELL: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 269) to suspend the requirements of annual assessment work on mining claims during the years 1918 and 1919; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CARY: A bill (H. R. 11089) granting an increase of pension to George C. Miller; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FERRIS: A bill (H. R. 11090) granting an increase of pension to James A Bateman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FIELDS: A bill (H. R. 11091) granting an increase of pension to Stewart N. McGuire; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11092) granting an increase of pension to Isaac N. Dysard; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HILLIARD: A bill (H. R. 11093) granting a pension to Edward B. Bangs; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JACOWAY: A bill (H. R. 11094) granting an increase of Pension to William Douglas; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 11095) graning an increase of pension to William Mitchell, alias William Terow; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11096) granting an increase of pension to John T. Axline; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. POLK: A bill (H. R. 11097) granting an increase of pension to Edward Bradley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SLOAN: A bill (H. R. 11098) granting an increase of pension to William A. Bevins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHITE of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 11099) granting a pension to Isabel B. Williamson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. CARY: Petition of the Milwaukee Association of Life Underwriters against tax in war revenue bill on certain life insurance premiums; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DALE of New York: Petition of the faculty of Wesleyan College, Mount Pleasant, Iowa, protesting against the second-class postage amendment to the war revenue act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of F. A. Roziene, president of the National Association of Vicksburg Veterans, relative to unexpended balance of money granted the organization by the Sixty-fourth Congress; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. DARROW: Resolution of the Philadelphia Annual Conference pledging unswerving loyalty to the President and our country in the successful prosecution of the war; urging immediate war prohibition, the establishment of a dry zone in Philadephia, and the enactment of laws meting out to German propagandists and traitorous Americans the full penalty of spies; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DOOLING: Petition of the Shut-in Society of New York City, asking for the repeal of the periodical postage increase law; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FRENCH: Petition of Joel McCallister and C. A. Shank, of Clarkston, Wash., on maintaining chaplains in the Army and Navy; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Petition of the Devils Lake Journal of Devils Lake, N. Dak., favoring the zone system for second-class postage; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the Illinois Women's Clubs, favoring a kindergarten division in the Bureau of Education; to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. HILLIARD: Petition of T. W. Fisher, of Colorado Springs, Colo., praying for the repeal of that section of the war-revenue act providing for increased postage rates on periodicals; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolutions adopted by the Lowell Club, of Boone, Iowa, protesting against increased postage rates on periodicals; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of D. Warnock & Sons, of Loveland, Colo., praying for the repeal of that section of the war-revenue act providing for increased postage rates on periodicals; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Mrs. L. Dawn, Ida B. Thompson, Mrs. W. E. Mason, Joy L. Reichelt, Mrs. W. B. Floyd, Mrs. Etta K. Siple, and 11 others, all citizens of the State of Colorado, praying for immediate war prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH: Memorial of W. W. Scott and 50 men of the Kirkwood Presbyterian Church, of Bridgeport, Ohio, favoring closing American saloons during the present war, and to prevent export of grains to foreign countries to be used in manufacture of distilled or malt liquors; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LUNDEEN: Petition of certain farmers of the Northwest through the Farm, Stock, and Home, of Minneapolis, asking that the price of 1918 wheat be raised to $2.75 per bushel; also asking that the draft be revised to the end that farm labor be largely exempted; to the Committee on Agriculture.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 28, 1918.

Rev. J. L. Kibler, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

O Lord, we lift up our souls unto Thee. In the midst of the world war we put our trust in Thee. At this critical hour in the awful conflict we look more steadfastly to Thee. O Thou God of battles, Thou God of Moses, and of Gideon, and of David in the battles of long ago, direct our cause, and let not our enemies triumph over us. O God, in Thy name we stand for the great principles which Thou hast projected in the world. We stand for justice and righteousness for all men and for all nations; and we look to Thee as the great Captain of our salvation to direct us aright.

O Thou, who art mighty in battle, save our cause. Give grace and wisdom and courage to all our leaders and lead on our armies to honor and to victory and to a lasting peace. Speed on the triumph of the day when wars shall cease to the ends of the earth and there shall be the resurrection of a new day, with peace on earth and good will to men. We ask it in the name of Christ, the Lord. Amen.

The Vice President being absent, the President pro tempore took the chair.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Tuesday, March 26, 1918, when, on request of Mr. VARDAMAN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I present a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of South Dakota in extra session, 1918, relative to the inclusion of the State of South Dakota in a list of certain States affected by legislation appropriating money for the relief of farmers in procuring seed, grain, and feed for stock. I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The following concurrent resolution has been adopted by the Legislature of the State of South Dakota:

"Be it resolved by the Senate of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota assembled in extraordinary session at the State capital, the House of Representatives concurring:

"That whereas there has been a bill introduced in the Congress of the United States (H. R. 7795) to appropriate money for the relief of farmers in procuring seed grain and feed for stock in certain enumerated Northwestern States, of which South Dakota is specifically named, as one needing such Government aid;

"And whereas South Dakota is now honestly advertising the prosperity of the State: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the legislature now in extraordinary session, with representatives present from all sections of the State, singly and collectively declare that, to the best of their knowledge and belief, the farmers of South Dakota are not asking for Federal aid to procure seed and feed; and that the State is amply able and willing to aid, if necessary, any farmer who needs aid, and that the few individual or isolated cases that may exist, if any, can and will be taken care of either by township or county aid. And further that the advertising South Dakota has received through 'H. R. 7795' has done her a great injustice, as South Dakota has never been more prosperous than now, as proved by competent authority; be it further

"Resolved, That engrossed copies of this resolution be prepared by the secretary of the senate and delivered by United States mail to the Secretary of the Senate of the United States, to the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States, to the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, and to the Senators and Representatives of South Dakota now serving in the United States Senate and House of Representatives."

W. H. MCMASTER,
President of the Senate.
W. N. VAN CAMP,
Secretary of the Senate.
A. C. ROBERTS,
Speaker of the House.
C. W. GARDNER,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. McKELLAR. I present a letter relative to the vote taken in the Senate last week on fixing the minimum price of wheat, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GOLDEN, MISS., March 22, 1918.

Hon. KENNETH D. MCKELLAR,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MCKELLAR: I read to-day with interest the vote in the Senate yesterday on fixing the minimum price of $2.50 on wheat. I heartily congratulate you upon being amongst those 18 that voted against it, though I have the largest acreage in wheat in this section of the country (so a Government demonstration agent advised me) I can not see the justice in fixing such an exorbitant and extortionate price on this commodity. It strikes me as being willing to pay a premium on disloyalty In fact, I believe the law of legitimate supply and demand should govern the prices of all farm products, especially staples. Wheat above everything else, is one of the cheapest crops grown, and good money is to be made out of wheat by the farmer at $1.25 a bushel, with a normal yield, even taking into consideration the present high cost of living.

Again congratulating you on your vote,
Sincerely, yours,
CHAS. P. WOFFORD.

Mr. McNARY. I have a petition signed by several thousand citizens of Oregon asking that Congress forthwith take action to pass a law imposing punishment upon all persons or organizations responsible for pro-German activities. I ask that it be read omitting the names, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that a similar petition has just been read.

Mr. McNARY. Very well. I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary without reading.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Petition of the people of the United States of America to the Congress at Washington.

Whereas the security of the United States and the success of our arms are endangered by the activities of disloyal persons and organizations within the border of our country.

We, the citizens of the United States whose names are hereto subscribed, do hereby petition the Congress of the United States to enact forthwith a law imposing punishment upon all persons or organizations responsible for pro-German activities, or for the publication of public utterances, tending to impede or to interfere with the operations or success of the United States in war, or recruiting or enlistments tending to hold the United States or any of our allies up to ridicule or obloquy, or to cause disloyalty or refusal of duty on the part of any person in connection with the war.

Mr. McNARY. I have another petition from members of the Southern Oregon Medical Association asking for the support of Senate bill 3748, giving advanced rank to officers in the Medical Reserve Corps of the Army, which I move be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARDING. I present resolutions passed by the mayor's advisory war committee, of Cleveland, Ohio, asking for the enactment of the bill to rescind the charter of the German-American Alliance, and also a resolution from the Business Men's Club, of Cincinnati, Ohio, calling for more drastic treatment of enemy aliens and those in our country who violate American hospitality. I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CITY OF CLEVELAND,
MAYOR'S ADVISORY WAR COMMITTEE,
Cleveland, March 22, 1918.

Upon motion of W. A. Greenlund, seconded by Charles A. Otis, the following resolution was presented to the executive committee of the mayor's advisory war committee and unanimously adopted:

Whereas there is a bill now pending in Congress to rescind the charter of the German-American Alliance:

Resolved, That the mayor's advisory war committee recommend the passage of this bill and ask the Members of Congress and Senators from Ohio to use every effort to accomplish this result.

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Senators and Members of Congress from Ohio.

HARRY L. VAIL,
Executive Secretary.

Resolution of the Business Men's Club, of Cincinnati, Ohio.

Whereas we believe that there is in operation in this country to-day an extensive German spy system, consisting of not only military and political spies but also of that more detestable and dangerous type of spy, viz, destructionists, disease spreaders, industrial disorganizers, and pro-German propagandists—all posing as patriotic American citizens, and operating in the same manner and under the same direction as in Russia and other allied countries; and

Whereas this spy system is becoming more efficient and more active from day to day, and the "Hun within" constitutes a more dangerous and detestable enemy than the "Hun without"; and

Whereas it is our opinion that this vast and thoroughly organized menace can not be suppressed merely by internment, and the fresh air, three square meals, and entertainment features which accompany the same, or by mere arrest and subsequent parole on good behavior; and

Whereas it is our opinion that the time has come for a decisive and firm handling of this Hun menace, and a meting out to any and all offenders of the same measure of justice as is administered in Germany or Austria: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we hereby protest against the parole of any and all alien enemies violating our neutrality laws or regulations; that we respectfully recommend that all interned aliens be immediately put to work at some useful and productive occupation, and that treasonable violations of our neutrality laws or regulations be punished by ordering the violators before a firing squad; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, Secretary of War and Secretary of the Navy, and our Representatives in Congress.

Mr. LODGE. I present a telegram in the nature of a petition, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BOSTON, MASS., March 24, 1918.

Senator WEEKS,
Hotel Touraine, Boston, Mass.:

Resolved, That this mass meeting held in the Park Square Theater, Boston, on March 24, call upon President Wilson and the Democratic administration to move effective support to the national suffrage amendment, thereby securing its immediate passage in the United States Senate; be it also

Resolved, That this resolution be sent to the President, the Vice President, Senator THOMAS MARTIN, majority leader of the Senate, and Senator JACOB GALLINGER, minority leader of the Senate, and to Senator JOHN W. WEEKS, with the request that he read it into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Adopted unanimously.

OLIVE MILLS BELCHES,
State Chairman Massachusetts Branch
National Woman's Party.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, on behalf of the American Defense Society of South Dakota I present the following numerously signed petition by citizens of the State of South Dakota. I ask that the petition itself without the signatures may be read. It is short.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Petition of the people of the United States of America to the Congress at Washington.

Whereas the security of the United States and the success of our arms are endangered by the activities of disloyal persons and organizations within the borders of our country, we, the citizens of the United States, whose names are hereto subscribed, do hereby petition the Congress of the United States to enact forthwith a law imposing punishment upon all persons or organizations responsible for pro-German activities or for the publication or public utterance of statements tending—

To impede or interfere with the operations or success of the United States in war or in recruiting or enlistment; or

To hold the Government of the United States or any of our allies up to ridicule or obloquy; or

To cause disloyalty or refusal of duty on the part of any person in connection with the war.

Mr. STERLING. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. I send to the desk a concurrent resolution just passed by the Legislature of the State of South Dakota. It relates to an important piece of legislation now pending in the House of Representatives, and I ask unanimous consent that it be read.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

The following concurrent resolution has been adopted by the Legislature of the State of South Dakota:

"Be it resolved by the Senate of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota assembled in extraordinary session at the State capital, the House of Representatives concurring:

"That whereas there has been a bill introduced in the Congress of the United States (H. And further that the advertising South Dakota has received through 'H. R. 7795' has done her a great injustice, as South Dakota has never been more prosperous than now, as proved by competent authority; be it further

"Resolved, That engrossed copies of this resolution be prepared by the secretary of the senate and delivered by United States mail to the Secretary of the Senate of the United States, to the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States, to the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, and to the Senators and Representatives of South Dakota now serving in the United States Senate and House of Representatives."

W. H. MCMASTER,
President of the Senate.
W. N. VAN CAMP,
Secretary of the Senate.
A. C. ROBERTS,
Speaker of the House.
C. W. GARDNER,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. GRONNA presented a petition of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Rockford, N. Dak., and a petition of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Tolley, N. Dak., praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented petitions of sundry citizens of Houston and Galveston, in the State of Texas, praying for the submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KENYON presented a petition of the Methodist Brotherhood of Britt, Iowa, praying for the repeal of the charter granted to the National German-American Alliance, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Newton, Iowa, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Albany, Oreg., praying for the repeal of the present zone system of postage rates on second-class mail matter, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a resolution adopted by sundry citizens of Burns, Oreg., favoring universal military training, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Portland, Oreg., praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. KENDRICK, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 1847) to authorize the addition of certain lands to the Wyoming National Forest, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 335) thereon.

Mr. MCNARY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 2714) authorizing the removal of stumps from cut-over Oregon and California lands, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 334) thereon.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. From the Committee on Printing I report back favorably without amendment House concurrent resolution 39, to authorize the printing of 250,000 copies of the soldiers' and sailors' civil relief act, approved March 8, 1918, and so forth. I do not ask for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 4202) authorizing the sale of lands situated within the Pierre Land District, State of South Dakota; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. PAGE:

A bill (S. 4203) granting an increase of pension to William K. Annis, jr. (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHIELDS:

A bill (S. 4204) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Flournoy (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4205) granting a pension to Thomas Smith; and

A bill (S. 4206) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Owen Dennison; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 4207) granting a pension to Sabara J. Swisher (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 4208) authorizing postage rates on aeroplane mail; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 4212) granting an increase of pension to Alfred L. Cain; to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have here three bills that I have been asked to introduce. They relate to matters of interest to the District of Columbia and to a very important subject. I have not had time to investigate fully the matters proposed in them; but I introduce the bills by request, so that I shall feel perfectly free to take whatever attitude I feel justified in taking hereafter with reference to them. I thought, however, that their introduction would give an opportunity to those who were interested in them to appear before the District of Columbia Committee to present their views with reference to them.

By Mr. JONES of Washington (by request):

A bill (S. 4209) to provide for the construction of safe and sanitary dwellings, to be leased at a moderate rental to persons residing in buildings erected in alleys in the District of Columbia, and to aid in carrying out the provisions of an act of Congress, approved September 25, 1914, entitled "An act to provide, in the interest of public health, morals, and safety, for the discontinuance of the use as dwellings of buildings situated in the alleys in the District of Columbia," and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 4210) to provide for the construction of safe and sanitary dwellings to be occupied by persons residing in buildings erected in alleys in the District of Columbia, and to aid in carrying out the provisions of an act of Congress, approved September 25, 1914, entitled "An act to provide, in the interest of public health, morals, and safety, for the discontinuance of the use as dwellings of buildings situated in the alleys in the District of Columbia," and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 4211) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the extension eastwardly of the Columbia Railway," approved June 13, 1898, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENT OF NATURALIZATION LAWS.

Mr. CALDER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3132) to amend section 2171 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to naturalization, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration and ordered to be printed.

THE SHIPPING SITUATION (S. DOC. NO. 210).

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I have here a copy of an address by Edward N. Hurley, chairman of the United States Shipping Board, delivered before the National Marine League of the United States of America, at Delmonico's, in New York, on the evening of March 26, giving a comprehensive analysis of the entire situation and hitherto unpublished data regarding the number of new shipyards and launching ways built and building, and the tonnage and types of vessels under construction and planned. There is attached to it an estimate of the cost of publication in accordance with the rule, and I ask unanimous consent to have it printed as a public document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MCCUMBER. I first want to know definitely what it is. Is it the speech made by Mr. Hurley?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, I shall not object to its being printed as a public document, but I want to say right now that there are statements in that speech which need explanation.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no doubt that an explanation can be given.

Mr. MCCUMBER. There are many things in it that are expressed in broad language that indicate a state of affairs in our shipbuilding that is not realized in the actualities of the case.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is a very important document and gives the latest information on this important subject.

Mr. MCCUMBER. The Senator will remember that yesterday the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], in reading one paragraph of it evidently misunderstood or did not comprehend the full meaning of the sentences that were used in it, and a number of other Senators and Members are likewise mystified as to its meaning, and the press reports of it are so confusing that I think it rather conveys misinformation in some respects, although if it is carefully read and analyzed undoubtedly everything that is stated in it is correct.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was not present when the Senator from Colorado quoted from it yesterday, but I think that, like almost any address, portions of it might be picked out and given a wrong impression, whereas the whole document itself would set forth clearly the accurate information. Therefore I think it ought to be printed as a whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to printing the address as a public document? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

THE ELECTORAL COLLEGE AND PRESIDENTIAL SUFFRAGE.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I present a document which I ask be referred to the Committee on Printing for publication as a public document entitled "The Electoral College and Presidential Suffrage," by Chief Justice Walter Clark, of North Carolina.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The matter will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following joint resolutions:

On March 27, 1918:

S. J. Res. 117. Joint resolution amending the act of July 2, 1909, governing the holding of civil-service examinations.

On March 28, 1918:

S. J. Res. 104. Joint resolution authorizing the assistant to the Secretary of the Interior to sign official papers and documents.

UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3401) to authorize the President to reduce temporarily the course of instruction at the United States Naval Academy, which were, in lines 3 and 4, to strike out "during the continuance of the present war" and insert "until August 1, 1921," and in line 4, to strike out "temporarily."

Mr. SWANSON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

NAVAL OFFICERS ABSENT WITHOUT LEAVE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3404) to authorize the President to drop from the rolls any naval or Marine Corps officer absent without leave for three months, or who has been convicted of any offense by the civil authorities, and prohibiting such officers' reappointment, which was to amend the title so as to read: "An act to authorize the President to drop from the rolls any naval or Marine Corps officer absent without leave for three months, or who has been convicted of any offense punishable by confinement in the penitentiary by the civil authorities, and prohibiting such officer's reappointment."

Mr. SWANSON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PAY OF RETIRED OFFICERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3400) to regulate the pay of retired chief warrant officers and warrant officers on active duty.

Mr. SWANSON. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House and request a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. TILLMAN, Mr. SWANSON, and Mr. LODGE conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE SHIPPING SITUATION.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] has just procured an order to have the speech of Mr. Hurley on the shipping situation published as a public document. At the time he made that request I suggested to him that there ought to be some explanation in connection with it.

I do not want to criticize the speech in the slightest degree. I will simply say that the speech does not show clearly just what we have accomplished in the matter of putting ships afloat. It does show that we have made contracts for over 8,000,000 deadweight tons of shipping, including the requisitioned vessels, and that we have proceeded 28 per cent toward their completion. Now, that does not convey very much real information to the average American citizen. I asked a member of the Committee on Commerce yesterday how many ships we had actually put into servicee, and that member informed me that we had actually put afloat two.

I notice in the headlines of the morning paper this statement, and I think we ought to have the explanation of it if we can get it. This headline reads:

One hundred and three new vessels now in service.
One hundred and eighty-eight launched, declares Shipping Board to Senate critics.

And this is the way the context under that heading reads:

Since the Shipping Board began its work 188 vessels have been launched, of which 103 have been completed and put into service.

I want to know whether those 103 represent the efforts of the Shipping Board in new construction or whether those 103 are really the commandeered or requisitioned vessels, the German vessels, which were already built. There is nothing in the article to show what it is.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I think nearly all the ships, with possibly two—it may be four by this time—exceptions, are ships that were commandeered or impressed into the service, and I do not think it includes the German ships. The Shipping Board did take over all ships that were under construction in our shipyards by foreign companies. They were mainly English and Norwegian ships. All those ships have been taken over and the increase in ships afloat comes from that source.

Two weeks ago it was admitted by a member of the Shipping Board that there were not over two that were completed of those that had been set out to be built by the Shipping Board. Since then probably there are two or three added. The bulk of those ships are commandeered ships or requisitioned ships started by the English and Norwegians.

Mr. McCUMBER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. McCUMBER. Just let me finish my question, please.

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understood, of course, that when we entered into this conflict there were a great many vessels being constructed in the United States for Great Britain and Norway, and possibly France and Italy, and that they were in different stages of completion. I understand, also, that we requisitioned all those vessels, and, of course, we appropriated for them and paid for them and they were completed. But what we are most interested in knowing is just what has been completed by the Shipping Board in addition to what was constructed or completed beforehand for private concerns. How many ships have the Shipping Board actually built and put afloat that are in use to-day? I now yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. The Senator says he would like to know just what has been accomplished by the Shipping Board. On the day before yesterday I received through the mail, and I suppose all Senators have received it, a copy of a statement made by Mr. Hurley——

Mr. McCUMBER. That has just been ordered to be printed as a public document, and the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and myself discussed that a short time ago.

Mr. STONE. That was before I came in.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; that was before the Senator came in.

Mr. STONE. I thought, possibly, that if the Senator from North Dakota would examine this statement of the chairman of the Shipping Board organization he would get the information. I have gone over it somewhat hurriedly, because of other engagements as a member of the conference committee on the War Finance Corporation bill. I have read it so far as I could, but I suppose the information as to the achievements of the Shipping Board is fully set out in that document.

Mr. McCUMBER. As the Senator from Missouri has read the statement, will he tell me how many ships have actually been completed by the Shipping Board, according to the statement which has been made by Mr. Hurley?

Mr. STONE. I stated to the Senator that I had read it somewhat casually; but, so far as construction goes, seeing it as I did, Mr. Hurley gives a total tonnage of construction, separating that into two parts—that which had been completed under contract, which I take to be new construction, and that which had been in the way of perfecting, repairing, or preparing commandeered ships for service. He gives the tonnage of all of them, but I have not the statement before me.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator from Missouri has the same trouble that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] had yesterday, and which the public naturally will have from the use of the term "completed." I do not, from a closer analysis of the language used by Mr. Hurley, draw the conclusion that anything has been completed. When you read the whole statement you find that he simply indicated that we had progressed 28 per cent toward the completion of the contracts entered into, including the requisitioned vessels.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, my present purpose was merely to ask the Senator from North Dakota if he had examined this statement?

Mr. McCUMBER. I have examined it very carefully.

Mr. STONE. Then my inquiry was superfluous.

Mr. McCUMBER. I thank the Senator, however, for the suggestion.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the situation is this: A number of ships were on the stocks under construction when the Emergency Fleet Corporation was organized and began its work. Last August they proceeded to requisition those vessels which were on the stocks—vessels of neutral countries and of the allies that were contracted for—and the Emergency Fleet Corporation took them over. The Emergency Fleet Corporation, as soon as possible, as soon as it could get up designs and plans, proceeded to make contracts for the construction of vessels, really beginning with the construction of the yards in many instances, so that the number of shipyards in this country has increased, I believe, to 118, though there were but 37 existing at the time when the Emergency Fleet Corporation began its program. Now, we are building ships in 118 yards, and some of the old yards have been expanded, and those old yards are all being utilized, of course.

Out of the requisitioned vessels at that time which were taken over by the Emergency Fleet Corporation 188 have been launched. Of those, 103 are not yet completed; that is, the machinery is not in them; but it is being put in right along; but all of the machinery, the motive power, has not been supplied.

Mr. McCUMBER. Those were all ships that were requisitioned, as I understand?

Mr. FLETCHER. Those were requisitioned ships. Eighty-five of them have been completed. When they use the term "completed," it means they are not only launched, but they have been outfitted and equipped with machinery and are in the service.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. So that there are 85 of those requisitioned ships in the service, and they have been completed, the Senator will understand, by the Emergency Fleet Corporation, because they took them over while they were under construction on the stocks in the yards.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is, they were completed by the companies which had the contracts to construct those ships?

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely; but after the Emergency Fleet Corporation had taken them over.

Mr. McCUMBER. Well, the Shipping Board had nothing to do with that, except to say to the contractors, "Go ahead and finish these ships, and when they are completed we, instead of the original owners, will take them."

Mr. FLETCHER. That the Emergency Fleet Corporation instead of the original owners, would take the ships and would adjust the matter with the original owners.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. In addition to that, three of the ships which the Emergency Fleet Corporation designed, planned, and commenced from the very beginning, laid the keels and built the yards for them where necessary, are in the service; and I think only three up to this time that the Emergency Fleet Corporation undertook to build and made contracts for in the first instance and laid the keels for are now finished and in the service.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then the result of the efforts of the Shipping Board in ships actually completed and in the service, after nearly a year, has been three ships?

Mr. FLETCHER. Not only that——

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course, that is outside of those that they have requisitioned and is in addition to the preparatory work for manufacturing or building ships on a very large scale?

Mr. FLETCHER. Well, not only the preparatory work, but there are vessels being constructed in all these yards; 28 per cent of completion has been reached up to this time in the other vessels. We could not say that the completion of three ships comprises the sole work of the Emergency Fleet Corporation. That merely indicates how far they have progressed; but in every yard in the country there are ships under way and being built.

Mr. McCUMBER. In order that we may understand each other, let me say to the Senator from Florida that if we have progressed in one year 28 per cent toward completion, there is 72 per cent of work yet to be completed before the ships will be turned out. At that rate it might take two or three years longer before the actual ships are completed and put in the water.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota let me ask the Senator from Florida a question?

Mr. FLETCHER. Let me answer the question of the Senator from North Dakota. I do not think what the Senator from North Dakota says follows at all, because in many instances they had to begin with the building of the yard itself. Now, that work is finished, the ways are in shape, and they can turn out the product much quicker. The contract, for instance, at Hog Island is to complete 120 ships within 22 months; and six months of that time has passed.

Mr. McCUMBER. Well, is not the work of building yards included in the 28 per cent of that completion?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I think not; that is 28 per cent of the completion of the ships.

Mr. McCUMBER. The speech of Mr. Hurley does not make that clear.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to ask the Senator from Florida a question, with the permission of the Senator from North Dakota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that a great many of these ships were requisitioned. Were all of the ships that were requisitioned completed, or were not many of them completed after being requisitioned? Were they not requisitioned during the process of construction?

Mr. FLETCHER. Oh, yes; out of these 288 most of them were requisitioned ships, but only 85 of them have been completed to date. That statement is quite true. There were altogether 393 vessels dead-weight tons requisitioned, which are not yet completed. The tonnage amounted to 2,771,933; those have not all yet been completed, but they are in the process of completion. There were altogether 393 vessels requisitioned.

Mr. McCUMBER. Now, Mr. President, that practically clears up some of the features of this situation. It appears now that we have completed of the requisitioned vessels, some of which were nearly completed at the time we entered into the war, about 85, and that, independent of this, the result of the Shipping Board's efforts has been, in addition to the construction of yards for the very much more rapid building of ships, to turn out three new ships, outside of the ships that have been requisitioned.

Mr. President, I think it ought to be stated right here and now that Mr. Hurley is doing everything possible to speed up ship construction. I think we have a man at the head of the Shipping Board now who has the energy and determination to put things through and to take some chances. I was gratified to read his speech, which, though it was not perfectly clear, at least showed that efforts are being put forth on a very large scale; but, Mr. President, the great trouble lies in the fact that we have not started on a large enough scale. We have a program which calls for the production of over 8,000,000 dead-weight tonnage, including requisitioned ships. I do not know when, under the contracts, this program is to be constructed, whether in 1918 or 1919. That means only a little over 4,500,000 tons gross, while the actual sinkings are about 500,000 tons a month. I wish that Senators and the American people would get that fact firmly established in their minds, but, while we propose to produce about 4,000,000 gross tons in the year, the present rate of sinkings is 500,000 tons in a month, or 6,000,000 tons in a year, at the least.

Now, as a matter of fact, the closer estimates will show that in all probability there will be lost by submarines, mines, and marine casualties in 1918 not less than 8,000,000 gross tons of shipping, and that Great Britain can not produce more than 2,000,000 gross tons. So if we produce 4,000,000 tons, making 6,000,000 in all, we would still be short two or three million tons at the end of the year—that much worse off than we are to-day.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], optimistic in his earnest patriotism, made this statement yesterday:

> I want to bear my testimony to the fact that we are doing tremendous work to end the submarine peril. The American Navy has cooperated with the British Navy, and is sending the submarines to the bottom about as fast as the enemy can make them, and our Navy has done great work.

That may be all true; I do not know whether it is or not. I read headlines in the papers each day showing that one or two or three submarines have been sunk, but when I read the context it merely indicates a suspicion that possibly they might have been sunk. Here, however, is the answer to the view of the Senator from Iowa. The answer was given the same day that he made the utterance; and it comes from the British report of losses for the preceding week. The British report of U-boat sinkings for the previous week shows that the number of merchantmen sunk was 28. Prior to that time the average was about 18; last week it was 28. Of those 28 vessels 16 were above 1,600 tons; 12 were below that tonnage; and they did not take into account a fishing vessel, which would make 29. During the same week—I think it was the same week, it comes within a week's report of U-boat losses—the Italian losses were: Steamers more than 1,500 tons, 3; sailing vessels over 100 tons, 2; sailing vessels under 100 tons, 3. That makes a loss of 8 for the Italians. The French shipping losses for the same week were 6, making altogether a total loss of 43 vessels. That is what the U-boats are doing, notwithstanding the fact that we have said we are destroying them as rapidly as they are being built. If they can continue at that rate—and we certainly must look at it from the most disastrous side—if they can continue at that rate, or anything like that rate, we are going to be three or four million tons worse off on January 1, 1919, than we were on January 1, 1918.

This is why I appeal to the Shipping Board not merely to be satisfied to produce 4,000,000 tons within the next year, but to extend, if possible, their efforts with the concrete ship, which I now believe has been established to be practically safe, and increase the tonnage by another four or five million tons in 1918. I believe that it can be done. We ought to approach this shipping situation with a determination to produce at least twice as much shipping in 1918 and 1919 as is now the program of the Shipping Board.

Mr. MARTIN and Mr. NELSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is called for.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a moment to reply to the statements made by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. He takes a one-sided and partial view that makes the situation unnecessarily gloomy. The mere building of new ships or replacing lost ships does not reach the evil. Every time there is a ship sunk there goes down with it a cargo of supplies, food, and munitions that we send across the water. So the mere building of new ships and putting them afloat does not cure the evil.

I want to say to the Senator from North Dakota that the energy of the Government, through the Navy Department, is devoted to the purpose of building as many torpedo-boat destroyers as possible, and, to my mind, our chief remedy must come from that source. We want to stop these sinkings in order that our supplies may not find a place on the bottom of the sea, and our Navy Department is engaged now in building as rapidly as possible all kinds of torpedo-boat destroyers. We have an American admiral over there in command of the territory in the Irish Sea, where submarines seem to be very numerous, who has charge of that work. He has done good work, and many submarines have been sunk, and the peril is diminishing day by day. Instead of running into fads and urging us to build cement boats, which are simply in an experimental state, I think it is better to devote our energy to building torpedo-boat destroyers and stop the sinking of the vessels.

Merely replacing a vessel sunk with a new vessel does not cure the evil, because every time a ship is sunk the freight of that ship—the food, the munitions, the men in it—all go down to the bottom of the sea, and we lose not only the ships but all its valuable cargo. So I say that with us the greatest energy should be devoted to extinguishing the submarines and preventing their carrying on their campaign with the success with which it is now attended.

I can not see anything in going into this fad of cement ships. They are, as I have said, in an experimental state. A few small ships, two or three, have been built in Norway and two or three in Denmark—very small ships of two, three, or four hundred tons. They have not been tried at sea. We know in this emergency that ships built of iron and steel in the United States, if they are properly built, will be a success and seaworthy. We know that, and for the time being we ought to devote our energy to building ships of that kind instead of chasing false ideals and going into the realm of cement ships.

Ever since that matter came up—and I have ventured to oppose it—I have been getting letters from the cement manufacturers of the country calling my attention to the wicked stand I am taking in opposing the construction of cement ships. Why, the manufacturers of cement ships and the men who have been in the cement industry and engaged in erecting cement works are on the rampage. They want the Government to go into the building of cement ships because they want to keep their industry alive during the war. It is another way of reaching for Uncle Sam's pocket.

I do not find fault with the Senator from North Dakota for his stand in the matter. We are all liable to be hypnotized by some of these fads. I have been subject to them, and I can readily see how my good friend from North Dakota can be caught in the mesh. But let us in this emergency, for God's sake, Mr. President, exhibit American or English or Anglo-Saxon sanity, and let us put our great effort into building ships and inventing appliances that will extinguish the submarines. That is more important than merely building new ships.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I am going to ask for the regular order. As much as I dislike to interrupt the discussion that is going on, there are one or two war measures that ought to be disposed of, and from present indications it is going to take a good while to do it.

I therefore ask for the regular order.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, it is probably true that the Senator can do this, but he will not gain anything by taking up any order, because I intend to answer the Senator from Minnesota, and I intend to answer him whether another matter is brought up or not. The Senator can do just as he likes with reference to raising a point of order and bringing up any matter before the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, I have no desire at all to stop this discussion; but I have been trying for two days in the morning hour to bring up this joint resolution for drafting young men who attain the age of 21 years, and it is very essential that that be done at some time. I do hope the Senator will feel that I am not undertaking to shut off any discussion.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, it is very essential; I agree with the Senator; but I want to tell the Senator that it is far more essential that we have ships to take those boys over there after we have included them in the draft, that we have ships to take over ammunition and food for them, and that we supply them with guns and ammunition. The greatest mistake that we made in this war was that we ignored the shipping situation at the beginning of the war, and gave our energies toward the building up of a mighty Army; and at the end of one year the Secretary of War informs us that he has 1,500,000 men that he can put into the field, but he has not any ships, and he does not know where he is going to get them. That situation ought not to continue any longer if it is possible to prevent it; and that ought to lead us to the conclusion that we ought to take up the shipping situation, that we ought to press that beyond and before anything else that is under consideration by the Senate.

Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Minnesota that we should build torpedo-boat destroyers; but Heaven knows that we should not cease building other ships to supply the ravages caused by the submarine. We are building torpedo-boat destroyers just as rapidly as we can, but they are not accomplishing the result; and we ought to build them upon a greater scale, if they can do anything, and at the same time we ought to increase the number of ships that will supply the ravages of the submarine. Both should be working together, and not one laid aside while the other is put in operation.

It is undoubtedly true that those who produce cement would be pleased to have a greater market for their product, but how does that detract from the merits of concrete ships? Do not the producers of steel and of lumber also want to sell their products? The only question is, Does the reinforced-concrete ship offer the opportunity to immensely increase our tonnage output in the immediate future—in 1918? If it offers that opportunity, we should grasp it with alacrity and enthusiasm; and the fact that it opens up a greater market for concrete ought not to influence the Senator or anyone else.

Mr. President, it was not my intention to speak of concrete ships only as a field wherein we could reach to supply the deficiency between the present construction of steel and wooden ships as compared with the present destruction of wooden and steel ships. That offers us a field of supply. When the Senator says that it has not been tried, that those who advocate it are hypnotized, let me say to the Senator that private enterprise has just floated in San Francisco a new concrete ship. Private individuals have put their money into it. Engineers testify that they know of no reason on earth why concrete ships should not be a success. The Lloyds have passed judgment upon them, as I understand, and made them insurable. Now, I do not need very much further testimony than that of the Lloyds, than that of shipbuilders, than that of engineers, all agreeing; and, Mr. President, even though it is possible that there may possibly be some unknown, undiscovered defect in concrete ships, we have reached a situation to-day in which we have got to take chances, and we can afford to take long chances. If we build the yards, the ways, for the construction of cement ships, we have not lost them. They are ready there to be used for the construction of steel ships. We have lost nothing. It is worth twenty-five or forty or fifty million dollars to the United States to make the test, and make it right away. The chances are 9 out of 10 that it will be a complete success. The situation is so grave, the demand for ships is so great, that the Government should not fail to take the chance and to proceed with this construction, which promises to solve the question, promises to fill the gap caused by the submarine ravages, promises us the ships to transport our soldiers and our munitions.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, let me say just a word in this connection. I will take only a minute.

Of course, the Senator will understand that the Shipping Board is fully investigating the possibilities of concrete ships. That matter has been explained over and over again. It may be possible that that means or method or plan will be developed so that we can have ships quicker, faster, more adequately than we would otherwise get them. At any rate, there are three ships being built now by the Emergency Fleet Corporation of the concrete type by way of determining whether or not it is feasible and practicable to pursue the development in that direction. I do not believe there is any field of operation that is not being thoroughly considered and worked out by the Emergency Fleet Corporation, with a view of supplying ships in sufficient quantity to meet the emergency.

Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that his estimate is rather below that of those who are thoroughly posted as to what is going on in this country and in other countries regarding construction keeping up with destruction. Assuming that the destruction will continue about as it has been in the past year, we ought to have reached by August of this year the point when construction will equal destruction, and then after that we ought to pass rapidly beyond it. That is the estimate at this time—that by the coming August we will be building ships as fast as they are being sunk.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that he is mistaken about the year. It is August, 1919.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish the Senator would see the letter which I have, in which Mr. Piez corrects that statement. I have it on the desk now.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, I have not seen that. I am just taking the statement made by Mr. Piez to the committee and the chart that he submitted.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator is right; that was the statement; but I have a letter now—and I will show it to the Senator—a letter just recently received, in which he corrects that statement and places it in this year—August, 1918.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does he give the basis for the correction?

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not sure that he gives details, but he desires to correct the former statement.

Mr. JONES of Washington. He ought to give the details, because his chart seemed to be carefully prepared.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me see if I understand the Senator. It is not always clear to state that one will equal another at a certain time. Does the Senator mean that in the month of August, 1918, there will be as many ships put afloat, ready to go on their journeys across the ocean, as will in all probability be sunk in the month of August, 1918?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; precisely.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator has a big disappointment coming to him, then; and when August comes I want the Senator to remember what I say now.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well. I do not know that I quite understood the Senator's question. My statement is that by August of this year construction will equal destruction, not exclusively in our yards, but in all the yards that are building ships that can be used and that will be used for our benefit.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course, if that means anything, it means that during the month of August, 1918, we will put into commission as many tons of shipping as will go down to the bottom of the ocean in August, 1918.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; I think that is true. I think that point will be reached. But, Mr. President, I want to say this, as long as this question has been raised, and I think it fair to say it just now:

The criticism regarding the lack of ships and the endeavor to fix upon the Shipping Board or the administration or those people who have that enterprise in hand the responsibility for neglecting or failing to do that which was of vital importance to this country and to the world in this crisis, it seems to me, comes rather in poor grace from gentlemen who three and a half years ago on this floor engaged in the most stupendous filibuster in the whole history of the Senate against a bill to establish a Shipping Board and to begin the building of an American merchant marine.

In December, 1914, I had the honor to report a bill providing for the foundation, at least, upon which we could construct an American mercantile marine. That bill was debated here almost continuously until the latter part of February, right up to the time when, by operation of law, that session of Congress had to come to an end. One session of the Senate during that debate lasted continuously, without recess, without adjournment, without interruption, for 65 hours. The most laborious effort that men ever exerted in this body was put forth in order that we might have ships to-day; and yet it was determinedly fought, day in and day out and night in and night out, by Senators on the other side, who now criticize these conditions and seek to fasten blame upon people for not having ships with which to carry on this war.

The senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who labored so earnestly to blame, in a way, people who are now engaged in this work for not having ships, was one of the leaders in that opposition, and other Senators I might mention, without reference to the Senator from North Dakota, who voted against the motion to table the motion that was made to recommit that bill. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] also voted against it. Other Senators on that side—the Senator from Washington among them—also voted against it.

The yeas and nays had been ordered on the bill. I had the bill in charge, because the chairman of the committee was opposed to the legislation. The chairman of the committee arose here and made a motion to recommit that bill. A motion was made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] to lay that motion on the table. The yeas and nays were ordered on that motion. If the motion to recommit was carried, it meant the death of the measure. If the motion to recommit was defeated, it meant that we would have had a vote upon the bill and the bill would have passed, probably by 1 vote. The motion to lay on the table the motion to recommit the bill was lost on a vote of 42 to 44—42 for the motion and 44 against it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. FLETCHER. I will.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator should be generous enough to say that that was hardly a partisan outcome, as Senators on both sides of the Chamber voted together.

Mr. FLETCHER. I realize that. The RECORD of February 1, 1915, is here before me, and I know precisely what the vote was. The motion was lost by a vote of 42 to 44. Of course, some Democrats joined the Senators on the other side, otherwise it would not have been lost.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. But I am saying now that a great deal would have been accomplished in the way of furnishing ships if we had passed that legislation—if we had done at that time what was urged then. I am mentioning it largely because I want to assure the Senator from North Dakota, who is pleading for ships now, that I can refer him to the RECORD to show that he can have no more earnest and sincere advocate of ships than the chairman of the Commerce Committee to-day. We could have had by this time 10,000,000 tons of shipping. I took that position three and a half years ago and have held it ever since.

It has been my one plea in this body to let us get busy and lay the foundation for building an American merchant marine. At that time—in 1914—I did not see, of course, and I do not claim to have foreseen, this world disaster, but the commercial conditions were perfectly plain. We needed the ships to carry on our foreign trade, to do our export and import business. The rates of freight were going up from 10 per cent to 1,000 per cent. Our commerce was being burdened by reason of the high rates that were being charged. It was perfectly plain that if we were to maintain ourselves upon any plane of prosperity as a manufacturing, producing, and commercial country we must have our own ships. We were precisely in the position of a merchant on one corner doing business, who was dependent upon his competitor in business across the street to deliver his goods. From that standpoint it was perfectly plain that the Government must undertake to build ships, because private enterprise for 50 years, encouraged, nursed, and helped as it had been, had failed us utterly in that extremity, and we must go into that business.

But later on, when the war burst forth, when the thunderbolts were let loose in a deadly assault upon the democracy of the world, it became plain that in that situation we had to have ships, because the foreign shipowners upon whom we had been depending were not in a position to serve us. Between 1914 and 1916—in August, we will say, of those years—Great Britain had taken out of commission as merchant ships 12,000,000 tons. The world's tonnage in 1914 was about 45,000,000 tons. Of that, Great Britain had about 21,000,000. Between August, 1914, and August, 1916, Great Britain's mercantile tonnage had shrunk to 12,000,000 tons. Her tonnage had decreased 9,000,000 tons up to that time—not all lost, because a good many of her ships had been requisitioned for war purposes, for hospitals, for transports, and for other things. At any rate they were taken off the ocean, so far as commerce was concerned. So in September, 1916, Congress began to see that situation and finally passed the present law; but a great many of those who opposed the bill in 1914 still continued their opposition in 1916, and it was after a severe struggle that we were able to get the legislation under which we are working to-day and which constitutes the sheet anchor of our hopes in this great struggle.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator has truly stated what the record shows, but the Senator has failed to state what the record did not fully disclose and that which governed the vote upon that proposition at that time. It was well understood, well believed, at least, by a great many Senators that a propaganda at that time was attempting to foist upon this Government the German ships that had been interned in our ports. We did not intend to let any propaganda get an option on them and sell them to the Government; and while that matter was under discussion, as I remember, two attempts were made to so amend the bill that it would prevent our purchase of those German ships. We did not need to purchase them. We have gotten them to-day without purchase, and the vote that really decided the question was that vote, which was influenced entirely by the question whether or not we should authorize the Government to buy those interned German vessels. The majority of the Senate refused to do that. If that had been cut out, if we had a bill even at that time saying that you shall proceed to construct new vessels and not buy vessels that we already owned, I think there would have been little difficulty.

Mr. REED. May I ask the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. REED. I desire the privilege of asking the Senator from North Dakota whether, if we had bought those German ships and had paid for those German ships at that time, and obtained a delivery of them with a free, clear title, without any complications with England—and, of course, it goes without saying they would not have been purchased if there had been complications—if the ships would not have paid for themselves four or five times over before the time arrived when we actually did seize them?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I can not tell how many times the ships would have paid for themselves, because I do not know what the exorbitant price would be which would be charged to the Government for them. We had the ships. It was not necessary for us to purchase them.

Mr. REED. If the Senator from Florida will pardon me, we did not have the ships. We did not have any legal right to seize them. If we had seized them at that time it would have been an act of war. It would have been an act almost equivalent to piracy to have taken those ships. We had no right on earth to them. The right we finally got to those ships was the right we acquired as a belligerent after the war had arisen between us and Germany.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. There is not a Senator who took any part in the debate who does not know that England protested against the Government of the United States buying those German ships, and that France protested against the purchase of them by the United States Government. It will be found in the RECORD, and everybody understood it at the time.

Mr. REED. That is a different question from the one I am discussing.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in reference to the mere question as to what it would have been worth to us if we had purchased the ships, upon the basis of freight to-day those ships would have earned $5,000,000 every month. Five million dollars a month is what they would have earned in freight alone. But, Mr. President, outside of that I will state to the Senator from Utah, his statement with regard to the protest of France and Great Britain is altogether new to me. I never heard of it. I am quite clear that both England and France would have been perfectly willing for us to acquire German or any other ships. It was wholly unnecessary to obtain any expression from them, because we could not have bought the German ships if we had wanted to buy them. That testimony is before a committee of the Senate. If the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] were on the floor, he was chairman of the special committee, and he could state that the agent in New York of the Hamburg-American Line came here to Washington and testified before that committee that his Government had forbidden the sale of those ships to any power or any country or any person, and that they could not be bought under any circumstances. That evidence was before the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. If that is so then it is idle to talk about it and to talk about the great advantage it would have been to this Government.

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly it is, and I am merely reinforcing what the Senator from Missouri suggested in answer to the objection of the Senator from North Dakota to the purchase of them. As a business proposition it would have paid us to do it if we could have done it, but I said in the outset it is idle to talk about it, because we could not have purchased or chartered the German ships, and that was known and opposing the bill because of such a fear was a mere pretense and an excuse, permit me to say to the gentlemen on the other side, urged at that time against that bill, because they had not any sort of evidence that it was possible for the Government to buy those ships.

Mr. GALLINGER. If it was a pretense and excuse on this side, it must have been a pretense and excuse on the part of some Senators on the other side also. But the Senator from Missouri predicated his argument upon the ground that we ought to have taken the ships and they would have paid for themselves over and over again. The Senator from Florida says we could not have gotten them, because Germany would not have sold them.

Mr. FLETCHER. We certainly could not have gotten them. That is absolutely true, and they swore before a committee of this body that they would not sell them; that their Government had forbidden the transfer of the ships.

Mr. GALLINGER. That disposes, then, of that question absolutely.

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly; that is what I have always said, that there was nothing in that claim whatever, because it was out of our power to get them even if we wanted to get them. But nobody expected to buy them, so far as I know. I was unwilling, as far as I was concerned, having charge of the bill at that time, to strike out of the bill all authority to purchase ships, because I did not know where we might have the opportunity to get ships, without any regard to the German ships.

Mr. GALLINGER. If I remember the history of that contest, an amendment was offered on this side to exclude the purchase of those ships, and it was voted down by Democratic Senators.

SENATOR GALLINGER'S EIGHTY-FIRST BIRTHDAY.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the presence of the Senator from New Hampshire at this time reminds me that this is his eighty-first birthday. He is the oldest Member of this body not only in point of years, which he bears so well and so gracefully, but the oldest in point of service, and he is also the most lovable of all the Members of the Senate. I wish to break in upon this storm of discussion for a brief moment to speak in the name of my brethren on this side of the Chamber and say that we all congratulate the Senator that he has arrived at that stage of life's journey when—

> Age o'er his brow has wrinkles flung,
> But his heart, his heart is ever young.

We, his colleagues, extend to him our congratulations, coupled with the earnest hope that he may be for many years spared to his family, his friends, the Senate of the United States, and to his country.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, had I known that my good friend, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], had in mind to say a word that touches my heart very deeply I certainly would not have engaged in the debate that was taking place when I entered the Chamber. It has been said that there are times when the tongue of man can not speak what the heart feels, and certainly this is to me an occasion of that kind.

If I can make myself believe, Mr. President, that I have the undivided respect and affection of the membership of this great body, and particularly the Members of the Democratic side of this Chamber, with whom I so often differ in debate, it is the highest possible reward that I could ask for a long service and for what I have endeavored to make a useful service.

I have had no controversy during the 27 years of my membership in the Senate with any Senator that lasted overnight. I have an affection for every Member of this body, and whether I shall be here a long or a short period in the future I trust that when the time comes for me to leave this body I shall leave it with the regard that the Senator from Colorado assures me I have to-day.

I thank the Senator from Colorado for his exceedingly kind and generous words. I thank the membership of the Senate for the many assurances that I have had from time to time of their good will. I certainly shall endeavor in the future, as I have in the past, to treat every Member of this great legislative body as I should wish to be treated myself, with a view of having their respect and affection, and with the hope that it may be merited on my part.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I hope it will not be considered presumptuous upon my part to assume to speak for this side of the Chamber under these circumstances.

The Senator from New Hampshire has most gracefully and feelingly expressed his high appreciation of the courtesy of the other side of the Chamber. I hope it is not amiss, Mr. President, for me, speaking for my fellow Republican Members of this Chamber, to say that we also deeply appreciate the courtesy, the breadth, and the kindness that inspired the sentiments expressed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], and that we wish to add an humble word to the expression of sympathy and the expression of appreciation which the beneficiary of your kindly act has just uttered.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I did not, of course, anticipate the interruption of the discussion. It has taken such a turn that I shall not longer continue it. I think perhaps the main object of my rising at the time has been accomplished anyhow. I simply want to conclude by joining the Senator from Colorado in his remarks and in expressing with him the sentiments which he has better uttered than I could with reference to the senior Senator from New Hampshire, our friend upon the other side.

I have no animosities in this Chamber that I know of. On this side and the other my friendship extends individually and collectively to every Member. When I first came to the Senate it was my privilege to become closely acquainted with the senior Senator from New Hampshire. I served with him on various committees, and he does me the honor to pair with me in a general way, and it has been a source of very great delight and very great pleasure always to be engaged with him in the work which devolves upon us here.

Speaking with reference to all on the other side, I appreciate all their manifestations of courtesy and their cooperation, but I am sure my friends will excuse me when I say, with the best wishes for long life and continued health, our felicitations are extended now to "the noblest Roman of them all."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I join in the congratulations and expressions of good will so fittingly presented by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] and by the other Senators who have just spoken. In the excitement of debate and in the stress of political battle we say many things which afterwards are the occasion of regret. We gain prejudices of which we afterwards are sometimes ashamed. No man who amounts to anything in this world fails to arouse antagonisms. The man who counts must give and take blows. The Senator from New Hampshire is possessed of that high spirit which compels him to contend for the cause in which he is enlisted regardless of his personal fortunes. Always he has fought with a high degree of chivalry; nevertheless he has not escaped unjust and sometimes bitter criticism. Such is the fate of all who in the public forum play the part of men. On the occasion of this his eighty-first birthday I desire to say that while I seldom agree upon matters of policy with the Senator from New Hampshire, I nevertheless always have believed he has been inspired by a high order of patriotism and guided by unsullied honesty.

The reason we differ is simply because we are of different schools of thought. That, indeed, is, after all, the sole reason for the differences between the two sides of this Chamber.

There ought therefore to be no rancor or personal feeling in this body. I hope it will not often appear to disturb our counsels. In concluding what I have to say let me join in the hope that many more years of useful service to his country lie ahead of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, and that when his services end, as all men's service must end some day, I am sure no honest man will ever say a word in any manner reflecting upon the honor, sincerity, or patriotism of JACOB H. GALLINGER, of New Hampshire.

Passing from that, I desire to say a word with reference to the controversy of yesterday, and I think it is a very appropriate time to say that word. I shall say it very briefly.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator yield to me for just a moment in connection with what he has just said?

Mr. REED. What I have to say will be said in two or three or a half dozen sentences, and then I will yield the floor to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I only want to say a word in connection with what the Senator from Missouri has so appropriately and well said in regard to our colleague from New Hampshire. I did not want to allow the occasion to pass without a word from me, because I have served with him longer than has anyone else in the Senate.

Mr. REED. I gladly yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, Senator GALLINGER is the only Senator now in the Senate who was here when I entered it. We had previously been in the House of Representatives together. Our friendship is one that covers many years. It has been an unbroken friendship, and has grown stronger with every year that has passed.

We have here our differences of party principles, but this day, as we congratulate him on his reaching the age of 81 in such splendid condition, both mentally and physically, we think of him as a man and a friend, and there is nothing to exceed his devotion to the public through all these years. Whether the service was conspicuous or inconspicuous, it was for the public good. He has never spared himself. His honesty, his strength of conviction, his high character are known to all men.

I am not going to enter into a protracted eulogy of him. I only want to tell him what he knows without my saying it in public, that the affection I feel for him would not be satisfied if I did not express here, in the presence of all, my sense of his great public service and the value that his loyal friendship through all these years has been to me.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, very merited tributes have been justly paid to the ability and patriotism of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. I merely wish to express in a word my appreciation of the uniform courtesy which has always governed his every action and association in this body, and to say that it has been highly appreciated by me and shall ever be most kindly remembered.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, the people of the western part of our country and I, in common with them, have peculiar reasons to feel a great tenderness toward the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] and to congratulate ourselves on his presence in the Senate of the United States.

The breadth of statesmanship displayed by him has been peculiar to himself, when his surroundings are considered. In all the fights for statehood which have been waged by the Western Territories, Senator GALLINGER, of New Hampshire, has always stood the champion of the Western people; and for the State of Arizona I desire to express here publicly its thanks to him for the warm, broad-minded, considerate manner in which he has constantly treated the ambitions of that struggling people.

Personally I know of no man in the Senate who is more deservedly popular than is the Senator from New Hampshire; and when that end shall come to us, which must come to all, I pray God for each and every one of us that we may lay down our burdens as unsullied, as unstained, and with hands as clean, as will the Senator from New Hampshire when he shall have appeared for the last time among us.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have served now for nearly a quarter of a century as a national Federal legislator in one body or the other. The service of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] has been synchronous with mine and preceding it. I never knew him to be even accidentally right upon any question of purely partisan politics. Somehow or other, even if an accident could intervene to persuade him from a provincial or sectional standpoint to vote right incidentally, while he was wrong from my standpoint generally, he never availed himself of it.

I have never known a sweeter person, a man who was more of a real man, honest, true, faithful, and brave in the entertainment and expression of opinion than the Senator from New Hampshire. When a partially reconstructed rebel can say that about a down-east Yankee, that ought to go pretty far.

I have served with him on committees, I have served with him in this body, and I have never yet seen the day, as far apart as he and I were and are politically, when a statement of his about a matter of fact did not carry with me absolute verity, not verisimilitude, as statements of that sort coming from Representatives and Senators generally do, but absolute verity. I would no more doubt his word, I would no more doubt his integrity, intellectual or moral, than I would doubt my own.

It is a matter of great consequence to be able to say upon the eighty-first birthday of a "standpat," partisan Republican, notwithstanding all the outside uplifting and progressiveness of the universe, that nobody representing any faction of any party can bring forward a man who has been braver and truer and more honest from his standpoint—I started to say than Senator GALLINGER, but I will say than Dr. GALLINGER, because I believe he prefers to be called "doctor."

When I look back over all the long legislation for the improvement of the sanitary conditions of the District of Columbia and the efforts of the Senator from New Hampshire as a member of the District Committee and other committees dealing with those matters, when I see how great an improvement there has been since a quarter of a century ago, when I first came here, and when I remember that most of it has come about by his initiative, I think that the whole people of the United States owe it to themselves to render God thanks—not him—that he has reached his eighty-first birthday.

Of course I know the Senator from New Hampshire well enough to know that if he could have escaped this occasion, he would have done so; but, under the providence of God, he can not escape it; he just had to live this long; God decreed it years ago.

Mr. President, my temperament is such that I either love men or hate them; nobody is indifferent to me. I hate men when I hate them because I think they are untrue, I think they are insincere, I think that they camouflage; and I love men when I love them because I think they are true and do not camouflage and are not insincere. I love an open enemy who fights me to the hilt of the dagger very much more than I love a fellow with velvet gloves who seeks an aperture under my fifth rib without advising me beforehand that he is going to seek it. I think that Senator GALLINGER falls within the lines of the people whom I love, and whom I have a right to love and do love, because they are honest and because I try to be honest.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. On behalf of the committee of conference I submit to the Senate a report of the conferees on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to Senate joint resolution 133.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia submits a conference report, which will be read.

The Secretary read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 133) authorizing the granting of insurance under the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department" approved September 2, 1914, as amended by the act approved October 6, 1917, on application by a person other than the person to be insured, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House, and agree to the same.

JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
HOKE SMITH,
REED SMOOT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

T. W. SIMS,
SAM RAYBURN,
A. E. WINSLOW,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will inquire if the Senate has been informed as to whether the House has taken action on the report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that there has been no message as yet from the House of Representatives regarding the conference report.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In connection with presenting this report I desire to withdraw the separate report made on yesterday by the Senate conferees. On yesterday, for the Senate conferees alone, I presented a statement that we had conceded all the House amendments in conference, and that therefore no conference report was necessary, we having yielded entirely to the House. We came in the Senate and asked that the Senate recede from its disagreement and concur in the House amendments. There was some discussion upon the subject; and while I still entertain the view that either plan is entirely satisfactory, I myself from the first preferred the plan of a formal report from the conferees. Since I presented the action of the Senate conferees the conferees have met and have agreed upon a joint report that has gone to the House, and I present it now to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report submitted by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; the conference report must be acted upon by the other House first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was the Chair's first understanding, but the Secretary informed the Chair that the Senator from Georgia had presented a conference report.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I merely send it to the desk and ask to withdraw the formal resolution which I offered yesterday, as the conferees have agreed in giving this direction to the matter and submit a formal conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Georgia is granted. The Chair hears no objection, and the conference report will lie on the table for the present.

SENATORIAL ELECTION IN WISCONSIN.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I wish, without taking up the time of the Senate by requesting that the Secretary read it at the desk, to request, in lieu of that, that there be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an editorial appearing in the Milwaukee Journal entitled "Ask LENROOT to withdraw. Republican organs in State ask union on Davies. Leading German-language organ of Milwaukee among G. O. P. papers"—"G. O. P." means the good old party—"now supporting President's choice."

I also ask to have inserted in the RECORD an article appearing in the same paper on March 25 entitled "Duty of LENROOT. Indiana Republican organ says it is to withdraw."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think this is absolutely unnecessary, and I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi has not concluded.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I also ask that there be inserted in the RECORD, appearing upon page 3 of the same paper, an article entitled "Why LENROOT is unavailable. Chicago Republican paper calls Chairman West's bluff. Chance Wisconsin would take with LENROOT as Senator. Chairman West passes the lie, and now it is up to him to show who is telling a lie."

I ask that, upon the second column of that same paper, there be printed a communication of Chairman West denying certain charges against Mr. LENROOT, so that both sides of the controversy may appear in parallel columns in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I object, and I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made by the Senator from Utah to the request of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well. Hand it to me, then, and I will stand here in my place and read it all. It will take about three hours.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I demand the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah demands the regular order. We are still in the morning business, and reports of committees only are in order at the present time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not know any rule of this body that forbids a Senator who has acquired the recognition of the Chair from talking as long as he pleases upon any subject.

Mr. SMOOT. I call for the regular order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall therefore proceed to talk, and talk upon this particular subject, by reading these articles.

Mr. KENYON. Regular order!

Mr. SMOOT. Regular order, Mr. President!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is called for, and in the morning hour the Chair thinks that the regular order, being demanded, must be followed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that, but I am within the regular order. I am now talking about the regular order, and I am going to continue to talk about the regular order. I do not know of any rule of this body—I have tried to find a rule very many times—that could shut a Senator off from talking when he wanted to talk. I think it would be very valuable if the Chair could find a rule of that sort, but I have never discovered it, and I do not think there is any rule of that sort; and if I am to be made a martyr in order that a rule of that sort may be established I shall be very glad of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Regular order!

Mr. KENYON. Regular order!

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. President, having addressed myself to the Chair and having been recognized, I shall proceed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is compelled to rule that the Senator from Mississippi is not in order. There is nothing before the Senate at the present time. There is no report of a committee before the Senate, which is the regular order; and the regular order is that prescribed in the procedure for the morning hour.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do I understand that the Chair has finally ruled that there is some limitation to a Senator's right to talk; because, if that is true, I shall be very glad of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair will make that ruling during the morning hour.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well. I am doubly glad that the Senator from Delaware happens to be the presiding officer of this august body. I have been waiting for years for some assertion that at some time, somewhere, somehow, a Senator might be cut short from talking indefinitely; and I am glad to welcome the fact that I am the Senator who has been cut short.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reports of committees are in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Later on, when we get out of the morning hour, I shall assume the floor once more, and then I do not believe that even the Senator from Utah can cut me off from talking indefinitely, indescribably, foolishly, or otherwise, just as I please, as other Senators have done from time immemorial.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Has the morning business been concluded?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. We are still in the morning business. The introduction of bills and joint resolutions is in order.

After the presentation of certain bills and joint resolutions, which appear under the appropriate heading,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, the morning business is closed.

REGISTRATION FOR MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution 124.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 124) providing for the registration for military service of all male persons citizens of the United States or residing in the United States who have, since the 5th day of June, 1917, and on or before the day set for the registration by proclamation by the President, attained the age of 21 years, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe under the terms of the act approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment is that of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW].

PUNISHMENT OF ESPIONAGE.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I do not wish to open a political debate. What I have to say I hope will not arouse any antagonism or partisanship.

Mr. President, I am in favor of pitiless publicity when it is the truth. I favor criticism when it is just. I deplore criticism when it is unjust. I am going to unfold, I think, a tale which is true, which I believe some of the Senators who arose on this floor and criticized the Aircraft Board and the administration will regret, and I desire that it be given pitiless publicity.

I am not here to defend the Aircraft Board. I know very little about their work. But on yesterday afternoon, after the Congress had adjourned, I had a meeting of the subcommittee, in which certain amendments adopted by the House were requested by the Attorney General not to be agreed to—amendments to a bill that has passed the Senate making it a crime to injure property of the United States in the interest of the enemy. It went to the House of Representatives, and they amended it by making it read "injuring by violence," when, Mr. President, a great deal of injurious work has been done through spies that was not done by violence. They also provided that it must be done with intent, when we had one case where a mechanic in one of the great Government arsenals, in using a piece of pasteboard to separate the component parts that go into the shells, instead of using the pasteboard threw it aside, not, as he says, for the purpose or with the intent of injuring the United States for the benefit of the enemy, but in order that he might make more money from a commercial standpoint. He was making them by the piece, and he could make 10 without the pasteboard to 1 with the pasteboard; and therefore, in order to make money, he left it out and thousands and thousands of shells had to be thrown away.

Then, Mr. President, in order to give a hearing on this matter, there came into my office a very prominent man in the United States, who is on the detective force. He brought with him this bracket which I hold in my hand. It is a bracket which goes on each side of the Bristow fighting machine. It holds the radiator rod that goes through here upon the machine. He brought me that to show what German spies had done. I stated upon this floor when the espionage bill was up—and I was criticized for making extravagant statements—that there are 100,000 spies in this country, and I am here to say now that I believe, instead of 100,000, there are 400,000.

What has been done? Why have we no fighting machines in France? Why have we not carried out our schedule in furnishing on the 1st day of April two or three hundred Bristow fighting machines? That was the contract. They were to be furnished. Why was it not done? Because a German spy, as any Senator can see, had cut the steel in two and filled it with lead and then painted it over, and when the first machine was tried out it fell to the ground. A British officer, an inspector of that great plant, in order to see what was the matter, found that this piece of steel had been tampered with. That delayed the building of the Bristow machines for more than two months. Why? Because every machine had to be examined, and these pieces had to be made over again. An investigation had to be made, because the men making the machines did not know how these machines had been interfered with and what other devilish work had been done.

Mr. President, if I were Secretary of War or the President of the United States, I would commandeer the Curtiss plant and turn out every man in that plant and hire only loyal Americans and dispense with those under suspicion. I want to say, in passing, that some of the leading men in that plant have German names. I make no charge upon those men; they may be innocent men, but they have strange names to me. But we do know that spies are in that plant, and they have delayed the furnishing of the Bristow machines or fighting planes on time to Pershing, and that is the cause of it. Any man can examine that.

I desire to give the name of this detective to the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee and let him look at the maps showing where this probably was done, in the paint shop—they have not discovered the man yet—and let him have these men here and examine them, and then they will find out why fighting machines have not been sent to Gen. Pershing. I accidentally caught on to it by an examination of this witness before a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee. To have sent these machines to France probably would have meant the death of every young man who has gone or will go to France to fly and fight for his country.

This is an answer to some of the criticisms made on this floor on Tuesday. Let us stop fighting among ourselves and fight the war.

REGISTRATION FOR MILITARY SERVICE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 124) providing for the registration for military service of all male persons citizens of the United States or residing in the United States who have, since the 5th day of June, 1917, and on or before the day set for the registration by proclamation by the President, attained the age of 21 years, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe under the terms of the act approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, when the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] a few moments ago asked me to yield to him I was about to say that it is with very great regret I learn of the bitter political debate which occurred in the Senate on yesterday. Since the war began we have heard very little of politics upon this floor. The one or two outbursts that have come have been occasioned by matters arising outside of the Chamber. The debate of yesterday appears to be an unfortunate exception.

A battle is raging in Europe that may involve the fate of civilization for a thousand years. English and French and American soldiers are dying side by side. They are falling by the hundreds, by the thousands, by the tens of thousands, their blood uniting in one common stream and mingling with the trampled dust of the battlefield is forming a crimson cement that should forever unite the lovers of liberty, the defenders of democracy. In contrast with that battle which covers a field that stretches for hundreds of miles, every foot of which is lurid with flames belched from the mouths of innumerable cannon and wrapped in a smoke shroud that rolls from the millions of rifles; a battle that is being carried on by men who burrow deep beneath the earth and by men who fly 25,000 feet above its surface; a battle where deeds of heroism are being hourly done that outrival the glory of Marathon and the deathless valor of Thermopylae; while our own sons and brothers, at death grips with the legions of autocracy, are being forced back step by step, stubbornly fighting, gallantly dying, how small, how contemptible appears the performance in this Chamber on yesterday when the Senate, turning aside from the world tragedy, spent the day in political bickerings over a bye election about to be held in the State of Wisconsin.

Most pitiable of all was the spirit of recrimination manifested. The world is given to understand that the aisle between the Republican side and the Democratic side marks a separation between American citizens; that the election of a Democrat in the State of Wisconsin or the election of a Republican in Wisconsin will have a tremendous effect upon this war, because, forsooth, there is a difference in the character of the loyalty of Republicans and Democrats. I utterly repudiate that doctrine.

It will be conceded without argument that I have been, perhaps, as bitter a partisan Democrat as has sat in this Chamber for many years. I have found but little I could agree with in the matter of mere domestic policies that were advanced by my Republican brethren. I said this morning, and I repeat, we are of different schools of political thought. I abominate the ideas and theories you may have advanced with reference to your protective tariff. I have not agreed with your financial policies; I can not accept your theories of banking and currency; upon all questions of that kind I am in disagreement with you. I can unhesitatingly stand here and contend with you over them. But, when it comes to a question of loyalty to this Government, I deny that there can be drawn a line between a loyal Democrat and a loyal Republican.

I have watched the course of affairs in the Senate and I know as I look across this aisle that I am looking into the faces of men whose sons are, some of them, upon the battle line, some of them in training camps, some of them upon the blue waves of the ocean, either upon battleships or upon those wasps of the sea that are seeking to destroy the submarines that menace our communication with our allies. As I look upon this side I see men whose sons are engaged in the same loyal service. As I look into the hearts of all here I know that each man would give his last drop of blood that surges through his veins if he could bring victory to our arms and a glorious fruition to our hopes.

So I appeal to the Senate that we shall have done with these miserable little political bickerings. Let the election go on in Wisconsin. Let us go on with our business here. I say as a Democrat if I were a voter in Wisconsin I would vote for the Democratic candidate, but I also say as a Democrat that if either one of the leading candidates is returned a loyal man will be sworn in at yonder desk.

Now, I appeal for another thing. I appeal that Senators shall keep their heads in all matters. The sentiment was expressed this morning by my distinguished friend the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] in words better than I have employed. There have been mistakes made, disappointments have come to us and will come, and wherever a mistake is made it is the duty of loyal men to point out that mistake. If a man is doing something which a Senator believes will injure the country, he ought instantly to call attention to it. Any other policy is a policy of suicide. It is also a policy of imbecility. But when we find a mistake has been made it ought not to be overstated. The fact ought to be given and not something that is a gross exaggeration of the fact.

The matter that led me to take the floor this morning was the remark just made by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. He called attention to some trouble with aeroplanes. I think I ought to say to the Senate that I have taken occasion to look somewhat into the situation with reference to our aeroplane program. We are not up to that program, it is true, but statements have been made upon the floor of the Senate to the effect that the Liberty motor is a failure; that our whole aeroplane effort is broken down. The impression is given to many Senators and to the country that all we have done in the way of an air program has ignominiously failed.

Mr. President, the Liberty motor is not a failure. I talked on yesterday with the expert the British Government has sent here, the man whose business it has been for nearly three years to create the motors for the air service of England. I saw the cable in which English governmental officers were insisting upon the speediest delivery to them of 3,000 of these motors.

Now, will any man claim that the British Government, with its expert upon the ground, and perhaps the greatest expert in the world, is insistent upon having 3,000 worthless motors?

The French Government, according to the best information I have, has ordered a large number of these motors. The Italian, I am informed, has ordered a large number, I was told 3,000 or more. Those Governments are not ordering a worthless machine. They know a good machine. They have tried this question out upon the battle field in actual contest. The answer I make to all these criticisms is this: Although we may have met with some disappointments it is not fair, it is not right, to say that the Liberty motor is a failure.

Senators are sometimes misled, as are other people. The question is raised whether we have a motor which is employed in the type of machine that is to be used only by a few great expert fliers and fighters. It is probably true that the British have one type of machine, which is made almost entirely by hand and which can only be made slowly, that is superior to the Liberty motor, and will therefore be employed in the very highest class of fighting machines as a preferential engine.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of New Mexico in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. KNOX. I share with the view expressed by the Senator from Missouri in regard to the construction of motors and unifying construction, but I am sure the Senator does not wish to be misunderstood in his statement in respect to the Liberty motor. I have listened with great interest to what has been said on the floor of the Senate upon that subject, because I was somewhat startled by rumors I had heard in regard to it. As I gathered the statement, it amounted to this, that the lighter machines which were designed for the battle planes had turned out to be practically a failure and have been discarded, but the larger machines were found to be entirely effective and efficient for driving what they call bombing planes. Now, if that is correct, I think the statements made by the Senator from Missouri are somewhat misleading, because I do not understand that the charge was generally against the Liberty motor, but specifically as to the lighter motor for battle planes.

Mr. REED. I was not referring to a statement that might have been made by any particular individual on any particular day. I am referring to general statements that have been floating around. Some expressions I have heard made upon the floor at different times have been quite as broad as I have put the case. I want the Senator from Pennsylvania to understand I was not referring to something somebody might have said on yesterday.

Mr. President, I do not think the statement, as finally made by the Senator from Pennsylvania, will be found to be quite in accordance with all that has been accomplished. My understanding is that we started in to make a light plane, and that in the rapid development of the airplane business it was found we had passed rather beyond that. The same motor is now used but with more cylinders.

The original plan of this motor was to build it so that units could be added. The first machine I saw contemplated a 12-cylinder motor. My understanding is that this motor will drive a machine that can be used not only for bombing purposes, but it will drive a really fine fighting machine, and it will answer every purpose, except, it may be said, that the English have a motor enough superior so that it will be employed upon the very highest class of fighting machine where there are only one or two men who ride the machine. In other words, I think the situation is much more hopeful than it has been presented.

Now, a word more about the motor and I am through with this statement.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator answer just one question there, and I am asking it for information?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Is there any reason in the world why we can not produce a motor equal in efficiency to that used in France or in Great Britain?

Mr. REED. Let me answer that in this way. We are engaged in a quantitative production, a production that when it is under way will mean that vast quantities of these motors will be turned out by machinery. The tooling, the finishing, practically everything, is done by machinery. The English make a motor for the very highest class of fighting machine that is made almost entirely by hand. It requires infinite labor and fitting and time, and there are only a limited number of men capable of that particular class of work. Of course, in time we will perhaps reach a point even better than the motors that are now being made by any country. But understand, this motor had to be designed, it had to be built, it had to be worked out in the factories, and we started in on the plan of quantity production.

I think I can say that, while we have been delayed and have not made as much headway as we hoped, many of the delays which have come were unavoidable. There were nearly a thousand changes, first and last, made in this motor, most of them small, most of them trifling. There have been some delays, and I say to you frankly I believe that one great trouble has been in the War and Navy Departments, for it has not been the Aircraft Board that has had the construction of these machines. It has been done through the War and Navy Departments, and I think there are delays there. I think there can be reforms there that will be of great benefit.

Whatever those objections are, they ought to be met, but I am trying to give the impression which I think is the truthful one, that in a very short time we will be turning out vast quantities of these motors and that they will be a most useful part of the war machinery.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I just ask the Senator a question, because I think he will agree with me. We ought not to send to Europe for our boys' use a machine that will be inferior to the machine of the enemy. We ought to secure a better one if possible. I do not think the Senator would suggest that we should even start in with a machine, whether it is machine made or hand made, that is not equivalent at least to the best machine used by the enemy against us.

Mr. REED. Of course, from one viewpoint what the Senator said is correct, but let me present it to him in this way. Let us assume that there are about four different types of machine that must constantly be in use. There is a training machine. It can be made in quantities. There is a scouting machine. Our motor does the work for that in fine shape. There is a bombing machine. Our motor does the work for that in splendid shape. Then, we have a fighting machine that is not as good as the very best, but still is a machine that is of very great practical power. Suppose we can make vast quantities of these machines for the first three types I have named and leave some British and French machine shops to make the highest class of fighting machines; is it not wise to go on and produce a quantity and to do that as rapidly as possible? I am not saying they are perfection. I am simply saying I think we ought to get the right viewpoint.

There has been great complaint made about delay in producing the finished machines. There are some facts with reference to that the Senate ought to know which I learned by conversation with these gentlemen. I am not sure that it is new to anybody; it was new to me.

When we started to build aeroplanes we were talking, to a large extent, about the ordinary aeroplanes. It is, outside the motor, a simple device. A modern plane is a very complicated machine that is changing every day, almost every moment. I am told a modern fighting aeroplane, aside from the motor, carries an aerial telephone, an aerial telegraph outfit, a great number of the most delicate instruments, a photographic appliance of the most perfect character, so that pictures can be taken from 20,000 feet in the air; it carries oxygen gas, so that the aviator can breathe at great altitudes; also an appliance by which he can warm his body by turning in an electric current and warm his hands and his feet. It is, in short, a most complicated, intricate, and delicate machine. In fact, it is several complicated and intricate machines, all made of the lightest possible material, all so arranged that it will not interfere with the almost lightninglike evolution that the aviator must perform in battle. In addition to what I have said, it carries from one to three guns, and these rapid-fire guns have to be so artfully timed they will fire between the propeller blades when revolving with the rapidity of lightning without striking the propeller.

Now, to make a thing like that takes time. It means the greatest conceivable difficulties. So if we find there are some delays in the machine we ought not to lose heart; we ought not to be hypercritical; we should always require that the best foot be put forward and the best and highest talent of the country be employed. I do not claim there have been no mistakes, but I hope the facts I have stated may in some respect tend to clear up certain misunderstandings.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

During the speech of Mr. REED,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 8696) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

After the conclusion of Mr. REED's speech,

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of House bill 8696.

Mr. ASHURST. Yesterday when the bill was under consideration a point of order was made and was sustained as to the amendment proposed by the committee on pages 5 and 6.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of New Mexico in the chair). Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], I think, has corrected that matter.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well, then.

Mr. GRONNA. It was corrected when the Senator from Arizona was not in his seat.

Mr. ASHURST. In order that I may understand the situation on the point of order that was made against the amendment on page 5, I ask if the point of order that was made against the amendment on page 5 simply struck from the bill that part of the amendment commencing after the word "Provided," on line 21, page 5, and extending down to and including the word "further," on page 6, line 4?

Mr. GRONNA. I will state to the Senator it is my understanding that the point of order was made against peyote, but not against the provision for the prosecution of people who might bring liquor into an Indian reservation.

Mr. ASHURST. That is what I wished to be correctly informed upon.

Mr. GRONNA. There are two provisos in the amendment, or rather there are two amendments, and it was against the first amendment the Senator from Oklahoma made a point of order. That has been corrected, I understand. If I am mistaken, I wish the Chair would inform me.

Mr. ASHURST. Let the Secretary read, beginning on page 5, the item for suppressing the liquor traffic so that we will be able to understand what action was taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. The part stricken out on a point of order commenced on page 5, line 21, after the numerals "$150,000," and is in the following words:

Provided, That the sale of anhalonium or peyote to an Indian, or its introduction into the Indian country, shall be, and is hereby, declared to be a violation of the acts of July 23, 1892 (27 Stat. L., p. 260), and January 30, 1897 (29 Stat. L., p. 506), and punishable in accordance with the penalties provided for therein.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well. Then I simply move to strike out the word "further," in line 4, page 6, after the word "Provided," so as to read:

Provided, That possession by a person of intoxicating liquors in the country where the introduction is prohibited by treaty or Federal statute shall be an offense and punished in accordance with the provisions of the acts of July 23, 1892 (27 Stat. L., p. 260), and January 30, 1897 (29 Stat. L., p. 506).

I ask that amendment to the amendment be made.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Now, according to the record I have kept, that concludes the committee amendments. I ask the Chair if that is true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is. The matter now pending is the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] which has been read, and it is before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have it read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 66, after line 4, at the end of the item relating to the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians, it is proposed to insert the following:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, from funds on deposit to the credit of the Chickasaw Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma, the sum of $15,000 to be used for construction and equipment of dormitories at the Murray

State School of Agriculture at Tishomingo, Okla., and to be immediately available in addition to the sum of $50,000 provided for the same use by section 18 of the Indian appropriation act of March 2, 1917.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I understand, that is the same amendment that was offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], as to which he said that the Indians themselves requested this appropriation.

Mr. ASHURST. That is true. It is not an appropriation out of the Treasury, but out of Indian funds.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood that it was out of the Indian funds.

Mr. ASHURST. And they wish it to be made.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona rose.

Mr. ASHURST. If my colleague will yield to me for a moment before we leave the question of peyote, I wish to ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD, without reading them, a telegram from the governor of the State of Utah and one also from the governor of the State of Nevada on the subject of peyote. These telegrams are in the nature of petitions, and that is the reason I ask that they be included in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission to do so will be granted.

The telegrams referred to are as follows:

SALT LAKE, UTAH, February 27, 1918.

CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

I wish to urge the passage by Congress of a measure prohibiting the use of peyote, a drug used extensively by Indians with particularly vicious results. Utah now has a law prohibiting use of the drug.

SIMON BAMBERGER, Governor.

CARSON CITY, NEV., February 20, 1918.

SENATE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C.:

Understanding that bill prohibiting interstate shipments of the drug peyote has been introduced and is to come before your committee, I take the liberty of most respectfully urging you to report this bill favorably. Nevada has passed a law prohibiting the sale of this drug, and we need the interstate prohibition act to protect our Indians. We consider this a matter of very great importance.

EMMET D. BOYLE,
Governor of Nevada.

Mr. GORE rose.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I understand the committee amendments have been disposed of, and I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] has not yet been disposed of and is now before the Senate for action. The question is on that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. I wish to say I had risen to make an inquiry as to whether or not the amendment had been disposed of. My understanding was that it had not been.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has now been agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arizona will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 25, line 13, it is proposed to add the following:

That hereafter no Indian reservation shall be created nor shall any additions be made to one heretofore created within the limits of the States of New Mexico and Arizona, except by act of Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I wish to detain the Senate but one minute about this amendment. States other than the States of New Mexico and Arizona have been protected as proposed by the amendment. Only last year there was created an enormous Indian reservation, for which there was no earthly need, in the county in which I live. It is now threatened by Executive order to enlarge other reserves affecting both New Mexico and Arizona. Notwithstanding, as I am informed, the Indians now have something like 10,000 acres of land apiece for every member of the tribe, this policy has been pursued to a point which makes us feel that when we make an appropriation from the Treasury we must have the guarantee of an act of Congress to make it good. There is no limitation on the power of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to recommend the extension to any distance or for any length of these Indian reservations in our State for the enlargement of which there is no earthly necessity.

Any one who will look at conditions in that State and at the map will know, I think, before any more public land is taken away from the people who have got to meet conditions subsequent to this war, when the Indians are so amply provided for, that it would be an outrage on the people not only of that State, but upon all who are interested in the public lands of the United States.

In connection with this matter I have prepared an exhibit, and I have had my secretary make it a little bigger, showing the areas which are devoted to Indian and forest reservations. There [indicating] are the Indian reserves which have already been made in my State, which are shown in red; the green indicates the forest reserves, and the white indicates the desert and mountain lands; all that is left. There has been taken from that State nearly half of the best land in the State. It has been dedicated to the balance of the United States in the shape of forest reserves. The department has given the land which is indicated on this map by red to the Indians, when there are 20 white men to one Indian in the State. That land [indicating] is all that is left to the State of Arizona with which to pay taxes to support its government. Then it is sought on behalf of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to run across the line into New Mexico. Senators will observe from the map that in connection with the Navajo Reservation the yellow area goes clear into the adjoining State of New Mexico. To make these enlargements either in Arizona or New Mexico is contrary to all common sense and reason.

I sincerely hope that the Senate will maintain its dignity by saying that no more public lands of the United States, which will be badly needed bye and bye, shall be carried out of the possession of the people of the United States by mere Executive order.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Arizona a question?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes.

Mr. GRONNA. I heard the Senator's amendment read only hurriedly, but, as I understand, it only applies to the States of Arizona and New Mexico.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It applies to Arizona and to New Mexico only because the other States are protected. Arizona and New Mexico have the right to that protection, and they have got to come to Congress for it. Those two States have been left out. It is only proposed to give those States the right which other States already have.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will permit me further, the Senator also discussed the question of the public lands. The Senator's amendment does not have reference to public lands, but simply has reference to the Indians; it has reference to the enlargement of Indian reservations.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The amendment provides that no other Indian reservation shall be created or that no Indian reservation now in existence shall be enlarged without being authorized by an act of Congress. That is all. It proposes to retain what Congress ought always to have kept—the right of disposition of the public lands.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I hope the amendment which has been proposed by my colleague will be adopted. I speak with familiarity as to the Indian reservations in Arizona and New Mexico. The reservations in those two States are large enough now, and even as I speak I have before me a letter from the Bureau of Indian Affairs, in which I am advised that the Interior Department has under consideration the question of making a large addition to a certain reservation in New Mexico and Arizona.

There was a tribe of Indians in Arizona, to wit, the Papagoes, which the Arizona delegation in Congress felt ought to have some small additions made to their reservation to take care of the watering places used by those Indians; indeed, we went so far in 1916 as to ask the department to set aside a proper area as an addition to their reservation, but when the Executive order came down we found to our amazement that instead of a few thousand acres being set aside, over 2,000,000 acres were set aside, and it required months for us to correct the error.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. ASHURST. I do.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does not the Senator from Arizona think that under the circumstances it would be wise to insert a provision in this amendment to the effect that any reserve created by Executive order shall be considered unlawfully created after this date, or something like that, to prevent the establishment of a reserve by Executive order before this bill goes into effect?

Mr. ASHURST. I think that is a very wise plan, and I hope my colleague will give his attention to it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It will be done, if they contemplate doing it, before this bill goes into effect. I suggest whether it would not be possible to insert a provision in this bill to make unlawful the creation of such reservations after this date? I merely make the suggestion for consideration.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I think I shall take the opportunity of adopting that suggestion, though I do not think the department will do anything contrary to the spirit of the amendment proposed. As will be remembered, however, as the Senator suggests, when some years ago a bill was passed here declaring that no further reservations should be made in certain States, the President, before the bill became a law, made reservations as big as he pleased, and then signed the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is why I suggested that there should be some such provision in the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I desire, if I possibly can, to stop that policy, because it is so manifestly unjust, but I think the department, or at least the President of the United States, on the proper showing by this map of these conditions, will consent that no more public lands shall be disposed of without the sanction of Congress being obtained before the disposition.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to say a few words with relation to the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH].

We in the West have had a large and unfortunate experience relative to the withdrawal of public lands from entry. The manner in which these reserves have been made by the Government has become almost unendurable. There is hardly a Western State in which millions and millions of acres of land have not been set aside as forest reserves. The policy became of such a serious nature that Congress passed an act that no longer should there be withdrawals of public lands for forest purposes without the consent of Congress.

Mr. President, reference has been made here to the passage of that bill 10 or 12 years ago. It passed the House and then passed the Senate, and before the conference committee could report upon it there were forest reserves equal to about 40,000,000 acres created by the proclamation of the then President of the United States. He knew, or should have known, that there was about to be passed in Congress a bill which would prevent the creation of forest reserves, and thus his action was an evasion not appreciated by the West.

Mr. President, in my opinion, Arizona has too many Indian reservations. The creation of a reserve deprives a State of the right to tax the land within its borders and is an interference with the rights of the State. It is an outrage that millions of acres of land in a sovereign State of this Union should be set aside and forever held without the right of taxation by the State. That never was in contemplation by the framers of the Constitution, because the National Government, if it should carry that principle to the extreme, would have the power to almost annihilate a State by withdrawing great portions of the land of the State from taxation.

Mr. President, it seems to me if there is no provision of law prohibiting the setting aside of Indian reservations that we ought to adopt such a provision now and have it in force as quickly as possible, so that the rights of the States may be protected against the encroachments of the Federal Government in that respect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. I send to the desk an amendment proposing to quiet titles in eastern Oklahoma. I will say to the Senate that it comes with a unanimous report from the committee; that it was drawn by the Interior Department in conjunction with the Oklahoma delegation, and is asked for at the request of the attorney representing the farm-loan bank of Wichita, who has found some difficulty with the titles in eastern Oklahoma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 63, after line 10, it is proposed to insert the following:

That a determination of the question of fact as to who are the heirs of any deceased citizen allottee of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians who may die or may have heretofore died, leaving restricted heirs, by the probate court of the State of Oklahoma having jurisdiction to settle the estate of said deceased, conducted in the manner provided by the laws of said State for the determination of heirship in closing up the estates of deceased persons, shall be conclusive of said question, and when such proceedings have heretofore been conducted in compliance with the laws of said State then in force, the judgment and final order therein entered shall have like effect as of the date of its entry: Provided, That an appeal may be taken in the manner and to the court provided by law in cases of appeal in probate matters generally: Provided further, That where the time limited by the laws of said State for the institution of administration proceedings has elapsed without their institution, as well as in cases where there exists no lawful ground for the institution of administration proceedings in said courts, a petition may be filed therein having for its object a determination of such heirship and the case shall proceed in all respects as if administration proceedings upon other proper grounds had been regularly begun: Provided further, That said petition shall be verified, and in all cases arising hereunder service by publication may be had on all unknown heirs, the service to be in accordance with the method of serving nonresident defendants in civil suits in the district courts of said State; and if any person so served by publication does not appear and move to be heard within six months from the date of the final order, he shall be concluded equally with parties personally served or voluntarily appearing.

That the lands of full-blood members of any of the Five Civilized Tribes are hereby made subject to the laws of the State of Oklahoma, providing for the partition of real estate. Any land allotted in such proceedings to a full-blood Indian or conveyed to him upon his election to take the same at the appraisement, shall remain subject to all restrictions upon alienation and taxation obtaining prior to such partition. In case of a sale under any decree, or partition, the conveyance thereunder shall operate to relieve the land described of all restrictions of every character.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I move to strike out the last word.

Now, Mr. President, I ask, in support of the motion I have just made, not wishing to take up the time of the Senate unnecessarily, to have inserted in the RECORD, without reading, an editorial appearing upon page 3 of the Milwaukee Journal of March 25 entitled "Why LENROOT is unavailable," followed by the subline "Chicago Republican paper calls Chairman West's bluff. Chance Wisconsin would take with LENROOT as Senator"——

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, we can not hear the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Mississippi speak a little louder?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I thought it rather immaterial that I should be heard. How far does the Senator from North Dakota want me to go back in my remarks?

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator does not need to go back, if he will let us hear the remainder.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. The editorial is headed "Why LENROOT is unavailable. Chicago Republican paper calls Chairman West's bluff. Chance Wisconsin would take with LENROOT as Senator, Chairman West passes the lie, and now it is up to him to show who is telling it."

Then I ask that there be inserted in the RECORD following that, Chairman West's statement headed "Who is telling a lie?" so that the two statements may appear, one correcting the other as far as possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I wish to speak a moment with respect to this matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Let us have a vote on the pending bill.

Mr. ASHURST. There is no request the Senator from Mississippi could make of me that I would object to; but, Mr. President, let me say now that we could have passed the Indian appropriation bill in 30 minutes yesterday had it not been for the miserable twaddle that Senators indulged in respecting politics. Let us in this great crisis show that we are men, and act as becomes men. Let us do the business of the country, instead of talking about something that has no relation to the subject. Now, I give warning that if any more of this political twaddle is brought into this Chamber while the bill which I have in charge is under consideration, I will move to adjourn in order that the country may know that the Senate of the United States has degraded to such a low estate that it can not do its own routine business.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Arizona, I have only to state that the Senate's "routine business" is a very contemptible thing in comparison with the war situation and the world situation as we are faced with it to-day, and what I am proposing to put in the RECORD has something to do with the war situation and the world situation. I am, of course, sorry to receive a lecture from the Senator from Arizona, and I feel absolutely reduced to insignificance by the power and force of it; but, at the same time, I believe I know something about my duties as an American citizen and something about my duties as a Member of the Senate, and I am pursuing those duties to the best of my ability.

I have not brought any politics upon this floor; I have not been guilty of any "political twaddle," as the Senator from Arizona has appeared to say. I am merely answering certain things that came out in the debate on March 26, when the troops of the allies were fighting like heroes in Europe and when we were being criticized here.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for just a moment, when I characterized the performance of yesterday as "miserable twaddle" I did not have in mind the Senator. The Senator knows I would not characterize anything he could say in that way. There was no reference to him. I was humiliated, as were all true Americans, by the spectacle of yesterday; and, so far as in me lies, it is not going to be repeated again to-day.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator has stated that he was humiliated by what occurred day before yesterday, he would have been about right.

Mr. ASHURST. I was, Mr. President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But he was confining his observations to what occurred yesterday, and I am replying to what occurred day before yesterday.

Now, Mr. President, I ask consent that there also be published in the RECORD an article appearing in the first column of the Milwaukee Journal dated Monday, March 25, entitled "Ask LENROOT to withdraw. Republican organs in State ask union on Davies. Leading German-language organ of Milwaukee among G. O. P. papers now supporting the President's choice."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Mississippi to make all of his requests at once.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator from Mississippi to make all of the requests for the insertion of matter in the RECORD at one time, so that the whole matter may be before the Senate at once. I understand that he has a number of articles for insertion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I choose to select my own course of procedure without very much suggestion from the Senator from Utah. Ordinarily, of course, I would be very glad to receive suggestions from him, but I have proffered that request and I should like to know what has become of it, because, if not granted, of course I will have to read the articles.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi to insert in the RECORD certain articles which he has named?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not believe that there is a Senator who approves of the course of the Senator from Mississippi, but I recognize that he can take the time of the Senate to read the articles into the RECORD; and for that reason I am not going to object.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am very thankful to the Senator from Utah. Do I understand, Mr. President, that the request has been granted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota has addressed the Chair.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I do not believe that in the United States Senate we should thrash out the political question which is now being fought out in Wisconsin. This is not the proper forum to try that question; and to attempt to do so is to take advantage of the candidates, because neither of them is on the floor to answer for himself. For these reasons I feel that I ought to do what I can to prevent such a proceeding. All I can do is to object to this discussion in the shape of editorials and writings being placed in the RECORD. I do not think they ought to be in the RECORD, and, therefore, I object. I appreciate the fact that the Senator from Mississippi can himself read the articles.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator having objected, in my own time I will read what follows the headings I have already indicated. [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish that the reading could be a little louder. Evidently from their response, the galleries can hear, but Senators can not hear.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have stated that, of course, the Senator can read the articles; no one can prevent that; but I hope they will be read loud enough so that we can hear them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I will attempt, in accordance with the demand of my friend from North Dakota, to raise my voice so loud that even the angels in heaven can hear if they want to listen. [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. McCUMBER. The angels in heaven evidently have heard. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let there be order in the galleries.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is at least one angel in heaven very much indisposed to hear, and that is the Senator from North Dakota. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCUMBER. No; the Senator from North Dakota hopes to hear the reading.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not intend to take up the time of the Senate unnecessarily, therefore I will read very rapidly.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I insist upon order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let there be order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The first article which I desire to read is as follows:

ASK LENROOT TO WITHDRAW—REPUBLICAN ORGANS IN STATE ASK UNION ON DAVIES—LEADING GERMAN-LANGUAGE ORGAN OF MILWAUKEE AMONG G. O. P. PAPERS NOW SUPPORTING PRESIDENT'S CHOICE.

Public opinion continues to assert itself against Congressman LENROOT as senatorial candidate—

That is from a Republican paper—

The report from Eau Claire, published in the Journal Sunday, is finding an echo everywhere. The fact that President Wilson has said almost in so many words that Mr. LENROOT is not satisfactory to the Government in this crisis is having wide influence, for men know that the President is the leader and that upon him depends whether this country loses or wins the war. Republicans without number, no matter what their criticisms of the Government may be, recognize this fact and are opposing Mr. LENROOT. C. J. Wells, editor of the conservative Republican Tomah Monitor-Herald, expresses what is in many minds when he says in his paper: "I do not want a Congress that throws crowbars into the Government's machinery."

To-day the Germania-Herold, Milwaukee, the chief German-American Republican organ in the Northwest, comes out strongly for Davies, declaring that it is the duty of all citizens to support the Government in these trying times. It says:

"We can not deny the right of the free ballot even in war time, but we can and we do most earnestly urge upon every voter of this State the beneficent effect that the hearty support of the indicated wish of the President will have in strengthening the position of this country before the outside world. War time establishes unusual conditions, and to meet the wish of the head of the Government at this time constitutes an expression of confidence. Furthermore, whatever strengthens the hand of our leader will result in the earliest possible decision and a successful outcome of our present contest with our powerful opponent.

"We urge upon the voters such an expression of confidence and such a strengthening of the hand of our President by the support of one whose close personal contact with the President places him in a natural position to be of great assistance to the head of the Nation.

"In our editorials of the last few days we have made clear to the readers the supreme necessity of the internal unity of a nation at war. Now we urge upon our readers the hearty support of Joseph E. Davies for United States Senator."

So much of that comes from this German-American Republican newspaper. Now, to go ahead with the language of the Milwaukee Journal:

Other Republican newspapers in the State have espoused the cause of Mr. Davies for reasons similar to those given by the Germania-Herold. The Eau Claire Telegram, one of the leading Republican organs of the State, referring to the Republican effort to have Mr. Davies withdraw from the race, says:

"Republican leaders might with better countenance ask Davies to withdraw if Republican leadership in the State were not chargeable with giving Wisconsin the Republican Senator who has made most of the trouble—

Of course, that refers to the present Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who ought to be expelled from this body—with giving Wisconsin Representatives in Congress who at the most critical time were blind and deaf to the war; with giving Wisconsin a governor whose passiveness toward or concessions to antiwar elements at certain times, no matter how good his intentions, produced only bad results; whose aid to LA FOLLETTE in the latter's fight against enactment of the conscription law was only one among several errors. Chickens have come home to roost, and leaders of a party which has had such a narrow escape from being plastered on its own primary ticket with the lemon-colored tag of unbelief in the Nation's cause are in no position to demand that Davies haul down his colors and march off the ground in favor of their candidate, estimable as he is conceded to be—

And I want to add that he is estimable personally. I served with him in the House for years. I have no sort of personal feeling against him. He is a very clean, upstanding, square, straight fellow personally—

Expert politicians say that LENROOT is going to be elected; that the Republican is the "dominant party" in the State—

Listen to the partisan note in all that, will you?—

that Republicans will not vote for a Democrat, and so on. But if any of them can tell why, in view of the record, the people ought to rush to save the Republican Party machine in this loyalty campaign, let it be told, and that quickly. It has not yet been divulged. We make no prediction. But we believe that this is a time to give the national administration the utmost possible encouragement and support, and that the way to do it, in view of the developments of the primary and since is to vote for Davies.

That is from the Eau Claire Telegram, one of the leading Republican organs of the State of Wisconsin, and therefore it can not be accused of partisanship:

The editor of the Tomah Monitor-Herald (conservative Republican) expresses his conviction that Mr. Davies is the best candidate in the following terms:

"I have a son in the Army, and there are thousands of others who have sons in the Army, and those sons in the Army need and must have food, munitions, clothing, supplies, and the fathers and mothers of those sons in the Army want a Congress—a Senate—that will give them quick action. If a soldier doesn't get his food, supplies, and ammunition, he can't fight and will soon be under the slab, 'Died for his country'—

This is a Republican paper—

"I do not want a Congress that throws crowbars into the Government's machinery; that fights for delays on appropriations; that continually opposes the President; that takes up the time of the war boards in petty investigations; that is continually finding fault and hindering the men who are striving to push and thus delaying the game; that is 50-50 on the German proposition because there are German votes.

"I and thousands of other fathers of soldiers do want a 100 per cent American in the Senate and Joe Davies is the 100 per cent American on the ticket in this election. Joe Davies will not delay action; Joe Davies will not hamper the President—he is with him all the way through. Joe Davies has been tried and not found wanting. Joe Davies gave up a $10,000-a-year job to campaign for the office of United States Senator in Wisconsin because Wisconsin had a black eye in the eyes of the whole United States and because his friends in both political parties thought he was the man to lead Wisconsin back into the fold of loyal States.

"Joseph E. Davies is a close personal friend of President Wilson, the greatest man of the world to-day—

And that is what he is. Say whatever you please; criticize his administration as you will; with the possible exception of David Lloyd-George, he is the greatest man in the world to-day—

"It would be an honor the State of Wisconsin could do the President in no other way, to send Joe Davies to the Senate, and the President would profusely thank the people of Wisconsin for their loyalty in doing it.

"Joe Davies would be a greater help to the President now in his hour of need than any other man in Wisconsin, and there are thousands of fathers of soldiers that know it and will vote for him for the United States Senate on April 2."

Now, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD, without reading it, an article in the fourth column of the Milwaukee Journal, entitled "Duty of LENROOT—Indiana Republican organ says it is to withdraw—McLemore resolution vote fair cause of criticism why he should get out of the field."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. FALL. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The senior Senator from New Mexico objects.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He does? Then, Mr. President, I will continue to read, because my reading is of the very finest quality, you know, and what I read will sink into the apparent deafness of the Republican Members of the Senate, even more than if I had inserted it in the RECORD—not that they really are deaf, of course.

Mr. President, the Indianapolis Star, the organ of the Republican State organization in Indianapolis, says editorially, under the heading "LENROOT's Unenviable Position," what I am about to read.

Now, what I want to enforce upon the Senate and upon the Republican minority here is this: This country is no longer composed of Democrats and Republicans. It is composed of patriots and loyalists on one side and pro-Germans and lukewarm men upon the other side. Party politics have fallen into innocuous desuetude. I am not talking from the standpoint of any Democratic or Republican partisan bias, although I am talking with partisan bias. I am talking with the partisan bias of a pro-American and an anti-German, a lover of America and a hater of the Kaiser; and I will recognize no man as fit to keep step with me in the politics of the United States who does not frankly tell me that he hates the Kaiser, and hates the junkerdom, and hates the whole business, and would murder it if he knew how.

This comes from the Republican organ of the State of Indiana:

Few things are more to be desired from every point of view, patriotic, political, and military, than the most decisive defeat possible for Berger.

Berger is this pro-German pacifist-socialist candidate out there—

The defeat of Thompson renders it highly probable that a heavy proportion of his vote will go to Berger in the election.

Now, think of that! Here are men so false to America, so false to civilization, so false to the cause of democracy throughout the world, that they will indicate their partisan bias by voting for Berger, of Milwaukee, under indictment now for pro-German and anti-American utterances, a man who ought to be interned to-day! I started to say something stronger than that, but I will not; but he ought at least to be interned—and the counterplay of combining the opposing vote to achieve this result naturally suggest itself.

In the State of Wisconsin there were over 100,000 men, daring to call themselves Americans, who voted against America in the primaries, either for Thompson or for Berger; and they dare yet to permit themselves to live upon American soil. They have not the manhood to go out and commit suicide. They have not the manhood to ask to be deported from American shores, subject only to the possibility of being sunk by a German submarine. Who are these people? And yet that situation presented itself in Wisconsin, and we are dividing the loyal American vote by two while we let these people concentrate upon one.

Mr. President, no State ought ever to permit a man to be nominated for office or elected to office by a plurality. Mississippi does not do it. A man must have a majority to be elected, not a plurality. If this were a case of a majority, we would have easy sailing in Wisconsin, because a majority of the population of Wisconsin is patriotic and American and anti-German; but we have split up the vote, and Davies has been called upon to withdraw, and this is the utterance of a Republican State organ in Indiana:

Unfortunately for LENROOT, he appears in a disadvantageous situation as the rallying point for the union of patriotic Democrats and Republicans upon himself, for before our entrance upon the war he was found in bad company in the support of measures that had the enthusiastic support of every pro-German in the land. Any man who voted for the McLemore resolution is the object of suspicion. Justly or unjustly, he is under a cloud.

It might truthfully be said that the test of for or against Great Britain before we entered the war was not conclusive as to loyalty and has no binding force to-day. We expect, and for the most part we receive, both theoretical and practical win-the-war service from those who sympathized with Germany and with those who championed England. We had no right to demand loyalty to England in the early stages of the war, but we have that right now that Great Britain is our ally. The administration at Washington puts out a letter which descends to politics in the shrewd reference to LENROOT's vulnerable record; but, aside from any question of good taste in such an outgiving, it must be said that this form of attack from the supporters of Davies is natural, unavoidable, and probably within his fair rights and privilege.

The demand will grow for LENROOT to step aside in the interest of a united front against Berger, and LENROOT's defense is likely to grow less cogent and convincing as time wears on. The ammunition that McGovern patriotically laid aside is not beyond reach of the Democrats, and they will not scruple to make the most of it. It need not occasion surprise if LENROOT has to withdraw; and if it is going to come to that, the sooner he does so the better.

That is from a Republican paper, and I hope you will mark the fact that I have read nothing from a Democrat newspaper.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD, without reading it, an article appearing on page 14 of the Milwaukee Journal of March 25 entitled "Party rule is breaking down. G. O. P. leaders think that LENROOT should withdraw. Leaders in Chippewa Valley come out strongly in support of the Democratic candidate. Fear Berger's strength."

I submit that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. FALL. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. All right, Mr. President. My voice is still tolerably good.

EAU CLAIRE, WIS.

There is a political situation at Eau Claire—in fact, in the whole Chippewa Valley—that defies all precedents in Wisconsin politics. Party labels are no longer an index to political strength or weakness. Americanism is the criterion on which candidates for the senatorship will rise or fall in this section. There are some who hold steadfastly to political faiths under whose flags they fought before this war began, and who are still thinking in terms of party success, but leaders here agree that the size of this element is waning, and the bonds that have held men together in strict party allegiance are breaking.

HAVE THREE REASONS.

There is apparently a landslide of loyal Republicans here to Joseph E. Davies, Democratic nominee. A large number of Republicans, who told the Journal that they supported Mr. LENROOT in the primary, have announced that they are back of Mr. Davies now. Those who have come over from other parties give three reasons for their change: First, that they believe there is no question of Mr. Davies's loyalty; second, that Mr. LENROOT is already a Member of Congress and has just as big an opportunity to render patriotic service in his present position as he would have in the Senate; third, that they believe Mr. Davies has a better chance to defeat Victor Berger than Mr. LENROOT, and they do not want to run any risk of throwing their vote away when the welfare of the Nation and the reputation of Wisconsin hangs in the balance.

A number of prominent Republicans of Eau Claire told the Journal they thought Mr. LENROOT ought to withdraw.

LENROOT SHOULD WITHDRAW.

Earle S. Welch, former Republican postmaster, said: "If it appears that either Mr. LENROOT or Mr. Davies must withdraw to win the fight, then, in my opinion, Mr. LENROOT is the man to withdraw. Mr. LENROOT is intrenched firmly in the House, and he can do as much good there as he could do in the Senate. I am very friendly to the candidacy of Mr. Davies and would not be sorry to see him elected."

Glen O. Linderman, Republican, lawyer, and manufacturer, said: "The one thing that I want to do in this campaign is to vote for and support a loyal man. I do not care whether he is a Democrat or Republican. I hope to see one of the candidates withdraw. I sincerely hope that Mr. LENROOT will withdraw because he could go back to Congress and do just as good work in the House as he could do in the Senate. If Mr. LENROOT does not withdraw it is a question in my mind as to which will be the stronger to defeat Victor Berger. I do not approve of Mr. LENROOT's stand on the McLemore resolution. I did not approve of it at that time, and I feel very much stronger against it now."

TIME FOR ACTION.

Some of the Republicans felt chagrined over the vote received by James Thompson and Victor Berger in the German sections of the Chippewa Valley. C. H. Henry said: "Considering the vote cast for LA FOLLETTE's candidate, James Thompson, and for Mr. Berger, it is about time for the people to do something—

An appeal to the people of Wisconsin to do something, with over 100,000 of them pronounced anti-Americans, antiloyalists, and antipatriots—

I was in hopes of a union on one candidate. I did not approve of Mr. LENROOT's vote on the McLemore resolution. I was with the President and there was nobody from Wisconsin right on that proposition but Senator HUSTING.

One remarkable feature of the primary in Eau Claire County was the vote cast for Mr. Thompson by old-time German Democrats.

The Germans are not paying any attention to partisan politics. The old-time German Democrats are voting for Republican candidates, provided only that they be untrue to America and faithful to the Kaiser. You and I stand here like whipped dogs, like sheared sheep, while they are going on with all that, and you and I are accused of partisanship if we say one word about it—

This was evidenced by the vote in the town of Lincoln, the village of Fall Creek, and the village of Augusta. The town of Lincoln was for many years the rockbound Democratic stronghold of Eau Claire County. It never wavered in its democracy, no matter how dark the outlook, until Republican leaders carried it for Mr. Hughes. Last Tuesday this town of Lincoln gave 101 votes to Mr. Thompson, 1 to Mr. LENROOT, and 8 to Mr. Davies. Its population is almost exclusively German. A prominent Democrat of Augusta, who was present at the Davies's meeting at Eau Claire Friday night, said: "The Republican leaders in the last presidential campaign set influences to work to turn this German vote over to the Republican Party. Fall Creek, another German stronghold, which was formerly Democratic, gave 83 votes to Thompson, 5 to LENROOT, and 18 to Davies.

SIXTY PER CENT FOR VICTOR BERGER.

The question of where the Thompson vote will go on election day is one of the burning problems here. Those who claim to know say that the bulk of it will go to Victor Berger. A local newspaper man who has been watching the trend of political movements in this country divided the Thompson vote into two classes. About 60 per cent of the people who voted for Thompson, he said, were Germans who were dissatisfied with the war. These, he thought, would vote solidly for Victor Berger. He estimated that about 40 per cent of the Thompson vote came from Norwegians, who did not look upon the war as the predominant issue. "These," he said, "thought only in terms of economic issues. They thought that LA FOLLETTE had served their economic interests in the past, and they did not want to desert him now. I do not think that many of the Norwegians will vote for Victor Berger."

Others in Eau Claire estimate that a much larger percentage of the Thompson vote will go to Mr. Berger. Some think that the pacifist editor of the Milwaukee Leader will get over 90 per cent of the votes cast for the La Follette candidate. Mr. Thompson received 1,056 in Eau Claire County. It is even surmised that a very small part of the Thompson vote will be cast for Mr. Davies on election day by La Follette supporters, who feel bitter toward Mr. LENROOT because "he threw Mr. LA FOLLETTE after Mr. LA FOLLETTE had given him a place in the sun."

DAVIES PROPER MAN.

Other opinions from leaders in Eau Claire and the Chippewa Valley follow:

James Joyce, Eau Claire, banker: "I think Davies is the proper man for the position. There is no question about Mr. Davies's loyalty."

A. J. Brandstad, Eau Claire, Republican: I am going to vote for Mr. Davies, because I think it is the right and proper thing to do to back up the President.

Guy Spiers, Eau Claire, Republican, who signed the Lenroot call and vigorously supported LENROOT in the primary: I consider Joseph E. Davies the administration man closest to the President and I am going to support him.

A. J. Sutherland, attorney, Eau Claire: A great many Republicans have told me that they will vote for Mr. Davies. Some of these even voted for Mr. LENROOT in the primary. They tell me that they believe that there is no question of Mr. Davies's loyalty; that even if Mr. LENROOT does not get this position, he is still in Congress, and that they consider it time for all loyal men to get together and support Joe Davies. The Republicans think he has a better chance of being elected than Mr. LENROOT.

J. A. Stilp, paper manufacturer, Eau Claire: All that I can say is that I am strong for Joe Davies. I know of many Republicans who voted for Mr. LENROOT in the primary who will vote for Mr. Davies in the election.

W. H. Frawley, attorney, Eau Claire: At least 50 per cent of the Republicans who voted for Mr. LENROOT in the primary will vote for Mr. Davies on election day.

J. E. Davey, Eau Claire: I think that over 50 per cent of the total Republican vote here will be for Mr. Davies. There is no doubt that he will carry this county. The Germans who voted for James Thompson will probably vote for Victor Berger. The others will split.

J. J. Ott, vice president and general manager of the John H. Kaiser Lumber Co., Eau Claire: I supported Mr. LENROOT in the primary, but I am supporting Mr. Davies now, because I think he harmonizes closer with the family of the administration.

Mayor John R. Barron, Eau Claire: I am for Mr. Davies. I think he will get a considerable vote from Republicans in this city.

F. C. Waltersdorf, Democratic State central committeeman, Eau Claire: Many Republicans are going to vote for Mr. Davies, even some who voted for Mr. LENROOT in the primary in order to defeat James Thompson. Mr. Thompson's vote came largely from the Germans and about 95 per cent of it will go to Mr. Berger.

D. E. Kiser, Eau Claire: A considerable number who voted for Mr. LENROOT in the primary have openly come out for Joe Davies. They realize that Mr. Davies is the President's choice and feel that Mr. LENROOT should withdraw.

LIKE ELECTION OF '64.

A. W. Goff, Eau Claire, whose name was printed as a member of the local Lenroot committee, wrote a letter stating that his name was used without his authority, and that although he was a Republican he would support Mr. Davies because he believed Mr. Davies had proved his capability and his Americanism.

L. A. Brace likened the present political situation in Wisconsin to that existing in the country during the Civil War. Mr. Brace said: "I was a Democrat during the Civil War. I loved Gen. McClellan, and I served under him for four years, but I voted for Mr. Lincoln in 1864, because I thought it the only right thing to do, and because I did not want to change horses in the middle of the stream. I think that the Republicans in Wisconsin should feel the same way about the Davies candidacy as I felt about President Lincoln in 1864."

Mr. President, upon yesterday I was arraigned on the other side of the Chamber for saying that Mr. LENROOT's loyalty was lukewarm. I am tired of the camouflage; I am tired of the Republican velvet glove, of the way in which they say, "We do not mean anything," but meanwhile, every now and then, with preconceived harmony of action and unity of purpose, they bounce all over the Democratic administration on one day.

I have here 10 questions which Mr. LENROOT has been asked to answer. Can I get unanimous consent to insert them in the RECORD, or must I read them? I ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. FALL. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, nobody is so persistent in his objections as my friend from New Mexico; and I think it is not because he really objects to this but because he likes to hear my voice. In fact, I happen to know very well that he is dead in love with my voice, and he wants to hear it. Then I will read a part of these questions.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do.

Mr. FALL. The Senator has indicated his opinion of my purpose in making the objection, that it was from love for his dulcet tones.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The dulcet tones of my voice; yes.

Mr. FALL. That is not the only reason. If I were as partisan as he has charged the Republicans with being, I should desire the continuance of the present exhibition.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What was that? I did not quite hear it.

Mr. FALL. I said that not only did I love the dulcet tones of the Senator but if I were as partisan as he accuses this side of being, I should desire a continuance of the present performance or exhibition.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well. Now, Mr. President, I knew that that sort of sweet recognition would come, sooner or later, from the Senator from New Mexico. I love him, and he loves me, and I knew that sooner or later he would pay me some compliment like that. Of course the condition which he makes is negligible, because he knows as well as I do that what I am now inflicting is well deserved; so I will read so much of this as I think worth while, and I will omit so much as I think is not worth while.

Omitting question No. 1, which I think has nothing in it, I read:

2. Why did you not firmly and whole-heartedly support President Wilson when he called on you and all other Members of Congress to maintain American rights?

Those were the rights of American citizens to sail upon the high seas, even in ships owned by the citizens or subjects of belligerent nations.

3. Why did you vote to ask Americans to surrender their rights to sail upon any merchant ship of whatever nationality?

4. Why did you join with the pro-German propagandists and disloyal organizations in advocating an embargo on shipments of arms and ammunition?

Ah, Mr. President, that question might have gone further, because that petition for an embargo was not only a protest against the shipment of arms and munitions, but was a protest against the shipment of food and fuel, American wheat and American corn and American rice and American sugar; so that question remains to be answered.

5. Why did you, in the summer of 1916, less than a year before America was forced into the war, vote against the plan to enlarge the Navy upon the basis of a three-year continuous building program?—

Which was a substitute for the five-year building program.

Again:

6. Why, although you voted for the war resolution against Germany, did you say that America should not send troops to Europe, but should make war upon Germany only upon the sea?

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] corrected me yesterday and said that Mr. LENROOT had not voted against the declaration of war against Germany. I, thinking that he knew what he was talking about, surrendered at once to the assertion which he made. I now find that he is partially right and partially wrong, and that Mr. LENROOT did vote for the declaration of war, but that he voted for it with an explanation that we were by all means not to send any troops to France nor to put any of our boys in the trenches; that it must be purely a naval warfare and purely a defensive warfare upon American shores. In other words, when I had a deadly fight to defend my family against attack, I could defend them within the inclosure of my own front yard but I must not go outside; I must not anticipate the act of the enemy. I must not go to France and go into the trenches and fight where the enemy was, but I could remain in America all I pleased, the enemy not being here, and there being no war here and no danger here; and then we might take our chances upon the high seas as best we could. So I withdraw so much of my apology to the Senator from Utah yesterday as included a misapprehension on that point.

9. Why did you fail to vote at all on the espionage bill, a measure which provided means for unearthing and punishing German propagandists and others who plotted against America or destroyed its industries?—

"Or destroyed its industries," Mr. President—remember that! These infernal scoundrels were putting bombs with time fuses upon our merchant ships. They have blown up our manufactories. One of them tried to blow up this Capitol. Not one word of denunciation of those men appears in this man's record.

9. Why did you fail to vote at all on the espionage bill, a measure which provided means for unearthing and punishing German propagandists and others who plotted against America or destroyed its industries? Where were you when the vote upon this all-important measure was taken?

10. Why did you fail to vote at all upon the war-risk insurance bill, the beneficent law proposed by the President to provide insurance at low cost to soldiers and sailors'; to compensate them for injuries and to provide maintenance for their dependents?

Mr. President, we have come to this point in America, and as far as I am concerned I want it distinctly understood. There is no Democratic Party and there is no Republican Party here any more. There is a loyalist, pro-American, aggressively and if necessary offensively pro-American party, and a party which is pro-German or lukewarm in its Americanism. Those who are not with us are against us, and let them take their medicine; and if the law does not give them their medicine the people will, and the people are beginning to wake up.

Let not any man over there dare accuse me of Democratic partisanship. That I had it, yes; that I have it now, no. I am nothing to-day except one with my boys in the field. I have no object under the sun except to win this war. I will vote to expel from this body any man who has not been true and who has been lukewarm. I will vote to elect to this body any man of whatsoever party who has been aggressively pro-American and anti-German, and a hater of the Kaiser and all that, and he must show that to satisfy me. Then I am for him, but I am against anybody who falls short of that full measure of American requirement in behalf of civilization and the cause of freedom and the cause of democracy throughout the world. I can not be with those boys in body, because I would be a liability rather than an asset of the United States Government. If I undertook to serve in the trenches I would have to be carried away, I reckon, but I am with them in spirit and soul and heart, and every criticism directed against the American governmental machinery unless it is absolutely necessary and fully justified meets with my contempt.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I am not going to prolong this discussion or engage in any controversy with the Senator from Mississippi over Wisconsin politics. I am going, however, to state a fact that quite likely the Senate might like to know, and which I presume the Senator from Mississippi does not know. The Milwaukee Journal has been paraded as a great Republican newspaper——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the Senator's pardon; I never said so. The Milwaukee Journal quoted from a lot of Republican newspapers, and I quoted what they said.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Milwaukee Journal is a bitter, partisan Democratic organ.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I never said the Milwaukee Journal was a Republican paper. I knew better, and have known it for years.

Mr. KELLOGG. It has been the mouthpiece of the administration. I am making no complaint, but editorials from that bitter, hostile journal ought not to be quoted as editorials from Republican newspapers.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator mean to say that I quoted any editorial from the Milwaukee Journal as an editorial from a Republican newspaper?

Mr. KELLOGG. I so understood the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then the Senator totally misunderstood me. The Milwaukee Journal quoted these editorials from Republican papers and I quoted the publication of them in the Milwaukee Journal.

Mr. KELLOGG. I can give the Senator a great many——

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator does not mean to say that the Milwaukee Journal mispublished those editorials?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not know anything about that. The Senator from Mississippi heard what I said.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course, any statement to the effect that I said the Milwaukee Journal was a Republican paper was purely erroneous, not to go further.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Mississippi to say that he quoted from Republican papers through the Milwaukee Journal, as he now claims, but I think the Senator has forgotten——

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. In just a moment I will be through.

Mr. ASHURST. I am afraid one sentence will start the Senator from Mississippi again.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say it will not start the Senator from Mississippi again, as far as I am concerned, because I am not going to answer his tirade. No one will approve the course that has been taken by the Senator from Mississippi. I expect to make a short statement not to exceed seven lines.

I wish to say that some of the papers the Senator quoted from are German papers rather than Republican papers. I now quote from a letter received from Wisconsin, as follows:

Last Monday, the 2oth, a conference was called by committee of Loyalty Legion, between chairmen of State central committees, Davies, and Mr. LENROOT, to consider the subject of the withdrawal of either Davies or Mr. LENROOT, but Davies skipped to Chicago about an hour before the conference, so he did not show up. Mr. LENROOT issued a stinging statement of his action and stated he would fight to a finish.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to make a point of order against the pending amendment. I am confident the Senator from Oklahoma did not realize when he introduced it just how far the amendment goes. It is general legislation, and therefore I make the point of order.

Mr. OWEN. I have heretofore said that this amendment was the result of a conference between the Oklahoma delegation and the Secretary of the Interior, and was in effect drawn by the office of the Secretary of the Interior, using as a basis a proposal sent to me as a Senator from Oklahoma by the attorney representing the Farm Loan Board in Wichita, who had had difficulty in determining the personnel of heirships. I understand the measure to relate only to determining who the heirs are and that it does not affect the title, as the Senator from Kansas thinks it might.

I think it is obviously open to a point of order, because it does seem to be general legislation on the appropriation bill, and I shall not make any parliamentary objection when it is made.

Mr. CURTIS. Before the Chair passes on it I wish to say that I will gladly join the Senator from Oklahoma in preparing a measure that will cover the point as a separate bill later, so that some relief may be given.

Mr. OWEN. I think we might perhaps let the amendment have a provision attached to it that it shall not affect any title by any court proceeding of a previous date.

Mr. CURTIS. I would rather not at this time. I think it is general legislation, and we had better take care of it in a separate measure. I therefore insist on my point of order.

Mr. OWEN. It is certainly open to the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MYERS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read:

The SECRETARY. After line 10, on page 37, insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States the sum of $200,000 of any tribal funds on deposit to the credit of the Crow Indians in the State of Montana, and to expend the same for making necessary improvements to the irrigation systems in the Big Horn Valley on the Crow Indian Reservation, in Montana, said sum, or such part thereof as may be used for the purpose indicated, to be reimbursed to the tribe under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, in support of the amendment I will read a letter, addressed to the chairman of the committee, by the Secretary of the Interior:

MARCH 25, 1918.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I attach hereto copy of a proposed amendment to the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 9696), authorizing the withdrawal of the sum of $200,000 of tribal funds on deposit to the credit of the Crow Indians and the expenditure thereof for making necessary improvements to the irrigation systems in the Big Horn Valley, on the Crow Reservation, in Montana.

Negotiations have been completed for the leasing of all unused Indian lands in the Big Horn Valley, on the Crow Reservation, Mont. This land is under irrigation projects, and in order that water may be conveyed thereto efficiently there must be some improvement of the laterals and main canals and extension of laterals. In addition to the construction of ncessary new laterals many of the old wooden structures must be replaced with concrete. The acreage involved is approximately 20,000 acres, and it is estimated that the proposed improvements will cost in the neighborhood of $10 per acre, or a total of $200,000. Owing to the fact that after July 1, 1918, no tribal funds can be withdrawn from the Treasury without the specific authority of Congress, and as no other money will be available for this purpose, it is recommended that the proposed amendment be included in the bill upon final passage.

The chief benefits to be derived from this proposition will be to aid in meeting the war need for increased wheat production to the extent of approximately 600,000 bushels per annum; an increased annual acreage income to the allottees from about 20 cents per acre as grazing land to from $6 to $12 per acre as agricultural; safeguarding the water rights; the increased value of the land; and the strong possibility that the intensive cultivation of this large new area will mean the building of a steam or electric railroad from Hardin up the Big Horn Valley.

In view of the circumstances set forth above, I recommend that the item receive favorable consideration.

Cordially, yours, FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary.

Mr. CURTIS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. MYERS. With pleasure.

Mr. CURTIS. As I understand the reading of the letter, a lease has already been made for this uncultivated land. Is that true?

Mr. MYERS. I so understand.

Negotiations have been completed for the leasing of all unused Indian lands in the Big Horn Valley, on the Crow Reservation, Mont.

Mr. CURTIS. Can the Senator advise the Senate for what purpose the lease has been made; whether it is for beet sugar, or wheat growing, or general farming, or for what purpose?

Mr. MYERS. It is my understanding that there have been leases for general farming, principally grain growing. It may be that the leases are dependent upon the contingency of this appropriation being made putting water on the land. The Secretary appears to consider it very essential, in view of these leases, that water shall be put on the land. I have answered the Senator to the best of my ability.

Mr. President, in support of this amendment I will say that it does not seek to appropriate any money of the United States Government. It is not an appropriation out of the Treasury of the United States of any money belonging to the Federal Government.

The Crow Indians, I am informed, have about $1,000,000 to their credit in cash on deposit in the Federal Treasury, and this proposed legislation is intended to withdraw $200,000 of the Indian money and devote it to the extension of the project for the benefit of the Indians. It is not to take a dollar belonging to the Federal Government. It is Indian money that is intended to be expended for their benefit.

I will say further that there are no white people who own any of this land it is intended to put water on or who are in anywise interested in it. There can be no question raised that it is for the benefit of white people. This land is owned entirely by the Indians. It is Indian land, and it is Indian money, and the intention is to expend Indian money on Indian land for the benefit of the Indian. Of course if the land is leased out to white farmers there will be white people cultivating the land, paying adequate rental for it to the Indians, and that will be the extent to which any white man will be interested.

The Secretary of the Interior tells us that it will be the means of increasing the rental of these lands from about 20 cents per acre as dry lands for grazing purposes to from $6 to $12 per acre per annum as farming lands, and the Indians will get the benefit of the increased rental.

This amendment did not originate with me. It is one in which I have no particular or individual interest. It originated wth the Department of the Interior, and I am offering it as a departmental amendment at the request of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. GRONNA. Of course this is in the Senator's own State, and I know he has as much, if not more, interest in the growth of his State and in the progress of the Indians than any other Senator, but it does seem to me it is somewhat unfair to bring such an amendment as the Senator has proposed here without giving the committee an opportunity to discuss it and to make an investigation. I think I might say it is also unfair to the Crow Indians.

The Senator knows better than I do the serious opposition the Crow Indians have made to the taking of any of their tribal funds for irrigation purposes. I believe it would have been only fair to have given the Crow Indian Tribe an opportunity to appear before our committee and to be heard before we take $200,000 out of their funds.

I wish to ask the Senator another question, if he will permit me. Is it contemplated to lease this land for, I understood the Senator to say, a million dollars, and was it taken into consideration that it was necessary to appropriate $200,000 in order to bring water on the land? Does that enter into the contract, I ask the Senator?

Mr. MYERS. That is my understanding.

Mr. GRONNA. But that matter has never been brought to the attention of the committee, as far as I know, either by the Senator or by the department.

Mr. MYERS. I have not the honor of being a member of that committee. I formerly was upon it, but my State is represented now on the committee by my colleague [Mr. WALSH]. He is the member of the committee from my State.

I have something here on the attitude of the Indians, if the Senator wants information on that point, and I would be glad to give it.

Mr. GRONNA. It seems to me it is rather unfair to propose to take $200,000 out of the Indian fund, something that has never been proposed in the committee, and now to be compelled to vote upon this proposition without making the slightest investigation and without having had an opportunity to give the Indians a chance to be heard.

Mr. MYERS. I have given them an opportunity to be heard, and I will submit some information I have on the subject.

Mr. GRONNA. Can the Senator inform the Senate as to whether the Crow Indians are in favor of this amendment or whether they are opposed to it?

Mr. MYERS. Yes; I intend to submit information on that subject.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. MYERS. With pleasure.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not care to ask the Senator a question. I want to make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. MYERS. I do not yield the floor for that purpose. I want to complete my statement first and lay it before the Senate.

Mr. President, I do not want to be unfair in the matter. I have no disposition to do anything that is unfair, and if I thought the offering of this amendment was unfair to anybody I would not offer it, but I think it is fair or else I would not have offered it.

As I said, this is a departmental amendment which originated with the department. Why the department did not originate it sooner I do not know. It did not originate with me. I have no particular or personal interest in the amendment.

I am offering it at the request of the Department of the Interior. Their request came to me only within the last few days that the bill has been before the Senate, and I investigated the matter before I would consent to offer it. When presented to me I said I would not offer it until I would make some investigation of it. I did investigate it; and I concluded it was fair and right and proper, and I will give my reasons for my conclusion. Thereupon I offered it.

As I said, this land belongs to the Indians. The money belongs to the Indians. The Government is the guardian of the Indians, and it is for Congress to say what is the wise manner in which to handle these trust funds. Shall it let them lie idle in the Treasury of the United States, bearing no interest, or shall it allot them so much per capita to the Indians and pay it out to them, which, I believe, can not be done until they are declared competent, or will it be best to take a part of it and put it into improvements of the Indian lands so that they will get a benefit out of it? It is for Congress to say. If Congress thinks wise to so appropriate this money, it should do so. If Congress thinks it is not wise to do it, it need not do so.

The matter having been submitted to my colleague and myself, we consulted together and we took some steps to ascertain whether it would be justifiable to offer the amendment on the floor of the Senate. We wanted to be enlightened. We did not want to do it, not knowing what we were doing. So my colleague sent a telegram to Mr. Robert Yellowtail, a representative Crow Indian on the reservation. I understand there is on the reservation a committee of Indians intended to represent the Indians in matters of their own interest, in legislation and departmental matters, matters before Congress and before the committees. They, I believe, constitute a committee for that purpose with authority to speak. The committee, I understand, is composed of Robert Yellowtail, Frank Yarlott, and Richard Cummins. My colleague telegraphed to Robert Yellowtail to know what the Indians thought about this matter. He acquainted him with the nature of the proposed amendment and asked his advice about it, and here is the reply:

WYOLA, MONT., March 26, 1918.

Hon. THOMAS J. WALSH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars' appropriation—

He got it—$250,000—but it is only $200,000—

Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars' appropriation asked for by department desirable if same be expended in actual construction for completion of Little Horn ditch No. 2, Lodge Grass No. 2, Reno ditch, and extension of agency ditch; also maintenance of Big Horn ditch. Guard against use of this in way of salaries.

ROBERT YELLOWTAIL,
FRANK YARLOTT,
RICHARD CUMMINS.

As I said, I understand those gentlemen to be a sort of a business committee to represent the Crow Indians. I know Mr. Yellowtail well. He often comes down here and appears before the Committee on Indian Affairs and the department and is one of the leading and most intelligent and most reliable of all the Crow Indians, and I place considerable confidence in his judgment. I will say that my colleague [Mr. WALSH] is in favor of this amendment, as I am. We are as one in support of it. He is a member of the committee and would probably have offered the amendment if he had been here to-day. It was agreed between us that one of us should offer it. He is not here and therefore I offered it.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. GRONNA. Of course I do not mean to intimate that the Senator would attempt anything that was unfair.

Mr. MYERS. I understand the Senator. He was just expressing his judgment about the advisability of the appropriation.

Mr. GRONNA. I simply wanted to inform the Senate that the matter had not been considered by the Senate committee.

Mr. MYERS. That is true. I would much rather it had been considered by the committee.

Mr. GRONNA. So far as I am personally concerned I will say to the Senator if the chairman of the committee will assure me that he will make an investigation of it I am perfectly willing to let it go to conference.

Mr. MYERS. I have no personal interest in it, and I say I would much rather it had been submitted to the committee. When it was first presented to me I was in doubt whether I would offer it, because it had not been submitted to the committee, but when I investigated the source which I have read here and other sources I concluded that it was justified and all right.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. I agree with the statement made by the Senator from North Dakota, that if the chairman of the committee will promise to look into this matter, as far as I am concerned I have personally no objecion to its going in, and I make that statement for this reason: I hold in my hand the statement issued by the irrigation division of the Interior Department, and it shows there are now upon that reservation 26,154 acres of land under the ditch not cultivated. If the lease is to cover only 20,000 acres, they could still make a lease for 20,000 acres and have 6,000 acres left. I think if that fact is demonstrated before the conferees on the part of the Senate they should not insist upon the amendment. Here is the latest report, and it does show that there are 26,154 acres of land under the ditch not cultivated.

Mr. MYERS. I will say that I am not prepared to account for that, and if it goes in the bill I think the chairman of the committee should investigate it before it is finally passed. I have been advised not only by these three Indians but by other sources which I consider reliable that this is a just and legitimate appropriation and that it would result in benefit to the Indians.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I think I can very briefly state to the Senate the information and all the information that I possess in respect to this item.

On the 25th of this month, about three days ago, I received a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, which communication has been read by the senior Senator from Montana. Therefore I will not again read that letter. In substance, however, it was a letter urging an appropriation of $200,000, not out of the Treasury of the United States but out of the tribal funds on deposit to the credit of the Crow Indians, and the letter went on to state that the chief benefit to be derived from this proposition would be to aid to meet the war needs for increased wheat production and that approximately 600,000 bushels per annum would be raised on this land.

Mr. President, as chairman of the committee and as an individual Senator, I have the highest regard and respect for the Secretary of the Interior, and I am sure I speak the unanimous judgment of every Senator here; but I do not like the idea of sending to the chairman of the committee a proposition for a large appropriation after the bill has been reported to the Senate. I expressed my disapprobation of that procedure in rather strong terms to the Indian Office, and the reply they gave me was that the failure to send in this item so that the same could be considered by your committee was because at the time the committee was in session negotiations had not been completed looking toward the leasing of the lands that they wished to lease. In other words, the bill was reported on February 16 of this year; and up to and including that date negotiations which they hoped to make had not been made.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to propose a line of action with respect to this amendment which I think will be conservative, and which I think can be adopted. Let the point of order be made and let the Senator from Montana introduce this as a separate bill. We can convene the committee to-morrow; we can hear the representatives of the department on Saturday; and I am sure the Senate will give us an opportunity to pass it as a substantive bill on next Monday. I have that much faith in the Senate to believe that it will allow us to pass this as a substantive bill on next Monday. All I know about it is comprehended within the two pages of the letter which I hold in my hand.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I should like to ask for what this money is to be used?

Mr. ASHURST. Let me read the letter from the Secretary of the Interior, which is dated March 25 of this year. It states:

Negotiations have been completed for the leasing of all unused Indian lands in the Big Horn Valley, on the Crow Reservation, Mont. This land is under irrigation projects, and in order that water may be conveyed thereto efficiently, there must be some improvement of the laterals and main canals and extension of laterals. In addition to the construction of necessary new laterals, many of the old wooden structures must be replaced with concrete. The acreage involved is approximately 20,000 acres, and it is estimated that the proposed improvements will cost in the neighborhood of $10 per acre, or a total of $200,000. Owing to the fact that after July 1, 1918, no tribal funds can be withdrawn from the Treasury without the specific authority of Congress, and as no other money will be available for this purpose, it is recommended that the proposed amendment be included in the bill upon final passage.

Now, answering the Senator from Oklahoma:

The chief benefits to be derived from this proposition will be to aid in meeting the war need for increased wheat production to the extent of approximately 600,000 bushels per annum; an increased annual acreage income to the allottees from about 20 cents per acre as grazing land to from $6 to $12 per acre as agricultural——

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I do not think that the argument is very convincing with 26,000 acres unemployed during the last year, with 60,000 acres unemployed on another one of these projects, and with large areas on another of these projects unemployed, the committee, finding itself compelled to cut down this appropriation because of that, does not seem very convincing to me.

Mr. MYERS. Will the Senator from Arizona yield to me a minute? I should like to explain this to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. MYERS. This is not money which is to come out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. OWEN. It does not make any difference whether it comes from the United States Treasury or from the funds of this Indian tribe. I think that, if it is not justified as an appropriation from the Federal Treasury it is less justified from Indian money.

Mr. MYERS. Certainly. I thought the Senator was referring to getting Government appropriations.

Mr. OWEN. Not at all. If the argument does not justify the larger appropriation out of Government funds for this great enterprise in which I take a deep interest, and which I should like to see expended——

Mr. MYERS. I know that.

Mr. OWEN. I do not think that the Indian funds ought to be used unless there is some different argument made.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to be heard a minute further when the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] concludes.

Mr. ASHURST. Then, let me conclude at once, by stating that the impression that I have formed concerning this matter is distinctly favorable, Mr. President, from two viewpoints. Where the Indian allottees are now receiving only 20 cents per acre each year, it may be—and I am inclined to think it is true—that they will receive from six to twelve dollars per acre. I am rather favorably impressed with the proposition; but I do think that a matter involving $200,000, sent to our committee after it had adjourned, ought to be considered in all its details, and that the representatives of the department should come before the committee. We can pass this as a substantive bill in two hours.

Mr. OWEN. As I understand the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, it is to the effect that they hope to lease this land, not that they have leased it, for agricultural purposes.

Mr. ASHURST. The statement is that negotiations have been completed.

Mr. OWEN. For the leasing?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; so says the letter.

Mr. OWEN. I think it is high time that the Interior Department were exercising its energies to make productive these lands which the United States has spent millions of dollars in developing; and I think the department is not justified in coming to Congress and asking for further appropriations when people are living within these large areas of land which is unproductive. Now, with this statement, that they have actually gotten to the point that they can use these lands, can get somebody to cultivate them, I should not insist upon the point of order. I am willing to leave it to the chairman of the committee; but I think there ought to be a good reason when we have laid down a principle and fail to follow it.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, again stating that the impression I have gleaned from my very cursory and necessarily very incomplete investigation of this matter, is one distinctly favorable I desire to say that I can see that much good may come to the Indians; but I am able to perceive that it is possible that there may be grown, probably not this year, but surely next year, the amount of wheat stated by the Secretary of the Interior, but I wish to deprecate the idea of sending in a request for large appropriations after the committee has had extended hearings and has adjourned.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have purposely avoided taking up any time whatever in the discussion during the consideration of this bill. I have done so because I am very much interested in having the bill passed and become a law as speedily as possible. The members of the committee know that there are many items in this bill involving appropriations which must be used by the Indian Bureau in the purchase of seed grain, and I believe that it ought to be passed at the earliest practicable moment.

I am also interested in increasing food production; and the amendment which is now proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] appeals to me. I want to ask the indulgence of the Senate for only a few minutes in discussing this question, and I want to read from the Weekly News Letter of the United States Department of Agriculture a sentence or two under the heading "The farmers may be depended upon by the Secretary of Agriculture," which reads as follows:

> The war has served to exhibit to the country at large, as the country never quite realized before, its dependence upon agriculture and the manifold problems which beset our primary industry. There is reason to believe therefore that during the coming year agriculture will have the active sympathy and cooperation of all citizens and classes who are in position to render aid. The farmers of the United States will not fail to do all they can in this emergency and, with favorable seasons, they will produce enough to sustain the civil population, to keep our Army and Navy in full fighting vigor, and to supplement the depleted resources of the allies. Every facility that the Department of Agriculture can command to assist them will be freely placed at their disposal.

Mr. President, I believe that the Department of Agriculture is doing everything in its power to stimulate the production of food, but there is, of course, a limit to what it may be able to do. I can remember about a year ago when this body passed a measure known as the food bill—I think it was passed in this Chamber on the 31st day of May last—and it was held up somewhere between this body and the other body for more than two months; it was never acted upon. I see before me now the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. GORE], and I want to ask him what is being done with the Agricultural appropriation bill, which passed this body on March 21? In that bill there was included a provision for a price of $2.50 per bushel on wheat? I should like to know from the chairman of the committee what has been done; if the conference committee has been appointed on the bill, or where the bill now is?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I will say, in response to the Senator's question, that I have made inquiry nearly every day since the Agricultural appropriation bill passed the Senate, and I was to-day advised that the measure is still on the Clerk's desk in the other House. It has not been called up, as I am informed; it has neither been sent to conference nor sent to the Committee on Agriculture. So far as I know, nothing has been done, and my advices are only two or three hours old.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly that the same course is being pursued upon that particular bill which was taken a year ago upon the food bill, when the welfare of the people of the entire country was at stake. There were many who thought that that bill was passed only for the benefit of the farmer. That was not true then and it is not true now as to the amendment which was offered by the Senator from Oklahoma and which was voted into that bill by an overwhelming vote of 48 to 22 to suspend the rules and by a vote of 49 to 18 or 19 on the final passage. I want to say, Mr. President, that so far as the Senate is concerned, it has done its duty.

While I am on that subject, I ask to have read by the Secretary a letter calling attention to the importance of this question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

BROCKETT, N. DAK., March 23, 1918.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. GRONNA: I have for a long time intended to write you to tell you the sentiment of our neighborhood as the time for crop seeding is approaching. The sentiment here seems to be that not much wheat will be seeded unless Congress raises the price of wheat without delay. The cost of production may exceed the market price of the wheat, depending largely upon the season and the labor conditions. We will seed more barley and oats, and we already have a fair quantity of winter rye seeded. Farming machinery is much higher now than a year ago, and all of these things should be taken into consideration.

Another matter to which I wish to call your attention, of which you may be already well aware, and that is that most of our young men are being drafted into the Army. They are all loyal, as we all are, and willing to go when called, but they will be missed on the farm very much. They have a special skill in operating farm machinery and they naturally take greater interest in the success of the farming than would the foreign labor. We can not replace them by unskilled and unwilling, disloyal labor. We anticipate a great handicap with such labor by our next thrashing season. We do not like to assume the risk of seeding a large crop and to be dependent upon unskilled and disloyal I. W. W. labor to harvest our crop. We have experience of their threats to strike and destroy our crop when we want our crops harvested and taken care of. We will be helpless if we are left to depend upon that class of labor entirely.

We feel that you already know these things, but I write you, as you expect all of your constituents to write you, to keep you in touch with the going sentiment of your State. We wish that Congress will take immediate action to raise the price of wheat, so that we may know where we are at, and also that the War Department will modify the rules of the selective-service law so that our young men, whom we necessarily need to take charge of the farm machinery and the farming in general, would be exempted from service so as to protect us from this disloyal element.

Yours, very truly, ERIK KYLLONEN.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, the writer of that letter is one of my neighbors; I know him personally. He is both a scientific and a practical farmer. Some 30 years ago he came to this country from the Province of Finland, in the Empire of Russia. He came here practically without means; in fact, I might say practically without a dollar; but by genius and physical strength he has forged ahead until to-day he owns one of the model farms of the West. He owns and operates some 5,000 acres. His farming is done under the most modern and improved methods, and the main work on the farm is being done under the direction of himself and his four sons. I might say, also, that this letter is typical of thousands of letters I have received.

Mr. President, the farmers in my section of the country have already begun their seeding operations, and it is very important that they shall know as speedily as possible what the Congress of the United States will do with reference to the price of wheat. It is true, as the writer of the letter states, that they are all loyal; they are willing to do all that is in their power; but I believe, sir, that more food will be produced if the bill which was passed by this body the other day is enacted into law. I believe, sir, that a larger percentage of wheat will be sown in all the spring wheat States if that bill becomes a law, because it will be an encouragement to the farmers; and it will make it possible for them to pay for labor the high prices which they are now compelled to pay.

The great increase in the price of labor may not be apparent to all Senators. Not only has there been an increase of from 100 to 150 per cent in the wage scale, but the hours of labor have been reduced so that, instead of working 12 hours per day, the laborer now refuses to work more than 8, which increases the price of wages the farmer has to pay 50 per cent more.

There have been presented to the Senate and to the Congress heretofore the facts as they actually exist in relation to the high prices which our farmers have to pay for everything they use in producing their crops.

Mr. President, organization and coordination in every branch of business, in every department of our Government, are absolutely essential to our success. We must go forward as a united people, with a full realization of the responsibilities confronting us. Our energies must be harmoniously organized and coordinated into a single unit of strength. That was the method which brought success to the fathers. By that method we can succeed and win now.

I repeat what I said a few days ago, that the testimony of representatives from various farm organizations who have appeared before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is in accordance with the testimony of this man, the writer of the letter read at the desk, that in order to enable the farmers to produce wheat the price must be advanced.

Congress and the Food Administration have interfered with the farmers' market. The wrong course has been pursued, and the only thing we can do now is to do what we can to help the farmer out of the deplorable condition in which we have placed him.

To my mind it is more important to produce the food, let the cost be what it may, than to keep down the prices, thereby discouraging the production of food.

I have often said, and I repeat, that I consider food one of the important factors in the winning of this war, and when we analyze the situation, taking into consideration the large amount of labor necessary to produce grain, it must be apparent to all of us that we must allow the farmer an increased price.

Mr. President, I do not believe that we can win this war by mere lip service. I have never believed, nor do I believe now, sir, that we can win it by eloquence, by epithets or words of hatred. The Senators who have recently spoken so eloquently and so loudly with respect to their patriotism forget that many other Senators who have said but little upon these questions have sons in the Army and at the front as well as those who have spoken so eloquently upon this and other occasions. Thank God, you who make the most noise, you who seek to wrap yourselves in Old Glory, are not the only ones who are going to participate in this great struggle and in the effort to win the victory.

Mr. President, I agree with every word that the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] said this morning. Let us eliminate from the discussions in the Senate political campaigns in the State of Wisconsin and elsewhere. Your own action condemns you; the words you have spoken condemn you; you have shown to the Senate and to the world that you are more interested in the campaign for a United States Senator than you are in the thousands and millions of brave boys who are willing to sacrifice their lives upon the altar of freedom for their country.

I admit when the declaration of war was pending in this body that there were those who were not ready to vote for it, but I stated then, if a majority of this and the other body said that it should be passed, I would do my full duty. So far as I am concerned, I have done so, and I will challenge any man anywhere to show to the contrary.

Mr. President, if I have read history right, I do not know of a single campaign, I do not know of any war, that was ever won simply by lip service and by heated discussion. Three-fourths of the time of the Senate recently has been taken up by certain Senators who have declared that other citizens are not as loyal as they are. So far as I am personally concerned, I am willing to vote for any measure, I am willing to vote for any appropriation, I am willing to follow the President as far as you will follow him in the performance of his duties in order to win this war.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GRONNA. I gladly yield.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator does not mean to leave the impression that any Senator upon this side of the Chamber has accused any Senator upon the other side of the Chamber of any act of disloyalty or any failure to give due and loyal service to the President, to the administration, and to our country in the prosecution of the war.

Mr. GRONNA. I thank the Senator for that statement. I appreciate it, perhaps more than he has any idea.

Mr. KING. Speaking for myself, I should feel ashamed if any Senator on this side of the Chamber should attempt to detract in the slightest degree from the loyalty and the patriotism of the distinguished Senator from North Dakota, or of any man who occupies a seat upon the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. GRONNA. I again thank the Senator. Mr. President, if I have made mistakes they are my own mistakes. I never have since I was thrown upon my own resources followed any man unless in my own mind and heart I knew that my action was right.

I would not allude to the matter to which I am about to allude except for the fact that certain Senators have spoken so eloquently about their patriotism. I do not challenge their patriotism; I believe they are patriotic; I have no right to refuse to believe they are, but I want to say to the Senate and to the country that so far as I am personally concerned my son went to the war when he was but 18 years old. He never had to ask my consent a second time, and he enlisted in the Regular Army as a private, he went to the bottom of the ladder. I have never written a letter nor asked for any favors for him, because I wanted him to take his chances with the rest of the boys who are going to the front. Mr. President, all that boy could do was to offer his services and his life.

It is a deplorable thing that a Senator's motives should be questioned; and when I hear statements made challenging the patriotism and the loyalty of certain candidates for office in Wisconsin, who made their fight upon a loyalty platform, let me say right now that so far as Mr. Thompson is concerned I know him personally, and I want to say for the benefit of the Senator from Mississippi, and other Senators, that he is just as loyal as is the Senator from Mississippi or any Member of this body. Neither by word of mouth nor by anything that he has written has he intimated anything but that he was in favor of the most vigorous prosecution of this war. What his attitude was before the war was declared, I do not know; but I want to say here and now that I know that Mr. Thompson is a loyal American citizen.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me at that point for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. GRONNA. I will yield for a question.

Mr. ASHURST. Well, I hardly want to ask a question. The Senator will bear witness that I have tried to keep out of this discussion. I do not blame the Senator. I deprecate these things that come from our side as much as I do those that come from the other side.

Mr. GRONNA. I appreciate the Senator's courtesy and friendship.

Mr. ASHURST. But I just want to say that the Senator is a valued member of the committee. He probably will be one of the conferees on this bill. I am not trying to lecture anybody. The Senator knows that I could not do that, and I would not do it; but I am extremely anxious to get this bill through this evening. It may be an unimportant bill; but being charged with the conduct of the bill, I do want to conclude its consideration. I have told a number of Senators around the Chamber that we would finish it this evening; and while I do not want to shorten the speech of the Senator—I could not if I tried to——

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I am through. I know that the Senator is anxious to get through with the bill, and I am anxious to get through with it, too.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is very kind.

Mr. GRONNA. I was simply carried away, perhaps, with my own enthusiasm, because I have been sitting here in silence for many days listening to these eloquent speeches, beautiful as they are, couched in language which it would be impossible for me to use; but they can not always be substantiated by facts.

Mr. President, I am through.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, before this war began many United States citizens of German blood and of Austrian blood, having in mind those of their kin and former companions, that they loved abroad, naturally felt a sympathy for Germany and Austria, never dreaming of the devilish ambitions of the Kaiser to conquer and rob the world by brutal military force; but after the die was cast and the United States entered into this war, I think the overwhelming preponderance of those men and women, finding it necessary to make their choice, did make it with a sincere and patriotic heart, and with all their soul are favoring and supporting the Government of the United States.

I do not think it strengthens the United States to wound the feelings of those who, before the war developed the terrible issues we now clearly understand, felt sympathy for the German cause. They merely loved their old German friends and kindred, as was very natural, and did not know then the evil intent of the military autocracy. The majority of Americans did not at first comprehend the Kaiser's fiendish designs on the liberties of mankind. I deprecate any speech that would cause our patriotic citizens of German and Austrian blood to feel that they are the object of suspicion or the object of aversion or the object of positive hostility. On the contrary, their patriotism, in spite of their affection for the people of the old Fatherland, having been triumphant, they deserve all the more honor and respect because of their fidelity to the United States. Our German-Americans are in a position of great trial. Ninety-five out of a hundred are utterly faithful to America. A few are lukewarm. Probably not one in a hundred is so ignorant as to be hostile at heart to America. Let us not insult or wound the 99 by intemperate talk.

This is a great struggle, in which all of our people ought to cooperate. I deprecate exceedingly that there should be any appearance of political debate on the floor.

Let us welcome to the ranks of patriotic Americans all who are with us in heart now.

Let us not drive away by unjust and ungenerous suspicions those who tried to keep us out of war, but who are now willing to give every evidence of devotion to our common cause.

In 1916 our noble President was praised to the skies because "he kept us out of war," and those who by unsound argument then tried to keep us out of war ought not to be treated as common enemies because their arguments were unsound. If they are right now, let us receive them, and let them march in honor with us against the common enemy of mankind.

I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have read by the Secretary.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, a question of order. Is there not an amendment pending?

Mr. OWEN. Oh, I beg pardon. I thought that had been disposed of. I withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The matter now pending is the point of order raised by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. CURTIS. I did not make the point of order, Mr. President. I was not recognized for that purpose. The Senator declined to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Has the point of order made to the amendment of the Senator from Montana been withdrawn?

Mr. MYERS. There was none made.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator declined to yield for me to make the point of order, so it was not made.

Mr. MYERS. There is no point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, this amendment refers to the improvement of Indian lands in one of my neighboring States, and I would not at this time delay the Senate to discuss the amendment but for the fact that I have the impression that I have perhaps a more intimate personal knowledge of the facts in this case than other Senators present.

This project, Mr. President, was initiated and completed a number of years ago, and it is one of the most satisfactory that has ever been constructed. The work is well done and the supply of water is abundant. The lands that have been reclaimed and those still to be reclaimed are of the finest possible quality. Yet the lands have not all been brought under cultivation.

The question has been asked here why this development has been delayed, in view of the fact that the project has been completed for so many years. The truth of the matter is, Mr. President, that a good many causes have contributed to this delay. First, I should say that it has been a tedious process here, as elsewhere in the country, to wean the Indians away from the habits not only of their lifetime but the habits of many generations which have preceded them; and yet I have occasion to know that they have been gradually led away from the old order and are each year taking more and more kindly to the cultivation of their lands, and particularly to the production of different kinds of live stock, with which these irrigated lands have an intimate relationship.

In this particular territory the Crow Tribe, the members of which are the owners of these lands, have made material progress during the past few years in the cultivation and development of their country, and undoubtedly more would have been done in improving these lands except for the fact that their extent is far in excess of that which the tribe actually requires, and this is one of the conditions that have combined to cause delay. Another is that the lands are a long way from market, and there has therefore been no opportunity of leasing them to white settlers, for the reason that the population of the surrounding country until recently has been very scant.

These conditions, Mr. President, have materially changed within the past year or two. A great deal of this land has recently been leased to white people for the cultivation and production of sugar beets to be used near my home town in Wyoming, and if this appropriation be granted, many thousands of acres of this land will be made productive during the present year.

I will say incidentally that this is the least refractory kind of land. It is as level as a floor, and in other ways is ready for the hand of the farmer, and will be easily reduced to a state of cultivation. In my judgment it would be a pity for this appropriation to fail, because of its immediate effectiveness in the increase of agricultural crops. Most of this fund, as I understand, is to be employed in the building and construction of lateral ditches. I have occasion to know that the main canal—not only the diversion dam, but the main canal covering this body of land—is in a perfect state of repair and ready to use, with enormous quantities of water available which would without a doubt be used to good advantage from the very first day that these laterals and other incidental improvements are provided.

In addition to this, Mr. President, there is almost an assurance at this time that an electric railway will be constructed from the nearest railway town straight through this project, which would make it possible to transport such heavy crops as sugar beets. Again, there is a plan for building an immense power plant in the Big Horn River, from which this water is taken. All of this movement in the way of improvement perhaps hinges on this appropriation; and, though it may be late in appearing here, it is unquestionably one of great importance. As has been pointed out, as I understand, by the Senator from Montana, this appropriation is to be taken from the Indian tribal funds, is it not?

Mr. MYERS. It is.

Mr. KENDRICK. It is to be taken from that source and employed in the development of lands owned by the Indians. The title to very little of this land has ever passed from the Indian to the white man; and the benefits would not only be immediate but they would go directly to the Crow Indian Tribe.

Of all the appropriations contained in this bill, Mr. President, I dare say that not one is more worthy of favorable action than this that has been offered by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wish to say that I do not know anything about the proposed project or its possibilities. I have had no opportunity to investigate it; and I know nothing of the department's estimate that this project would result in the production of 600,000 bushels of wheat. I assume, however, that this statement is based upon more or less investigation.

While the promise may be more or less golden, perhaps too generous, yet I think we ought to resolve the doubt in favor of production. If $200,000 will bring into existence 600,000 bushels of wheat, it is, indeed, a splendid investment. The wheat itself will be worth $1,200,000. The outlay will be only 33⅓ cents a bushel. Not only that, but the improvement will be permanent and will be valuable for the future.

While it might chance that our expectations will not be entirely justified, while it might happen that the estimate of the department would not be equaled by the actual production, yet it is certain that if we do not make the attempt there will be no production whatever; and it seems to me that in this crisis, with the overpowering necessity for foodstuffs, we ought to resolve the doubt in favor of this appropriation.

I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, line 17, after the amendment already agreed to at that point, it is proposed to insert the following:

For assisting in the continuation, the enlarging, and extending of the drainage project now in progress on the Indian reservation set aside by the State of Florida for the Seminole Indians under the provisions of chapter 7310, Laws of Florida, acts of 1917, and the maintenance thereof, the sum of $100,000.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, in dealing with the Indians, and in the matter of meting out the beneficent aid of the Federal Government, I was impressed, as I read over this bill and considered the various and sundry appropriations to assist in reclamation projects in the West, with the fact that certainly within my own State we had a project that was as worthy of assistance as any of those that are being aided through this measure in the West.

We have within the Everglades of Florida an Indian reservation of approximately 100,000 acres which was not contributed or donated by the Federal Government, but which was given to the Indians by the State government from the State's domain. This territory, comprising as it does approximately 100,000 acres, is located within what is commonly known in our State, and so designated by statute, as the Everglades drainage district of Florida. Here we have a vast empire, composed of some 4,000,000 acres of land that is as fertile and productive as any within the borders of the United States; and it has often been said of it that it is as fertile as the valley of the Nile. It is within this territory that the State of Florida, through its beneficence, has seen fit to set aside an Indian reservation of approximately 100,000 acres.

The drainage project there has been in progress for some years. When we think of its magnitude, its expansiveness; when we consider that it is by far the largest drainage enterprise within the United States, it may be well realized that, necessarily, it is of such extensive proportions that it can not be completed within a brief period of some two or three years. Active operations have been going on in this territory for the last 10 years. The work is carried on under the supervision of a board composed of five members of the State cabinet. The State and the owners of lands located within that territory have, up to the present time, expended some four or five million dollars upon reclamation by drainage. I am glad to say that splendid progress has been made. At the present time there has been reclaimed partially or almost completely at least five or six hundred thousand acres of land. Upon this reclaimed land there are many settlers at the present time, prosperous villages and towns have sprung up here and there, farming of various kinds is being carried on successfully and very profitably. It has been established beyond question by actual experience and actual demonstration that there are no better or more productive farming lands within America than are to be found within the Everglades drainage district of the State of Florida.

Mr. President, I speak more generally of that district, because it is within that district that, through the generosity of the State of Florida, the Indians are so fortunate as to have the large reservation to which I make reference. In order to develop this reservation to its greatest degree of efficiency and value, in order to make it most beneficial to the Indians who are living upon it, who are now the beneficiaries under the appropriation made by the State, it is necessary that the land be reclaimed by drainage. Partial drainage is in progress at the present time upon this territory, but it will be necessary for considerable further amounts to be expended to perfect and complete the reclamation in this particular territory, as well as within the entire drainage district of Florida, composed of about 4,000,000 acres of land.

Mr. President, I believe that when we bring before Congress a proposition involving assistance in reclaiming a territory that has not been granted to the Indians by the Federal Government, but has been donated to them by the State government, there certainly is some merit in the request that the Federal Government assist in reclaiming that land and making it more habitable, making it so that it can be cultivated, and cultivated profitably. One hundred thousand dollars is a small sum, considering the cost that will be required to reclaim this territory; although I may say, Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do.

Mr. ASHURST. I should simply like to ask, for information, as to how much money—if the Senator is prepared to give the information—will be required to reclaim this land?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, it will take, possibly, a half million dollars, in addition to the expenditures heretofore made.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, while I do not want to interrupt the Senator's excellent speech—and there is merit in his statements—can not the Senator see at this time that we have applied the rule to Montana and Arizona, and expect to apply it to Wyoming, with regard to new projects? That is to say, we have set our faces for the present against the creation of new projects or the entering into or the opening up of new lands at this particular time. Is there any special reason why we should at this time make an expenditure of $100,000 for the purpose of entering upon a project that ultimately will cost us, say, a million dollars?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I had not stated that it would cost the Federal Government a half million dollars. I was just about to state that this assistance that may be contributed by the Federal Government would be only a very small proportion of the expenditures, and that the expenditures were now in progress under the direction of a board composed of State officials, and that this would be merely a matter of cooperation on the part of the Federal Government in assisting in the reclamation of the State Indian reservation in Florida. Now, I do not know that there is any particular reason why we should engage in new projects at this time, unless it would be a matter of advancing this meritorious project to the position it deserves, as well as trying to correct some dereliction heretofore.

I state, Mr. President, that there has been great dereliction on the part of the Congress of the United States in making appropriations or else in providing assistance for the reclamation of the swamp and overflowed lands of this country. We have sat supinely by for a number of years now and have seen the bounty of this great country of ours bestowed upon the great West and their arid-land projects. We have seen millions and millions of dollars of the Federal money appropriated for the purpose of carrying on arid-land reclamation projects, upon the ground that it was reclaiming a vast territory of valuable land, taking it for granted that it was done from the standpoint of developing that territory and bringing into use valuable land. But at the same time, when the Government was expending from $30 to $60, and in some instances $100, an acre for the purpose of reclaiming those arid lands, this Government, through its beneficence, might have been assisting other sections of the country in the reclamation of lands which would have been reclaimed by drainage at a cost not exceeding from six to ten dollars per acre; and every time that you were reclaiming one acre of that land, costing you from $60 to $100 per acre, in other sections of this country, you could have reclaimed land elsewhere in quadruple its amount, and could have brought to use a greater amount of fertile, productive lands of the country. The lands of the Florida Everglades can be reclaimed even so low as $4 to $10 per acre; and as this vast territory is an open, untimbered country, the cost for preparing the drained land for cultivation is not exceeding $2 or $3 an acre.

Mr. President, far be it from me to complain because the Congress has assisted in developing the western country. I have rejoiced in seeing their prosperity. I have been gratified to witness the wonderful development, the expansion and enlargement of their resources throughout that section of our country. But, Mr. President, I say that there is equal justice and merit in asking some assistance from the Federal Government in carrying on reclamation projects in other sections of our country.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Yes, sir; I yield.

Mr. FALL. I am, I think, in accord with the general ideas that the Senator from Florida is now advocating; but the Senator must realize that there is a very great distinction between the reclamation of the arid lands and the proposition that he is now advocating. The arid lands in the West are being reclaimed at the cost of the settlers under those projects. The Government has assisted, from the funds set aside out of the sale of public lands, by advancing a certain amount of money; but the lands that are reclaimed in that way are sold, and the individuals purchasing those lands from the Government are paying the cost of the reclamation. The people of the United States are not giving to the West a dollar for use in the reclamation of arid lands.

I ask the Senator's attention to this point. I think he is right about the drainage of swamp lands. I think there should be some comprehensive system of legislation adopted, and it would be a magnificent investment, but there are two things involved in this proposition. A new system for an outright appropriation as a gift and the general system under which irrigated lands are being reclaimed in the West are entirely distinct and different. I will vote for any comprehensive system and an advance of any reasonable amount of money by the Government to carry out the system in the drainage of Florida lands or lands elsewhere.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I realize, of course, that there are some differences in regard to the amendment which I offer and the system which has been provided for the reclamation of the West, but I claim that this amendment has a great deal of merit in it when you consider that interwoven all through this bill are provisions assisting projects, assisting schools, and in various other ways where the Federal Government is making an appropriation, and the Federal Government will never have that money covered back into the Federal Treasury.

You should take in connection with this proposition the fact that a few years ago in dealing with the reclamation projects of the West Congress in its beneficence deemed it proper to remit the interest. You provided that system here and provided interest, and Congress remitted the interest or provided that there should be no interest account.

Coming back to the issue more directly, when you are dealing with the Indians of this country it is the policy of Congress that the Indians shall be treated as wards of the Federal Government. You can take this bill, and on its every page you find the lavish hand of the Federal Government extended to the Indian. We are dealing with him most generously. He is truly receiving the bounty of our Treasury; and I say when the State of Florida has been generous enough, when the State of Florida is willing to cooperate with the Federal Government in treating the Indians as its wards and has set aside a reservation of 100,000 acres, certainly the Federal Government ought to be willing to assist in reclaiming it and making it habitable, making it suitable and cultivable for their occupancy, and I contend that from that standpoint this amendment possesses unquestionable merit.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to ask the Senator, as I did not clearly hear the amendment read, if it proposes the reclamation of Indian lands?

Mr. TRAMMELL. It proposes the reclamation of lands in the Indian reservations set aside by the Legislature of the State of Florida to be known as the Seminole Indian Reservation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is not a Federal Indian reservation then?

Mr. TRAMMELL. No; it is not a Federal Indian reservation, but it was set aside by the State, and I contend, Mr. President, if the State is willing from its bounty to furnish the land and appropriate it for an Indian reservation, and thereby relieve the Federal Government from granting the land for a reservation, certainly the Federal Government is doing better than it would if it had to furnish land for the reservation and then also contribute to the support and aid of the Indians in reclaiming that land. We are only asking in this instance for some assistance in the reclamation of the territory. The State, from its domain, has given the land.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I merely wish to add one word to what the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] said with reference to a suggestion made by the Senator from Florida that Congress had remitted the interest on the money appropriated for irrigation in the West. The Senator is a little mistaken in that statement. In the first instance no interest was charged on the money that was loaned for the reclamation project, but afterwards Congress did extend the time in which the money was to be paid back by the settlers, and in that extension interest charges were imposed upon the deferred payments. Every dollar of that money that goes to the reclamation of western lands for irrigation purposes outside of Indian reservations will be repaid to the Government of the United States, and on many of the Indian reservations repayment was provided for.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington if the bill does not contain items for bridges alone that would far exceed the appropriation asked in this case for assistance in the reclamation of the lands on this reservation?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am not disputing that; it may be true. The chairman of the committee can answer as to it better than I can.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Roads and bridges and other public improvements have to be made on this reservation in our State. You have a little trifling sum of $10,000 provided in this bill for assistance to the Seminole Indians in Florida, and you will find other items in the bill where the contributions are more than that for providing automobiles and other vehicles for Government agents who are looking after a few Indians on some reservation in the West.

I am contending, Mr. President, for justice on the part of the Indians in our State, and also for the same consideration for the people of Florida as Congress has extended to other sections of our country. In all fairness we are entitled to this treatment.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, until about three years ago no appropriation whatever was made or none had been made for a number of years for the relief of distress among the Seminole Indians. Commencing with the bill passed three years ago, or two years ago, an appropriation of $8,000 was made, and this year the item carries $10,000. The State of Florida has done admirably well in setting aside this reservation; and I have no doubt if the Senator will, as I hope he will, argue as well as he has done to-day to the Secretary of the Interior the Secretary will direct the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to make a special investigation of this matter and include in his estimate of next year a certain amount that the experts of the department might deem necessary and proper.

But at this particular time it becomes my duty to make a point of order against the amendment proposed by my esteemed friend, because it has not been estimated for by the department. We have tried to keep the bill within the estimates and the amendment falls clearly under Rule XVI, which provides that "no amendment shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which is to increase an appropriation or to add a new item." I do not make the point of order out of hostility to this project, but I make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WOLCOTT in the chair). The point of order is sustained.

Mr. McNARY. I propose the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert in the Oregon item the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to withdraw from any of the tribal funds of the Klamath Tribe of Indians in Oregon now to the credit of said tribe in the Treasury of the United States the sum of $3,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and to use the same in payment to Levi Walker, Fred Hendricks, Harrison Brown, Joseph S. Ball, and Clayton Kirk for compensation at the rate of $3 per day each for their services rendered to said tribe in presenting the affairs of said Klamath Tribe of Indians to the officials of the United States, and in addition to such per diem allowance a sum sufficient to pay the actual expenses of said Levi Walker, Fred Hendricks, Harrison Brown, Joseph S. Ball, and Clayton Kirk for travel and maintenance at the city of Washington, D. C., said per diem compensation to begin from the day of their leaving the Klamath Indian Reservation, Oreg., and to continue until the day of their return thereto: Provided, That such payments to said delegates shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. I understand this amendment embodies a principle that is recognized in the bill. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the amendment. I believe he is willing to accept it.

Mr. ASHURST. I am familiar with the amendment. There were five Indians who came here from the Klamath Agency and appeared before the Senate committee and I am not certain but that they appeared before the House committee. The amendment simply proposes to take the sum of $3,500 out of their own funds, as they wish done, to pay the expenses of and give a per diem to the five delegates. I am sure there is no objection to it as far as I know.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Insert in the Montana items the following:

That Indians of the Fort Peck Reservation in Montana entitled to allotments under existing laws may select lands classified as coal and receive patents therefor in accordance with the act of May 30, 1908 (35 Stat. L., 558), with a reservation, however, to the United States of the coal deposits therein and of the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I have no personal interest whatever in this amendment. I offer it at the request of both the Indian Bureau and the Fort Peck Indians. It is easy to see what it proposes to do. The law is such at present that the homesteaders have a right on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation to make a homestead entry of the surface over coal lands, reserving the coal to the United States. That right is extended to the homesteader. It simply gives the Indian the same right, the right to take his allotment on the surface of coal lands if he sees fit, reserving the coal to the United States. There is nothing making it compulsory on the part of the Indian. He need not do it unless he wants to do it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. MYERS. In a second. There was a delegation of Fort Peck Indians down here a short time ago. They met with me in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and presented some of their desires. They desired to have this amendment offered, and at their request and at the request of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs I offer the amendment. I promised to do so at their request. I have no personal interest in it. I think it is in the interest of the Indians.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to ask the Senator a question, as I could not fully understand the amendment as it was read. Does it apply to lands on the Indian reservation or on the public domain?

Mr. MYERS. It applies to lands on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation.

Mr. CURTIS. They belong to the Indians already. The amendment proposes to give the coal to the United States, I understand.

Mr. MYERS. I understand it would allow the Indians to take an allotment anywhere on land that is not already homesteaded by entrymen. They can go anywhere on the Fort Peck Reservation, I understand, and take their allotments. If they take the allotment on coal land which is open to homestead entry, they can get the surface for an allotment and reserve the coal to the United States. That is my understanding of it.

Mr. CURTIS. The coal on that reservation belongs to those Indians. It is their coal. I make a point of order against the amendment that it is general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order will be sustained.

Mr. OWEN. I call up now the amendment which I offered. I will say in explanation of it that it passed the Senate on March 23 upon the unanimous report of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 63, after line 10, insert:

To pay additional interest upon items 1 and 4 of the judgment of the Court of Claims, of May 18, 1905, in favor of the Cherokee Nation (40 Ct. Cls. Rept., p. 252), and upon the funds arising from said items 1 and 4, respectively, the same being 5 per cent interest-bearing Cherokee trust funds in the Treasury of the United States, as follows, to wit: On the amount of the fund which arose from item 1 of said judgment as such amount was determined and paid to the Secretary of the Interior on July 2, 1906, to be by him credited to the principal of the Cherokee school fund, interest at 5 per cent per annum from July 2, 1906, to and including May 26, 1910; on the amount of the fund which arose from item 4 of said judgment, as such amount was determined and paid to the Secretary of the Interior on July 2, 1906, to be by him credited to the principal of the Cherokee national fund, interest at 5 per cent per annum from July 2, 1906, to and including May 26, 1910; on the original principal sum of item 4 of said judgment, interest at 5 per cent per annum from July 1, 1893, to July 1, 1903, and on the amount of the interest thus accruing interest at 4 per cent per annum from December 29, 1905, to May 14, 1906; and on the aggregate of the sums of the interest for the last two periods herein above mentioned, interest at 5 per cent per annum from July 2, 1906, to the date of the passage of this act; and the sum of $27,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the interest above allowed, is hereby appropriated and authorized to be paid to the Cherokee Nation: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay the amount arising from item 4 of said judgment, with interest thereon as herein above provided for, to the agent appointed by the Cherokee Nation acting through its principal chief to receive the same, said payment to be made immediately upon the approval of this act.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not know much about navigation, but I do know if you load a boat too heavily it can not be propelled. This undoubtedly is a worthy piece of legislation; but we have tried to keep the bill free from legislation of this kind. The bill has passed the Senate, and I ask the Senator to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. OWEN. The Senate has already passed the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. I say the bill has already passed the Senate.

Mr. OWEN. It is very difficult to get a small bill at this time up in the House with the crush of business there.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, my mail is loaded down with letters appealing to me to put bills and claims on this appropriation bill. I have four bills that have passed the Senate relating to affairs in my State that I should like to reach into the calendar and stick on this bill, but I can not do it, or should not do it, and I hope the Senator will withdraw the amendment. I appeal to the Senator to withdraw it.

I make a point of order not because I think it is bad legislation—I think it is good—but I do not want to load the bill down too heavily.

Mr. OWEN. I am not entirely sure that a point of order will justly lie, because the bill has already passed the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. I am not going to try to deceive anybody. I do not believe the point of order will lie, because the bill was reported from a standing committee and therefore is not obnoxious to the rule, but I appeal to the Senate to withdraw it.

Mr. OWEN. The bill has passed the Senate, and it is to carry out an Indian treaty. I really think the amendment is not subject to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Arizona state his point of order?

Mr. ASHURST. I can not. In my judgment the amendment is not subject to a point of order, because it has been reported favorably from a standing committee of the Senate, and that removes it from the position of being obnoxious to the rule.

Mr. GRONNA and Mr. GORE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. ASHURST. I do not want to have a long discussion about a point of order. It is nearly 5.30, and I wish to have the bill passed to-night.

Mr. GRONNA. I make the point of order that it is a claim on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wish to say to the chairman of the committee that I have here an amendment which I had intended to press, giving the Osage Indian Tribe a right to have a hearing in the Court of Claims with respect to what is known as the civilization fund, the Osage Tribe asserting the right to the fund which has been appropriated and applied by the General Government to other purposes than Osage Indian affairs. I should like to know if the Senator will agree to let the amendment go into the bill?

Mr. ASHURST. It is a worthy piece of legislation; that right should be granted; but it is only by insisting on points of order that we can force Congress to take up individual cases and pass separate bills. I shall certainly make a point of order against the amendment if it is offered.

Mr. GORE. I will not afford the Senator that opportunity, having secured his commitment to the justice of the claim.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I offer the following amendment, to which I believe there will be no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add a new paragraph after line 21, page 42, as follows:

For the completion of the construction of a bridge across the San Juan River at Shiprock, N. Mex., on the Navajo Indian Reservation, $4,226.14, in addition to the $16,500 appropriated for this purpose by the act approved June 30, 1913 (38 Stats. L., p. 91), to be immediately available for payment to the El Paso Bridge & Iron Co., of El Paso, Tex., for extra work and material, the same being made necessary by acts of the Government: Provided, That said sum shall be reimbursed to the United States by the Navajo Indians and shall remain a charge and lien upon the lands, property, and funds belonging to said Navajo Indians until paid in full.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Texas if this amendment has been estimated for?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have here a letter from the Secretary of the Interior recommending the appropriation, which is, as I understand, equivalent to an estimate. The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., December 27, 1917.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Under date of January 14, 1914, the department approved a contract with the El Paso Bridge & Iron Co. for the sum of $14,725 for the construction of the bridge herein referred to, payable from a special reimbursable appropriation of $16,500 made by the act of June 30, 1913 (38 Stat. L., 77).

The contract, plans, and specifications, prepared in the Indian Office, were based upon data furnished by a local engineer employed especially for the purpose, and this data proved incorrect as to the location of certain shale foundation for the north abutment, which was found after the contractor started work to be at an elevation of 80 feet instead of at 85 feet, as fixed by the engineer's data. The error necessitated the construction of a new cofferdam and the placing of the abutment on a foundation 5 feet deeper than the contractor estimated on. While the extra work was in progress a high flood occurred and washed away a considerable amount of the contractor's material and also the north approach to the bridge, thus permitting part of the river current to run between the abutment and the north bank of the river, which change in its course compelled a suspension of work in the bridge, pending the preparation of drawings for an abutment required to meet the new conditions. During this suspension further damages were done by additional floods, which caused further suspension of the work and delayed its progress into the winter season, with increased cost to the contractor, who, on July 7, 1916, presented a claim for extra work and materials, loss of superintendent's time, damage for loss of material and time, and deferred use of equipment, etc., in the sum of $6,274.04.

After a careful consideration of the claim the Indian Office was convinced that the contractor was legally, justly, and properly entitled to a greater part of it and compromised with him for the sum of $5,106.04 in settlement, authority for the payment of which, from any funds found applicable and available, was approved by this department on June 19, 1917.

The matter was then submitted to the auditor, who certified to the payment to the contractor the sum of $880, the same being the unexpended balance of the appropriation and the only funds applicable and available, thus leaving a balance of $4,226.14 due the contractor on the approved claim of $5,106.04.

It is, therefore, believed that the action of this department in approving the claim should be sustained and the amendment intended to be proposed by Senator CULBERSON should be incorporated in the urgent deficiency bill.

Cordially, yours, FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary.

Hon. THOMAS S. MARTIN,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

Mr. GRONNA. I make the point of order that this is not found in the Book of Estimates; that it has not been estimated for, and has not been reported by any standing committee of the Senate.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will state to the Senator that this amendment was introduced by my colleague [Mr. CULBERSON], and referred by him to the Committee on Appropriations. For that reason it did not come before the Committee on Indian Affairs in sufficient time to be reported. I have presented it for my colleague now. It is merely to extend the limit of appropriation made for a bridge. It is reimbursable out of an Indian fund. It was for the reason I have stated that it was not laid before the Committee on Indian Affairs. I trust the Senator from North Dakota will withdraw the point of order. The proposed appropriation amounts to about $4,000.

Mr. GRONNA. I insist upon the point of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment providing that a hearing shall be given to the heirs and representatives of R. V. Belt in connection with the distribution of the funds of the Pottawatomie Indians, which is provided for on page 78 of the bill. This fund will pretty nearly exhaust the amount which has been set apart for the Pottawatomies, and unless this relief is granted it will be a permanent denial of justice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 78, after line 11, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That from the sum herein appropriated for said Pottawatomie Indians the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to pay to the legal representatives of R. V. Belt (Mrs. Joana Belt and William O. Belt) such sum as he, after a proper hearing, may fix as compensation justly and equitably due the said Belt and associates on a quantum meruit for their services in recovering for the said Pottawatomie Indians the annuities withheld from them, under a contract with representatives of said Indians approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs November 1, 1902.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, there is quite a controversy as to what amount of attorney fees should be paid. I take the view that some money should probably be paid to these attorneys for their services, but there is a wide and irreconcilable difference as to the amount that should be paid. I am, therefore, obliged to make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. OWEN. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that this does not allow any particular sum, but only allows the Secretary of the Interior to determine what these attorneys were entitled to under the contract approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs years ago, before the attorneys rendered the service.

Mr. ASHURST. I have a great deal of confidence in the Senator from Oklahoma, and what he says has much weight with me; but I feel that I must lay down a rigid rule in matters of that kind which come before the committee.

Mr. OWEN. I will ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter as the justification upon which this request is based.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

MARCH 10, 1918.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Mr. R. V. Belt, Mr. C. H. Merillat, and I, after 11 years' work, succeeded in establishing the claim of the Pottawatomie Indians of Michigan and Wisconsin to certain annuities, amounting to $447,339, and Congress has already appropriated $350,000 of this sum, which the Indians have received.

By reference of Senator NELSON this case was undertaken by Mr. Belt in 1902 under a contract approved by Commissioner of Indian Affairs Jones for 15 per cent, wholly contingent, but through an error of law on the part of Secretary Hitchcock in holding that these Indians were citizens and therefore the contract did not require his approval, it did not receive his signature and thus become a binding contract under section 2103 of the Revised Statutes. The attorneys prosecuted the claim at the request of the Indians and won, but their compensation can not be paid until Congress acts. Mr. Belt associated Mr. Merillat and me in the case in 1905.

When this case was undertaken it was considered a most desperate one, the Interior Department having taken the position that the Indians had forfeited their annuities. Two attorneys who had been employed by the Indians had abandoned it. Commissioner Jones, in approving the contract reducing the contingent fee from 20 per cent to 15 per cent, stated:

"This office has denied such claim on the ground that by refusing to move west under the treaty of 1833 they forfeited all rights under that and subsequent treaties with the Pottawatomie Nation. The contract is approved at the reduced rate with the express understanding and upon the condition that such action in nowise be regarded as a recognition of the claimant Indians as a tribe or the alleged claims in the premises."

Under these circumstances the claim was undertaken, and after 11 years' work on the part of three attorneys in filing briefs, preparing memorials, making arguments, and procuring necessary legislation, the claim was established and Congress recognized it in the act approved June 30, 1913 (38 Stat., 102), by appropriating $150,000 on account, and thereafter by the act of May 18, 1916, $100,000; act of March 2, 1917, $100,000, and in the pending Indian appropriation bill, $75,000, leaving a comparatively small amount yet to be paid. Thus the Indians through the services of the attorneys will have received $425,000, while the attorneys through the failure of Secretary Hitchcock to act on the contract, have so far received nothing.

The House Indian Committee in the last Congress and the Senate Indian Committee at this session have made favorable reports on bills providing for the payment of the balance due these Indians and referring the matter of compensation to the attorneys to the Court of Claims for settlement. These bills have received the favorable recommendation of the Interior Department.

This claim had been persistently denied by the Indian Office for over 30 years before we were employed, as will be seen by the above-quoted statement of Commissioner Jones; and if it had not been for the services rendered by Mr. Belt, Mr. Merillat, and myself the Pottawatomies would never have received a cent. It is conceded both by the department and the Indians that it was through our work that the $447,339 was recovered for the Indians.

On pages 171–172 of the committee hearings on the Indian appropriation bill, the Assistant Commissioner states: "By means of these appropriations the Indians have made substantial progress along industrial lines."

Thus it will be observed that these Indians, formerly poor and homeless, made so through the denial of their rights by the Indian Office, by the establishment of their just claim by us, have now come into their patrimony to the amount of $425,000, and therewith are making "substantial progress along industrial lines," as stated by the Assistant Commissioner.

If the appropriation of $75,000 in the pending Indian appropriation bill is passed without at the same time providing for the settlement of our compensation, then the anomalous situation will arise of Congress having appropriated nearly all of the $447,339 for the Indians, but nothing having been paid us. We feel confident that Congress will not knowingly do such an injustice. The Indians are willing and anxious that the matter of our compensation shall be speedily settled, as will be seen by the inclosed letters from John Shawano, chief, and from Rev. Dr. Morstad, the missionary who has lived and worked among these Indians for many years and who knows what services we have rendered the Pottawatomies. Both the Senate and House Indian Committees, after hearings, and the Secretary of the Interior have made favorable reports and recommendations on the bills referring the matter to the Court of Claims for determination. We are willing to render an account of our services to any tribunal Congress may see fit to name to hear and decide the question, even to the extent of going before the Department of the Interior, which had denied for 30 years the rights of these Indians to their annuities, and which, after 11 years of laborious and efficient services on the part of Mr. Belt, Mr. Merillat, and myself, finally conceded its error in not following the law of June 24, 1864 (13 Stat., 172), providing that the annuities shall be held in the Treasury for these Pottawatomies.

Mr. Belt died in 1910, and his widow will receive two-thirds and Mr. Merillat and I one-third of whatever amount the court may fix as proper compensation.

For a confirmation of what is herein stated, I would refer you to Senator NELSON.

I earnestly request on behalf of Mrs. Belt, my associate, and myself that the Senate adopt the accompanying amendment to the Indian appropriation bill, which has been approved by the department and the House and Senate Committees on Indian Affairs in their reports on Senate bill 2120, introduced by Senator NELSON, and which would give us our day in court before all the money due the Pottawatomies is appropriated.

Respectfully,

(Signed) CHARLES J. KAPPLER.

Mr. OWEN. This matter was really set before the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I myself am to blame for not having it called up before the committee. I happen to know something about it, because R. V. Belt was Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs many years ago. He was a man of great uprightness and great probity, and he brought this action for the Pottawattomies, and recovered some $447,000 for them. He never was compensated for that service. He is now dead; he died in poverty; and his widow is in the city here living on very narrow means.

This amendment only provides that before the final distribution of the funds which Mr. Belt recovered the Secretary of the Interior may ascertain whether anything was due to him, and, if so, what under the contract which had been approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I think it is an extraordinary case of merit, and I hope the Senator will not insist on his point of order in this particular instance.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I trust I am not doing an injustice to any man, but I must insist on the point of order.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield the floor.

Mr. McCUMBER. Before the Senator from Arizona makes his point of order—although I really can not understand what that point of order would be, as I think it has been ruled over and over again that when a fund is paid not from the Treasury of the United States, but out of funds belonging to an Indian tribe, the same requirements for an estimate that would be necessary when the fund is paid out of the Treasury of the United States are not applicable—I want to say this on the merits of the case: I know something about this case, because it came up years ago when I was a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator from North Dakota yield to me?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I withdraw the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then, will the Senator from Arizona allow the amendment to be voted on now?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly; and I will say that I hope the Senator from North Dakota will appear—he has stated that he was a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs at that particular time—and I hope also that the Senator from Oklahoma will appear before the conferees in respect to the item, in order that we may have further light.

Mr. McCUMBER. I shall be glad to do so and shall not now say another word.

Mr. ASHURST. I withdraw the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment, at the end of line 4, on page 66. I did not have the amendment prepared when the committee amendment was adopted by the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and therefore ask for its adoption now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Oklahoma that perhaps it would be best for the Senate first to agree to concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GORE. But this is an amendment to an amendment which was made as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it will be remembered that there was one amendment reserved by me; that is to say, on page 81 the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] proposed an amendment to the committee amendment, which was adopted, proposing to insert certain language after the word "expended," on line 22, page 81. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, disagreed to the committee amendment, and I reserved a separate vote, which I now desire, on that amendment.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to explain to the Chair that the amendment which I offer is an amendment to an amendment which was adopted as in Committee of the Whole. I desire to offer this amendment to the committee amendment before the amendment is concurred in in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Oklahoma to the fact that the amendment he offers comes at the end of an amendment, and the Chair thinks he may offer it as an amendment in the Senate.

Mr. GORE. Very well, though I should prefer to pursue a different course, because if my amendment to the amendment is not adopted I might then want to make a point of order against the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Did the Senator from Oklahoma reserve the committee amendment as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. GORE. I do not think that is necessary. I do not think there will be any objection to my amendment; I feel certain that there will not be, but I do not want to waive my right to submit a point of order; and I would suggest that all the other amendments except this and the one suggested by the chairman of the committee be concurred in by the Senate, these two being left open for further amendment. I think the Chair undoubtedly will perceive the point I am making.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is quite of the opinion that the Senator from Oklahoma is entitled to a vote on his amendment in the Senate, even though the Senate might proceed to concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GORE. But the point is this, Mr. President: If the committee amendment is concurred in as reported from the Committee of the Whole before I offer my amendment, then I want the opportunity to make a point of order against the amendment which has heretofore been agreed to, in case my amendment is not agreed to. I think, however, my amendment will be accepted without objection, and, of course, if it should not be, I should not wish to waive my right to make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can not offer his amendment as in Committee of the Whole, for the bill is now out of the Committee of the Whole and in the Senate.

Mr. GORE. I understand that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And no vote has been reserved in connection with the amendment.

Mr. GORE. But, Mr. President, it is not necessary to make such a reservation. I can offer any amendment in the Senate that I could offer as in Committee of the Whole. There is absolutely no limitation, no requirement that the right should have been reserved to offer an amendment in the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me?

Mr. GORE. I will.

Mr. ASHURST. If I caught the amendment aright, it simply provides that a certain Mr. McMurray shall be authorized to sue in the Court of Claims, and shall be required to give bond for the costs in the case. Is that it?

Mr. GORE. Yes; to abide the judgment of the court, or the award of the Secretary, as the case may be.

Mr. ASHURST. Unless some other Senator has objection to the amendment, I shall not object to it.

Mr. GORE. There could not be any objection to it, but I can not be required to waive my right to make a point of order to an amendment agreed to as in Committee of the Whole by allowing the amendment to be agreed to in the Senate.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be reported and considered now. I do not think there will be any objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The SECRETARY. On page 66, after line 4, at the end of the committee amendment which has been agreed to, it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That the Court of Claims shall require the said J. F. McMurray, upon filing suit in pursuance hereof, to give a sufficient bond, with two or more good and sufficient sureties, to abide the judgment of such court in said suit, and in case the Secretary of the Interior should arbitrate such claims and counterclaims, he shall require the said McMurray to give sufficient security to abide the award of such arbitration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

Mr. FALL. Do I understand that the amendment as amended has been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The situation is this: There was an amendment agreed to, the Chair understands, as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FALL. Then the amendment as amended is now agreed to as in Committee of the Whole?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; it has been treated as a new amendment in the Senate.

Mr. FALL. Then it is agreed to in the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma is agreed to in the Senate, but the original committee amendment has not yet been concurred in; that is the status.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, is the bill being considered as in Committee of the Whole or in the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in the Senate.

Mr. MYERS. Have the amendments adopted as in Committee of the Whole been concurred in in the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not yet; we are trying to get to that.

Mr. MYERS. Then I ask to reserve the right to have a separate vote on the committee amendment in relation to the Flathead reclamation project in Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Did the Senator reserve that right when the bill was under consideration as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. MYERS. No; I had not heard any announcement until I asked if the bill had gone out of the Committee of the Whole and into the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has passed from consideration as in Committee of the Whole and is in the Senate. Now, the question is on concurring in the amendments made as Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MYERS. Is there no way of getting a separate vote on the Montana item in case I choose to bring it up?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, there is no doubt about the fact that we have the right in the Senate to vote separately on each amendment. The only reason for reserving an amendment is that the Presiding Officer usually states the question on concurring in the amendments en bloc; and, unless an amendment is reserved, he puts the question on concurring in the amendment in that way. Where an amendment has been reserved he saves it from that action; but the right exists under the rule, whether an amendment is reserved or not, to consider it in the Senate at any time. The object of the reservation is merely to guard against quick confirmation of all amendments before separate action can be had. If action has not been taken upon concurring in all the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole in the Senate, it is the absolute right of every Senator to have a vote on each one separately, because the rule provides that matter shall be considered in the Senate de novo, which means just as independently as to each amendment as was the case when the bill was under consideration as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not understand the rule as the Senator has just stated it. Whenever an amendment has been voted on when the bill was under consideration as in Committee of the Whole, then it can only be offered again and voted upon in the Senate when it has been reserved.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is not the rule.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Georgia says that is not the rule. That certainly has been the practice of this body for 16 years.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is the practice; but I have explained, Mr. President, the reason of the practice. The rule expressly declares that the entire matter is before the Senate de novo, just as it was when the bill was being considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. OVERMAN. What is the purpose, then, of the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. To give the double opportunity for investigation and care.

Mr. SMOOT. In this particular case there is no amendment to concur in in the Senate because of the fact that the amendment is not in the bill; it was defeated when the bill was under consideration as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MYERS. It is a committee amendment which was adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, when the bill is in the Senate an amendment can only be brought up when it has been reserved?

Mr. MYERS. It is a committee amendment; it was adopted; and I want the right to reserve it for a separate vote. I do not know that I will exercise that right; probably I will not——

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. MYERS. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. To end the matter, I ask unanimous consent that there may be a separate vote on the amendment of the Senator.

Mr. MYERS. I thank the Senator. I may choose to exercise that right or I may not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, in view of that, I will ask for a separate vote on the Yakima item.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent made by the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMOOT. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I announce, then, that in the Senate I may conclude to offer an amendment which will reach the committee amendment in regard to the Flathead reclamation project, which was adopted as in Committee of the Whole. I may not want to do it, but I may conclude to do so.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I will be glad to read the rule to the Presiding Officer. It is as follows:

> All bills and joint resolutions which shall have received two readings shall first be considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, after which they shall be reported to the Senate; and any amendments made in Committee of the Whole shall again be considered by the Senate, after which further amendments may be proposed.

So each amendment made as in Committee of the Whole may be considered anew as a separate amendment in the Senate, after which any amendments which any Senator may wish to offer may, under this rule, be offered.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there was no amendment made as in Committee of the Whole; the amendment was offered, but it was not agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator is wrong about that. I refer to the committee amendment which was adopted as in Committee of the Whole. I may want to object to it in the Senate; I have not decided yet whether I will or not. I will in a certain contingency, but not otherwise.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, if unanimous consent is granted it is not required then to decide the question of the rules, which usually causes so much agitation and discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico renew the request for unanimous consent?

Mr. FALL. I renew the request for unanimous consent—that the amendment referred to by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] may be voted upon separately, and also the amendment referred to by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], provided that the yeas and nays are not to be called for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole with the exception of the amendment reserved by the Senator from Arizona, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. On page 81——

Mr. MYERS. And the other amendments which yere reserved by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, on page 81, commencing with line 16, and extending down to line 22, it will be observed that there appears the following provision, which the committee recommended be stricken out:

> For continuation of investigations, beginning of construction and incidental operations on a project for the irrigation of a portion of the conditionally ceded lands of the Wind River Reservation, Wyo., $100,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1905, and to remain available until expended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Arizona suspend for a moment?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, with the exception of those which have been reserved? The Chair hears none, and all amendments are concurred in with the exception of the three reserved.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, nothing would give me greater gratification right now than to vote for this appropriation, because here on my left is my esteemed friend the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] who has pressed this matter with great ability and force, and on his feet stands the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], for whom I have an affection. If personal consideration could influence me at all, it would be a delight right now for me to vote against the amendment reported by the committee, and for the appropriation. But, Mr. President, the Committee on Indian Affairs laid down a course of action which we considered would save the Treasury. It was deemed that it would be well to save a million dollars at this particular time. So, with a pruning knife that was impartial, we laid out this bill, and carved it to the bone. We took the appropriations for irrigation in Arizona and cut them in two. Then we went to the State of Montana, where there was an appropriation provided for of $750,000, and we reduced that to $250,000. Then we went to that splendid project in Washington, the Wapato, on the Yakima, where the Secretary of the Interior asked for $750,000, and we carved that down to the tune of $250,000.

Much as I should like to gratify the two esteemed Senators from Wyoming, how can I vote against this amendment, and vote for the appropriation, when I know that it authorizes the expenditure of $5,000,000? Senators, in my judgment, if you vote for this appropriation of $100,000 you are voting to authorize the construction of a $5,000,000 project.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, save to say that that is not a fair or correct statement.

Mr. ASHURST. I hope the Senator will correct me, then.

Mr. WARREN. It can reach that amount, but it is only intended to reach about half that amount.

Mr. ASHURST. I am glad the Senator has corrected me. I misspoke the figures; and that is all I have to say, except this: Now, this is not a threat. I ought to be driven out if I made a threat; but I do say that if we are going to authorize a new project in Wyoming, a project that will cost $2,500,000, we ought to turn right around and reverse the action of the Senate with respect to Washington, with respect to Montana, and with respect to Arizona, if we wish to be impartial, because we can not say that one project is better than another, or that one is entitled to more consideration than another.

That is all I have to say.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I realize full well that the able chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee, in the performance of his duty in charge of a great appropriation bill, must be alert at all times to keep out all matter that calls for appropriations that have not been considered fully in this committee, whatever his feelings may be.

The Senator has stated that the appropriations for projects in Montana and Washington and other States have been cut down. Now, the facts are these:

There came over from the House various sums providing for these various Indian irrigation projects. As I am informed, the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, in their first consideration, decided that on account of the war and on account of the necessity for economy they would strike out the whole of all those appropriations. It seems that the committee later on—and I think they are to be commended for it—believed that we needed food, that we needed certain industries to go on to support not only the Union generally but this war in particular; went back, reconsidered, and allowed a part of every one of these appropriations in every one of the other States, and only cut out in whole the Wyoming project.

Mr. President, I have taken some pride in standing upon this floor and providing for the various States, old and new, as far as my voice would command, and in the committees as well as here; but I have never thought that we ought to make an orphan of any one State. To leave out Wyoming in this case will be simply to say that she shall be discriminated against as compared with all the other States that are yielding up to Indian reservations and other reservations large areas of their territory. The Senator from New Mexico has shown in his map the quantity of land taken from his State by these reservations. Wyoming is a sufferer to the same extent, and even to a greater extent in many ways, as added to Indian and forest reservations are immense oil, coal, phosphate, and other reservations and withdrawals while the little that is left pay the taxes. That we should in Wyoming alone have cut out this its one proposition of only $100,000, which has already been cut in half by the House as to the estimate from the department is certainly most unjust. It is true that it was not estimated for the Indian bill especially. It was estimated, though, among these irrigation projects, and, by the way, these are not projects wherein we ask anything except the credit of the Government. There is no expenditure of money but what comes back; but this one is put in the Indian bill at half the amount estimated. Half of the expenditure to be reimbursed from the Indians and the other half from citizen settlers, as both Indian and settlers land are to be watered.

I could stand here and talk for hours about the excellence of this particular project, but I desire, in the first place, to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs to the fact that he is mistaken about this being a new project. It is a project that has had money appropriated to start it.

One section of it has had some $40,000 expended upon it, and there are other private canals and properties of which this will form a part. This is a project that will cost probably $2,000,000 or $2,100,000 to bring it down to the irrigation of 70,000 acres of as beautiful land as ever water was poured upon. By their putting in reservoirs and going on down the plain, taking in more land, it will reach nearly twice as much, and then the Senator might be right in saying that it would cost $5,000,000; but that is not the intention now; and this appropriation does not contemplate the second section.

I have seen nearly every one of the irrigation projects in the United States. I have visited them personally; and I say with all the sincerity that I can say anything in this body that I do not know of a single one that is superior, and very few that are equal, to this proposition that we are now talking about.

Now, here we have a railroad very near to it. We have the Indians there that are seeking this work. They have been employed upon other projects. It is at once an avoidance of the scarcity of labor and high prices, because it will employ the Indians. One of the greatest things we are doing for the Indians is to educate them in labor. Nothing in the world helps so much as to give them work and teach them how to work. Now, we come down to the fact that this project conduces to the benefit of a State that is furnishing to-day for the Army more than almost any other State, certainly more than any other State of its population. It is furnishing more men for the Army according to its inhabitants than any other State in this Union. There are two or three others very near to it.

The State is furnishing horses for the armies of the United States and our allies as well as wool, mutton, beef, sugar beets, and so forth, to support not only those in the war but this Government and others generally; and while we should be careful in what we spend, we should give this project a million dollars. We ask $100,000 to further it and get the head gates in, because industries must go along with this war.

Here is the proposition: The House passed it, and it came over here; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, has adopted the House view. I ask the Senate now to take the view of the Committee of the Whole rather than the view of the Committee on Indian Affairs. I ask if they want to make an orphan of the State of Wyoming and turn their backs on that State and on that class of people which I have described and say that Wyoming is the only one in this bill that shall receive the knife clear to the hilt, and have nothing left, where every other State has received at least part of what it has asked for?

I am glad the others have gotten what they have. I would be glad if they had gotten more. I believe in it all; but, at the same time, this is a cut that is a peculiar hardship, and I may say that I believe the Senator himself must realize that we ought not to be cut out at this time in this way.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. WARREN. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to ask a question that may solve this problem. I really think that in the action of the Senate committee we did go further in this case than in others. I think that if this amendment had been reduced to $50,000 it would have been just and fair in view of the action taken in the other cases. I will ask the chairman if he will not agree to make the item $50,000, if that will satisfy the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, if the matter goes over to conference, they can handle that in conference.

Mr. CURTIS. I will ask the chairman if he will not, so far as he can, consent to that?

Mr. WARREN. I prefer to submit the question of my distinguished friend from Kansas to my colleague [Mr. KENDRICK], who sits near the chairman, that he in turn may take it up with the chairman I do not want Wyoming to be blackballed at this time, almost at the end of my service here, as if it were guilty of some misdemeanor.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I fully concur in all that my colleague [Mr. WARREN] has said about this appropriation; and I shall delay the Senate but a moment further in saying that this is the only item of development on our Indian lands that has been asked for on behalf of my State. There is not a Western Senator on the floor who does not understand that it is a detriment to a State to be burdened with Indian reservations; and it is a question as to how much the Government, when it sets aside these reservations, should permit itself to delay the development of the territory involved.

My colleague has pointed out that Wyoming is the only State that has not received at least some encouragement in this appropriation bill. I submit that it is not fair that we should not be allowed to have our territory improved while other States are given the privilege of continuing development.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. KENDRICK. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to know if the Senator will not accept the proposition submitted a minute ago, to let this item be put in at $50,000, and virtually make it the same as the others. There was no estimate before us at the time we considered the bill, and the item was cut out entirely. I think that, had the estimate been there, the committee would have given the project $50,000.

Mr. OWEN and Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I have just a word further to say about this matter. If that would prove agreeable to the Senator who has the bill in charge, I would be willing to accept a compromise of $50,000, with the statement that, with all of his good qualities, the Senator from Arizona lacks the quality of understanding when he is beaten. This amendment was adopted by the Committee of the Whol , and, in my judgment, he should be generous and allow it to stay there.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I see that the clock has reached the hour of 6. As I said before, if I were voting on personal grounds, I would cast my vote for $100,000 gladly. I want the senior Senator from Wyoming to understand distinctly that, so far as my attitude is concerned, it has not been one of any hostility to the sturdy State of Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, Mr. President, I can not allow the Senator to go further, because there has not been the slightest suspicion on my part that this was the action of the chairman himself. It was the result of a misunderstanding.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senate properly referred this morning to the long service of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. Why, the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] came to this body in the latter part of the year 1890. That is a long time ago. We are living almost in a new world since the distinguished Senator from Wyoming first came here. He said something about his term of service in the Senate. The last years, I know personally, are glorious. He has been a stalwart supporter of this Nation and a stalwart supporter of its war policies. No Senator could have a greater affection for him than I have, or could wish to do him an honor quicker than I would wish to do so.

Therefore, Mr. President, to bring the matter to a conclusion so far as I am concerned, other members of the committee having expressed their approbation, I am willing, and I move, that the item be agreed to at $50,000 instead of $100,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a motion made, as the Chair understands, by the Senator from Arizona to amend——

Mr. ASHURST. To restore the item, but in the amount of $50,000 instead of $100,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to reduce the sum from $100,000 to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on concurring in the amendment, on page 81, as amended.

The amendment was nonconcurred in.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I asked to be recognized before that vote was taken. I stood on my feet for about five minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hopes the Senator from South Dakota will not tax the Chair with deliberately declining to recognize him.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I simply wanted to ask a question. Perhaps I can ask it now. I want to know about what per cent of the benefits of this appropriation which has now been agreed to will be for the real benefit of the Indians. That is all I desire to ask the Senator.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, the amendment as now drawn provides for the reclamation of Indian lands primarily and for reimbursing the Indian fund for any lands that may be incidentally reclaimed that are now owned by white settlers. This would make of it primarily an Indian appropriation.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, that does not exactly answer the question that I wanted answered, but I am satisfied with it. I had no objection to the appropriation if it was a meritorious one.

While I am on my feet I want to go on record as being opposed to this bill. I have never voted for an Indian appropriation bill since I have been here. I live in a State that has five or six Indian reservations, and my reason for not doing so has been that I believe the system that the Government has carried out toward the Indians has had the effect of destroying the usefulness of those people by taking from them the law of necessity for their own maintenance and substituting a law that compels them to be a nation of beggars.

I want to congratulate the chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee for his earnest effort to bring from the committee, of which I am a member, this bill in its most economical and best form; and I can say that this is a better bill than I have seen since I have been here, but I shall not vote for it because the Indians will not get 10 per cent of its appropriation.

Just a word with regard to the amendment just agreed to. It has been acted upon now, and anything that may be said will not help it or hurt it. A gentleman came to my office two or three days ago and said that I should support this bill by all means; that it was 90 per cent for the benefit of the white people. I do not care to divulge the name of the party. I do not know whether he told the truth or not; but if he did tell the truth, he only told what everyone who is intelligent and who knows anything about Indian appropriation bills must know.

If Congress really wanted to help the Indians, if they wanted to benefit them, they would go down to the Indian Office and they would procure the records of the lands that the Indians own and preserve them. Then they would tear up all the old, musty records of that office that have accumulated in the last 50 years and make a bonfire of them. Then they would either lock up that office or they would open it up, after a thorough fumigation, as a sort of a relic of modern methods of handling ancient things. That is exactly the best thing that could happen for the Indians.

I do not intend to take any of the time of the Senate, and I apologize for what little time I have taken, because the hour is late and I know the chairman of the committee desires to crowd the bill through to-day; but I wish to go on record as voting against the bill if there is a roll call and I am not able to be present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] desire a separate vote upon the amendment he reserved?

Mr. MYERS. It appears to me it has to be voted on separately now, because it was not adopted with the others, and I ask for a separate vote on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question, then, is on concurring in the amendment of the committee on page 35, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senate as in Committee of the Whole agreed to the amendment of the committee to strike out lines 11, 12, 13, and 14, appropriating $750,000 for the Flathead Indian Reservation, in Montana, and to insert in lieu the words:

For continuing construction, maintenance, and operation of the irrigation systems on the Flathead Indian Reservation, in Montana, $250,000 (reimbursable), which shall be immediately available and remain available until expended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment reserved by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 75, line 22, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, agreed to the amendment of the committee striking out "$500,000" and inserting "$250,000," so as to read:

For continuing construction and enlargement of the Wapato irrigation and drainage system, to make possible the utilization of the water supply provided by the act of August 1, 1914 (38 Stat. L., p. 604), for 40 acres of each Indian allotment under the Wapato irrigation project on the Yakima Indian Reservation, Wash., and such other water supply as may be available or obtainable for the irrigation of a total of 120,000 acres of allotted Indian lands on said reservation, $250,000 to be immediately available, and to remain available until expended, etc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

REORGANIZATION OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3771) authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government. I submit this motion with a view of making the bill the unfinished business, and I give notice to the Senate that if it is made the unfinished business I will agree to lay it aside for the consideration of the military bill that comes up to-morrow, and probably this bill will not be taken up before Monday. I simply want to make it the unfinished business, and then I will agree to lay it aside for the other bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to suggest that it may be the Senator will find it agreeable to allow the bill on the calendar for commandeering ships to be taken up.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; the Senator and I are on the same committee and we will agree about that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What is the motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3771, the so-called Overman bill, so as to make it the unfinished business.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will then agree to lay it aside for the consideration of other bills that are pressing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. With the intention of making it the unfinished business?

Mr. OVERMAN. That is all.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the Senator from North Carolina if he has consulted with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]?

Mr. OVERMAN. I have, and I will agree to lay this bill aside for the consideration of the other bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My only interest in this matter is that the bill providing for the registration of men for the draft upon reaching 21 shall be disposed of as soon as possible.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will lay this bill aside for that purpose. I do not expect to get the bill up before Monday.

Mr. WARREN. And it would not come up as the unfinished business before 2 o'clock.

Mr. OVERMAN. Not until 2 o'clock, and then if the Senator wants to press his bill I will agree to lay it aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

TAPPING OF TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE WIRES.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War is hereby requested to furnish the Senate with a full report on the method and efficiency of the Telautograph and Delaney systems of preventing tapping of telegraph and telephone wires.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to hear the resolution read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 218), and the Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the Senator from Oklahoma if these methods are already in operation?

Mr. OWEN. I do not know whether they are or not. I have a letter from the manager of the Telautograph Co. stating that his method will prevent the tapping of wires. I have seen it in operation in some of the hotels. I do not know very much about it, but the War Department made an answer a few days ago, which is now Senate Document 207, stating that it did not know anything about any systems. It seems that these might be available, and I think the Senate ought to have the information with regard to them.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask the Senator if it would not be wise to put in the words "if not incompatible with the public interest."

Mr. OWEN. Yes; I have no objection to inserting the words "if not incompatible with the public interest."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, March 29, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 28, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou Infinite and Eternal Spirit, humbly we bow before Thee and acknowledge our utter dependence upon Thee.

"We are weak but Thou art mighty, Hold us with Thy powerful hand";

and guide us through the duties and responsibilities of this day, that its issues may be in accordance with Thy will and good pleasure; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the bill pending before the House yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks leave to extend his remarks on the bill pending yesterday, and which will be pending again in a few minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ELECTION.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the election of the following Members to the committees named.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the nominations.

The Clerk read the following committee nominations:

Mr. WILLIAM E. CLEARY of New York to be a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN of New York to be a member of the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and the Committee on Revision of the Laws.

Mr. JOHN J. DELANEY of New York to be a member of the Committee on Accounts, the Committee on Claims, and the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JEROME F. DONOVAN of New York to be a member of the Committee on Education, Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, and the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Are there any other nominations? If not, the question is on the election of these gentlemen to the committees named.

The question being taken, the motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. POLK, for to-day and to-morrow, on account of important business.

PAYMENT OF EXCESS-PROFITS TAX.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I want to use these few minutes to call the attention of the House to a bill which I introduced on March 6—House bill 10526—the purpose of which is to amend sections 200 to 214 of the revenue law to provide for a splitting up of the payment of the excess war-profit tax, which matures on June 15, into four installments, payable June, August, October, and December 15.

Since the introduction of this bill I have been besieged with letters from all parts of the country in favor of the passage of this bill, and with many requests from Members of the House who are being similarly treated, and there is a tremendous demand from the taxpayers for some action in regard to the dividing of these excess war-profit tax payments, which come due on next June 15. I understand that the bill is resting quietly in the Ways and Means Committee, and from a letter which was issued on March 12 by the chairman of that committee [Mr. KITCHIN] I understand that he is opposed to any dividing or postponement of these payments. I also understand that the Secretary of the Treasury is similarly disposed. The purpose that I have in speaking of this matter at this time is to get some official statement or good reason from these gentlemen as to why they are not responsive to the general demand of the people who are to pay these taxes, and I am making this demand in their behalf, that some consideration of this worthy and just measure of relief must be given these patriotic taxpayers who are willing to give up almost everything they possess to help the Government in this crucial hour. It is rare indeed that you find or hear any complaint from these people who are paying these taxes.

The Government is paying out about $40,000,000 daily or about $1,000,000,000 monthly, and that is about the limit of our capacity to pay. I am hoping that if this statement is correct, that provision will only be made to collect the money in from taxes and sale of bonds as the demand for payment exists, and thus keep our equal balance, and disturb as little as possible our financial system.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. I understood from a communication printed in the RECORD the other day, written by the Internal Revenue Commissioner, that he was in favor of the division of the payments, provided the payments were made in advance. Would that be of any advantage to the business public, to have the payments made in advance?

Mr. McFADDEN. It would not give them entire relief. On the contrary, the division and extension of these payments is right in keeping with the plan adopted by the Secretary of the Treasury in calling for the money from the sale of liberty bonds. These payments are always made in installments for the purpose of relieving the strain on our financial system. I am simply demanding the same relief in the payment of these $3,400,000,000 estimate of taxes due June 15 in one payment.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. WINGO. I understand the gentleman to say that dividing it up into installments to be paid in advance will not be a relief. Is not the argument in favor of installment payments that by making the payments in installments there will not be a large disturbance by reason of the transfers of bank balances?

Mr. McFADDEN. That is the idea, exactly. Of course, the purchase of these Treasury certificates in anticipation of these tax payments help some, but the real help is my bill.

Mr. WINGO. Why would it not grant relief if they took advantage of the provision which the Secretary has already made—to make these partial payments in advance and distribute them over four or five or six months, as they have had an opportunity to do?

Mr. McFADDEN. They have had that opportunity; but the people who pay these taxes find themselves still further embarrassed, because the law now provides for the payment before the taxes are due. My bill provides for dividing these payments up into four equal installments, payable in June, August, October, and December.

Mr. WINGO. Does not the gentleman's argument, then, resolve itself into this, that they want a longer time and not installment payments?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. ASHBROOK. A longer time and installments, too.

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes. I want these taxpayers to know why no action is being taken on this bill, and to place the responsibility where it belongs. I believe that a majority of this Congress are in favor of this relief, but no action can be had so long as the bill is not favorably reported from the committee.

Mr. BLAND. Is it not the position of the Secretary of the Treasury that if these payments are not forthcoming in June he will not know how to finance the war, because there are such heavy drains on the Treasury?

Mr. McFADDEN. I have not the figures in detail, but I understand the Secretary of the Treasury has sold $1,250,000,000 of Treasury certificates for the purpose of aiding in the payment of this tax due June 15. I understand the total amount of these taxes is about $3,400,000,000. I also understand that the Secretary of the Treasury, in addition to the $1,250,000,000 of Treasury certificates, has sold $2,400,000,000 additional certificates of the Treasury and has just offered for sale another $500,000,000. The business interests of the country have their money invested in raw materials and accounts, and so forth, and they are not in a liquid condition, and it will require that these people must go into the open market and borrow money to the amount of probably $1,500,000,000 or $2,000,000,000, the rediscounting of this amount of which will have to be done with the Federal reserve banks.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. TOWNER. Is it not true that the amount paid into the Treasury and the amount received from certificates are both greatly in excess of the estimates that were made for the receipts from both these sources of revenue up to the present time?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. And is there not now a larger unexpended balance in the Treasury than there has ever been before?

Mr. McFADDEN. I understand that is the case. I want to quote from a couple of letters I have received, one from the National Retail Dry Goods Association, as follows:

The bankers in one Middle West city estimate that the total payments from that district will aggregate at least one-half of the total deposits of the banks of their city. As you are undoubtedly aware, a growing business requires that a considerable part of the earnings be retained to meet increased capital requirements. Delay in freight shipments and the tremendous advance in the price of commodities has also greatly increased the requirements upon capital investment.

And Chattanooga Manufacturers' Association, of Chattanooga, Tenn., as follows:

The present law calling for payments of this great sum of money on June 15 will seriously embarrass the resources of the banks, will cripple the efforts of the Liberty loan campaigners, and will seriously handicap the manufacturer of war material in obtaining sufficient financial assistance to enlarge and develop his business to the extent necessary to manufacture goods for war purposes. Moreover, the Government can not possibly redistribute this money promptly. In short, $5,000,000,000 can not be withdrawn from the ordinary channels of trade without seriously affecting the very important interests necessary to the successful prosecution of the war.

NORFOLK, VA., March 25, 1918.

Representative McFADDEN, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We feel that you are doing the commercialism of the country a great service in advocating the innovation of payment of these tremendous war taxes in installments. We cite it as an actual fact that not less than two-thirds of the mediocre small concerns, especially in the South and West, were able to make more profit than usual during the last year, be called upon to give up 50 to 60 per cent of what they made, amounting to from twenty to forty thousand dollars per firm, it will be little short of crippling the entire small business of the country.

It is an exhilarating fact to note the splendid feeling among men everywhere that they are willing to give up almost everything they possess to help the Government in this crucial hour. Indeed, it is rare that you find an honest merchant who complains even at the call that is thus made upon him.

That is not the point at all; the point is one of physical ability to comply, and our own judgment is that the shock is too great; it would take two or three years for men to fit themselves to bear such a burden as this all at one time in cash.

The time is growing short, and we sincerely hope that you will succeed in your efforts; and if you will tell us what we can do to aid to that end, we will certainly try to get busy and accomplish it if possible.

Very truly, yours,

T. S. SOUTHGATE & Co.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee objects.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have the reference of the bill H. R. 10956, to make "The Star-Spangled Banner" the national anthem of the United States, changed from the Committee on the Library to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to have reference of the bill H. R. 10956 changed from the Committee on the Library to the Committee on the Judiciary. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman given notice of this?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman that I called the attention of the Speaker to it. The bill has been so referred before.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the gentleman authorized to do this by the committee?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not have to be authorized to do that in order to make the request.

Mr. FOSTER. I shall object for the present, until I can see what it is.

Mr WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this call 308 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

SALE OF SEED GRAIN TO FARMERS.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7795) to appropriate $50,000,000 for the purchase of seed grain and feed for live stock, to be supplied to farmers and stockmen, and to create boards in the respective States to assist in carrying out the provisions of this act.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7795, with Mr. POU in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LEVER. As I understand it, the substitute offered for the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HELVERING] by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] has been passed upon—it has been agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. LEVER. The next vote, then, is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas as amended by the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the substitute offered by the gentleman from Arkansas includes the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas, and in those circumstances the Chair supposed that the gentleman from Kansas was not going to insist upon further action on his amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The fact that the substitute may include all of the original amendment would not remove the necessity for the adoption of the amendment as amended, even if the substitute were adopted, would it? In other words, are we not compelled to vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to offer an additional amendment to this section. Would it be in order at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sees no reason why it is not in order.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair rules that my substitute has already been adopted as an amendment to the section, of course I shall not insist upon further action.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already stated that he has so ruled.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 3, line 18, after the word "wheat," strike out the comma and the following words: "oats and barley."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer my amendment, which I send to the desk, as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND: Page 3, line 18, after the word "of" before the word "wheat," insert the word "corn."

Mr. LEVER. To that I reserve a point of order.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. WINGO. I understand this is offered as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. BLAND. Yes. Gentlemen of the committee, I expressed my views on this question briefly yesterday. It is very important that we in Indiana have seed corn. I said yesterday that I did not care anything especially about the loan feature in this law, although it might be important in isolated instances, but we want seed corn so that we can get it and have it under the direction of the Government. If seed corn is imported into Indiana from the South it matures too late; if it is imported from the North it matures too early. The Government will know what kind of seed corn we need.

I said yesterday, and I repeat, that 75 per cent of the great corn crop in the corn belt of the Middle West was frost bitten. I went through the fields last October and saw the best corn of that State frost bitten in the roasting ear, which absolutely destroys its seed value. The people ought not to be permitted to plant that character of corn, because they will not get the proper crop. We ought to be interested in seeing that they do not plant inferior seed corn. I know they are offering from $8 to $12 a bushel for seed corn. Some Member suggests that it is $15. They do not know where to get it. I am informed that there is corn in other States that can be furnished by the Government, and if the Government will buy it and test it and bring it to us, we will plant it and raise a bumper crop. Without this amendment I do not think we can. If you are going to furnish seed wheat and sell it to the people of the country, I want you to include corn, because it is one of the vital necessities.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Has the gentleman's constituents money to buy the seed with?

Mr. BLAND. I think the most of them have; we are not poverty stricken in Indiana.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. The gentleman has no interest in this bill?

Mr. BLAND. I have an interest in this bill. The proposition is that the Government shall buy and sell seed, and I want it to apply to the Middle West. It is rarely we get anything from this Congress to apply to the Middle West.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. You have already got it.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. The gentleman is aware of the fact that in Illinois and parts of Indiana for the past five years they have only had one good crop. Many a farmer has not the money to pay the high price that they are asking for seed corn now.

Mr. BLAND. I have no doubt that is true. There is another thing to take into consideration, and that is it does not take much corn to plant 20 acres; it is not a big financial proposition. One bushel of seed corn will plant from 6 to 8 acres, but with wheat it is different. We want it under the direction of the Government.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. I have received scores of letters from western Kentucky to the effect that it is almost impossible there to get seed corn.

Mr. BLAND. I know that is true, and it is true in my State, and it is a very important matter. I do not think the financial question ought to be any objection, because it does not amount to a great deal for seed corn as compared to seed wheat.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I will.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will say that there is a tremendous scarcity of cotton seed in my section, of good cotton seed.

Mr. BLAND. The Secretary of Agriculture is from the gentleman's State, is he not?

Mr. SLAYDEN. No; from Missouri.

Mr. BLAND. He is looking after you pretty carefully, is he not?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I offered to line 18 proposes to strike out certain language in the bill beginning at the comma after "wheat" and including the words "oats and barley." The gentleman from Indiana offers as a substitute an amendment to insert after the word "wheat" the word "corn." I make no pretense to anything like a very great knowledge of parliamentary law, but it does seem to me that the proposition to insert can hardly be held to be germane to a proposition to strike out. It strikes me that the two propositions are absolutely inconsistent with each other and so thoroughly unrelated to each other that they can not be brought together under the guise of germaneness.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman is quite correct, but if the gentleman from Indiana would offer his amendment as an amendment to perfect the text it would take precedence over the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina, which is merely a motion to strike out.

Mr. LEVER. In response to what the gentleman from Tennessee has said I am arguing the status to the Chair as it exists, namely, that I have offered an amendment to strike out, and the gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment by way of substitute, and I am pressing that point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment to perfect the text.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. BLAND. I move to amend by adding corn to wheat, barley, and oats.

Mr. LEVER. I make a point of order against that. I make it on the theory that while the gentleman is offering this in the guise of an amendment to perfect the text, he is undertaking to do by indirection that which he can not do by way of substitution. The amendment that I propose looks to the striking out of language. Now, the gentleman's amendment must be in the nature of agreeing to the striking out of the language and adding something by way of substitution, and I do not believe that that kind of a situation can be held to be in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, the contentions of the gentleman from South Carolina are not tenable so far as they go to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, which tends to perfect the text.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it not in the third degree?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is not in the third degree. It adds one more grain to those already contained in the text. After the text has been amended as proposed by the gentleman from Indiana, the House can vote out the entre paragraph as amended by the gentleman from Indiana, if it desires to do so, but there is no question that it is in order as an amendment to the text as it now stands. It is not offered as a substitute but as an amendment to the text and is preferential to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina to strike out the text.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. Does not the gentleman come back to the situation he started with on the proposition ruled upon by the Chairman a moment ago that it is really, while offered as a proposition to perfect the text, in its very nature a substitution for the amendment I offered?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not at all. It is preferential in its nature and must be acted upon by the House before the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina is acted upon. It perfects the text of the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. May I discuss the point of order briefly?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana had been offered as an original amendment to the text of the bill it would be undoubtedly in order, because the bill itself mentions three different kinds of grain, and therefore it is in order to add a fourth. But if the text of the bill had only mentioned one grain it perhaps would not have been in order to have added the second; but in view of the fact that the bill specifically mentions three grains, it is in order to add the fourth. Now, if the gentleman from South Carolina had not offered his amendment, the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana would have been in order, undoubtedly. My contention is the mere fact the gentleman from Indiana has offered just a motion to strike out does not make the gentleman from Indiana's motion out of order, because the words are still in the bill—"wheat, barley, and oats." They have not been stricken out, and the motion of the gentleman from Indiana must be voted on first, which is a motion to add a fourth grain. The mere fact that the gentleman from South Carolina made his motion first does not make the motion of the gentleman from Indiana out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is not sustained.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana on the ground that it adds a new subject matter to the pending section, and is therefore out of order. In that connection I wish to cite some precedents.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be very glad to hear the gentleman from Virginia. The gentleman from Virginia reserves the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the section of the bill to which this amendment relates proposes to furnish the farmers with certain indicated seeds. The bill names three varieties of seed that will be furnished. The amendment adds corn, another and different food seed, from those mentioned in the bill. This same question of the right to add new matter, that it is additional subjects, was raised last year in connection with the food-control bill, and the amendments proposed were held out of order, from that ruling. The Chair will find the ruling in the RECORD of June, 1917, page 4497. A point of order was raised to the proposed amendment, and in ruling on same the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union referred to the fact there were only three specific subject matters in that bill, food, fuel and feed, and the additional subject matter contained in the amendment was not germane, and therefore was out of order. The same arguments that have been advanced to-day in support of the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana were presented in support of the proposition to add another subject matter to the food-control bill. In this connection I will call attention to the ruling of the Chair on the occasion referred to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes, certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. At that time was not the amendment to add clothing and things of that sort which were not food?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will read a citation from the ruling of the Chairman, citing Speaker Carlisle:

> The rule does not prohibit a committee reporting a bill, from embracing in it as many different subjects as it may choose; but after the bill has been reported to the House no different subject can be introduced into it by amendment, whether as a substitute or otherwise.

The manual says: (Rule XVI, sec. 7.)

> No motion, or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

It is contended that if the pending bill proposed to furnish wheat only, the amendment to add corn would be out of order, but that when the bill proposes to furnish wheat, and two other specified grains, then the amendment adding corn is in order. Upon what pretended principle is this distinction based? If the bill referred to furnishing wheat only, then wheat would be the subject under consideration. If it is considered that the addition of corn, would be out of order, then it must be on the ground that the addition of corn, would be the addition of another subject. But if two other grains are mentioned, in addition to wheat, it is insisted that corn may be added by way of amendment. Is the addition of corn to three specifically denominated grains, any the less a new subject matter, than when corn is proposed to be added to a section referring to wheat only? The rule says that after a bill is reported, a different subject can not be introduced by amendment. If corn is a different subject when it is proposed to be added to wheat only, and is therefore out of order, how is that objection removed when three grains are mentioned? If corn is not germane as a subject matter, to wheat standing alone, how does it become germane to wheat when two other grains are mentioned? Corn is no more germane to the other grains than it is to wheat.

The ruling of Speaker Carlisle says that after a bill has been reported no different subject can be introduced by amendment. It does not say that when a bill contains one subject an amendment will be out of order, but that if a bill contains that same subject, and two other named subjects, the same amendment will be in order. Upon what principle will it be in order? Upon the ground of germaneness? Is corn as an amendment, any more germane to wheat, when wheat is mentioned as a seed, with two other seeds, than when it stands alone? And if it is germane in the one case, and in order, why not in the other case?

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will.

Mr. BLAND. If it had named the character of food it is plain that you could not add another kind. Where it says food in general, the ruling is settled. Where it says seed and mentions the several kinds, that is a different proposition.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The principle, it seems to me, would be precisely contrarywise. The more general the terms you use, the greater the number of particular amendments that would be in order. But when you denominate the particular seed to be furnished, and then undertake to offer an amendment affording another variety, you are introducing a new subject matter. I am familiar with the precedent generally cited in this connection, namely, that to a bill admitting several Territories, another Territory may be added by way of amendment. But that is not the addition of a new subject matter. The subject matter there is Territories, the matter proposed to be added is a Territory. The fact that it is a Territory with another name is immaterial. Hence there is no change of subject matter. It is true that another precedent holds that a bill providing for the admission of one Territory, an amendment to add another Territory is not in order.

The fact is that the precedents are not in harmony. If the subject under consideration is the proposition to furnish the three denominated seeds, then that is a single subject, and under the precedent last cited, namely the bill to admit a territory, the amendment to add corn, would not be in order. If the proposition to furnish three seeds is really threefold, then the committee has exercised the right referred to in Speaker Carlisle's ruling, namely to report a bill with several different subjects, and each one of them is under consideration, and should be considered precisely as if the committee had reported their bill with three independent sections relating to seed, each section providing for a single variety. In that event certainly corn could not be added by way of amendment to any one of the three sections. But it is insisted that if these different seeds are referred to in a single section, the amendment adding corn will be in order. When they are grouped in this fashion, they are still three subject matters, and when corn is proposed to be added to them, it is just as much a different subject matter, as it would be if offered as an amendment to these items reported in separate sections. If out of order in the one case, on principle it ought to be out of order in the other. If held to be germane, if offered to a section containing wheat, and two other food grains, it ought to be germane if offered to wheat standing alone. The mere fact that three articles are mentioned can not be presented as the ground on which the amendment adding corn, is considered to be in order. If the ruling is put that it is in order because it is germane to some one of the items, wheat for instance, what is the answer to the suggestion that if the section provided for wheat only, corn as a food grain offered by way of amendment, would be as germane to wheat, as it would be when offered to a section containing wheat and two other grains? It is submitted that if the amendment for corn, if offered to a section containing wheat only, would be out of order under the rule on the ground that a new subject matter was sought to be introduced by the amendment, it is equally out of order, on this ground when it is offered to a section containing three specified grains, including wheat.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. SNELL. The question before the House is whether the amendment adding the word "corn" is germane to the provision of the bill providing for the purchase of wheat, barley, and oats. The title of this bill is "for the purchase of seed grain." The bill itself enumerates wheat, barley, and oats, as seed grains. There is also no doubt but that corn comes under the heading of "seed grain." So the question is, simply, Is it in order to add one more seed grain to the seed grains already mentioned? As I understand the rules of the House, when we are considering a measure, if we have one substantive proposition you can not add additional ones, but if you are considering two or three, or more, substantive propositions it is perfectly in order to add another proposition of the same kind or character.

In the Digest, on page 481, in regard to this rule, it says, on the subject of admitting Territories into the Union as States—

If you were trying to admit Idaho, for instance, alone, you could not add Montana and Washington—

And so forth—

But if you turn it around the other way and make the bill general in its character, to admit Montana and Idaho and Washington, then you might add to it, as an amendment, Wyoming, for instance, and it would be a perfectly germane amendment.

Therefore I claim that, according to the rules and according to these precedents, as laid down by Speaker CLARK in his ruling of December 5, 1912, Sixty-second Congress, it is entirely in order to add "corn" as another seed grain in this instance, that the Chair is entirely right in not sustaining the point of order raised by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

Mr. LANGLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I wish to call his attention to the fact that in the amended title, as proposed on page 6, there is even stronger support of his contention, because there the language "for the production of grain" is used. That language clearly is sufficiently comprehensive to include all of these specific seed propositions.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take up the time of the committee if the Chair has his mind made up. I am strongly of the opinion that the amendment is in order, and if the Chair's mind is not made up I would like to argue it. If the Chair's mind is made up, however, I do not like to trespass on the time of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say frankly to the gentleman from Georgia that the Chair considers that the amendment is in order.

Mr. CRISP. Then the gentleman has no desire whatever to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. The purpose of the bill is to provide seed, to make loans to farmers in the spring-wheat area for the purchase of seed—wheat, oats, and barley. Now, the Chair believes we would be going to a very great extreme to hold that one additional food product of similar character—to wit, corn—could not be added to those already enumerated.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment that I sent up be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WINGO: Page 3, line 18, strike out the words "wheat, oats, and barley" and insert in lieu thereof the words "agricultural seed."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that.

Mr. WINGO. I would like to know on what grounds?

Mr. LEVER. I will reserve it, if the gentleman wishes.

Mr. WINGO. I have no desire to be heard on it.

Mr. LEVER. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. LEVER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment on the ground that you can not amend germanely a specific proposition with a general proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. STAFFORD. Before the Chair rules——

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I should not raise my voice, but I am the proponent of the amendment offered in good faith and under the rules plainly entitled to less summary action. The Chair says that the purpose of this bill is to provide for seed for a certain purpose. My amendment is to strike out the specific enumeration of wheat, oats, and barley and substitute "agricultural grain seeds," because the main purpose is not to furnish wheat, oats, and barley, but the main purpose is to relieve the grain and food shortage in the United States by furnishing agricultural seed for that purpose to farmers growing such food.

Why should it not be in order as much as the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND]? If you can add one grain, can you not strike out all those specific grains and include all grains? The greater includes the less, the whole includes the part, is the rule. If the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is in order, which is the lesser, then the greater, which I offer in my amendment, should certainly be in order, because it includes the lesser.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair indulge me?

Mr. LAZARO. Is it not a fact that the greater production of corn and rice in this country will really mean the furnishing of more wheat bread for the people across?

Mr. WINGO. That is true. That is all I care to submit to the Chair on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair finds it difficult to follow the lines of argument that are proceeding in different parts of the Hall.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the Chair has just ruled that it is in order to add to the character of seed enumerated in the text of this bill. If the Chair follows that logically, he must necessarily hold that it will be in order, instead of designating the character of seed specifically, to designate them as an entirety, and that it is in order to obtain by direction that which you can obtain by indirection by specific designation.

Gentlemen on the floor of this House have stated that this bill is for the purpose of authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to procure certain characters of seed. There is one certain provision as to that, but there is another provision, and I direct the attention of the chairman of the committee to this phase, that this bill authorizes a direct loan not of seeds but a direct loan of not more than $450 in any one case to farmers. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the language that authorizes that appropriation:

That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, for the crop of 1918, to make advances or loans to farmers—

Not of wheat, not of barley, not of oats, but—to make advances or loans to farmers * * * where he shall find special need for such assistance for the purchase of wheat, oats, and barley.

Mr. Chairman, under that provision the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to make, not advances of wheat, not advances of oats or barley, but to make loans and advances directly to the farmers in all cases where he shall find—I am reading now from line 17 on page 3—where he shall find special need for such assistance for the purchase of wheat, oats, and barley for seed purposes.

I wish to direct the attention of the Chair to the fact that that idea is carried out in lines 4 to 8, on page 4, where it says—

The total amount of such advances, loans, or sales to any one farmer shall not exceed $450. All such advances or loans—

Not of wheat, not of seed—

All such advances or loans shall, as far as practicable, be made through the agency of State and National banks.

Now, what does this bill provide on its face? It has two major premises, one authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to make loans or advances of money in those districts where the Secretary of Agriculture finds there is need. I now read from lines 17 and 18, page 3—where he shall find special need for such assistance for the purchase of wheat, oats, and barley for seed purposes.

The next authority which is granted under this provision of the bill—or, when necessary—

The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized—to procure such seed and sell the same to such farmers.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. In just a minute. Now, this bill involves two purposes, one the advancement or loan of money to farmers where the Secretary of Agriculture ascertains that there is special need among farmers in districts where it is necessary to procure seed, and next to procure such seed and sell the same to such farmers. Therefore we come back to the original proposition whether under the first authorization, where the Secretary of Agriculture has authority to advance or loan money where he ascertains that there is need for such assistance for the purchase of wheat, oats, and barley for seed purposes, it is in order to make a generic, germane amendment instead of taking up the time of the House by offering specific amendments piecemeal.

The Chairman, in order to be logical in his decision in holding that the addition of corn is in order, would have to hold necessarily that a generic amendment, such as is offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], namely, "agricultural seed," is in order. If the gentleman from Arkansas should offer single amendments embodying every character of agricultural seed, the Chair would have to hold that those amendments were in order under his ruling just made that the addition of "corn" is in order. If you can offer single amendments piecemeal, certainly you can offer a general amendment covering all, and there is no rule or precedent of the House that will controvert or deny that position. Now I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. REAVIS. The title of the bill calls for an appropriation for the purchase of seed grain. When the language is used in the body of the bill it says "such grains." The general term

"agricultural seed" might mean clover, or alfalfa, or lettuce, or carrots. They are not seed grain, but they come under the term "agricultural seed." Would an amendment to this bill providing for the purchase of carrot seed or clover or alfalfa seed come within the term "seed grain" when the product itself is not a grain?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is basing his argument on the title of the bill, when everyone knows that we never determine the germaneness of amendments by the title of the bill, but that the text of the bill is what governs, and that the title of the bill is amended to conform to the text when the bill has been completed; and in this very case there is an amendment proposed to the title of the bill.

Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. The language is used in the body of the bill. It says "such grain."

Mr. STAFFORD. I will answer the gentleman specifically, that any kindred grains, as mentioned by the gentleman, would, in my opinion, be in order.

Mr. REAVIS. But carrots and lettuce and alfalfa are not grain.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I should like to know under what rule these gentlemen are continuing this discussion after the Chair has ruled?

Mr. WALSH. I should like to inquire of the gentleman whether or not he is familiar with the provision of Rule XVI, which reads as follows:

A specific subject may not be amended by a provision general in nature, even when of the class of the specific subject.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is referring to a situation where there was but one subject named—that is, for the construction of one building or the admission of one State—but this is different. This case is entirely outside of that ruling, because this is general in its character, by including more than one, and therefore any general amendment of a generic character may be offered.

Mr. WALSH. If it named half a dozen seeds, it would still be specific, and you could not amend by an amendment general in its character.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the general amendment is of the same character as that designated specifically, it would be in order, for the same end would be accomplished by offering specific amendments as by offering at one time a general amendment covering the same class.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, this section provides, as has been stated, that the Secretary of Agriculture may make advances for the purchase of wheat, oats, and barley. A few moments ago I presented to the Chair the proposition that these articles, were the three subject matters of the bill, and that in my judgment, in conformity with the precedents which were cited, it would not be in order to add another subject matter. In the discussion of the point of order one of the gentlemen participating in the debate called attention to the title of the bill, in which he said this was a proposition for the purchase of seed grain, and argued therefrom that that being so, the addition of another seed grain would be in order. The Chair acceded to that view. I have no complaint to make of the ruling of the Chair, but I wish to call attention to the fact that as a matter of logical sequence from that ruling of the Chair, it would be perfectly competent for a succession of gentlemen on this floor, or for any one gentleman if he obtained recognition for that purpose, to move by successive amendments to add to the specifically mentioned seed, every other seed grain in the calendar of seeds. All of these successive amendments would be in order.

This being so, an amendment providing in one general phrase, for furnishing all of these foods, without mentioning them seriatim, would be in order. One great principle of parliamentary law is to do business, and it is certainly in the interest of business, to save a multiplicity of amendments, by one direct motion, achieving at one blow the end that would otherwise be reached by a multiplicity of strokes.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. I am not an expert in parliamentary law, but I take it that the purpose of the bill is to furnish bread to the allies and the civilian population. Now, is it not a fact that we ought to leave it to the Secretary of Agriculture to increase the production of all kinds of bread, because there are certain kinds of bread that we like in this country which the allies do not like over there, and if you can increase the production of bread that we like and they do not, does it not tend to increase the amount of wheat bread that we can send to the allies across the water?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes. I think so.

Mr. LAZARO. Then, why not take in all kinds of bread?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That relates to the merits of the amendment. My argument is with reference to the parliamentary situation. I am interested in this ruling for the reason that it will create a precedent for future rulings by other presiding officers.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the gentleman is correct as far as it applies to corn in the form of seed corn. The amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas is broad enough to include all agricultural seed.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I have already called the attention of the gentleman from Arkansas to this feature of his amendment and he will ask leave to modify it in this respect.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, if it does not say "agricultural grain," that was my intention.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment says "agricultural seed."

Mr. WINGO. I will put it "agricultural seed grain."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment is modified in that way.

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. To that I make a point of order.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. As a result of the modification of the amendment in the new form it is a proposition to provide in a general inclusive phrase for every form of agricultural food grain. If it is admitted that by successive amendments at great length it is in order to put into the bill all of the food grains and this appears to be conceded, then I submit that it is not contrary to any parliamentary precedent whatever to include all of these items in one inclusive phrase. With respect to what may be done when some specific subject matter is up I wish to call attention to one precedent—I do not know that it has any particular relevancy in this connection but it will show how far the House has gone—namely the case where there was a proposition to amend a section of an act, and it was held that an amendment was in order to repeal the act itself. This goes much further than anything proposed to be done to-day. V Hinds, section 5824. It would certainly therefore seem to be germane and in order to provide by one amendment to furnish all possible food grains.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand from the gentleman's theory and argument that a bill that provides for building public buildings in three different cities might be amended so that the Secretary of the Treasury could build anywhere.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If a bill is under consideration for admitting Territories into the Union, an amendment adding other Territories is in order. To a bill providing for public buildings in two or more different cities, an amendment providing for buildings in other cities, will be in order. I am aware that there are rulings that a specific subject may not be amended by a general provision, but the statement of that ruling is misleading, and the principle controlling these rulings do not apply to this situation. Looking to those precedents it will be noted that they are of this general character, namely, a proposition to give particular relief to some individual, and which is sought to be expanded into legislation of a general character to give the same relief to all persons similarly situated. The rulings forbidding this are plainly right. Really, they fall within the principle that when a bill carrying one subject is before the House, it is not in order to admit, by way of amendment, a subject different from the one under consideration. A proposition to give an individual relief upon a predicated state of facts is one subject. An amendment to provide by general law for the relief of all persons similarly situated is another and different subject.

But this principle does not apply to the case in hand. I maintain that if it is in order to proceed by successive amendment to insert all of the agricultural food grains, it is competent under the rules, with a view to reducing discussion and expediting business, to provide by one specific amendment that the Secretary of Agriculture shall have the authority to purchase and supply every variety of agricultural food grains to farmers needing them for seed, in consequence of the conditions affecting those farmers.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, has the Chair ruled on this point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not, but the Chair is ready to rule. The Chair may have been in error in holding that the addition of the word "corn" was in order, but the Chair thinks not. In any event, the Chair is not willing to go to the extent of holding that an amendment using the words "agricultural food grain" is in order, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WINGO. With all due respect to the Chair, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is more than willing for the gentleman to appeal. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, volume 5 of Hinds' Precedents contains all of the decisions on this question.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I call for the regular order.

Mr. BARKLEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. FOSTER. I have the floor; this is not the time for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. Volume 5 of Hinds' Precedents, section 5843, the Chair will find where it has been ruled time and again that you can not convert a specific law for one or more articles into a general law. That has been held from time immemorial, and there is no question in the world about it. All the precedents have been that way, and no one can cite a different precedent. It justifies the ruling of the Chair. [Cries of "The regular order"!] If the gentleman will permit, I am pursuing the regular order. I have a right to debate this appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes had it.

So the decision of the Chair was held to be the judgment of the committee.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on my amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, in order to get at the object I have in my amendment will it be necessary for me to offer a specific amendment for each agricultural grain? That is the logical conclusion of the Chair's ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can offer such amendments as he sees fit, and the Chair will pass upon them as they are offered.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I did not make the parliamentary inquiry in an argumentative spirit. I am anxious to save time and that is the reason I offered my amendment. The conclusion of the Chair is that I shall have to do that under the rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say very frankly what the opinion of the present occupant of the chair is. The Chair takes judicial notice of the fact that wheat, oats, and barley are food products——

Mr. WINGO. I am trying to get at the idea of the Chair. Would it be in order for me to offer this amendment by substituting the words "agricultural food grain seed"?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say very frankly to the gentleman that that so completely changes the scope of the bill, so enlarges it, that the Chair thinks it would not be in order.

Mr. WINGO. Is not that an argument that goes to the merits of the amendment, and not to its germaneness?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I submit the regular order is the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to take up unnecessary time and seldom take the floor. I stated that I am going to vote for the bill. Some of the gentlemen who are calling for the regular order are seldom seen on the floor. I want to get at the matter in the most direct and expeditious manner. If the Chair believes it can be done only by separate amendment for each particular seed, then we reach the same end as my amendment only in a long and tedious way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair tried to answer the gentleman in the spirit of frankness.

Mr. WINGO. The Chair believes that an amendment including agricultural food grains would not be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman that while the Chair does not wish to anticipate that, yet, at this time the Chair would not feel disposed to hold such an amendment in order.

Mr. WINGO. I shall offer it so that the Chair can rule upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. There are two amendments pending.

Mr. WINGO. I offer it as a substitute in lieu of the one that was just now ruled out.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that the Chair has just ruled on the proposition that the gentleman is now submitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman propounded a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LEVER. I understand that the gentleman from Arkansas withdrew his original amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, no; I never did. That was ruled out.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That was ruled out on a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by M.. WINGO: Page 3, line 18, strike out the words "wheat, oats, and barley" and insert in lieu thereof the words "agricultural food-grain seed."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman from Indiana has offered an amendment to include corn, which is in the nature of an amendment to perfect the text. Is it not in order to first vote upon that amendment before we vote upon the substitute of the gentleman from Arkansas? The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is to add corn, and this is a substitute for wheat, barley, oats, and corn, if corn be added.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the point of order of the gentleman from Oklahoma is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer to further perfect the bill.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I will send it to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] is pending. He spoke five minutes in favor of it. I would like to be recognized in opposition to it; or will the Chair put the motion without opportunity for debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. LEVER. I would like to have five minutes upon it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I trust the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana will not be adopted.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I have a substitute that I desire to offer to perfect the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Michigan in opposition to the amendment. The gentleman from Texas will have opportunity to offer his amendment later.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the amendment and all that the one who offered it and those who support it have said is contrary to the purpose and spirit of this bill. This bill contemplates the purchase of seed for farmers to be supplied to them on credit, but only to those who need it and are themselves unable in any way to obtain it. The Committee on Agriculture reported the bill after thorough investigation, believing that there is a limited section of the country particularly in need of this seed, that people of that section will not be able to get the seed unless the Government supplies it in this way. Now come gentlemen from some of the great wealthy, prosperous farming States of the country and plead for their people, telling us that their farmers are entitled to the benefits to be conferred by this bill; that their farmers have not been able and will not be able to get seed if their sections of the country are not included with the spring-wheat section and given the privileges to be offered by this bill to farmers of that drought-stricken, crop-failure section of the Northwest.

Gentlemen from the great corn belt, from the very heart of that magnificant farming country, plead for their people, and ask for amendments that, if adopted, will change the entire spirit and purpose of the bill; making a measure that will include the entire country, a measure that will place the splendid, prosperous farming sections in the same class as the spring-wheat section, which, temporarily at least, is poverty-stricken and unable to care for itself.

Enactment of this bill into law does not commit the Congress to the policy of supplying seed to farmers on credit or of loaning money on personal security. At this particular time our Government is intensely interested in the production of food, particularly wheat; interested in the welfare of our people and also the people who are so bravely fighting our battles. We need food, we must have it, and we must go even to the extent of adopting a policy of paternalism if by so doing we may be able to reach the result so much to be desired, that of increasing our food supply.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield to the gentleman now.

Mr. WHEELER. Evidently the gentleman has not read the bill.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I have read the bill and I helped to prepare it, and I know why it was prepared, to meet a particular situation. It is not a general proposition or for the relief of the seed difficulty which more or less acutely affects the entire country. It is to meet an emergency in one small area in which the farmers are unfortunately, temporarily I believe, too poor to take care of themselves.

Mr. WHEELER. To borrow money.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. And these gentlemen, urging this amendment, always loyal to and alert in behalf of their own people, are unwisely seeking so to change this bill as to make it apply to the entire country alike.

It must be admitted—everybody knows it—farmers all over the country were very unfortunate last year in having their crops, particularly corn, damaged, some of them destroyed by frost. This was true even in the States of the corn belt, the most fertile country in the world, where the farmers usually are, and I believe now are, the most prosperous of any on the face of the earth. But farmers of that favored section of the country are only temporarily embarrassed—many of them only slightly inconvenienced—and surely the Congress ought not to be asked to appropriate money from the Federal Treasury for their relief. Every one of them has either money or credit, and their well known independence and pride would not permit them to accept help from any outside source if it were offered. And even if we were able by a stretch of imagination to believe the farmers of that wonderfully fertile and otherwise favored country had been so unfortunate with their recent crops as to be embarrassed, without money, and in need of help, I am altogether unwilling to believe that their neighbors and friends, the business men, the great and prosperous industrial interests of those great States, would hesitate for a moment to supply to the limit that need. The States, the counties, the municipalities, large and small, would promptly and cheerfully furnish money, scorning even a suggestion of outside help.

That is the spirit in which the State of Michigan has acted, and it acted promptly. Knowing that early frosts last fall had wrought great damage to crops and inflicted heavy loss upon the farmers of the State, the legislature anticipated the difficulty that would confront the farmers this spring and made ample preparation and provision to assist them. The legislature and the State authorities did not think of seeking outside help, and I am sure I am right in saying that such help would not have been accepted.

Early after war was declared the Legislature of Michigan, being in session, passed an act providing for a war preparedness board, and made an appropriation of $5,000,000 and placed that enormous sum of money at the disposal of that board to be used as it might be needed. The board is assisting our farmers to get seed of various kinds, also implements and machinery, and I am sure it will supply every need as it becomes known.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The people of Michigan are showing a disposition to take care of themselves and to help the country to the limit of their ability. They do not come to the Federal Treasury to which appeals should come from those only who, under extraordinary circumstances, are not able to take care of themselves. Yesterday I said when this bill first came before the Committee on Agriculture it was turned down cold, because the committee did not believe it was right for the Government to go into the business of loaning money on personal security or that it should go generally into the business of supplying seed on credit.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. But after further lengthy hearings and after, as I say, thorough investigation, the committee was satisfied that there is a section of this country where this help is absolutely needed. It is the section of the country where grains, largely wheat, that the country as a whole is interested in now are raised. But while it is largely a local problem to help these people who need help, it is a problem in which all the people are interested. It rises to the dignity of a national problem, and I believe under all the circumstances the Committee on Agriculture was right in bringing the situation to the attention of the House, and right also in so limiting and restricting the measure as to furnish help only to the particular sections of the country where, on account of bad climatic conditions, crop failures in the recent past——

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan (continuing). The people are in such a condition that they can not themselves supply the seed. It very properly does not include the corn belt.

Some of the gentlemen who are urging the amendment to make the bill apply to the entire couutry alike offer as a reason—a very slim excuse—that there has been no session of the legislatures of their States since the declaration of war by this country. That is no reason at all. Because their States have not seen their duty or have not performed it does not justify an appeal to Congress, nor is it good reason for begging at the door of the Federal Treasury. Their own people have money in abundance, and State authorities can easily make it available for every local need. It is not even a good excuse that legislatures have not been in regular session. If an emergency exists and the people are suffering, why did not you get busy and hold special sessions? Why did you not do as North Dakota and South Dakota have done? They called special sessions of their legislatures—the need is urgent and the duty is appreciated up there. They have done everything they can for their own people, and we are taking up the work where they have stopped, because they are unable to go further.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the amendment offered by myself and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana and all amendments by way of substitute to those or amendments to the substitutes may close——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Is a substitute to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana now in order? I offer a substitute to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. There are already three pending. If the gentleman will withhold his amendment, the Chair will see that he has ample opportunity.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to have my substitute that I offered read by the Clerk for the information of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina has the floor for the moment.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the Chair answer my parliamentary inquiry whether or not the substitute is in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is not in order at this time.

Mr. BLANTON. Not at this time?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and amendments to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] and all substitutes and amendments to substitutes thereto be closed in 40 minutes, the Chair to control the time.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask if the gentleman's request would preclude the offering of other amendments to this section?

Mr. LEVER. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. All right.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Is not an amendment to his amendment in order?

The CHAIRMAN. To whose amendment?

Mr. BLANTON. I offer one amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. Send up the amendment and the Chair will have it read for information.

Mr. BLANTON. And I ask for five minutes on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas will be read for the information of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 18, after the words "wheat, oats, and barley," add "corn, maize, sorghum, and feterita."

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask the Chair to put my request.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for five minutes on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is about to put the unanimous-consent request. The gentleman from Texas will remember that the Chair asked that his amendment be read for the information of the committee. Discussion of it is not in order at this time, but the Chair will see at the proper time, if the Chair shall hold the gentleman's amendment in order, that the gentleman is recognized for discussion. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on amendments pertaining to the commodities enumerated in this bill, all substitutes, and all amendments to amendments be concluded in 40 minutes, the time to be controlled by the Chair. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEVER. I will ask the Chair to reserve me five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAGSDALE].

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUCKER. I sought to get the Chair's attention before any other gentleman addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the Chair will say to the gentleman from Missouri the Chair has been doing the best he can.

Mr. RUCKER. I appreciate that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chairman saw the gentleman from South Carolina on his feet for quite a while endeavoring to get recognition and the Chair put down his name first.

Mr. RUCKER. If the Chair will pardon me, I had the unanimous consent of the House, except the Chair, to make this speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this legislation as reported by the committee. I am opposed to loading it up with these different amendments. I am afraid that many of them are supported without any idea of perfecting the bill, but in the hope on the part of some of the Members who are supporting them that by loading up the bill with a lot of amendments it may be defeated. [Applause.]

There is such a shortage of food products the world over that Congress ought to do everything it can within reason to encourage and make it as easy as possible for the farmers to increase production in this country. This bill is undoubtedly a step in the right direction, and it ought to pass.

My colleague from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] referred a few minutes ago to what Michigan has done along this same line since the war started. I rose more particularly to state a little more fully than my colleague did what the State of Michigan has been doing for the farmers of the State. Michigan has been a pioneer in this legislation, the same as it has been in other progressive legislation. Much has been said since this debate started about the conditions in other States, but no one has told of any State doing the work which Michigan has done. It has done for the farmers of our State the very thing this bill proposes to do for the farmers of the country at large.

A year ago when the war resolution was passed the legislature of the State was in session. In less than two weeks after the declaration of war by Congress the Michigan Legislature had enacted legislation, and given it immediate effect, creating a State war preparedness board, composed of State officers, with the governor of the State as chairman, and putting $5,000,000 at the disposal of that board for the purpose of better enabling the people of our State to do their part in the prosecution of this war.

Besides looking after the more strictly military affairs of the State, this board has made use of the funds placed at its disposal to do practically all, and in some respects more, for the farmers of the State than this bill proposes to do for the farmers of the country. I have a letter here from the Secretary of the Michigan War Preparedness Board, Maj. Roy C. Vandercook, telling of the work Michigan has done, which I desire to read. The letter is dated March 25, 1918, and is addressed to me. The body of it is as follows:

> Michigan has purchased approximately 75,000 bushels of tested seed corn for distribution to the farmers of Michigan at cost and about 20,000 bushels of spring seed wheat to sell at the same basis.
> We are now distributing throughout the State 1,000 Ford tractors at the manufacturer's price of $750 plus freight charges and cost of delivery.
>
> Through the Live Stock Sanitary Commission we are purchasing sheep by the carload for distribution at cost in small lots to the farmers of the State.
>
> Carrying out this program, the State has, of course, been bearing the overhead charges of office work, printing, postage, and a considerable amount of traveling expense.
>
> The governor is at present working on a plan to sell the surplus stock of potatoes to a dehydrating concern, and the plan seems to be practical, but no contract has been entered into on this matter as yet.
>
> I might add that in connection with the tractor proposition we have arranged for the sale of a gang plow through the regular dealers at a price lower than these plows are quoted for retail purposes.
>
> The State has in its employ an agricultural expert, who is endeavoring to boost production in every way possible and keep watch as to conditions generally throughout the State, in order that the board may be of service in every way possible.
>
> This, in brief, is the situation in Michigan to date.

The letter is signed "War Preparedness Board, by Roy C. Vandercook, secretary."

Mr. DENISON. May I interrupt the gentleman there?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Since the State of Michigan is doing that for the farmers of Michigan, would the gentleman say, as his colleague said a while ago about the farmers of Indiana, that those farmers are in the position of beggars and mendicants?

Mr. MAPES. I agree with my colleague that the States of Illinois and Indiana are prosperous enough and able enough to take care of their own farmers, the same as the State of Michigan has done.

Mr. DENISON. How about the farmers of Michigan?

Mr. MAPES. I have read this letter to show that the people of Michigan are alive to their obligations in this war. They realize the need of increased production, and the State is doing what it can to assist the farmers along that line. What Michigan has done it is fair to assume that the Secretary of Agriculture can do with the funds provided in this bill for any locality which is in need of assistance. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, if we limit this bill to wheat, oats, and barley, as proposed by the chairman of the committee [Mr. LEVER], we will fail in producing any great results, because the time for planting these three crops has almost passed even in the few States designed to be benefited by this bill. How much time will there be for planting wheat, oats, and barley after this bill can be passed and the machinery of it put into operation? April is already upon us, with all the machinery yet to be organized. Therefore, if the purpose of the bill is to increase the food grain supply of this Nation, then I propose by the amendment which I have offered to do that very thing by embracing corn, milo maize, feterita, and sorghum. All four of these grains are used for food. I notice that some gentlemen seem mystified when I mention milo maize, feterita, and sorghum. There are mills in my country to-day making flour out of milo maize—flour that makes good bread and that will be a valuable substitute for the wheat products of this country. You know what sorghum is. It is one of the food substitutes upon which we are now depending largely.

If the bill is confined merely to the proposition of wheat, oats, and barley, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois yesterday afternoon made it plain to my mind that it will be of little benefit to the country, and for myself I intend to vote against this bill if it is confined to those three grains. I do not believe there is time yet remaining in which to plant wheat, oats, and barley that will produce anything during the crop year of 1918.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BLAND. I can say that in Indiana we can plant corn, and it will mature if planted up till the 15th of June.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and in the States of Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, and Colorado we can plant feterita, Milo maize, and sorghum during the next four months and make a good crop.

In the State of Texas there are 144 counties, some of them big counties, that last year, because of an unprecedented drought, made practically no crops whatever. The drought situation has been extreme in that section of the country. It has been a terrible blow to the people, and the farmers have been moving out by the hundreds. There are farms that are as bare as this floor, and have been bare for more than 12 months, and that condition exists in a part of my district and practically in 144 counties of the State of Texas. And I want you to understand that under ordinary conditions some of this land is the finest and most productive in the world and will retrieve itself as sure as the sun shines, but aid just now will increase the acreage planted and the production of food supplies this year. Texas is nobly doing her part, for our legislature has provided for $2,000,000 relief already.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. MEEKER. That is good stuff to send out into our districts, where they are selling Texas farms.

Mr. BLANTON. Texas farms can take care of themselves. Texas farms are exceedingly valuable property in the country generally to-day, and they can not be hurt by the statement of my friend from Missouri, and I commend the people of his Missouri district upon their good judgment, if they are fortunate enough to be investing in Texas farms. All they need is rain, and the rain comes, usually. We have had a drought situation for a year or two, but the seasons will come back, and the farmers will come back, even farmers from Missouri. If this bill seeks to accomplish anything at all it must accomplish something in the way of producing crops that the farmers can plant and raise during the crop year of 1918. If it does not reach the crop situation of 1918 it is futile. I want to say again that I hope these other four grains which I have mentioned—corn, Milo maize, sorghum, and feterita—may be embraced in the bill.

Mr. DENISON. What were those two products that the gentleman mentioned which he said are raised in Texas?

Mr. BLANTON. Milo maize and feterita.

Mr. DENISON. What is feterita?

Mr. BLANTON. It is very similar to Milo maize. It is both a splendid food and forage crop. I want to say that 90 per cent of the cattle of west Texas have been moved out of that State now and placed upon pasturage in other States. When they come back this fall they are going to depend largely upon Milo maize and feterita and sorghum, and if those feeds are not furnished they are going to have to feed some food substitutes to them to keep them alive. [Applause.]

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan made two statements which were very conflicting. One statement was that this bill would take money out of the Treasury, and the inference was that it would never be returned. I asked him if he had read the bill, and he said he had, that he was familiar with it as a member of the committee. He finally made another statement that the money was simply loaned and to be returned later on. Of course, the last statement was correct. Now, if this money is simply to be loaned, which is the purpose of this bill, and to be returned later, there is no reason why all sections of the country that need seeds should not be benefited, the same as the particular section that raises spring wheat. For the past five years the section of the country from which I come has had four crop failures in some parts of it. A great many of the producers on the land there are tenants, and all the money that they have made from the one good crop has been required to pay off their indebtedness. I think they should be permitted to be benefited by this act, the same as the farmers in North Dakota and Montana and Minnesota.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I have only two minutes.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I have some time, and I will yield to the gentleman half a minute. The urgent deficiency appropriation bill carries $4,000,000 for the very purpose the gentleman is asking for. The Secretary of Agriculture can buy the seed and sell it. I understand you gentlemen out there have the money. You want the seed, and that is taken care of in the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. WHEELER. The farmer can do that in the section of the country from which the gentleman comes.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. No; they have not the money.

Mr. WHEELER. I stated that there are farmers and tenants in my district that can not afford to expend any money on seeds because they have not got the money. For four years they had absolute failure of crops. In other sections they have had good crops and the farmers are prosperous. The fact remains that there are a number of farmers and tenants who have had to take the proceeds of one crop to pay for the loss of the other four. Seed corn is selling from $8 to $10 a bushel, timothy from $14 to $16 a bushel, clover seed $24, $25, and up to $27 a bushel.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BOOHER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed joint resolutions and bill of the following titles:

On March 27, 1918:

S. J. Res. 117. Joint resolution amending the act of July 2, 1909, governing the holding of civil-service examinations.

On March 28, 1918:

H. R. 9867. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 104. Joint resolution authorizing the assistant to the Secretary of the Interior to sign official papers and documents.

SALE OF SEED GRAIN TO FARMERS.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Wyoming that the time has been parceled out.

Mr. MONDELL. But I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent debate for the consideration of all amendments was to close in 40 minutes. The committee gave unanimous consent to that request of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. MONDELL. But I desire to offer an amendment and have it pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman that there are two amendments pending at this time, and that at the conclusion of the 40 minutes' debate the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. MONDELL. But there will be no opportunity to debate it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is powerless to extend the time under the circumstances. The committee agreed to 40 minutes discussion, the time to be equally divided by the Chair between gentlemen on the respective sides of the aisle.

Mr. MONDELL. Then there is no opportunity to offer and discuss an amendment under the present conditions?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can offer his amendment, but the Chair is bound by the unanimous consent.

Mr. MONDELL. Then I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to offer an amendment and have it read at the Clerk's desk for information. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 18, after the word "oats," insert the word "rye."

Mr. MOORE of Pensylvania. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does all debate close on this section and all amendments thereto in 10 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is about one-half exhausted.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Under the agreement made, which, I regret to say, I did not hear, having been engaged elsewhere, no further amendments can be offered to the section?

The CHAIRMAN. At the expiration of 40 minutes no further discussion is in order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Nor can any other amendments be offered?

The CHAIRMAN. No.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I hope the Chair will not hold to that.

Mr. HAUGEN. Amendments may be offered.

The CHAIRMAN. What the Chair intended to say was that there could be no discussion on further amendments.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Amendments will be in order for the balance of the evening.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MONDELL. Debate having been limited to 40 minutes, those who have offered amendments are given the opportunity to speak during that period?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can only state to the gentleman the unanimous-consent agreement, which was on the request of the gentleman from South Carolina, that all debate on the pending amendments and all other amendments pertaining to the commodities enumerated in line 18, page 3, should conclude in 40 minutes, the Chair to divide the time between the respective sides of the aisle.

Mr. MONDELL. Some of us were engaged in committee hearings and were not here when the agreement was reached, but desire to be heard on amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can readily see that the Chair is powerless to extend the time.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] was here yesterday and served notice that he intended to offer an amendment when the proper time came. If an arrangement can be made, I suggest that the gentleman ought to be permitted to offer an amendment and be heard upon it. I appreciate that the time for debate has been closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee can extend the time by unanimous consent if it sees fit to do so, but at this time the Chair is bound to carry out the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended five minutes, and that the gentleman from Wyoming may be heard upon his amendment.

Mr. LANGLEY. I suppose that that comes at the conclusion of the time already agreed upon.

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the 40 minutes' time agreed upon for debate be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. I ask for eight minutes in order that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] may have five minutes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I would like five minutes.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that in view of the fact that other matters of great importance are to follow this, we ought not to extend the time in this way. I do not object to five minutes being given to the gentleman from Wyoming, but if half a dozen more are to ask for time I shall have to object to the time being extended beyond the five minutes asked for by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming having asked for time yesterday, and having served notice that he would offer the amendment to-day, I think he should be given the time now.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for two minutes to discuss my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks to proceed for two minutes to discuss his amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Reserving the right to object, let me put in a request for two minutes myself. I told him I wanted some time in this connection, and I find that I am not going to get it, but I want only two minutes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have not spoken on this bill, and I want to speak on an amendment that affects my section of the country. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, personally I do not want to close out anyone. I have not spoken on this bill either, and I would like to speak, but I am willing to forego that in order to hurry that matter along.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, to settle the matter, I object.

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WELLING. I would like to ask if the unanimous-consent agreement did not merely go to the amendments now pending and not to the final amendments to the entire section of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asked unanimous consent that debate on all amendments pertaining to commodities enumerated in line 18 and all amendmets thereto and all substitutes therefor should be closed within 40 minutes.

Mr. WELLING. And that other amendments to the section were in order and could be debated.

The CHAIRMAN. His request went only to the commodities enumerated in line 18.

Mr. LEVER. The Chair is absolutely right about that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will not the gentleman withhold that?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; because there is a disposition to ram this bill through, despite the fact that there are some other men in this House besides the friends of the farmer.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The point of order is made on a request that covers four minutes of time. I hope the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT] will withdraw his objection and let the gentleman from Wyoming have his two minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the gentleman from Wyoming having two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that he may address the House for two minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have made the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If I can get time, when I can be here. I am engaged in other matters.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I was out temporarily to get a little lunch. I am willing to aid the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Wyoming, both of whom are engaged on conference committees.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I would like to get some time.

Mr. LEVER. Let me put the proposition. I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended five minutes for the gentleman from Pennsylvania——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, five minutes will not do me any good.

Mr. LEVER. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to have 10 minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Very well, 10 minutes. How much time would the gentleman from Wyoming want?

Mr. MONDELL. Two minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Two minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming, two minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES], and two minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC].

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will enumerate the names as he has them. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] 10 minutes, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] 2 minutes, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] 2 minutes, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] 2 minutes, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC] 2 minutes——

Mr. LEVER. And the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] two minutes and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] five minutes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Was there not an agreement a little while ago fixing the time for debate?

The CHAIRMAN. That stands, the Chair will state to the gentleman.

Mr. LEVER. This is additional time. How much does that make, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. It makes 25 minutes.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have three minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Then I would ask the Chair to add three minutes for the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER]. I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended for 35 minutes, to include the names of the gentlemen the Chair has, and that at the expiration of that time debate upon this section and all amendments thereto shall close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the original time of 40 minutes be extended 35 minutes, that the gentlemen enumerated by the Chair be recognized for the time stated, and that at the expiration of the 35 minutes all debate on the section and all amendments thereto be closed. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object——

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Reserving the right to object, here we have had 35 minutes added to the debate, brought about by a Member of the House coming here and threatening to make the point of no quorum unless he has 10 minutes of time. There are Members who sit here day in and day out and who do not occupy the time of the House, while some of these other gentlemen do, and I am going to object unless the roll be called and get the Members over here and keep them here until we are through.

Mr. LEVER. I hope the gentleman will not do that. We will make time the other way.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the debate on this important question was limited to two hours yesterday and it was impossible to give the time that was asked for, and I trust the gentleman from Texas will withdraw his objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is called for. The Chair will count.

Mr. LEVER. I hope the gentleman will withdraw it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum is withdrawn and also——

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I would like to ask the chairman if he can not get unanimous consent as to when he is going to have a vote on this bill?

Mr. LEVER. I prefer to exhaust debate under the unanimous consent arrangement which we made a while ago—40 minutes' debate.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. How many more sections are there to be considered under the five-minute rule?

Mr. LEVER. About five sections. We are on the first section, but I would say to the gentleman from Texas this is the important section of this bill and Members desire to discuss it.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, at the request of the chairman of the committee I withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina, chairman of the committee, asks unanimous consent that the original agreement of 40 minutes be extended 35 minutes and that the names of the gentleman as read out——

Mr. LEVER. I withdraw that request temporarily.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] for three minutes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, this is an interesting bill and important, more important for the legislation it suggests as a possibility for the future than what really it contains. It is a proposal to take money out of the Common Treasury and distribute it to the selective favorites in a certain area. It is a proposal to give money taken from the taxpayers in general to those producers who live in the spring-wheat area. Now, Mr. Chairman, if it is a good thing to tax the people who do not live in the spring-wheat area for the benefit of those fortunate sons of the soil who do live there, why would it not be wise to tax them for the benefit of the people who live in other sections of the country? There are other places that produce food besides the spring-wheat area. Louisiana produces sugar, which is of indisputable value as a food product; so does Texas. They ought to be recognized. Then it occurs to me while naming important food products that the peanuts of old Virginia and Texas and Georgia are a contribution to the food supply of this country. Peanuts—I would not advise them to be eaten raw, because there might be painful consequences, but roasted—are very good food, and I am told when crushed they yield an oil that is an excellent substitute for the Mediterranean olive oil. Mr. Chairman, the potato of California and Utah and Colorado ought by all means to be taken care of.

Mr. Chairman, this is put forward as a war measure, of course, for everything now put on us is denominated a war measure, but it has not been stated on whose authority, at least if it has I have not heard of it. But it is a class of legislation which will remind every gentleman in this House of a certain and by no means advanced age—because I am sure the Speaker is one who delighted in the book—it will remind everyone in this House who read Samuel Warren's great story of Ten Thousand a Year, in which that eminent parliamentarian Tittlebat Titmouse appears, of his famous bill offered on the first day of his parliamentary service, which no doubt you recall was to "give everybody everything." [Laughter.] There never was a more important and popular bill proposed in any legislative body, and if we desire to escape the annoyances of the distribution of the benefactions of this measure, if it contains any, we should adopt the parliamentary system of Tittlebat Titmouse and substitute for the bill his original suggestion, to give everybody everything. It simplifies the almsgiving of the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, the House yesterday witnessed a very remarkable scene. When we convened in the morning the first question that confronted us was whether we should dispense with Calendar Wednesday. The vote upon that question, I think, may be taken fairly as a guide of the temper of the House at that time. The vote was 299 to 47. The vote was a little over 6 to 1. Then what next transpired? The father of this House, with all of his fervor and eloquence, not of 82 years of age, but of 40 years, arose and spoke for 15 minutes, and at the end of that time we took a vote, and he won with those who were present and heard his argument. However, gentleman, he erected and demolished a man of straw. He pointed us to the pioneer, to his hardy virtues and the fact that his independence was as unyielding as the high trees of the forest which he felled, and he said that he would never have taken, as farmers were now soliciting, something from the Treasury as a gift. Now, gentlemen, that is not the important question at all; that is not the question that confronts this House. We know that we are saying to the farmers—and I am not criticizing anyone—but we are saying that we have fallen down upon our ship program, and we are only 28 per cent along in the creation of our tonnage, and that is the estimate of the gentleman who is in charge of the shipbuilding. We are saying to them we have not any machine guns or any cannon; that we are borrowing them from France. We are saying to them that the American Government has built only a handful of aeroplanes, when we were making the proud boast that we would turn out more aeroplanes than all Europe combined.

And we are saying to the farmers, "There is one class of production that has made good; there is one class of production which has been supplied; it is the food from the farm, and it is necessary not alone to supply our lines, but we have now upon the front 'over there' several hundred thousand men, and if we are to protect them we must feed them."

And how are we to feed them unless we increase our food supply? Why, the farmer is not coming to Congress; we are going to the farmer. We are saying to him out there where they have had failures of crops—and I limit it to this war time; I limit it to this area where they need this relief—we are saying to him, "You have had failures of crops, and we come to you and we want to supply you with the seed which you can not buy. We do not ask you to come to us and solicit this as a gift, but we furnish it to you, and we ask you to help increase this food supply that we sorely need."

Let us turn our eyes for a moment across the Atlantic and see what Great Britain has done in this crisis. Why, they have come over to the city of Detroit, and the Government of Great Britain has bought 6,000 tractors at $750 apiece, $4,500,000 of money. Who bought them? Did the farmers buy them? Oh, no. Who was it that was in charge of the correspondence? The premier, Lloyd-George, and his correspondence is to-day on file out there in Detroit. Why did he do it? He did it to increase the food supply of Great Britain, and he has thereby increased the food supply enormously.

What else has he done? They have undertaken to supply the farm labor, and thousands upon thousands of women are doing every kind of farm work except simply the holding of the plow and the pitching of the grain, and to-day as the result of the efforts of the Government of Great Britain the farmers of that country are producing more than they ever produced before in that country's history.

That is a sample of what a country can do and what a country is doing in a time of stress such as this. The tractor is an iron horse which never tires. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the demand for this legislation is predicated upon the ground that Federal aid is necessary in order to increase the production of certain important food crops. If that contention is correct and it is necessary, why, then, in my judgment, the scope of the bill should be enlarged and broadened so as not to be confined to only a few of the important items of food. Wheat, barley, and oats—especially wheat—are important items, so far as the production of food crops are concerned; but, as you all well know, corn in equally important, and it has as great a place in the list of food crops as any other crop, and why it should be cut out and not taken into consideration in this legislation I can not understand.

It is practically too late to accomplish anything by making appropriations for seed wheat. We all know that.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. My time is limited and I ask the gentleman to excuse me.

We can, however, aid materially in the production and enlargement of the corn crop. In my section of the country, owing to early frost last year, practically all the corn was so severely damaged that it is worthless for seed. I do not say our people are in distress, as they were when the Congress came graciously to our support on account of the 1916 flood, but I do think that help there could wisely be given, so far as the purchase of seed corn is concerned; and if it is the intention of this bill to increase the production of food crops and promote the general welfare, then I know that corn can be included, and profitably so.

If corn is included, and the section of the country in which I live and which I have the honor to represent becomes the beneficiary of this legislation, there will be no risk taken, and I will say that they can give good security, and none of the money will be lost, and the food crops of the country will be materially increased.

Mr. GORDON. You need not give any security. This bill does not require any.

Mr. DOUGHTON. We sometimes can do more than we are asked to do.

If this bill is to become a law, corn should be included and the Secretary of Agriculture given full authority to apply the appropriation in such manner as to bring the greatest good to the entire country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the corn amendment. [Laughter.] I am opposed to this bill on principle unless it includes seed corn [laughter], because it would be a sectional and an unfair bill if it omitted that great staple.

Mr. MADDEN. Why don't you put in corn juice? [Laughter.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Oh, well; you can get plenty of that in Chicago without additional legislation, and besides such an amendment would not do anybody in Kentucky any good, as we are going to quit dealing in the stuff down there pretty soon. Mr. Chairman, when I remember all that King Corn has done for the world, the hunger it has satiated, the thirsts it has quenched, and the drooping spirits of the weary that it has revived, I can not refrain from raising my voice in protest against the discrimination embodied in this bill as it now stands. [Laughter.] I think the bill as introduced by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER] was a much better bill than this, not only because it was broader in its application but——

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think the bill could stand after what he has said about it? [Laughter.]

Mr. LANGLEY. I do not think it will stand if you leave corn out of it. [Laughter.] As I was proceeding to say when interrupted by the gentleman from Chicago, the original bill was better than this committee bill, not only because it was broader in its scope but likewise because it carried an appropriation large enough to be of real and substantial benefit to the farmers of the country. [Applause.] I am a bit surprised at my distinguished friend from South Carolina (Mr. LEVER) who was dubbed in the debate yesterday by a partial friend of his as "The Little Giant from the South," in which I heartily concur, for bringing in such a sectional, discriminatory measure as this; and I believe if the spirits of the departed were permitted to come back and speak to us, that Thomas Jefferson's saintly voice would ring out in this chamber with the exclamation, "Oh, Asbury, Asbury, my dear boy, what on earth are you trying to do? Have you forgotten the admonition I left for the guidance of Democracy—'Equal rights for all and exclusive privileges to none.'" [Laughter and applause.] So, Mr. Chairman, in these nonpartisan days, I feel warranted in giving as an additional ground for opposing this bill without the corn amendment, my desire to preserve the traditions of the old Democracy. This "Little Giant from the South" made yesterday a rather curious argument which convinced me that he was trying to find some excuse for bolstering up his sectional bill, and that he is not really heart and soul for the measure which he is managing. His argument was that seed corn should not be included in the bill, and that preference should be given to wheat, because our allies are not accustomed to eating corn bread. May I not be pardoned, gentlemen of the Congress, for saying, "with malice toward none and charity for all," that inasmuch as we are eating corn bread all the time here our allies ought at least to be willing to go us fifty-fifty and eat corn bread half the time, particularly since we are sending it to them. [Applause.]

Mr. FIELDS. If we have to eat corn bread, ought we not to be permitted to get our seed supply to plant the necessary corn?

Mr. LANGLEY. Certainly; and that is the main reason why I am supporting the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. RUCKER. Does the gentleman take the position that corn bread is not the best bread on earth?

Mr. LANGLEY. Certainly not. The gentleman knows that I have quite the contrary view, and that I was born and brought up on a farm and raised on corn bread, and that Kentuckians and Missourians never forget their "raisin'." But I was trying to combat the argument of the gentleman from South Carolina that we ought to discriminate against corn and in favor of wheat because the English and French, as he alleged, are not accustomed to eating corn bread. Why, Mr. Chairman, back in the days of the Civil War the boys from the North and the boys from Dixie frequently were unable to get anything as good as corn bread. "Hard-tack" was a luxury to them, and they were satisfied with it, and a good old Missouri or Kentucky corndodger would have been as tempting to them as a nugget of gold is to the avaricious in these days of commercialism.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. LANGLEY. I am afraid that I shall lose more time than I can spare and finish what I want to say if I yield further, but I can not resist the appeal of my beloved friend from Missouri.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman has had very wide and varied experiences in life. Has he at any time or any place on earth found any food better than a corndodger?

Mr. LANGLEY. No; I never have. I think it produces the healthiest and best men on earth, and that is another reason why I am in favor of including seed corn in this bill. We need in these times of stress all of the strong and healthy men that we can produce, and to adopt the Bland amendment would, I think, mean more seed corn where it is needed and at a cheaper price, I trust, and that would mean in turn more corn and hence more corndodgers. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUCKER. You always got corndodgers without the Government furnishing seed to you, did you not?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes; but that was in the old days when a different administration was in power. But this year we are short of seed corn, as has already been pointed out by myself and others. I do not intend by this to inject politics into this debate, because if there ever was a time when this should not be done it is now, when our boys are giving up their lives in the cause of liberty and when still more of the boys of the allies are giving up their lives, which, in the end, may mean a saving of untold numbers of American lives that might otherwise have to be sacrificed. No, Mr. Chairman, this is not a time to talk politics and we Republicans are not doing it, and I believe that when the impartial historian writes the history of our participation in this great war he will record an example of tolerance, patience, and patriotism on the part of the Republican Party, which is unprecedented in the political history of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] is recognized for three and one-half minutes.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] was making such an excellent speech a few minutes ago that I have concluded to yield to him all of my time, and I am very glad to do it. [Applause.]

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire first to resume what I was saying on the subject of tractors. To-day the great obstacle to the having of tractors is the fact that they cost so much money. The Caterpillar, which is the best tractor that can be bought, costs $1,800. The Ford tractor costs $750. I have been in communication with Mr. Ford, and I find that if his tractors were made on a large scale he could turn them out at the figure of $350 apiece, and perhaps $300 apiece. I refer to that simply as an illustration of what those people think who have been in the stress and fury of war for a longer period than we have; those who to-day are feeling the pinch of hunger; those who to-day are rationed; those who to-day can obtain but a quarter of a pound of butter per person per week for all purposes, cooking and the table alike; those who if they leave their homes and go to a hotel and have a dinner are obliged to have their ration cards detached to show that they have had so much food to eat. What have they said about this? Have they said, "Why, this will increase populism, this will lead to raids upon the Treasury"? Have they said that this will lead to everyone wanting everything, as the distinguished gentleman from Texas says? Why, no; on the contrary, it has led to a concerted effort on the part of the Government to improve the condition of its farmers, to enable them to produce more. For their own benefit? No; in order to add to the food supply of the Nation. And so, if the Chair will allow me to conclude as I began, this is not the farmer coming to the Treasury, hungry to raid it, anxious to get something for nothing, anxious to obtain the seed without paying for it. This is a case of the Nation saying, "We have on the other side some two or three hundred thousand boys, and you can not export corn meal, you can not grind it when you get it there, you can not bake it there, for they do not know how to use it, and it will spoil on the way. We need white bread; we need an abundance of it." So the Government goes to those men and says, "Now, perhaps you have not the money to buy any seed. If you have not, here is the seed. Perhaps you would not use as much seed as you will if we will furnish it to you. Perhaps you would not plant as many acres as you will plant if you knew that you can get the seed from us and get it on the terms on which we are ready and willing to furnish it." So the Government says, "Increase your production, so that we may continue to succeed in the one thing in which we have succeeded so far, which is the sending of supplies abroad for the allies and for ourselves." For this purpose the Government with united voice urges these men to increase food production, to take this seed, to plant an increased acreage, so that in 1919, when we have, as we will have, a million and a half or 2,000,000 men at the front, they will be abundantly fed, and so that we shall not have to be rationed as the Englishmen and the Scotchmen and the Irishmen and the Frenchmen have to be to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] is recognized for six minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the committee give me its attention while we see what is the exact situation.

Early this morning I offered an amendment to strike from this bill the provision for the purchase of oats and barley. I did that upon the theory that the one vital thing that was being sought in this bill is the increase in the production of wheat, because wheat bread is the war bread not only of this Nation but of all nations engaged in this great world conflict. I recognize, of course, that the increase in the supply of barley and oats is an important matter, but not so vitally important as is the increase in the supply of wheat.

Many gentlemen have come to me in a rather facetious way to inquire how it happens that the Committee on Agriculture reported a bill of this kind. I have been surprised at that inquiry, and yet not so greatly surprised either, because probably the membership of this House are not so intimately acquainted with the very serious situation as it affects the bread supply of this country and her allies as are the members of the Committee on Agriculture. It has been our duty to keep close track of that. I am voting for this bill on the theory that if we are going to hold our military lines in Europe intact it is absolutely necessary that we likewise hold intact and continuous the bread line from this country to our soldiers in Europe.

You say that this is a gamble. I admit that it is a gamble; but we are gambling seven and a half million dollars here, taken from all the people of the country, possibly to save the civilization of the world for all time to come, and I am willing to gamble the stake. [Applause.]

You say how can this little amount of wheat help the situation? We have got to send many million bushels of wheat across the ocean. We have got to keep the cities of Philadelphia, New York, and Baltimore and industrial centers of this country from the reduced loaf or the increased price of the loaf. We have got to prevent the bread line in this country if it is possible to do it. I stand here to predict that we are not many months away from the bread card. Is this vital? I want Members in this committee who have been laughing about this bill to take it to their hearts. Suppose that the vital thing in the bread line was an additional 10,000,000 bushels of wheat and we did not have it, and the line is broken and your boys in France are without wheat bread—the boys of the allies struggling for your homes and firesides are without it—there is not a Member here who, feeling by his vote that he was responsible for that situation would not get down on his knees and pray God for forgiveness for his unwisdom. [Applause.] That is why I am supporting this bill.

The great leaders of this party come to me and jeeringly and laughingly say that in your hearts you are not for it. I deny it. I am for it, because I realize the tremendous importance of bread in this conflict. I realize that civilization itself is at stake in the great issue across the water. [Applause.] Therefore I am centering all of my energies to-day on the proposition of wheat. I have come here upon my own motion, after consultation with members of my committee, to strike out barley and oats, and when I have done that I am met by these facetious gentlemen, who are looking largely, I fear, to their own districts, with a proposition to load this bill down with seed corn and feterita and milo maize and confetti, and the devil knows what, in order to beat this bill. [Laughter and applause.] I want members of the committee to know where they are at in this business. I want them to vote my proposition up and to vote down the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana and every other proposition like it that would load the bill down and work to its ultimate defeat. Do not be deceived. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, has all time expired?

The CHAIRMAN. It has.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. What is the parliamentary situation, and what are the amendments that have been offered?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LEVER: On page 3, line 18, after the word "wheat," strike out the comma and the following words: "oats and barley."

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND: Page 3, line 18, after the word "of" and before the word "wheat," insert the word "corn."

Mr. BLANTON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not my amendment that I offered to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana come in?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas is not in order at this time.

Mr. BLANTON. My amendment was an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the gentleman's amendment is not in order. After the other amendments are disposed of the Chair will have the gentleman's amendment again read.

Mr. BLANTON. But my amendment is the only amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana. It is not an amendment in the second degree.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas will remember that his amendment was read for information only.

Mr. BLANTON. I offered it and spoke to it as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair expressly stated to the gentleman at that time that in the opinion of the Chair it was not in order, but on request of the gentleman from Texas it would be read purely for information of the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. At what stage of the proceedings, Mr. Chairman, will it be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not answer that question at this time.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, to add the word "corn." That is the first amendment offered, and then the gentleman from South Carolina offered a substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. No. The gentleman from South Carolina offered his amendment first.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. And now the gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment to strike out certain language?

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I offer a substitute to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers a substitute.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. As I understand, the gentleman from South Carolina moves to strike out the words "oats and barley."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Now, I offer a substitute to strike out the words "wheat, oats, and barley" and the word "for," and then, after the word "seed," strike out "purposes," so that the bill will read "for the purchase of seed or when necessary to procure such seed," and so forth.

Mr. LEVER. I make the point of order against that.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers a substitute to the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute to the Lever amendment: Page 3, line 18, strike out the words "wheat, oats, and barley for," and after the word "seed" strike out the word "purposes," so that the line will read "for the purchase of seed."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will indulge me one moment. I reserve a point of order while I make a parliamentary inquiry. As I understood it, the situation is this: I offered an amendment to strike out certain language in the bill. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] offered an amendment to that to insert the word "corn" after a certain word in the bill. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] now offers his proposition as a substitute for my proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. I ask for a vote.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the parliamentary situation, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] offers an amendment to perfect the text, to add the word "corn." I now wish to direct special inquiry as to why that amendment is not amendable by the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] to further perfect the text.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLANTON: Page 3, line 18, after the words "wheat, oats, and barley," add "corn, maize, sorghum, and feterita."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer that to perfect the text.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WINGO) there were—ayes 23, noes 76.

So the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLAND) there were—ayes 70, noes 63.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CLARK of Florida: Page 4, line 11, after the word "immediately," insert the following:

"Provided, That after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful during the continuance of the existing war for any person, firm, or corporation in the United States to use any corn, wheat, barley, oats, rice, or any other grain or foodstuff in the manufacture by distillation, brewing, or otherwise of any intoxicating, spirituous, or malt liquors, and any person, firm, or corporation violating this provision shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 or more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not less than six months nor more than three years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I think would come in ahead of that.

Mr. HOWARD. So have I.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will not the gentleman reserve it?

Mr. KEATING. No.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Then I desire to discuss the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I think probably we can arrange this matter all right. I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto may close in 20 minutes.

Mr. HOWARD. Reserving the right to object, I want to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD. I have a substitute for the entire section that I want to offer at the proper time, and out of this conglomerate mass I am endeavoring to find when that time is. The gentleman from South Carolina has asked that all debate on this section close in 20 minutes. I want to offer an amendment to strike out and insert, and I want to know whether the 20 minutes would cover debate on that.

Mr. LEVER. It would.

Mr. HOWARD. Then, Mr. Chairman, while I do not like to object, but unless——

Mr. LEVER. Before the gentleman commits a crime against his friend, let us see if we can not get this settled.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I thought I had the floor.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman's proposition is subject to a point of order, and I am trying to get him five minutes.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Did not the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] make the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. He did.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Then is it not the duty of the Chair to rule upon the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule, but if the gentleman from Florida insists upon it, the Chair will hear him on the point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, certainly I want to be heard on the point of order. I submit to the Chair that the amendment I have offered is in order on this bill. This is a bill dealing with grain or grain seed. We are proposing by this legislation to loan farmers money with which to buy seed to plant and raise food products.

Now, it seems to me, it is certainly competent to amend the bill in any way which provides for conserving these food products, or which provides for their disposition. Mr. Chairman, I shall never appeal to the gentleman from Georgia to deliver me a lecture on lucidity. The gentleman is so extraordinarily lucid——

Mr. HOWARD. I am in hearty accord with the gentleman's amendment, and I am trying to help my good friend.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. For which I am duly grateful, Mr. Chairman. I was stating, Mr. Chairman, this is a bill providing for the loan of Government funds to certain people, in order that they may buy seed from which to raise certain food products. I insist that it is perfectly competent for this committee to limit the use of those products. There is no question about that.

The very highest purpose of this legislation is the conservation of food products. Why the necessity of going to this extraordinary procedure—and it is extraordinary—it is beyond any of the ideas of government that we have ever had, and only justifiable on account of the extraordinary conditions prevailing, and that it is so important as to justify us in taking this departure—we certainly have the right to see that the money is expended in the right direction and that the food products raised from it are put in the proper channels for use. My amendment goes to the effect of seeing that none of these grains, none of these products, shall be hereafter used in the manufacture of intoxicating spirituous or malt liquors. There is a demand from all over the country for this legislation during the war. Here we are being cut down to a pound and a half of flour a week for each individual, and yet millions of dollars of foodstuffs are being rotted in the distilleries and breweries of this country with which to manufacture intoxicating liquors which are not needed. Gentlemen talk about their proclivities for prohibition. Everyone upon this floor, unless he comes from one of the great cities, will go back home and howl upon the stump about how he stood for prohibition of the liquor traffic. Here is the test. Here we have got the chance, Mr. Chairman, to put this House upon record in favor of this beneficent legislation, and yet a point of order is made. I hope gentlemen will withdraw it and let this House vote upon it. It is not subject to the point of order for the reasons I have outlined; but even if it is, if gentlemen mean what they say when they talk to their constituents, these points of order will not be made and the American Congress will have the right and be given the privilege of going upon record on this great question.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do.

Mr. REAVIS. I agree entirely with what the gentleman from Florida says about the waste of food products in grain, but the President has authority to stop that now.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think he has.

Mr. REAVIS. And he is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; but I am not the President. [Laughter.] This House has its own duty to perform, and I say it is cowardly to "pass the buck" to the President. [Applause.] We have here an opportunity to do it, and we ought to have the manhood to do it, and not have men coming from prohibition States get up here and say "the President has got the power."

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. We can not escape our responsibility by any sort of camouflage. Yes; I yield.

Mr. DYER. Did not the gentleman himself and most all of us vote to give that authority to the President?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. What is that?

Mr. DYER. Did not the gentleman vote to give that authority to the President at the request of the President?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not know about the request, but I think likely I voted for it, for I voted for everything in this House and everywhere else that will effect the purpose of prohibition.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will.

Mr. REAVIS. Did not this House forbid the use of grain for such purposes at the request of the President, that being stricken out in the Senate?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not recall that the President ever made any request. I do not think the President has ever requested this House to do anything except within his legitimate sphere——

Mr. DYER. Did not he write a letter to the Anti-Saloon League asking them to withdraw opposition——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I can not hear the gentleman.

Mr. DYER. The President wrote a letter to certain members of the Anti-Saloon League asking them to withdraw their objection to the authority being placed in the bill instead of making it prohibitory.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Has the gentleman got that letter? Has he ever read it?

Mr. DYER. Yes; I have seen it.

Mr. REAVIS. Published in the Bulletin June 30, last year.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman's amendment also, as I understand it, since we put corn in this bill, would prevent these fellows from taking the grain that is included in this bill, after getting it from the Government, and making liquor out of it, as a lot would do.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It would prevent them from making liquor out of any sort of grain after this act is passed.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the point of order. We desire to make some time this afternoon. The gentleman was discussing it very ably, I will say, until he was diverted. I want to say that.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion [laughter]—it is awfully ludicrous that a man on this floor ever should conclude, I will admit. There are a great many of you that never conclude. As my young friend from Texas said the other day, there are a few Members in this House who never get through, and I apprehend that it is calculated to stir the risibilities of many gentlemen of that class upon this floor to hear a Member say he is about to voluntarily conclude. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I can not yield. I want to say this, Mr. Chairman: The sole purpose of this legislation, the underlying fundamental object of it, is to conserve the foodstuffs of the land for the benefit of the Army and the Navy and the people at large. We are taking this extraordinary step in order to accomplish that purpose. Here is a place where the greatest conservation possible can be reached, and therefore it is entirely in order to offer any amendment which looks to the conservation or preservation of the foodstuffs of the country and their being sent into the proper channels, namely, to feed the Army and the Navy and to feed the people of the country. I insist, therefore, that it is entirely in order. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, no man can foretell how long this war will last. We may have differed, as we had the right to differ, regarding the duty of America as to entering the war; we may have differed, as we had the right to differ, touching the manner in which we were to raise our armies; but those questions having been settled in a legal way by the votes of a majority of the representatives of the people, it then became the solemn duty of every loyal American citizen to consecrate his all to the defense of his country's flag and all for which it stands. We are in this world-wide struggle between the legions of autocracy and the forces of democracy, and our boys are standing shoulder to shoulder on the fields of France with those who are fighting and dying to "make the world safe for democracy." At this very hour the very flower of Pershing's glorious Army is following "Old Glory" into the jaws of death. We have appropriated and are spending billions of dollars, and we shall appropriate and spend many more billions before the awful slaughter shall come to an end. We have given hundreds of thousands of the best and the bravest of America's young manhood, and before the dawn of peace millions of them will have faced the bullets of the Hun in this struggle for the survival of self-government among men. These young men have responded to the call of country as the sons of this Republic have ever responded when the integrity of our institutions has been assailed or threatened, and when the smoke of battle shall have cleared from the bloodstained fields of Armageddon the starry emblem of this Union will float in triumph over America's victorious and unconquerable soldiery.

But, Mr. Chairman, we are facing in mortal combat the most powerful, cunning, and unscrupulous military people in all the world, and our Army is a long distance from its base of supplies. Of necessity we must husband and conserve our resources. If we are to win this war, and we will win it, we must conserve with great diligence our food supply. Neither whisky nor beer is a necessity—neither one is food. Both are perfectly useless in times like these, if, indeed, either has ever served a useful purpose in the history of the world. And yet, Mr. Chairman, we are allowing the distillers of whisky and the brewers of beer in the United States to annually consume millions of dollars worth of grain in the distillation of whisky and the brewing of beer, which could be converted into food for our Army and the armies of our allies. If we now had the grain which went into whisky and beer during the past 12 months Congress would not now be called on to appropriate several millions of dollars with which to furnish our farmers with seed grain.

The good people of this country have decreed that intoxicating liquors must go. The handwriting is on the wall, and this is an opportunity for this House to respond to this great popular demand. Why delay the inevitable? Why camouflage? In the interest of food conservation, in the interest of economy, in behalf of the morals of the land, in behalf of the good women of the country, in behalf of the "boys in the trenches," and for the honor and glory of the flag, I appeal to my colleagues to join me now in settling this question forever.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 3401. An act to authorize the President to reduce temporarily the course of instruction at the United States Naval Academy; and

S. 3404. An act to authorize the President to drop from the rolls any naval or Marine Corps officer absent without leave for three months or who has been convicted of any offense punishable by confinement in the penitentiary by the civil authorities and prohibiting such officer's reappointment.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3400) to regulate the pay of retired chief warrant officers and warrant officers on active duty, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. TILLMAN, Mr. SWANSON, and Mr. LODGE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SALE OF SEED GRAIN TO FARMERS.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, fortunately it is not necessary for me to explain my record on prohibition to my constituents. It is not necessary for me to camouflage on that issue. I am in favor of prohibition and have voted consistently for it in this House and elsewhere.

But there is a time for all things, Mr. Chairman, and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] is so clearly out of order that I can not help feeling, knowing him as I do, and esteeming his intellectual attainments as I do, that he knows his amendment has not a leg on which to stand. If the gentleman's amendment were a limitation on this bill it might possibly be in order, but when he undertakes to say that no grain shall be used for the purpose of manufacturing liquor he goes entirely outside the scope of this bill.

The object of this bill is very clear. It is to afford relief to the farmers in certain wheat-growing areas in order that the food supply of this Nation may be increased. I share the views of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], the chairman of the committee, that the bill is entirely too important to be treated in a light fashion, and I made the point of order because I felt that the time for joking about this bill had passed, and that we should treat it in a serious manner. Therefore I make the point of order—as a Prohibitionist, if you please—because I do not want to see either the cause of prohibition or the cause of increased food production made a football for petty politics on the floor of this House. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be recognized.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Is not my amendment as a substitute for the present section in order? I have an amendment to perfect it.

Mr. HOWARD. In the meantime mine will be pending?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, can I send an amendment up to the desk to be read?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Has the Chair ruled on the point of order made by the gentleman from Colorado?

The CHAIRMAN. He has.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. What was the ruling of the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustained the point of order.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Georgia has been recognized to offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma announced that he had a preferential amendment.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It is only preferential in respect to the submission of it to this body. No man holding an amendment to a section to be stricken out can take another Member off the floor. His amendment must be submitted before the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia, but the gentleman from Georgia has the floor, and has the right to speak in behalf of his motion to strike out.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to submit an amendment under the same conditions.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. HOWARD. I want the gentlemen on the floor to hear this amendment. This is a serious amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOWARD: Strike out all of the section, commencing at line 14, on page 3, down to and including line 11, on page 4, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That there is hereby appropriated out of the moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $7,500,000, with which sum the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to purchase field seeds and sell the same to farmers at actual cost for cash in such areas where he shall find such assistance in the procurement of said field seeds necessary."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that amendment. It is not germane to this section.

Mr. HOWARD. I would like to be heard on the point of order, Mr. Chairman. I will go to the mat with the gentleman on this.

Mr. LEVER. Very well. The gentleman can proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair desires to hear from me, the distinguished and lovable chairman of this committee, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], has made a point of order against my amendment on the ground that it was not germane.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us see. The section for which that is proposed as a substitute is familiar to the Chair. The Chair is familiar with its contents. What does it propose? It proposes to get a specified class of seed, to wit, wheat, oats, and barley. It specifies that those seeds shall be confined to what is known as a particular area. He proposes in that section to establish a first lien in favor of the Government, I presume, upon the growing crop of the beneficiary of this seed fund. And the bill appropriates $7,500,000.

Now, what does the substitute propose? It proposes to appropriate the same sum of money, but does away with the classification of the seeds into wheat, oats, and barley, and says "field seeds," taking in the propositions of the gentleman from Indiana and other gentlemen here who have offered amendments, some of which have been adopted and some of which have been rejected. It leaves out the classification of the seeds. The only other thing is that I eliminate the necessity for the lien, because of the fact that I propose that these farmers shall procure these seeds at actual cost for cash from the Government of the United States. If that is not germane, nothing could be germane, and I want some good veterinary surgeon to take me off and bore me for the hollow horn. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I am not a veterinary surgeon, but I am going to bore the gentleman for the hollow horn, all right. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, this substitute is so clearly not germane to this section that I hardly think it is necessary to argue the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The point of order is sustained. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCLINTIC] offers an amendment which the Clerk will report, after which the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MCCLINTIC: Page 3, line 18, after the word "purposes," insert "and such other seeds as are necessary to produce wheat substitutes, the same to be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I regret to have to make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CLARK of Florida: Page 4, line 11, after the word "immediately," insert the following proviso:

"Provided, That no farmer shall receive the benefits of this act unless he shall enter into a written agreement with the Secretary of Agriculture that he will not sell or furnish any of the grain raised from the seed acquired hereunder to any distillery or brewery to be used in the manufacture of any intoxicating, spirituous, or malt liquors."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Florida wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Just for one word. I simply want to say that this is a clear limitation upon the expenditure of the money, and it is clearly in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I send my amendment to the desk.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. LEVER. I make the point of order that that comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama has an amendment, which he has offered, and the Chair will be compelled to hold that the appeal comes too late. Of course the Chair has no objection to having his decision submitted to the judgment of the committee if the appeal comes at the right time. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STEAGALL: Page 3, line 25, after the word "eighteen," strike out all down to and including the word "therefor," on page 4, line 4, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"No seed shall be furnished or supplied under the provisions of this act unless the Secretary of Agriculture shall first secure payment of the price of same by good and sufficient first lien on all seed so furnished or supplied and on all crops to be produced therefrom."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that amendment temporarily. I should like to examine the amendment.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I think the chairman of the committee [Mr. LEVER] will agree, upon an examination of this amendment, that his point of order is not good. I am seeking in good faith to do what it is manifest the committee intended to do in the preparation of this bill. The language of the act as it now reads with reference to the subject of securing a lien is as follows:

A first lien on the crop to be produced from seed obtained through a loan, advance, or sale made under this section shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, be deemed sufficient security therefor.

You will observe that under this language the Secretary of Agriculture is directed to consider a lien on the crop sufficient, but there is nothing in the language of the bill which requires the Secretary of Agriculture to take a lien on the crop to be grown from the seed furnished. My amendment specifically requires the Secretary of Agriculture to take such a lien on the crop to be grown from all seed furnished, and in addition to that, requires him to take a lien on the seed furnished for making the crop.

We are doing an unusual thing here. If this bill passes we are going a long way in the effort to relieve the peculiar conditions that have been outlined as creating a necessity for this measure. Certainly we ought not to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to take this money and loan it here and there and yonder and everywhere without any sort of security. Under the bill, as originally drawn, that is what he is authorized to do. The amendment simply requires that he take a lien on the crop and on the seed. Then if anybody undertakes to buy seed or obtain them and then dispose of them to somebody else for cash, not using them for the purpose intended, he can not get by with his transaction; and when the harvest is ready the Secretary of Agriculture will have a valid first lien on the crop to be grown. Certainly nobody ought to object to that. [Applause.] It simply requires common honesty on the part of those who are to receive this special favor from the Government, and no man worthy of such assistance would object.

I offer this amendment in all seriousness. I do not know that I am going to vote for this bill. I think I may do so. I hope to see it amended in one other particular that we will get to further on. I refer to the power given to the Secretary of Agriculture to mobilize labor.

In the section of the country where I live it would be fraught with danger to begin at this season of the year to talk to our labor about excursions on the railroads to some other parts of the country. If you even mention such a thing, you will have many a vacant farm down in that section of the country where I live. Those of you who have ever seen a negro excursion will appreciate how this matter of free transportation will appeal to the farm laborers in my section, and the Secretary of Agriculture will not have to go and offer it. If we authorize it by law, every one of them will hear of it. If it is suggested to them, I venture to say that about the only thing that will hold the negroes in our section of the country will be to mature an early crop of watermelons. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman that I was engaged when the gentleman was making his statement as to his amendment. Will the gentleman explain how his proposition differs from that in the bill?

Mr. STEAGALL. The language of the bill is:

A first lien on the crop to be produced from seed obtained through a loan, advance, or sale made under this section shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, be deemed sufficient security therefor.

There is nothing in the bill which requires the Secretary of Agriculture to take such security. My amendment cures that by specifically requiring that he take a lien on all crops to be grown and on the seed also; otherwise those to whom seed are furnished could dispose of them before planting and defraud the Government. [Applause.] I will say to the gentleman earnestly that the amendment ought to be put in this bill. There ought also to be a further amendment to the criminal provision to make it conform to the idea embodied in this amendment. Provision should be made to punish any man who fraudulently disposes of his crop to defeat the claim of the Government or who obtains seed with fraudulent intent and who fraudulently disposes of it in disregard of the claim of the Government and the purpose of this act.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the amendment. I agree to the absolute wisdom of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL], and if this bill passes and the wisdom of this House decides that the Government of the United States ought to take a lien on the farmer's growing crop, to the exclusion of all other liens, to satisfy this great Government in this hullabaloo to increase the production of grain, I want to call your attention to one thing that you will do—and you need not think you are going to throw the horns and hoofs and retain the carcass for political buncombe to the farmer again, because you are not fooling him at all. What do you do? You do the farmers that are so destitute that they need this aid the most harm that you could do them; because the minute the farmer puts a first lien on his crop there is no man within the sound of my voice who does not know that he destroys absolutely his credit with everybody else in the community, so far as that growing crop is concerned. [Applause.] What do you do?

Here comes the poor destitute farmer out in Montana to the great Government of the United States and says, "I want 8 bushels of wheat." Uncle Sam says, "Yes; our boys over yonder," as my distinguished friend from South Carolina so patriotically spoke of a while ago, "need wheat; we want to keep the bread line up"; and the farmer says, "I want to help you, Uncle Sam, keep the bread line up." This great Government says, "You can get 8 bushels of wheat, worth $18.60, but come here, Mr. Farmer, and sign away your birthright, let your wife and children suffer for groceries and supplies, let the guano man refuse to sell you a spoonful of guano, let the implement man leave you destitute of farm implements to cultivate your crop, but sign this paper. You have destroyed your credit." Ah, gentlemen, you are trifling with patriotic men who are bending every energy at this hour to increase the production of food and meet the exigencies of this great Nation, and, sir, if you give them real businesslike help they will all be found in the first-line trenches of production.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman be good enough to wait a minute? Here you are attempting a political trick for the aggrandizement of three or four political derelicts in this House. I know it, and you know it, and the gentleman from South Carolina knows it. He has camouflaged, barraged, and talked patriotism here all the evening, and all day yesterday, and tried to ram down the throats of this House a bill that no gentleman in this House can go home to the farmers in his district and look them in the face and tell them that he has not been a cringing hypocrite. [Laughter and applause.]

One word further, and I will have to talk fast. Let us see what you are doing. If you are going to do anything, do not make flesh of one and fowl of another. We have appropriated six and one-half million dollars since this war began under such terms and conditions that the Secretary of Agriculture can purchase seeds for the Government at the actual cost and sell them to the farmers at the actual cost. He has done that. He has on hand at this minute unexpended, twenty-nine hundred thousand dollars of that fund, and he has had no opportunity to use it because the farmers of this country that are worth a pinch of snuff can get all the seed they need in this manner or in the open market.

Mr. GORDON. How much credit of a man would be destroyed by a lien of $18.60?

Mr. HOWARD. As much credit as a rabbit would have title to a permanent home. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama, and as far as I am concerned and as far as the committee with which I have consulted is concerned, we accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MORGAN: Page 3, line 15, after the word "the," strike out the word "crop" and insert in lieu thereof the word "crops"; and after the word "eighteen" insert the words "nineteen hundred and nineteen"; and in line 25, after the word "eighteen," insert the words "and nineteen hundred and nineteen."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to this section.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard for a few minutes on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma desires to be heard for five minutes on the point of order. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I prefer that we should go on.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I think it is clearly in order, and I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Oklahoma that the Chair is ready to rule, unless the gentleman insists on being heard on the point of order.

Mr. MORGAN. I would like to be heard, because I think it is in order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to be unfair to the gentleman from Oklahoma, who is one of my very good friends, and I hope the members of the committee will indulge me while I ask unanimous consent that he proceed for three minutes upon this amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. That will do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Oklahoma may proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the members of the committee understand what this amendment is. I hoped that the committee would accept the amendment. On yesterday the House amended the bill by striking out the words "spring wheat area," and made it applicable to all wheat sections of the country. By this the House indicated that it wanted to make this bill applicable to winter wheat areas as well as to spring wheat areas. But there is another provision which restricts aid extended to crops of 1918. Is the winter wheat crop sown during the fall of 1918 a crop of 1918? If not, then, under the bill as it now stands, no aid could be extended for wheat sowing this fall. My amendment is designed to make it clear that aid may be extended to those who sow wheat this fall, which I assume would be the crop of 1919. My amendment simply adds the words "1919"; that is, it provides the money appropriated may be used by the Secretary for crops of 1918 and crops of 1919. You gentlemen who have voted as to the point of order, I submit that this amendment of mine is in order. It simply makes the fund available for the use of the 1919 crop as well as the 1918 crop, and we have already amended the bill so as to make it apply to the wheat area generally and not simply to the spring wheat area.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MORGAN) there were—ayes 11, noes 46.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HUTCHINSON: Page 4, line 8, after the word "banks," strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof the following: "at a rate of interest not to exceed 6 per cent per annum."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that, that it is not germane.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know why it is not germane. If the Chair has any doubt about it being germane, I would like to be heard.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order and ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, this bill, as I understand it, is for the benefit of the farmer, absolutely. The bill is made general to apply all over the United States. Some of our States are charging 4 per cent, some 6, and some 8 or 10 per cent, and this makes it uniform.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES of Texas: Page 3, line 18, after the word "wheat," insert the words "kafir corn, milo, maize, and feterita."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that we have already voted upon that amendment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Oh, no; that was not voted upon in the parliamentary situation. It was ruled out of order.

Mr. LEVER. Then I make the point of order against it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Texas that under a unanimous-consent agreement debate was closed on all amendments pertaining to commodities mentioned in line 18 at the end of 40 minutes.

Mr. LEVER. The Chair is entirely right about that.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the gentleman reserve the point of order for two minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order for two minutes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is entirely in order, because it adds other items to the particular class set out. If there be any merit to the contention that this bill is intended to increase our food supply, these articles should be added to further increase that supply. The three articles I put in are useful not only for feed but also for food. For many years these three articles have been used for the purpose of feed, and during the last two or three years they have begun to grind them into a food, each of the three different articles having been used as substitutes or partial substitutes for flour.

Several mills in our section of the country use two of these different articles in the manufacture of different brands of flour, and for that reason they are beneficial under the caption of the bill as originally drawn, and they are also in perfect alignment with the general purposes of the bill. Now, there are some sections in the Southwest where wheat has been an entire failure. We have mostly fall wheat there. We must have spring crops. The only chance to have crops raised on that particular ground is to have the spring crops, and those three articles are spring crops exclusively, and they will be used upon the same ground that was last year planted in wheat. That is in addition to the regular ground that was reserved for this character of crops.

I intend to support this bill strictly as a war measure. In normal times such situations would be handled through State action. And I am proud to state that Texas has appropriated $2,000,000 to assist in taking care of the local situation.

But we are not living in normal times, and every nation is finding it necessary to take many unusual steps to promote production. England has bought hundreds of tractors and turned them over to the farmers. The President has urged that this legislation be adopted in the hope that it will increase the food supply. All are agreed that food is essential to the winning of the war. When our brave soldiers by the thousand are fighting our battles in foreign fields, we must see that they are supplied regardless of what sacrifice it may involve.

I take this opportunity to say that, probably through an error of the stenographer or printer, paragraph 6 in my speech on the food bill was erroneously inserted, and which attributes to me remarks which I did not make. On discovery of the mistake I secured consent to eliminate the paragraph, but I make this statement so that the permanent RECORD may show the correction.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I ask the privilege of revising and extending my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I would like to talk on the bill; I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask our friend to let us dispose of this proposition, and then I have no objection. I call for a vote. I withdraw the point of order and ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, lines 4 to 6, strike out, on page 4, in lines 4, 5, and 6, the following sentence: "The total amount of such advances, loans, or sales to any one farmer shall not exceed $450," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "The total amount of such advances, loans, or sales to any one farmer shall be in such amounts as may be determined to be sufficient and proper in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order, and I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request, with the permission of the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be closed in 30 minutes, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] to have 10 minutes, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] 2 minutes, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] 5 minutes, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KREIDER] 5 minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. When does that come in?

Mr. LEVER. When the gentleman from California has finished with his five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto shall close in 30 minutes, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] to have 10 minutes of that time, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] 5 minutes, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] 2 minutes, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KREIDER] 5 minutes, and the gentleman from South Carolina 5 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEVER. And the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT] shall have three minutes in which to present an amendment—I have that much time—and that the time be extended that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may have three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. RAGSDALE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from South Carolina rise?

Mr. RAGSDALE. To make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Does the time ever arrive in this House when anything can be done by unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Then what is it, Mr. Chairman. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman any request to make?

Mr. RAGSDALE. I rose to address the Chair to ask of this body unanimous consent that the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] might have one minute in which to answer an interrogatory that I wanted to propound to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] may have one minute more in which to answer an interrogatory that the gentleman from South Carolina wishes to propound. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAGSDALE. The purpose of this bill seems to be, as I understand it, to advance money where it will be the greatest risk to the Government. Does not the gentleman think it would lessen that risk to lend it to the farmers, who have something and who can produce something?

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman is absolutely and eminently correct.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I come from a city where the people are employed, and where they are using farm products in quantities not so large as they have used them heretofore, because of the limitation upon supplies and the demands of the allies. The people whom I have the honor to represent are paying the highest prices they ever paid for food supplies, and while they sympathize with the farmer, as I do, in all his fair contentions, some of them complain about the tremendous increase in the cost of living and about concessions being constantly made to farmers which they do not themselves enjoy.

I do not mention this in a sectional spirit at all, nor as attempting to draw a line between the city and the country, but merely to bring to the attention of our farmer friends in the House the fact that there are other people in the United States who are "doing their bit" and bearing their share of the burdens of this war besides the farmers. While they are stinting themselves their boys are at the front, and they are maintaining the families that those boys have left behind. They are employed, it is true, but they must earn a wage, and earn it every day, in order to pay for such farm produce as is absolutely necessary for their sustenance.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman objects, I take it, to the purchase of seed for farmers or aiding them in that way?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am not objecting to it if the farmer will pay for his seed. I am objecting to the proposition that we shall treat as paupers the farmers of this land, and bid for those who have nothing to come forward and take from those who have something. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Another question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let the gentleman hasten. It takes my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does the gentleman object to pauperizing the great industries of the country that are being financed to the tune of about $5,500,000,000? [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Not at all. The great industries are as beneficial to the farmer whom they protect to-day as they are to the man who lives within their own environment, and they must give security for their loans.

The city worker is fighting in the same or greater proportion than the man on the farm——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. They fight 16 hours a day.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; I will not yield.

Mr. BAER. They are fighting in greater proportion.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not yield. I want to say this: The man in the city is doing his part, and more than his part, in bearing the burdens of this war. He is not seeking exemption on the ground that he is producing on the farm. He is going forward, because he has no claim, as the farmer has, that he can remain on the farm to help the war by producing food for our allies and ourselves.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Not now. I rose to make some comment on this bill, not to discuss sectional lines into which gentlemen are endeavoring to draw me. I am surprised that gentlemen on both sides of this House attribute this bill solely to patriotic purposes, or regard it as essential to the war. I regard this bill as largely political [applause], as coming from a few States which in this instance do not correctly represent the sentiments of the American people as a whole. I charge that this measure and the spirit behind it springs from the Nonpartisan League, an organization which has come to have one Representative in this House and expects——

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And which, I submit to my fellow Members here, is increasing its influence so rapidly as to terrorize certain hitherto free Representatives of the people in their own home districts, causing them to indulge these socialistic practices or get out of Congress.

Now I yield to my friend from North Dakota.

Mr. BAER. I am not going to get out of Congress. I have as much right here as the gentleman has.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not question that. The gentleman is the first Representative of the Nonpartisan League in Congress, and I think he has helped to put it over some other Members of Congress who have been here longer than he has been.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I compliment the gentleman from North Dakota, the sole Representative of the Nonpartisan League in this House, on the fact that the great and powerful Committee on Agriculture has adopted his argument and his speeches and has reported his views in its report.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can not yield now.

Mr. BAER. I want to tell you one thing.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman consent to my inserting in the RECORD certain facts about the Nonpartisan League?

Mr. BAER. You can insert anything you please.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to insert certain data about the Nonpartisan League. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to insert in his remarks certain facts about the Nonpartisan League. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, at this point, and because the House should have the information promptly, I insert a transcript of the testimony of the president of this new organization, which carries its propaganda into certain congressional districts, as reported by the Fargo Forum, February 16. It is a story of political high finance in rural communities well worth reading:

[From the Fargo Forum, Feb. 16, 1918.]

COMPLETE TRANSCRIPT OF TESTIMONY BY TOWNLEY BEFORE BANKRUPTCY REFEREE—MANY FEATURES OF THE LEAGUE'S FINANCES GIVEN UNDER OATH BY TOWNLEY—REMARKABLE STORY OF HOW THE VARIOUS PRIVATE ENTERPRISES, IN WHICH HE OWNS BUT $100 WORTH OF STOCK, ARE CONTROLLED BY HIM, RELATED BY PRESIDENT—ADMITS DICTATORSHIP OF THE CHAIN-STORE SYSTEM, AFTER PLEADING IGNORANCE OF ITS FORM OF ORGANIZATION—SYSTEM OF HANDLING FUNDS MOST INTERESTING.

The Forum to-day presents the story of the National Nonpartisan League's affairs, as recited by President A. C. Townley at the hearing in Bismarck on January 29, before a referee in bankruptcy.

Mr. Townley is seeking absolution from his debts, which he places at over $79,000, and against which he lists assets of less than $500, all of which are claimed exempt. The bankruptcy proceedings grow out of Mr. Townley's flax-farming operations in McKenzie County, N. Dak.

The proceedings, including the testimony given by Edwin Wood, who is listed as a half owner of the Nonpartisan publications, reveal with remarkable thoroughness the unique organization that Mr. Townley has constructed, as relates to its finances.

The testimony by Mr. Townley furnishes the most important document yet presented covering the affairs of the National Nonpartisan League, in which so many thousands of North Dakota people have a direct financial interest. A study of Mr. Townley's testimony, and the manner in which it was found necessary to question him on a number of important points, particularly the chain-store question, before he admitted holding financial dictatorship, will reveal many interesting features. The examination was conducted before Referee O'Hare by Attorney Francis J. Murphy, of Minot, N. Dak.

Direct examination by Mr. Murphy:

Q. Mr. Townley, may I ask where you live, where your residence is?—A. My residence is in North Dakota; I am living in St. Paul.

Q. You claim, as I understand, your legal residence in North Dakota?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What part of North Dakota?—A. Fargo.

Q. But you are actually residing in the city of St. Paul, Minn?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you a married man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your wife's first name?—A. Margaret.

Q. May I ask if Mrs. Townley is at present in St. Paul?—A. She is not just now.

Q. Away temporarily?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. She expects to return?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I want to direct your attention to some of the claims you have scheduled here, the claim of the International Harvester Co., Beach, N. Dak., in the sum of $1,345, and another claim of the same concern, $9,392, scheduled as secured claims. I will ask you whether you have ever paid those, or not?—A. I don't think I have.

Q. You know, don't you?—A. I think I haven't paid them, I am quite sure.

Q. Well, have you made any arrangements to take care of those claims?—A. Not outside of the present arrangement.

Q. By that, you mean these bankruptcy proceedings?—A. Yes.

Q. You have made no special arrangement with that creditor to take care of the claims?—A. No, sir.

Q. No agreement to take care of them or pay them in the future?—A. No, sir.

Q. And no payment has been made them prior to the commencement of these bankruptcy proceedings on these claims?—A. Not since 1912.

Q. Do you know whether within the four months preceding the bankruptcy any property was turned over to them on these chattel mortgages, or otherwise?—A. No property was turned over to them by me.

Q. Was any turned over in your behalf by any other person?—A. Not that I know of; there may have been some adjustment between creditors that I don't know anything about.

Q. Now, with reference to the creditors, Lowell brothers, the same situation obtains? Did you make any payments to them?—A. I haven't made any payments to anybody since 1912.

Q. None whatever to any of these creditors?—A. No.

Q. That covers all of them, so we won't have to go into them in detail?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Nor have you made any agreement to take care of them in the future, after the disposal of these bankruptcy proceedings?—A. No.

Q. Now, since 1914 your business has been that of president and manager of an organization known as the Nonpartisan League?—A. Yes, sir; since the spring of 1915.

Q. Prior to that time you were engaged in business in farming operations?—A. Well, up to the fall of 1912. I didn't farm any after that year.

Q. What was your business between 1912 and 1915, when the organization of the Nonpartisan League was effected?—A. I worked for a land company a while.

Q. Where was that?—A. Illinois.

Q. That concern owe you any money?—A. Not that I know of. That is a land company that the Schusters belong to.

Q. And Adlers?—A. No; I don't think it is Adler & Schuster. He is associated indirectly with them, but I didn't work for Adler; I worked for Schuster.

Q. You had some farming operations in Colorado?—A. That was prior to 1912.

Q. Since 1915, when the Nonpartisan League was organized, you had been engaged in managing and in and about the affairs of that organization?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were the original originator of it, were you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you a member of it?—A. Not in the sense that I pay the membership fee I am not.

Q. You are not in that same sense that the ordinary members pays a membership fee?—A. That is correct.

Q. But you, as I understand it, are president of the organization?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The organization exists through several States?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Minnesota, North Dakota, and South Dakota?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Montana?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Idaho and Wisconsin?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And each one of these States has its distinct State organization?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And the executive committee of the national organization is composed of yourself; your attorney, Mr. Lemke; and Mr. F. B. Wood?—A. That is correct.
Q. And these gentlemen are also members of the committee controlling each State organization?—A. No.
Q. Are there any committees controlling the State organizations?—A. Necessarily.
Q. Each State organization?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Each State organization have any representation on the national committee?
Mr. LEMKE. I am willing to allow the utmost freedom, as far as the personal affairs of Mr. Townley are concerned, but I shall object to going into the affairs of the National Nonpartisan League, and I think Mr. Murphy will agree with me on that.
Mr. O'HARE. I look upon the question as simply preliminary.
Q. Well, let's get at it this way: You know Mr. Thomas Keyes?—A. Yes.
Q. Mr. Keyes is an employee of the National Nonpartisan League?—A. Yes.
Q. You employed him, did you not?—A. As a member of the committee, I did.
Q. As a matter of fact, you did the work of employing him yourself?—A. Yes.
Q. Now, Mr. Keyes lives in St. Paul, does he not?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And he in addition to being treasurer of the National Nonpartisan League—or is it cashier, which?—A. Cashier.
Q. Is likewise treasurer of the League Exchange, isn't he?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And he is likewise treasurer or cashier of the Consumers' United Stores Co., isn't he?—A. I don't know as to that.
Q. Well, he is secretary-treasurer of the League Exchange, is he not?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And he is treasurer of the United States Guaranty Co., is he not?—A. Perhaps; maybe; I am not sure of that.
Q. Well, if you would refresh your recollection on that point, I wish you would do so.—A. Well, I don't know.
Q. I have information that he is, but I would like to have it verified by you as a witness at this time; and he is also treasurer or cashier of the Consumers' United Stores Co., is he not?—A. I don't know.
Q. Do you know whether he is connected at all with that organization, or not?—A. I don't know; I think he may be.
Q. Don't you know, as a matter of fact, Mr. Townley, that he is an officer, or has practically the same connection with that concern, this Consumers' United States Co., that he has with the Nonpartisan League as treasurer or cashier or bookkeeper—the man who handles the details of the finances and books of that concern?—A. I wouldn't make that as a positive statement.
Q. Well, you are familiar with the affairs of that concern, are you not?—A. In a way.
Q. In what way?—A. In a superficial way, I know who the manager is.
Q. Who is he?—A. Mr. Brinton.
Q. Where is the office of that concern?—A. In the National Exchange Building, in St. Paul.
Q. Likewise the office of the United States Guaranty Co. is in the same building?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You know Mr. J. J. Hastings?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Mr. Hastings is connected with the Scandinavian-American Bank at Fargo?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. He is also secretary of the United States Guaranty Co., is he not?—A. I think he may be; I think he manages the affairs of the Guaranty Co. in Fargo.
Q. Don't you know, as a matter of fact, that Mr. Keyes, as I have indicated, is cashier of the National Nonpartisan League, treasurer of the League Exchange, and cashier of the Nonpartisan Publishing Co.?—A. Yes.
Q. And likewise cashier or treasurer of the Consumers' United Stores Co.?—A. I believe that he is.
Q. So that this employee of yours appears, then, to be connected in the capacity indicated in every one of these various organizations that I mention. That is a fact, isn't it?—A. Yes.
Q. Now, these organizations grew out of the Nonpartisan League, did they not? You understand I mean the League Exchange, the United States Guaranty Co., the Consumers' United Stores Co., the Nonpartisan Publishing Co., etc.?—A. Just what do you mean by "grew out of"?
Q. I mean they were organized by leaders of the Nonpartisan League?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Mr. F. B. Wood, who is one of the members of the executive committee of the National Nonpartisan League is likewise president of the League Exchange?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you, Mr. Townley, are a director of the League Exchange?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. At the last hearing you overlooked that fact?—A. I had forgotten that I had any stock in it.
Q. That concern is capitalized at $1,000,000?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Where was that incorporated?—A. North Dakota.
Q. What was the capitalization of the Consumers' United Stores Co.?—A. $10,000.
Q. And that was organized and incorporated in North Dakota?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And what was the capitalization of the United States Guaranty Co.?—A. A million dollars.
Q. Where was that incorporated?—A. Minnesota.
Q. Have you any stock in the Consumers' United Stores Co.?—A. No, sir.
Q. Have you any stock in the United States Guaranty Co.?—A. No, sir.
Q. Anybody carrying any for you?—A. No, sir.
Q. Have you any understanding, directly or indirectly, with any person or persons that you are in the future to receive any stock or other interest in these concerns?—A. No, sir.
Q. None whatever?—A. No, sir.
Q. And that is true with respect to all these organizations?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And including the Nonpartisan Publishing Co. or Nonpartisan Leader?—A. The Nonpartisan Publishing Co.
Q. Before we go any further I want to clear up a point. Your testimony at the last hearing, as I recall it, with respect to the Nonpartisan Publishing Co., was that this concern was a copartnership?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Consisting of Mr. E. F. Wood and Mr. A. J. Fox?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And that that concern owned the Nonpartisan Leader?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And the Courier-News?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, do you not know as a matter of fact that the Courier-News is a corporation and that the Nonpartisan Publishing Co. does not own or hold any stock in that corporation?—A. The Nonpartisan Publishing Co. advanced the money to buy the stock.
Q. I am not asking you that.—A. I don't know that the Nonpartisan Publishing Co. does not own the stock.
Q. Don't you know that the sworn statements of the Courier-News on file in the capitol, in April, 1917, and in October, 1917, are to the effect that that concern is a corporation and shows the names of the holders of stock, over 1 per cent of the stock, and that the Nonpartisan Publishing Co. is not shown as either a stockholder or bondholder? Don't you know that to be a fact?—A. No; I don't know it to be a fact, though it may be a fact.
Q. So, when you testified the last time that the Nonpartisan Publishing Co. owned and controlled those two papers and that you were paid a hundred dollars a month for directing the policy of those papers, you were mistaken, weren't you?—A. If you are correct, I was.
Q. Who pays that $100 a month?—A. I get it from the publishing company.
Q. From the Nonpartisan Publishing Co.?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. So you claim, as I understand you, that you don't know what the facts are with reference to that Courier-News?—A. Well, I don't know the details in the matter; I know in effect the publishing company owns the Courier-News.
Q. In effect they do?—A. Yes.
Q. And the fact is that despite the sworn statement made by that officer that back of it all lies a real ownership vested in these two men—Mr. Wood and Mr. Fox?—A. Yes.
Q. So that the sworn statement does not represent the true situation as it actually exists. Is that the fact?—A. Yes.
Q. You know as a matter of fact that Mr. Wood and Mr. Fox own that paper through their partnership?—A. I know as a matter of fact that the Nonpartisan Publishing Co. advanced the money to buy that paper, and that they do own the Courier-News stock. Any temporary arrangements I don't know about.
Q. Let us consider the Nonpartisan Publishing Co. for a moment, or let us start back further. The offices of the National Nonpartisan League are kept at St. Paul?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. That is where your office is and where the office of Mr. Keyes, the cashier, is?—A. Yes.
Q. He is the cashier, isn't he?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. He has an office right there adjoining you, in the same building?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And the business affairs, the financial affairs, of the league, are conducted through that office down there?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. In St. Paul?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. That is, in the Gilfellan Block?—A. Yes, sir; you are correct.
Q. And the books of the National Nonpartisan League are kept there?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And, in fact, all of the books with reference to the affairs of the Nonpartisan League, national or otherwise, are kept there at St. Paul, and the financial operations are directed from there?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And all the checks that are drawn are signed by yourself as president and Mr. Keyes as treasurer?—A. Treasurer or cashier.
Q. You sign them as president and he as cashier?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Mr. Wood and Mr. Lemke don't sign any checks?—A. Not for the expenditures of the league.
Q. Well, do they sign any league checks at all for any purpose?—A. No.
Q. The disbursements of the funds of the league, the actual disbursement of them, goes through your hands by checks?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And the account of the league has always been and is now in the National Exchange Bank at St. Paul?—A. The account of the league?
Q. Or the league's bank account?—A. The biggest part of it is there. It has not always been there.
Q. The biggest part is there now and has been for some months?—A. It is either there or there might have been part in some other bank; that is, in the hands of Mr. Keyes.
Q. The employee?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Mr. Keyes would not check out any considerable amount of money out of the funds of the National Nonpartisan League without instructions from you, would he?—A. No.
Q. Now, as I understood your testimony the other time, the fee of a member of the league for the two-year period is $16?—A. That is correct; that is common knowledge.
Q. That is, every man who joins the Nonpartisan League pays dues of $16, and that covers a period of two years?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. That $16 is paid in, of course, to the treasurer of the league, the National Nonpartisan League?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And is covered into the account of that league in whatever bank you may carry your funds?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And it is checked out in the manner you have just indicated, wherever it is supposed to go from the fund?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, of that $16, as I understand you and I understand that is likewise a matter of common knowledge, $5 goes to the Nonpartisan Publishing Co.?—A. Subscription to the Nonpartisan Leader, $5 for the two years.
Q. And each member, when he enters into the league, subscribes for that paper, and agrees that $5 should be turned over and receive the paper for two years. That only covers the Nonpartisan Leader?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. It doesn't cover the Courier-News?—A. No.
Q. Now, could you tell us how much money the National Nonpartisan League has collected in that manner, approximately?
Mr. LEMKE. Objected to as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial to the subject matter under discussion.
Mr. MURPHY. I will show you how it is very material and very relevant.
Mr. LEMKE. It is not a question of how much money the league has; it is a question of how much money has Mr. Townley.
Mr. O'HARE. He may answer, if he can.
Q. Let us have your answer as nearly as you can give it—A. The Nonpartisan League has something around 150,000 members.
Q. It has about 150,000 members?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. That means that there has been approximately $750,000 turned over to this copartnership, consisting of Mr. Ed Wood and Mr. A. J. Fox?—A. No; it doesn't.
Q. Well, let's see; it means that five times a hundred and fifty thousand members, in dollars and cents—that is, $5 for every one of the 150,000—has been turned over to the Nonpartisan Publishing Co.?—A. No; it doesn't mean that.

Q. Well, isn't the agreement that every one of these members subscribed for the Nonpartisan Leader, and that the subscription price is $5 for the two-year period?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And when you collect $16 it includes that $5?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you have 150,000 members?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Well, would that not make $750,000?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Then, why doesn't it mean that they received $750,000?—A. Because they haven't received it.
Q. You haven't given it to them yet?—A. No.
Q. That, then, is given to them at your direction?—A. That money is turned over to the publishing company as the publishing company needs it for its business.
Q. By whom?—A. By the Nonpartisan League.
Q. And that is by you in the manner you have given here?—A. By me and by the treasurer or cashier, at the direction of the committee.
Q. That is, as I understand it, at intervals, whenever in the judgment of yourself and the members of the committee, consisting of Mr. Lemke and Mr. Wood and yourself, the Nonpartisan Publishing Co. should have a certain proportion of that money, you turn it over to them. Is that the fact?—A. That is the substance; yes, sir. I would state whenever the publishing company, in its business, has to meet its bills money enough is turned over to meet the bills.
Q. Well, does the publishing company then come to this committee and make a report as to the bills it has and request the money with which to pay them?—A. No; it doesn't make a report of the bills it has.
Q. Does it make any kind of a statement or showing to this committee for the purpose of obtaining money?—A. There is a very close association between the publishing company and the Nonpartisan League. The publishing company was organized to further the purposes of the Nonpartisan League.
Q. Who organized that company?—A. Mr. Wood and Mr. Fox.
Q. Mr. Wood is the son of F. B. Wood, of the Nonpartisan League executive committee and president of the League Exchange?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And also an officer in these various other organizations?—A. Of the Guaranty Co., I think.
Q. And also officer of the United Stores Co?—A. I don't know as to that.
Q. And Mr. Fox, is he related to you in any way by marriage or otherwise?—A. No, sir.
Q. Mr. Fox is a man of approximately 40 years of age?—A. I think he is about that old.
Q. Mr. Wood, who is present here, is considerably under that?—A. Yes, sir; he is a much younger man.
Q. Now, I will have to ask where Mr. Fox comes from, if you know?—A. He is a Minnesota man.
Q. What part of Minnesota?—A. Minneapolis.
Q. Mr. Fox is not a practical newspaper man?—A. No, sir. He is a practical organizer.
Q. And Mr. Wood is not a practical newspaper man?—A. Mr. Wood is a farmer.
Q. And a game warden?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. But has had and so far as you know did not have at that time any publishing experience?—A. He has had about as much as I have had, which is none at all.
Q. And that was true of Fox?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, these two men, then, got together and formed a copartnership which they called the Nonpartisan Publishing Co., and some one agreed if they would publish this paper they were to have $5 from every member?—A. The subscription price was to be $5, and as much as was needed was to be turned over to run the paper.
Q. The subscription price was $5, but they were only to get as much as was necessary of that $5 to run the paper?—A. Well, let me state it to you. At the time the Nonpartisan Leader was started it wasn't very easy to get publishing concerns to publish the official organ of an organization that they didn't know anything about. The organization was very young, and we wanted an official organ to represent the organization and further its purposes. We made various efforts to use some standing publication as an official organ, and could not make any arrangements with them that was satisfactory who would serve the organization as we wanted it served. And so at the suggestion of legal advice Mr. Wood and Mr. Fox were asked to organize a copartnership for the purpose of publishing this paper.
Q. Who asked them?—A. I did.
Q. You had not known Mr. Wood or Mr. Fox very long up to that time?—A. Well, I had known Mr. Wood here for about a year and a half or two years, and been closely associated with him for about a year, and had known Mr. Fox for about a year.
Q. Did this organization commence about the same time as the Nonpartisan League commenced?—A. Now, this publishing company was not organized until the fall of 1915; the paper was not published during the summer.
Q. Then your arrangement with them is that this copartnership was to receive as much of the $5 as was necessary to run the paper?—A. There has not been any definite arrangement or understanding with them to that effect.
Q. That is the understanding, if any?—A. The understanding is that they are to publish the paper.
Q. What was the understanding with reference to the financial end of it if they did publish the paper? That is what we are interested in. What money are they to receive from the league for publishing the paper?—A. If they would demand it, they could receive the whole $5.
Q. But they haven't demanded it?—A. No. And, further, if there was any misfortune, if the paper should be sued for libel, and it would be necessary to raise the subscription to $3 a year, that might be done to save the paper.
Q. Three dollars a year, to make it $6?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. If they libeled somebody, and they proved it, and they had to pay a big judgment, you would raise the subscription fee from $5 to $6?—A. If we thought it would be to our advantage to maintain that paper.
Q. You would come to the rescue?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And, out of the league funds, you would even go so far as to turn over $3 a year?—A. Not out of the funds collected. Any time the subscription price would be raised the price would be taken out of the membership fees to be collected in the future; and it also might be reduced
Q. So the relationship between this copartnership of Wood & Fox or Fox & Wood with the National Nonpartisan League is very intimate, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And it is so intimate that it is pretty difficult to distinguish between the executive committee of the Nonpartisan League and this copartnership?—A. Yes, sir; quite so.
Q. Now, did you personally ever have any understanding with either Mr. Wood or Mr. Fox, or both of them, that you were to profit in the affairs of the Nonpartisan Publishing Co.?—A. I have not.
Q. None of that kind?—A. No, sir.
Q. And you never have profited in any way?—A. No, sir.
Q. Never received a dollar aside from the $100 a month that you stated they pay you for advising with them and dictating the editorial policy?—A. Correct.
Q. Not a dollar?—A. For my personal purposes.
Q. What do you mean by your personal purpose?—A. Purchasing of property for myself, or buying automobiles for myself, or furnishing myself with a vacation, or a big feed, or buying a farm, or something of that kind, or paying off my debts, or using it for my personal being.
Q. Did you ever receive from them aside from this $100 a month any other sums for any purpose, from the Nonpartisan Publishing Co.?—A. I have used some of the money of the publishing company for political purposes.
Q. Quite a sum of it?—A. Oh, no.
Q. Where are the books of this concern kept? Do you know?—A. Of the publishing company?
Q. Yes.—A. St. Paul.
Q. Mr. Morris is the editor?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. What is his full name?—A. Oliver C. Morris.
Q. Who is business manager?—A. Herbert Gaston.
Q. Mr. Gaston is likewise editor of the Courier-News?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. The fact of the matter is, that neither Mr. Fox nor Mr. Wood has anything to do with running that paper?—A. Not directly; no.
Q. And they never have had?—A. Not directly.
Q. What do you mean by directly?—A. Well, they don't set any type.
Q. And don't write any editorials?—A. No.
Q. And don't collect any news?—A. No; they don't report for the paper.
Q. And don't solicit any advertising?—A. No.
Q. And don't sign any checks?—A. The work is all done by employees.
Q. These two gentlemen don't concern themselves with it at all?—A. No; not so long as it serves the purposes of the organization. It has to serve the organization.
Q. But the fact is they don't engage in the operation of that newspaper at all, or of the publishing company? Either Mr. Fox or Mr. Wood in any way? Let me put it this way—the checks drawn on account of the Nonpartisan Publishing Co. are not signed by either Mr. Fox or Mr. Wood; they are signed by Mr. Keyes?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. The same gentleman who signs the checks for the National Nonpartisan League?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You couldn't tell us approximately how much money has been turned over to this partnership, consisting of Mr. Wood and Mr. Fox?—A. No; I couldn't tell you.
Q. Do you know whether they are paid any salaries or anything of that sort for the services you have just described, that they perform with reference to this publishing company; or don't you know about it?—A. I think they draw a salary from the league as organizers. I don't think they draw a salary from the publishing company.
Q. Do you know whether either one of these gentlemen has drawn any money from the publishing company?—A. I wouldn't say whether they had or not.
Q. As a matter of fact, the finances of the publishing company are just as much under your domination and control as the finances of the National Nonpartisan League?—A. No.
Q. What difference is there?—A. Mr. Wood and Mr. Fox are in a position any time to dispense with my services, or the service of anybody in the employ of the publishing company, and Mr. Wood and Mr. Fox are not in a position to interfere with my work in connection with the National Nonpartisan League.
Q. That is the distinction?—A. Yes, sir. As long as my services in a very general way directing the work of the publishing company and the services of the men directly in charge of the publishing company, as long as their services are satisfactory to Mr. Wood and Mr. Fox, I presume they will continue the arrangement. When it is not they are in a position to make any other arrangements they see fit.
Q. They have the power to do that?—A. Yes.
Q. But they haven't exercised it?—A. No; we were very careful to see this publishing company was organized by men who believed in the work of this organization and wanted to forward it, wanted to do it, and would be fair and square and true to it. That, I presume, is the reason why Mr. Fox and Mr. Wood have never double-crossed us.
Q. By that you mean these men had a very great deal of confidence in your judgment?—A. I wouldn't want to say that. I will leave that to them.
Q. In any event, the fact remains that you, as the head of the National Nonpartisan League, control the financial affairs of this Nonpartisan Publishing Co., subject to the exercise of the power that rests in those men to stop you if they want to?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, the books of this concern, this Nonpartisan Publishing Co.——A. I might say in connection here, just as Mr. Thomas Keyes and myself handle the finances of the Nonpartisan League, subject to the power of the executive committee of the National Nonpartisan League, Mr. Lemke, Mr. Wood, and myself, that could be changed any time it wasn't handled properly.
Q. To suit them?—A. Yes.
Q. But they have never chosen to express their dissatisfaction, if they have any? So you and Mr. Keyes go right on drawing checks without consulting these men every time you draw one?—A. Well, I would like to explain that.
Q. Do you consult them?—A. No; certain men draw a stated salary, and when we draw a check to pay it we don't consult them. If we put a new man to work, or any big or unusual expenditure of funds we have, they were quite often consulted.
Q. Does this committee put it down in writing, or is it merely oral approval?—A. We have daily conferences, almost.
Q. Any record made of it?—A. No, sir.
Q. Nothing to show if the trustees here should want to go into the books of the concern and ascertain, as a matter of fact, a certain expenditure was authorized by Mr. Lemke, Mr. Wood, and yourself as the committee, we couldn't find any record of them?—A. Not formally authorized.
Q. Now, Mr. Lemke lives in Fargo?—A. Yes, sir; he lives in St. Paul, but his residence is in Fargo.
Q. The same as you are now; he has not been in St. Paul until recently?—A. Not until we moved our office down there, and then about all the time.
Q. That is how long?—A. Less than a year.
Q. And Mr. Wood is in charge of some other line of business?—A. He has a farm out at Deering.
Q. Well, he doesn't spend much time on that farm?—A. He superintends the work out on the farm.
Q. Mr. Wood spends most of his time in St. Paul?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Isn't he engaged in some other business?—A. He is and has been for years interested in the work of the Equity organization.
Q. The Equity Exchange?—A. Yes, sir. He still continues his relations with that organization.
Q. And he actually has some active capacity there that occupies a good deal of his time? The live-stock end, isn't it?—A. I believe he is manager of the live stock and I believe he is a member of the board.
Q. He is vice president, isn't he?—A. I don't know.
Q. Well, it occupies a great deal of his time?—A. No; not a great deal.
Q. Does he devote a great deal of his time to the management of the Nonpartisan League?—A. Quite a great deal of it.
Q. Is he in the same offices with you?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. He is vice president?—A. He is a member of the committee.
Q. There is no office of vice president?—A. Two, Mr. Lemke and Mr. Wood.
Q. One president and two vice presidents?—A. You can put it that way.
Q. And the only way we could ascertain precisely the amount of money that has been turned over to this Nonpartisan Publishing Co. would be to get the books?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And these books are in the possession of Mr. Keyes in St. Paul?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And he is the same one who could show us exactly what the situation is?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And the checks of the Nonpartisan Publishing Co. are drawn and signed by Mr. Keyes?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. He is the connecting link between all these organizations, isn't he?—A. He is the man that signs the checks for all of them; he handles most of the money.
Q. Now, this league exchange, what is the nature of its business, that million dollar corporation?—A. Well, I think I had better explain that. You understand, I don't know much about financial institutions and I was very clumsy in answering questions of that kind.
Q. Don't answer anything you can't answer. I am asking you if you know what the business of the league exchange is.—A. Very generally, I do.
Q. What is it, generally?—A. It is the business of financing the political organization.
Q. Known as the Nonpartisan League?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. But its business is given as farm lands?—A. It is organized to handle farm lands, and did undertake to handle some, and would have handled some if it hadn't been for the war conditions.
Q. And it is located in the Gilfellan Block?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Where the offices of the National Nonpartisan League are?—A. We have an office in St. Paul and one at Fargo.
Q. And Mr. F. B. Wood is president of that concern?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And Mr. Thomas Keyes is secretary-treasurer?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Any other officers?—A. Yes, sir; a board of directors.
Q. And you are a member of that board of directors?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And that is the concern in which you own a hundred dollars' worth of stock?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, do you own any other interest in that concern?—A. No.
Q. Directly or indirectly?—A. No.
Q. Is all the stock paid up in that; do you know?—A. No; I don't think it is.
Q. Have you any idea what proportion of it is paid up?—A. I think there is something like $150,000 sold and $50,000 paid up. I wouldn't be sure; it is about that. They have been paying notes this fall right along.
Q. That stock sold generally to farmers?—A. Almost exclusively.
Q. And you say you have no other interest in that except this hundred-dollar share of stock you testified to?—A. Yes.
Q. No one hold any stock directly or indirectly for you?—A. No, sir.
Q. And you haven't any promise on the part of anyone connected with this organization that you are to have any interest in it in the future?—A. No.
Q. You have nothing to do with the organization?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. As a matter of fact, the thing was organized under your direction?—A. At my suggestion, and on the advice of counsel and farmers.
Q. By that, you mean some lawyers?—A. Yes; Mr. Lemke and two or three others.
Q. You were the most active man in the organization of it?—A. I initiated it.
Q. That is true of the rest of the organizations, too, isn't it?—A. It is true of the publishing company.
Q. It is also true of the Consumers' United Stores Co.?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You know where the account of this concern is kept, the League Exchange?—A. Mr. Keyes is secretary and treasurer and keeps the account in his office.
Q. The bank account is kept in the Exchange National Bank?—A. I wouldn't be sure
Q. But the books are kept by Mr. Keyes?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. The same gentleman whom we referred to before?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. He is also president of the Consumers' United Stores Co.?—A. I don't know; I don't think that he is.
Q. Now, we will come to this United States Guaranty Co. That has its office in the Exchange Bank Building in St. Paul?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have you any stock in that business?—A. No, sir.
Q. What is the business of that company, if you know?—A. It hasn't done any business that I know of; very little.
Q. You are one of the men that initiated the organization of that concern, aren't you?—A. I have had very little to do with the initiation of that concern.
Q. You haven't any idea of what the nature of its business is, or what business it has done?—A. My impression is that it hasn't done any business.
Q. Who is Mr. G. M. Hutcheson?—A. He is the man that was president of the concern; I think he is yet.
Q. Mr. J. J. Hastings is secretary of it?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. He is also the gentleman who had to do with the purchase of the Scandinavian-American Bank at Fargo?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. He is the same gentleman who used to work for Mr. Grant Youmans at Minot?—A. I don't know how much he worked for him. He has been with the league from the beginning.
Q. But he was at Minot?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And Mr Keyes is treasurer of that company?—A. I don't know.
Q. You wouldn't say that he wasn't?—A. No.
Q. Would it come to you as a matter of surprise to you to learn that he was?—A. No, sir; I haven't given any attention to that.
Q. He lives in St. Paul?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, let us go to the Consumers' United Stores Co. As a matter of fact, you are the man who originated that concern?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You took more than a merely moral interest in it, didn't you?—A. What do you mean?
Q. I don't know, you stated last time—you said your interest was only a moral one, and I put that up to you.—A. You want me to state again?
Q. What I want to get at again is that you were very active in the organization of that concern?—A. Well, no; I haven't given any of my time to the building of the organization, except a couple of days at the beginning.
Q. Aren't you the man who originated that idea?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You are the man who created and originated this agreement that is signed up?—A. Well, I presume that I had as much to do with it as any one of several other men.
Q. When was that commenced?—A. Some time in the middle of the summer.
Q. Around about July?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And your first operation was commenced at Kenmare and yourself, Mr. Bowen, and Mr. Brinton went up there?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you took Mr. Sinclair, a member of the house of representatives, and started out on the first trip?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. That concern has collected something like $960,000?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Isn't this man Keyes also treasurer of that organization?—A. As I said before, I believe that he is, I wouldn't be positive. I think you asked me if he was president.
Q. I did because I had a note that it was asserted that he was, but we can find that out by him?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And the main office of that concern is in St. Paul?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. In the Gilfellan Building?—A. In the Guaranty Building.
Q. Have you any idea of where the books of that concern are kept?—A. I think in the Guaranty Building.
Q. And Mr. Keyes has the custody of them, like the rest of them?—A. If he is treasurer, he would have.
Q. You don't know where this concern banks?—A. I think they bank with the guaranty company or with the Exchange Bank.
Q. As a matter of fact, all of these concerns do their principal banking business with that bank?—A. I think so.
Q. Now, as I understand you, then, in this concern you haven't any financial interest whatever?—A. What concern?
Q. The Consumers' United Stores Co.—A. I don't draw any salary.
Q. And you don't own any stock?—A. No, sir; I don't handle any money.
Q. Do you know who draws the checks?—A. I think I do.
Q. Who?—A. I think the checks are signed by the manager.
Q. Who is the manager?—A. Mr. Brinton.
Q. Well, the solicitors up there were secured by you?—A. What solicitors?
Q. What solicitors? Mr. Elliott and Mr. Heck.—A. I presume a dozen or more were secured by me.
Q. So you exercise general supervision over it?—A. Yes; I do.
Q. And you have something to say about the disbursement of the funds?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. I am going to put a broad question to you now. As I understand your testimony, you haven't the slightest bit of financial interest in the League Exchange, United States Guaranty Co., the Nonpartisan Publishing Co., or the Consumers' United Stores Co., other than the $100 stock in the League Exchange?—A. You are correct.
Q. And haven't any promise on the part of any individual or combination of persons that they will carry any interest for you?—A. No, sir.
Q. Or that you will derive any profit from it in the future?—A. There is nobody carrying any interest for me.
Q. And you haven't any promise or understanding with any person or persons that you as an individual, you, A. C. Townley, will in the future obtain an profit from this organization if there is any profit?—A. I have no understanding that I will or will not.
Q. You never had any understanding of any kind with reference to those matters?—A. No, sir.
Q. My purpose is to make that just as broad as I can, so you would be understood to testify that you haven't any promise of profit or interest in these various concerns and don't expect any?—A. I haven't any promise or arrangement with those organizations any more than I have with the Great Northern Railroad Co. or the electric-light company of this town, or any other banking institution, or anything else.
Q. You haven't any connection with those concerns—the Great Northern Railroad?—A. Not that I have discovered myself.
Q. You don't control their affairs at all like you do these other organizations?—A. No.
Q. So you will admit there is a distinction?—A. Yes; there is. It would probably be easier for me to break into one of these organizations than the railroad.
Q. If you were so inclined it would be much easier for you to acquire some of their property or money if you wanted it than to get it from the Great Northern or the Hughes Electric Co.?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have you got any liberty bonds among your assets? I see you haven't listed any.—A. I believe I bought a liberty bond, that was after the petition was filed.
Q. Have you got it now?—A. I believe I have.
Q. Do you know how much it was?—A. $100.
Q. Did you use any part of this $300 that you listed here to buy that bond with?—A. Yes, sir. This liberty bond was purchased after this schedule was made out by Mr. Keyes for myself and the other boys in the office.
Q. For the employees and all of you?—A. I purchased one.
Q. Now, Mr. Townley, you get $200 a month salary from this league and that is all?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Aside from the expense account?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. What latitude are you allowed on the expense account?—A. My expense varies; when I am around St. Paul it is very little.
Q. I am not trying to get the amount of it; I want to get at the latitude as to what you call expenses. Does it include your personal expenses; your home expenses, for instance?—A. No; it doesn't.
Q. Does it include the support of your family.—A. No; it doesn't include clothing and shoes.
Q. How about clothing and food of your wife?—A. No; that is paid out of my salary.
Q. You pay for that out of your salary?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. The expense that you refer to covers only the actual expense you are incurring when in and about the business of the league?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. For instance, if you travel somewhere, that expense is paid out of the league fund?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And any other expenses, personal expenses, are you allowed?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And all this expense money, I suppose, is accounted for on the books of the league?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And whatever information that we need along that line we can find if we are permitted to go into the books of the league?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. So that the $300, $200 from the league and $100 from the Nonpartisan Publishing Co., represents your entire income from any source during the period you have testified to?—A. I got $5 dividend on the share of stock in the league exchange.
Q. Aside from that, that covers your entire income?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. That is all the money you got in from any sources during the period we have testified to?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. I assume, of course, that the books of all of these concerns are in St. Paul?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Practically every one of them?—A. I think they are.
Q. Have you got an automobile of any kind?—A. No, sir.
Q. When did you get rid of your automobile?—A. 1912.
Q. Haven't you had an automobile since 1912?—A. Not for my own personal possession or ownership.
Q. You haven't owned an automobile yourself since 1912?—A. No, sir.
Q. Didn't you own an Overland touring car, 45 horsepower, 6 cylinder, which you insured from the 12th of December, 1916, to the 12th of December, 1917, in your own name, and the application stated it was your own car?—A. That may have been.
Q. That is a fact, isn't it?—A. I don't know. We have had several of these touring cars.
Q. I am asking you about this particular one. I am giving you a good description of it.—A. Where was it insured?
Q. Fargo.—A. Where was it stored?
Q. Ten hundred and fourteen Eleventh Avenue South.—A. We have had two or three of these cars, and probably that is one of the garages that we kept them in.
Q. I am asking you this, if you did not insure this particular car in your own name—A. C. Townley?—A. I don't believe I did.
Q. Will you say you did not?—A. No; I did not; it must have been insured in my name. I didn't insure it. It might have been done by the office.
Q. The application for insurance was taken out in the name of A. C. Townley and signed by A. C. Townley.—A. It might have been, but I don't believe it. I have no recollection of insuring the car.
Q. That was an Overland car. Now, I will ask you if you didn't have a policy on a 1915 Hudson, 6-cylinder, 40-horsepower roadster sometime along the spring of 1917?—A. Insurance policy?
Q. Yes, sir.—A. I don't think so. It might have been done by the office. It might have been taken out in my name.
Q. The application was signed by you?—A. I don't think I signed the application.
Q. If one should show that you had signed it, you will admit you are mistaken?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You won't say positively that your recollection is clear on that?—A. No; I won't, but I am quite sure.
Q. Have you any definite recollection of these cars?—A. Yes, sir; I know the cars.
Q. Do you know where they are now?—A. I think the roadster is in St. Paul. I might add here that these are only two of probably a half dozen or a dozen of that kind of cars that have passed through the hands of the organization.
Q. Now, let's go back to another proposition: Have you any stock in the Scandinavian-American Bank at Fargo?—A. No.
Q. Anybody holding any stock in that institution for you?—A. No.
Q. Or in any other bank in the State?—A. No, sir.
Q. Or elsewhere?—A. No, sir.
Q. You say you only drew $200 a month out of the National Nonpartisan League?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Calling your attention to September, 1917, you say you only drew $200 that month?—A. I said my salary was $200; I might have drawn more or less.
Q. You wouldn't say you drew $200?—A. No, sir.
Q. You won't say you didn't draw $2,600?—A. I didn't draw $2,600 on my salary account.
Q. You would not say there were not checks drawn to A. C. Townley in that month for $2,600?—A. There might have been more than that. I have drawn checks—for your information I would say this much—probably in the sum of $1,000 or $1,500.
Q. Who is W. G. Johnson?—A. Bookkeeper.
Q. For whom?—A. The Nonpartisan League.
Q. Works on a salary there?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Small salary?—A. Yes, sir; $150 or $175. I don't know what it is.
Q. Will you explain how he happened to put in the Exchange Bank of St. Paul, in July, 1917, a check for $10,000, drawn on the publishing company and credited to his account?—A. What time was that?
Q. July, 1917?—A. I don't know as I can explain the detail of the matter. I might say rumors to the effect that the league funds and the publishing company's funds were about to be tied up by some kind of process, might have prompted us to put some money in his name.
Q. You remember buying a great number or a big number of Country Gentlemen from a representative from Brainerd, Minn.?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. About how many copies did you buy at that time? About 60,000?—A. No; it wasn't 60,000.
Q. Pretty near that, wasn't it?—A. No.
Q. Well, it involved quite a sum of money?—A. I think the check for the first bunch of those papers was $500.
Q. Do you know the gentleman with whom you dealt?—A. I would know him if I saw him.
Q. The check was drawn by you, A. C. Townley?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Personally?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Signed by you personally?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. What were the other checks you drew later on?—A. Well, I might have drawn another one to pay for next week's issue, or I might have bought an automobile and drew a check to pay for it.
Q. On your own account?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you carry an account now?—A. Yes.
Q. Personally, I mean, as an individual?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Where is that account kept?—A. The National Exchange Bank.
Q. Is there anything in it?—A. I don't how much there is in it.
Q. You can't tell us right now?—A. No, sir.
Q. We would like to know how much cash you have on hand?—A. You see it is this way—my salary is $200 per month; I was in Idaho the other day and the office out there needed money for certain little expenditures and I drew a couple of checks.
Q. On your own account?—A. Yes, sir; in the sum of $1,000 and advised the office that the checks were drawn for the expense of the organization, and asked them to take care of those checks. And they were to be charged against the account of the manager there. When I was in the State of North Dakota here I drew a check for the price of a Ford automobile on my own account or a half dozen automobiles and that check would have been taken care of when I got in to the office and the parties who got the automobiles would have been charged with them.
Q. You might, as A. C. Townley, draw a check for half a dozen automobiles on A. C. Townley's account?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Then you would notify the league office that you had done so and the league then would issue its check to A. C. Townley to take care of the check?—A. In case of emergency where it is necessary to use some money they do for that purpose. I might draw a check for one or two, probably not half a dozen because it wouldn't be necessary.
Q. If it was necessary, you would?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And it would afterwards be confirmed by the other two members of the committee?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Never had any difficulty in having them confirm your work?—A. This organization doesn't have very much difficulty. There is harmony and confidence between the members, so there is not very much trouble. They act together very well.
Q. So the head of it is in a position to go ahead without being bothered by somebody inquiring into the methods?—A. No; I wouldn't like to have you state it that way. My associates very well understand the methods that we use and the members of the league. Those that don't are at liberty to inquire any time.
Q. I understand you have no objection, as far as you are personally concerned, to an examination of the books of these various concerns to learn if we can whether you got any money from them?—A. I wouldn't think I would have any personal objection.
Q. Have you discussed that matter at all with counsel, the likelihood of an investigation?—A. No; I don't think so.
Q. You are pretty well acquainted in Cheyenne Wells, Colo.?—A. No; not very well.
Q. When were you there?—A. 1911.
Q. Do you know Mr. James Goodnight?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. He is the husband of Mrs. Townley's sister?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You say Mrs. Townley is now in Denver?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you know where Mrs. Townley keeps her bank account?—A. National Exchange Bank, St. Paul.
Q. That is the only one you know of that she has?—A. That is the only one she has.
Q. Do you know whether or not Mrs. Townley is carrying quite a sum of money in her name which really belongs to you?—A. Oh, she carries $100 or $150.
Q. A small amount?—A. Yes, sir; there was $87 in her account when it was garnisheed.
Q. Has she any property accumulated since 1915?—A. A little household goods.
Q. No real estate?—A. No, sir.
Q. Has she any diamonds of any value?—A. I haven't seen any.
Q. If she got those you didn't know about it?—A. Yes; she got those without my knowing anything about it.
Q. But you are quite sure aside from these small sums that Mrs. Townley hasn't any bank account?—A. I am quite sure.
Q. You would be very greatly surprised if it should develop that she had quite a sum of money?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Agreeably surprised probably?—A. Yes, sir. She didn't have any when I married her, and I haven't seen her have any since except what I gave her myself.
Q. Well, I assume, of course, that whatever she has got she got from you?—A. You are correct.
Q. Now, with reference to these lands in McKenzie County that we talked about, originally you and your brother purchased those lands from the Northern Pacific Railway?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Under contract?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Then you made a deal with the Schusters?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And Adler?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And sometime in July, 1913, you entered into an option contract with them whereby you transferred title to this property to Mr. Adler as trustee?—A. I don't remember the time, but when the crop went to pieces, or proved it was going to pieces, to secure them for money they advanced we transferred title of lands that we held on contract to Schuster Bros.
Q. With the understanding that it would be reconveyed?—A. In the event we won out, yes, sir.
Q. Or in the event you sold some of your property?—A. Yes, sir; and I went down the next year to sell it.
Q. That option still in existence?—A. No, sir. I think they have sold a good deal of the land since then. I know they have sold some of it.
Q. I will show you this paper and ask you if this is a copy of the contract?—A. I believe it is. I have no doubt about it at all.
Q. That agreement, however, has, as I understand it, lapsed so you don't claim any interest, either you or your brother?—A. No; I don't claim any interest.
Q. In these various lands?—A. No.
Q. These Schuster brothers and Mr. Adler live in Illinois?—A. Mr. Adler and two of the Schuster brothers live in Illinois; the other Schuster brother lives at Wibaux, Mont.
Q. Still there, is he?—A. Yes, sir; I believe so.
Q. Does Mr. Thatcher act as the auditor for these various companies?—A. Mr. Thatcher audits the books of the league and the League Exchange.
Q. Is he still in St. Paul?—A. I believe he is. He was there a month ago. He is very familiar with the accounting and bookkeeping system. He has been our auditor since we started.
Q. What is the name of his auditing company?—A. I think it is the Equitable Auditing Co.
Q. Is there any other organization that I haven't mentioned here that is the outgrowth or is collateral to the National Nonpartisan League of the same nature?—A. Not yet organized.
Q. You haven't organized anything else yet?—A. No, sir.
Q. Well, then, we can say you are willing to testify positively that this $200 and the $100 is the only source of income that you get of any kind?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you want the court to understand that you haven't any interest or haven't received from these concerns one dollar over and above the salaries since the organization of the various institutions?—A. Not for my personal purposes.
Q That is what I mean, coming to A. C. Townley to be used for himself?—A. You mean by that money I would use to buy land?
Q. As you see fit, as your own?—A. Without any relation to the organization—that is correct. I would have you understand and have it appear on the records that I have spent much more than this $200 a month, drawn checks for much more than this $200 a month, drawn checks for much more than that, without having anybody countersign those checks, for the purpose of the organization.

Q. That is what I am inquiring about.—A. What you want is money I drew and used for myself.
Q. Yes. sir.—A. Yes, sir.
Q. That is it exactly?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And as I understand you, you say you drew checks personally for a great deal more than that without anyone countersigning them, but that money was used for purposes of the league or other organizations and not for your personal use?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. But my question is limited to money that you received as an individual for which you didn't have to account to anybody?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. That is limited to this $200 and $100?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you haven't any promise or agreement with anybody at any time or any place that you are to get any more out of these institutions?—A. No, sir.
Q. In the form of money, stock, or anything of that sort?—A. No, sir.

Cross-examination by Mr. Lemke:

Q. Now, in regard to the Nonpartisan League, that is a political organization?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you know the powers and duties generally of the chairman of the Republican State central committee or Democratic State central committee as to the finances during the campaign?—A. Yes; I do, in a general way.
Q. As president of the Nonpartisan League, your powers and duties, are they similar to those?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have you spent any money or used any money of the Nonpartisan League outside of the salary paid to you for your own personal use?—A. I have not.
Q. The affairs of the Nonpartisan League are managed by an executive committee, I understood you to testify?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Does that committee pass upon the salaries of yourself—that is, when they were fixed—and of all the different employees?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Does it pass upon the affairs generally of the organization?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And what powers and authority you have is subject to their supervision?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And review?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And when any expenditures of considerable amount are made, as to buying automobiles, and so on, so you first consult the executive committee?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And their decision is final as to whether you should act?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. When you drew these checks you have testified to upon the league, was that passed upon and explained and approved or rejected by the committee?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And how about the books of the organization, are they audited?—A. They are.
Q. How often?—A. I think it is three or four times a year.
Q. By whom?—A. By the Equitable Auditing Co.
Q. Are those reports submitted to the different members of the executive committee?—A. Yes, sir. I get a copy and I think Mr. Wood gets a copy.
Q. You know you get a copy?—A. I know I get a copy.
Q. And these reports are discussed at times, are they, by the committee?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And the financial conditions of the organization looked after and discussed?—A. Yes, sir; most carefully.
Q. Have you any interest in any shape, form, or manner in any of the finances of the Nonpartisan League? Could you draw a personal check, over and above your salary, without violating a trust?—A. You mean a personal check for personal expenses or purposes?
Q Yes, sir; personal expenses or purposes.—A. No, sir.
Q. There is no understanding with the organization that you can draw checks on the organization over and in addition to your salary?—A. For personal purposes? There is a very distinct understanding that I can not.
Q. My questions that I shall ask here are as regards your own personal purposes. I shall not go into the political side of it. That is a thing I don't think concerns us here. You have seen rumors in the newspapers that you owned a $65,000 home in St. Paul. Is there any truth in that?—A. I am supposed to be living in it.
Q. Where do you live?—A. Sherman Hotel.
Q. How many rooms have you got there?—A. One room just now.
Q. Did you have more?—A. I have got one room rented now. We have two rooms in the Sherman Hotel when my wife and little girl are there.
Q. Now, in regard to those automobiles that were supposed to be insured in your name—do you know anything about them?—A. I don't remember. I don't believe they were insured in my name. If they were insured they were insured by the organization. I never insured a car in my life.
Q. Are they your property?—A. No, sir; they are the property of the organization.
Q. You have no interest in them whatsoever?—A. Except as a member of the committee of the organization; no personal interest.
Q. Do you use them?—A. Sometimes.
Q. For what purpose?—A. Purposes connected with the organizations. I suppose I have used 50 different cars since I started to work for the organization.
Q. Now, in connection with the Nonpartisan Publishing Co.—did you receive any money from them?—A. $100 a month.
Q. Have you any interest or do you expect any money from that organization in addition at any time to that $100 a month?—A. I have no interest.
Q. Will you state briefly the purpose of that publication?—A. The purpose of the publication is to serve the purposes of the political organization, to be its official organ, to carry its propaganda, advertise its candidates, and elect them.
Q. Do you know whether it was originally intended to make any profit out of that organization by Mr. Wood or Mr. Fox, or was it just for the purpose of assisting and carrying out the purposes of the league?—A. I didn't initiate the organization of that paper for the purpose of making profit for either one of them, but for the purposes of carrying out the work of the Nonpartisan League.
Q. There is a very close understanding and relation between the Nonpartisan Publishing Co. and the Nonpartisan League?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And that understanding is with the executive committee, is it?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. With Mr. Fox and Mr. Wood?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have you any right or authority to take any money from the Nonpartisan Publishing Co. other than that $100 a month?—A. I have not.
Q. For your own personal use?—A. No, sir.
Q. Now, in regard——A. I would say here that I can use some of the money of the publishing company for political purposes.
Q. That is, when you say you can, you mean the Nonpartisan League can?—A. Yes; I as an individual can't; but I as head of the nonpartisan organization can.
Q. Who directs and controls the editorial policy of that paper?—A. Well, in a very general way I direct and control it by putting in charge of the paper men who are competent to make the paper serve the purposes for which it was organized.
Q. When you say "I," do you mean yourself personally?—A. As a member of the committee.
Q. Now, in regard to the Consumers' United Stores Co., will you tell us briefly the object and purpose for which that was started?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. The Consumers' United Stores Co. was organized for the purpose of cutting out unnecessary expense of distribution of necessities that the farmers and members of the organization have to buy?—A. For the purpose of eliminating as much waste in the distribution as possible.
Q. Under the articles of that corporation could you use or divert any of the funds to your own personal use?—A. I couldn't, as I understand it.
Q. It is testified that they had paid in about $960,000; do you mean in cash?—A. No.
Q. How much of that is in cash, or do you know?—A. Well, I don't know. I don't think there is more than $15,000 or $20,000 in cash—a very small part of it.
Q. Could you tell us who were the prime movers in the organization of the United States Guaranty Co.?—A. Mr. Hastings and Mr. R. O. Richards, a South Dakota man—a league man.
Q. As a matter of fact, did the executive committee of the league or yourself have very much to do with the organization of that institution?—A. It was organized at the suggestion of this South Dakota man.
Q. Has it done any business that you know of, to speak of?—A. No.
Q. Have you any agreement or have you any expectation to get any money or property from that organization?—A. I have not.
Q. Have any funds ever been paid over to you from any of these organizations for other than political purpose or purposes, as just stated, in regard to the stores company, for your own personal use?—A. No, sir.
Q. What was the original purpose of the league exchange? You stated it was for the purpose of selling real estate. Do you mean real estate or the purpose of getting immigration?—A. I mean for the purpose of handling real estate for the farmers—members of the organization and the farmers.
Q. Was its object to cut down the commissions?—A. Yes, sir; emphatically so. Mr. Lemke, if you will permit, I would like to say here that the Nonpartisan League up to the time the league exchange was organized had been financed very largely upon farmers' notes loaned to the organization. Farmers had given their personal notes to the organization upon which to borrow money, and they handed them over to the organization without any security or collateral or any assurance that they would ever get them back.
Q. Accommodation notes?—A. Yes, sir; and to avoid the burden and the irregularity of going out and asking a man for a $5,000 or $10,000 note on which to borrow money, without giving him any security, we organized the league exchange and sold stock in that corporation and used the league exchange to serve the purpose that the accommodation notes had been serving up to that time. And it served its purpose in aiding the organization, but incidentally we hope to make it of use to the farmers of the State otherwise, through handling of real estate or anything else that may be done to earn some dividend or interest. The stock is very much distributed. I don't think very few own more than $200 worth of stock, and very few over $100 worth.
Q. Have you any financial interest, directly or indirectly, or do you expect any financial reward in property or otherwise from any of the following organizations in the future, the Nonpartisan League, the League Exchange, the United States Guaranty Co., the Consumers' United Stores Co., or the Nonpartisan Publishing Co.?—A. I don't.
Q. Excepting your salary?—A. Excepting my salary.
Q. Or such salary as the executive committee of the league or different officers may allow you in the future in those organizations at their discretion?—A. I presume it is understood, though, that I hope some time to own property outside of my clothes.
Q. You hope that some time in the future they may give you a larger salary, but there is no understanding?—A. I hope to own property and have a part in some business enterprise some time. That is commonly understood when a man undertakes a procedure of this kind, that it is for the purpose of enabling him to stand on his own feet, but I have no expectation or arrangement or agreement with any of these organizations that you mention by which I will get a larger salary, or own them, or profit financially from them.
Q. You wish to wipe the slate clean so you can begin your life anew financially; is that it?—A. I think that is it.
Q. Without being interfered with by garnishment proceedings, etc.?—A. Yes, sir.

Redirect examination by Mr. Murphy:

Q. You say that this procedure is started so you can stand on your own feet?—A. By that, Mr. Murphy, I mean so that I won't be hounded to death by fellows that sold me that junk that they called machinery.
Q. How about the men who sold you labor?—A. The men who sold me labor are possibly with one or two exceptions paid.
Q. There are several exceptions in your schedule, aren't there?—A. I don't think there are very many.
Q. Aside from that you expect your salary to be raised right after this proceeding is closed and you get your discharge in bankruptcy, if you get a discharge?—A. No; I don't expect it to be raised, and it won't be raised.
Q. Do you expect these various other institutions who are not paying you a salary now to start in doing it?—A. No, sir.
Q. Your expectation to accumulate property is that you will accumulate it out of the salary you have been drawing?—A. I might not always continue to work for this organization. I might go back to the farm, you know. I like to farm.
Q. Those ideas are purely speculative, however. What I want to get at, you haven't got any understanding that as soon as you can get clear from your creditors and stand on your own feet they will raise your salary?—A. No, sir: not only no understanding, but the salary won't be raised. Mr. Lemke, Mr. Wood, and myself are not working for the salaries we get.
Q. Isn't it a fact there were three new corporations organized in the State on the 21st day of January?—A. I don't know.
Q. One of them a briquetting company?—A. I don't know when it was organized.
Q. Well, recently within the last few days?—A. I understand a corporation of that kind has been organized by Mr. Hastings and others.

Q. And there was another that Mr. Hastings organized, other than this briquetting company, that the league leaders are interested in?—A. I don't know anything about that.

Q. You haven't been consulted with reference to that?—A. No, sir.

Q. And Mr. Keyes, as far as you know, is not treasurer of this new organization?—A. I don't think so.

Q. Now, Mr. Lemke asked you a question on direct examination with reference to the funds of the Consumers' United Stores Co., and he put it this way: You haven't any right to use the funds of that concern at all for your own personal purposes, and you said you hadn't. Now, I am asking you whether you have any control over the funds of that organization for other purposes than your own personal purposes?—A. Indirectly.

Q. What do you mean by that?—A. Well, Mr. Brinton is manager of that Consumers' Stores Co., and Mr. Brinton is very closely associated with and understands the purpose for which it was organized, and he is there working out the purposes of the corporation. Now, through Mr. Brinton, I can direct, in a measure, the use of those funds for the purposes of the organization.

Q. This corporation is only incorporated for a small amount?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And only a few people that hold stock in it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know who they are?—A. No.

Q. Mr. Elliott one of them?—A. I presume he holds some of it. I don't know. I left the management to Mr. Brinton.

Q. You don't hold any stock in it?—A. No.

Q. But the understanding with the men that put the money in is that only a certain percentage is to be used for actual store purposes and the rest of it may be used for carrying on what you call educational work and propaganda?—A. Let me state it more fairly. By the agreement with the farmer a certain percentage of the money must be used for the purpose of establishing a store, but it doesn't say that all of the money may not be used; that any of the money above this percentage that must be used for the organization of the same may be used for educational purposes or to further the work of that organization.

Q. I have before me one of your printed blanks, a buyer's certificate, and it reads, in substance, thus:

"It is expressly understood and agreed that the purposes for which we pay the said sum of $100 are: That 90 per cent of all money subscribed herein shall be used by said company to establish a store at ------ until the sum of $10,000, in cash or notes, shall be so applied. All surplus subscribed over the said sum of $10,000 may be used by the company, either to establish and maintain a central buying agency or wholesale establishment, or to carry on educational work or propaganda along all lines deemed by the board of directors of the Consumers' United Stores Co. to be in the interest of or beneficial to farmers, and for the assistance of farmers' organizations such as relate to the economic, educational, or political interests of the farmers, or both."

That is the substance of it?—A. That is a correct copy.

Q. And those are printed in English and German?—A. I don't know about German.

Q. Don't you know as a matter of fact that it had been printed in German?—A. No; I don't know it.

Q. Now, for these general purposes, aside from the money that is used for the actual operations of the store, that have been mentioned here, you can control the distribution of the money with reference to those purposes?—A. With my associates I can.

Q. I wanted to show, Mr. Townley, to be frank with you, that your relation with this organization and the others is quite close, and you are more or less of general manager and director of them all, in the distribution of the funds and otherwise for these purposes.—A. For the purposes stated in the agreement.

Q. And that is a fact, isn't it?—A. Yes, sir. I am not, however, as closely connected with that as I am with the political organizations. I don't handle any money and don't sign any checks.

Q. The detail is taken care of by somebody else?—A. The detail and all the work.

Q. You can't tell me whether Mr. Keyes is treasurer or cashier?—A. You said he was president?

Q. I said I had a report that he was president.—A. I know he is not both of them.

Q. Of course, that is possible; but the chances are that he keeps the same position with that company—that was the intention to have it all centralized, and Keyes is the key to the whole thing? Isn't that the idea?—A. I think so.

Recross-examination by Mr. Lemke:

Q. Now, Mr Townley, what is the general purpose of all of these organizations—for the purpose of making profit?—A. No.

Q. Tell in a few words what the object is. Is it philanthropic or benevolent or what?—A. The purpose of this organization is to forward and protect the work of this progressive movement, or this movement that looks to the members as progressive.

Q. Is it for the interest of the people who belong to this league, or, rather, for the masses than the few, more equal distribution of the good things of life?—A. It all aims at a proper arrangement of the marketing system.

Redirect examination by Mr. Murphy:

Q. That is, with reference to the Consumers Co.?—A. All of these organizations.

Q. That is, with reference to the purposes of this organization it might better be stated as to what you conceive to be the interests of the consumers, you and your associates—right or wrong, it is what you conceive to be their interests?—A. What I and my associates, and my associates are the farmers.

Q. They have nothing to say about the actual distribution of the funds? The man who signs one of these notes has nothing to say about where the money goes?—A. He has a right to say whether he signs it or not.

Q. But what I want to get at—after he signs and pays his money up the distribution of that money is under the control of yourself and your associates and not in the farmer?—A. He signs a contract and agreement, by which he agrees to do so much—gives a note for $100—and we agree to protect him in so far as we can under the agreement for that consideration.

Q. And he agrees to take your judgment in the distribution of this money?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you exercise that judgment, and when you say this is all for the advancement of the farmer it is what your judgment dictates is for their benefit or betterment; whether it is right or wrong, it is the judgment of yourself and your immediate associates?—A. Part of the plan, read and explained to the farmer and agreed upon with them.

Q. A plan approved by yourself and your immediate associates?—A. And agreed to by the farmer.

Q. And you have a clause in that agreement that if any one of them—in order to keep out of court—that if a farmer objects and wants his money back you will give it back to him with 10 per cent?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the purpose; so if anybody sues you, you can give it back and keep out of courts?—A. I can state it better than that.

Q. Well, probably you could, but I get the purpose of it, don't I?—A. We make better progress talking to farmers than to lawyers.

Q. I haven't any doubt. You haven't very many lawyers signed up?—A. Well, some want to come in.

Q. Lemke has got a kind of monopoly on it? They can't break in?—A. Yes; he got in on the ground floor.

Recross-examination by Mr. Lemke:

Q. You have stated that the owners of the Courier-News—in your previous testimony you stated, I believe, it was the Nonpartisan Publishing Co. Isn't that due to the fact that you have not clearly distinguished between copartnership as a legal entity and the individuals forming it?—A. Well, I haven't given much attention to the matter. It has been more in your hands than it has in mine.

Q. May I not ask you this question, The way you look at it, Fox and Wood are the same as the Nonpartisan Publishing Co.?—A. Yes, sir.

By the Referee:

Q. Mr. Townley, was the money advanced by the Nonpartisan League to take over the Nonpartisan Leader and the Courier-News, or was this money that was advanced by the owners of those papers now?—A. It is advanced by the publishing company to take over the News.

Q. You don't understand my question. I am trying to find out—I understand the farmers own the Nonpartisan League and have moneys in the league. I want to know whether the league's money bought these papers?—A. No. You see, in the first place, the Leader was published on a contract. Fox and Wood began to publish the Nonpartisan Leader on a contract. The company that published the Leader was paid out of the subscription price of the Leader, and when the Courier-News was taken over it was bought by money belonging to the publishing company, not the Nonpartisan League.

Q. Then the Courier-News and the Nonpartisan Leader are owned by the owners?—A. The owners of the publishing company.

Q. And not by the Nonpartisan League?—A. No, sir.

Redirect examination by Mr. Murphy:

Q. Those funds originally came from the farmers?—A. Yes, sir; like everything else.

Q. And were used for the purpose of acquiring these papers under the direction of yourself and associates?—A. The funds came from the subscription price.

Q. The $5?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is the same fund that went to buy the Courier-News? A. Yes, sir.

Recross-examination by Mr. Lemke:

Q. Mr. Townley, when the Leader was first published what company published it?—A. The Cooperative Herald, the Equity Publishing Co.

Q. And when that contract was made for the publishing that was made by whom, the agreement?—A. Fox and Wood, I believe.

Ed F. Wood having been called as a witness by the trustees was duly sworn, and testified as follows:

Direct examination by Mr. Murphy:

Q. You are the Ed F. Wood testified to here as the owner of the Nonpartisan Publishing Co.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How old are you?—A. Twenty-seven.

Q. What was your business before you became connected with this organization?—A. Farming.

Q. Own any farm lands yourself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much?—A. Half a section.

Q. Where?—A. Near Deering, 157–81.

Q. North of Minot?—A. Northeast of Minot.

Q. Still own that land?—A. I have an equity in it; yes.

Q. When was it you became connected with the Nonpartisan Publishing Co.?—A. In the fall of 1915.

Q. Had you known Mr. Fox for some time before that?—A. I had.

Q. How long?—A. About—oh, I suppose six months.

Q. You had met him through Mr. Townley?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where?—A. Met him in Minot.

Q. What was his business?—A. Organizer.

Q. For the league?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your business was also organizer?—A. Yes, sir; exactly.

Q. You didn't put any money of your own into this Nonpartisan Publishing Co. aside from dues in the league? You didn't make any personal investment in it, did you?—A. It wasn't necessary.

Q. Well, you didn't, necessary or not necessary?—A. No; I didn't.

Q. And neither did Fox, did he?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. You fellows got together and said we will organize this company and get $5 a head out of each one of these members for running this paper, did you?—A. We considered starting this paper and running it in the interest of the Nonpartisan League.

Q. Who put the idea in your head?—A. I don't know. I get an idea once in a while.

Q. Well, we all do, but sometimes we learn from others. Didn't you get an inspiration from some other source, or was it spontaneous?—A. We had talked about it considerably.

Q. With Mr. Townley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As a matter of fact, the main idea was that of Mr. Townley, wasn't it?—A. There had been a lot of people talking about it.

Q. Well, I am not speaking about anybody else except Mr. Townley. He is the man that made the suggestion that you form this organization?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now you and Fox have had nothing to do directly with the management, control, and operation of that concern since its organization, have you?—A. Not directly; no.

Q. You haven't been down there in Fargo but very little of the time?—A. I have been there quite a little.

Q. Traveling around the State most of the time?—A. This last year I have been up on my farm.

Q. All of 1917?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Been on the farm?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Mr Fox, where has he been?—A. Fox has been organizing for the league. I don't know where.

Q. Traveling around—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And this concern has been going on without the attention or direction of either one of you copartners?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you don't know anything about its financial condition?—A. In a general way.

Q. You don't know much about it?—A. We left that to the men who are paid to do that business.

Q. Leave it to the employees?—A. Yes; exactly.
Q. You copartners walk away and leave the business to the employees to take care of it?—A. No, sir.
Q. Do you get any salary?—A. No, sir.
Q. Have you ever got a penny as an individual?—A. No, sir.
Q. Do you know if Fox ever has?—A. Yes; I have got traveling expenses on one occasion.
Q. Well, that is what actual money that you paid out?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. So you haven't, in fact?—A. No, sir. I never received any salary.
Q. You haven't received a penny?—A. No, sir.
Q. And, as far as you know, Fox hasn't either?—A. No, sir.
Q. And if that concern has made any profit you don't know what became of it?—A. It wasn't organized for profit.
Q. If that concern has made any profit, you don't know what became of it?—A. Well, if any was made, it was used in the interests of the Nonpartisan League.
Q. Do you know that of your own knowledge?—A. No; I don't.
Q. That is your opinion—you mean that is what you believe?—A. Absolutely.
Q. But the fact is something that you can't testify to—you don't know what became of the money or who used it or where it goes, do you?—A. I know that whatever money, if there is any money made out of the corporation——
Q. It is not a corporation, is it?—A. Or the publishing company.
Q. The publishing company is not a corporation, is it?—A. No.
Q. Now, this paper does a great deal of advertising, doesn't it?—A. I imagine so.
Q. You don't even know that—do you read the Nonpartisan Leader?—A. Occasionally.
Q. I call your attention to the copy of the 21st of January, and ask you if it is not a fact that there is a great deal of advertising matter in there, quite a bit of it?—A. Yes.
Q. It is, as a matter of fact, an advertising medium used to quite an extent?—A. Yes, sir. It is a good medium. I don't know how far it is patronized.
Q. You don't know even that?—A. Not to what extent it is patronized.
Q. You are not familiar with any of the details?—A. I leave that to the newspaper men.
Q. And you don't know what money they make out of advertising?—A. I don't.
Q. Or what becomes of it?—A. No, sir.
Q. You are 27?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Married or single?—A. Married.
Q. You spent most of your time on the farm in 1917?—A. I did.
Q. You are game warden, State deputy?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And occasionally you go around on that business?—A. I did on a few occasions.
Q. Where is Mr. Fox?—A. I couldn't say where he is right now. The last time I saw him he was in St. Paul.

Cross-examination by Mr. Lemke:

Q. What was the purpose, as you understand it, of the Nonpartisan Leader or Publishing Co.?—A. The purpose of the Nonpartisan Publishing Co. was to publish a paper in the interests of the farmers of North Dakota for good government.
Q. You are not concerned with the profits as much as the interests of the farmers as you see it in the publishing of that paper?—A. No; I am not concerned in the profits.
Q. If there are any profits made, does it meet with your approval or consent that they should be used by the Nonpartisan League for political purposes?—A. Absolutely.
Q. You have no arrangement or agreement with Mr. Townley that he is to receive more than the salary stated?—A. Not any.

By the Referee:

Q. Mr. Wood, you and Mr. Fox bought the paper—did you get a bill of sale when you bought it?—A. There wasn't any paper.
Q. You just started it and bought machinery gradually, as the dues came in?—A. When the paper was started it was published by the Cooperators' Herald on contract.
Q. How long was it published that way?—A. Oh, I don't know, about from the fall until the spring, some time.
Q. When did you acquire a plant of your own?—A. It must have been along in May—April or May—some time before the primary election. I don't just remember exactly. In the spring anyhow.
Q. Now, have you signed any agreement—is there any agreement in writing whereby it is understood that there are to be any profits in this paper, as far as you and Mr. Fox are concerned?—A. Absolutely not.
Q. Have you anything to show your ownership of the paper, of the publishing company?—A. Well, I don't know. I have got some stock in the Courier-News.
Q. That stock in the Courier-News was bought with the proceeds from the Nonpartisan Leader?—A. I think that is the idea.
Q. And that stock is your own?—A. It is in my name; yes, sir.

Redirect examination by Mr. Murphy:

Q. Where is it?—A. It is in safety deposit vault in St. Paul?
Q. In your safety deposit vault?—A. Well, I use it.
Q. It isn't yours, though?—A. I don't pay for it; no.
Q. When did you decide to move to St. Paul?—A. I haven't moved to St. Paul.
Q. I mean the office of the company?—A. The league or Nonpartisan Publishing Co.?
Q. The publishing company?—A. That was moved down there not very long ago.
Q. As a matter of fact you didn't have anything to do with it?—A. Absolutely not.
Q. You weren't consulted?—A. Mr. Townley is paid for directing the work of the Nonpartisan Publishing Co., and he gets men that are competent and capable to handle that business, and I don't know anything about the printing business.
Q. He runs the whole thing, and you are willing to trust him to do it?—A. Yes, sir; if I wasn't, I wouldn't hire him.

Recross-examination by Mr. Lemke:

Q. When you say Mr. Townley, do you mean Mr. Townley or the Nonpartisan League?—A. I mean the Nonpartisan League.
Q. Is there any agreement of copartnership between yourself and Mr. Fox.—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, you say you started the paper; that you didn't buy it. When you first started, who did you deal with to print it?—A. A. M. Baker.
Q. Did you and Mr. Fox agree to pay him, or was the league back of it?—A. I don't remember exactly. I think I was there at the time the arrangements were made.
Q. You never received any funds from Mr. Townley, or did you receive any funds from Mr. Townley to start this paper with?—A. No.
Q. The only funds you received were from the subscriptions and the subscribers gotten for you from the membership of the Nonpartisan League through the Nonpartisan League?—A. Yes.

Redirect examination by Mr. Murphy:

Q. As a matter of fact you have never had anything to do with that paper at all, except nominally?—A. Well, Mr. Fox and I own the paper.
Q. In name only?—A. Well, we own the paper; and as long as it is properly directed and run in the interests of the farmers of North Dakota we are satisfied to have it run that way.
Q. You own the paper, and do you own a majority of the stock in the Courier-News?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And never put a dollar into either one of them?—A. No, sir.
Q. How much are those papers supposed to be worth?—A. I don't know.
Q. Have you any idea?—A. No, I haven't—an approximate idea.
Q. Well, give us an approximate idea.—A. The Messenger says they are worth $70,000.
Q. Are you willing to take the Messenger's word for it?—A. Not altogether.
Q. If you have got any amendment to make to that, how much would you say they are worth?—A. I would think the Courier-News perhaps worth $40,000 or $50,000.
Q. And how about the Leader?—A. I believe the Leader is being published on contract now.
Q. I am not asking about that. I am asking about the value of this property that you claim you and Fox own?—A. Well, I haven't—the Leader has been growing considerable, and I haven't paid much attention to it. In fact it is worth considerably more than when it was started.
Q. That may be true, but that doesn't answer my question. As a matter of fact, you don't know anything about it, do you—what it is worth, who is running it, how it is being run, who is financing it, what the bills are, who are paying the bills, or any of the numerous details in connection with the operation of that institution?—A. I know it is being run to suit me.
Q. You haven't anything to say about it?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you mean to say that you and Fox could go down there and fire anybody connected with both of those institutions and take charge to-morrow?—A. Not to-morrow, I don't suppose, but as owners of the papers we could.
Q. You don't intend to do that?—A. Not as long as the paper continues in its present capacity.
Q. Do you ever dictate to these gentlemen what you want done?—A. Why, no. We make suggestions once in a while and they are acted on.
Q. Now, you stated when I was examining you that you were satisfied with the way Mr. Townley was running the paper?—A. I am.
Q. And then Mr. Lemke brought out of you that you meant the Nonpartisan League. You don't pay the Nonpartisan League?—A. No.
Q. You pay Mr. Townley $100 a month?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And he is the man you look to?—A. Oh, I didn't understand his question exactly.
Q. You misunderstood Mr. Lemke's question?—A. Yes; if I said that.

Recross-examination by Mr. Lemke:

Q. Do you mean the publishing company is run in the interests of the National Nonpartisan League?—A. Yes; that is what I thought you meant.
Q. Has Mr. Townley any financial interest in that paper?—A. Not outside of the $100 a month he gets.
Q. As a matter of fact, is the relation between the Nonpartisan Publishing Co. and the National Nonpartisan League very close?—A. Yes, sir; very close.
Q. Practically one?—A. Yes, sir; I might say so.

A. C. Townley, recalled as a witness, testified as follows:

Mr. TOWNLEY. The Nonpartisan Leader was organized as a copartnership as a matter of protecting the members of the Nonpartisan League. The Nonpartisan Leader has not been organized as the property of the Nonpartisan League, because it would have been easier for the enemies to convince the members that they were liable for all of the debts of the organization and they wouldn't have joined, and they would have been liable for the debts of the organization. Whenever any machinery is purchased the manager of the paper or Mr. Wood signs notes, and the copartnership is liable and nobody else is liable. If the paper makes a mistake, it is the mistake of the paper and not of the organization, and Mr. Wood or Mr. Fox were not urged and no arrangement was made with them to publish the paper, because they are newspaper men or publishers, and have a wide experience, but because they understand the purpose for which this paper was to be run, and will, in so far as their ownership enables them, protect it in serving that purpose, and are not running the paper for profit, but to serve the purpose of this organization and protect the organization. Mr. Wood and Mr. Fox are in a position, just as you, Mr. Murphy, and anybody else, would be in a position if they wanted to demand the whole $5 to take the paper to-morrow and run away with it, or use it against the organization, but any time they did that their contract would shortly expire.

Redirect examination by Mr. Murphy:

Q. But the main purpose is to have a nominal copartnership for the purpose of fixing liability somewhere?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. But the intimate relations between the league and the publishing company are such that in everything except form, the external form of the thing, the league really owns the paper?—A. That is practically correct but not actually correct.
Q. Of course, your statement contains the substance of what your counsel and advisors have told you the legal effect is?—A. Yes; and the psychological effect on the membership. We bought some machinery when we started to publish the paper, and if there was one there were twenty-five league members came in and wanted to know who was in debt for that machinery. Mortgages had been filed, and they wanted to know if they had to pay. If they had to pay they wouldn't have stayed very long in the organization.
Q. So you got up this idea to escape this feature of it?—A. Yes, sir.

By the referee:

Q. The only interest I see that this proceeding has in the Nonpartisan Publishing Co. is whether or not this property, of quite a value, the Nonpartisan Leader and the Daily Courier-News, is in position that it is just held nominally until such a time as there is a division made of it, so that in the course of events you would get an interest in it. Are you at any time going to get an interest in these properties?—A.

Well, I have no arrangement and no understanding that I will either own the Nonpartisan Leader or the league or the farmers that are members.

Q. Not the league, but the Leader and the Courier-News?—A. I have no arrangement.

Q. And Mr. Fox and Mr. Wood and the other stockholders of the Courier-News have acquired their rights in the paper just through—just as holders for themselves to relieve the league from any liability?—A. As holders for themselves. When we undertook this enterprise we had no knowledge whether it would succeed or wouldn't. And if it had not been a success Mr. Wood and Mr. Fox would have been holding the sack for the machinery they bought at that time.

By Mr. Murphy:

Q. As a matter of fact, in the fall of 1915 you had a pretty good idea?—A. We were successful in this measure that we had a half-bushel basket of post-dated checks, none of which had been paid, and which nobody said would be paid.

Q. But they were paid?—A. They were paid finally.

Q. You had an idea they would be?—A. I had very high hopes they would be paid.

Q. A whole half bushel of them?—A. Yes, sir; $6 checks.

Q. So that, when these gentlemen started in in the fall of 1915, they knew they had this half bushel back of them?—A. They weren't good enough so any responsible publishing house would look upon them as security. We had to take a publishing house without much experience.

Q. Had to have a lot of faith?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Lemke:

Q. Isn't it a fact that some of the publishing companies refused to have any dealings with the political league as such?—A. Not only the publishing companies, but several others.

Q. They wanted somebody better, either corporation or individual, outside of the league with whom they would do business?—A. They wanted to do business with something that had a better standing than the league at that time.

Q. Weren't some checks thrown back, saying that the league had no legal standing or existence because it was not incorporated or was not a copartnership?—A. Not some, but hundreds, thousands, of them.

Apart from collecting $16 dues from farmers in politics and making certain other concessions to farmers in politics, who demand seed from the Government, Mr. Townley may be all right. The Minnesota papers report that he has recently been indicted for seditious utterances. At any rate, he and his league are not much in favor with the governor of Minnesota, as the following report from one of the St. Paul papers shows:

GOVERNOR SCORES NONPARTISAN LEAGUE AS TREASONABLE IN LETTER TO OFFICER—BURNQUIST REFUSES INVITATION TO ATTEND RALLY TO STIR CLASS DIVISION—TOWNLEY ORGANIZATION CALLED PROPAGANDIST—EXECUTIVE DENOUNCES PARTY OF DISCONTENT AS ATTRACTING PRO-GERMANS—AFFILIATION WITH LAW VIOLATORS IS CHARGED—STATEMENT RECITES PEOPLE'S COUNCIL, INDUSTRIAL WORKERS OF THE WORLD, AND RED SOCIALIST ACTIVITY.

Charging the Nonpartisan League with disloyal propaganda and arraigning its heads for stirring up factional and class feeling when the country should be working solidly and whole-heartedly for winning of the war, Gov. J. A. A. Burnquist to-day delivered the most scathing condemnation of the A. C. Townley organization that it has yet received.

The governor's condemnation of the league and its heads was made in a letter to Arthur Le Sueur, former socialist mayor of Minot, now "executive secretary" of the league, declining an invitation to address the league's coming campaign rally.

THE GOVERNOR'S RALLY.

The governor's letter follows:

"DEAR SIR: Your invitation to address the Nonpartisan campaign rally is declined by me for the following reasons:

"The name of your league implies that it is nonpartisan, but in fact there is no organization more partisan. At this time, when other political parties are trying to put aside, for the good of the country, any factional spirit that might exist, your organization is doing everything within its power to increase it.

"At the time of our entrance into the European conflict your organizers condemned our Government for entering the war. When it became apparent that this course would result in disaster for their organization they changed their course and made an eleventh-hour claim to pure loyalty; but, notwithstanding this claim, the National Nonpartisan League is a party of discontent. It has drawn to it the pro-German element of our State. Its leaders have been closely connected with the lawless I. W. W. and with the red socialists. Pacifists and peace advocates, whose doctrines are of benefit to Germany, are among their number.

CATERS TO LAW VIOLATORS.

"Those in charge of the league have catered to that faction of labor which has violated the law and been opposed to compliance with just orders of duly constituted authority. The leading agitators in your party have through their speeches and the circulation of contemptible falsehoods encouraged disrespect for honest and patriotic men in public positions. These selfappointed leaders, with whom you are associated, have been and now are endeavoring to get farmers to oppose business men and employees to oppose employers. They state, in your party principles, that 'the great thing the farmers need to-day to win is to stick by your organization to cooperate with wage workers' organizations in the cities and together win control of the powers of the State government and then the National Government.'

PEOPLE'S COUNCIL RECORD REVIEWED.

"You, who sign yourself as the executive secretary of the league, were connected with the people's peace council, which, through my proclamation of August 28, 1917, was barred from holding meetings in this State and thereafter in Wisconsin and Illinois, but which was invited to North Dakota by its governor, who was elected through the efforts of your league. The cheering and the applauding of the unpatriotic utterances of Senator LA FOLLETTE at your last convention put a stamp of disloyalty on it that can never be erased. Your present publicity agent lost the position he held at that time because he supported LA FOLLETTE'S unpatriotic ideas, and after his discharge by his employer he was employed by your nonpartisan league. Another of your leaders, Joseph Gilbert, called a director and manager, I believe has been convicted by a jury because of his disloyal utterances. He, together with Mr. Manahan, attorney for your organization, patriotically used a strike situation here to advance the political interests of the league.

SAFETY BOARD MALIGNED.

"These two men have maliciously slandered public-spirited members of the public safety commission in an effort to bring together the farmers and wage earners for the political purposes of your political party's self-constituted leaders, who are neither real farmers nor real laborers but self-seeking demagogues whom the actual farmers and the actual laboring men of our State will sooner or later find are nothing but pretended friends—wolves parading in sheep's clothing.

"You, who appear to be the executive secretary of this organization, were the attorney who defended the murderers in the I. W. W. trouble on the range two years ago and who has assisted the I. W. W. organization which has publicly announced that it is its intention ultimately to take the farms from the farmers, whose headquarters since the commencement of the war have been raided by the Federal Government and whose members are now taking refuge in such organizations as the National Nonpartisan League.

LEAGUE INIMICAL TO FARMERS.

"How, under such circumstances, the farmers of Minnesota, who have been threatened with the loss of their farms, who have time and again been compelled to appeal to peace officers for protection against members of this lawless, anarchistic organization, can now join a league with promoters whose sympathies have been with this lawbreaking Bolshevik element in our society, is well nigh incomprehensible. The only explanation that can be given is the fact that some of the leaders and organizers of the Nonpartisan League are evidently not yet known as well to the farmers and laborers of our State as they are to those who have had more experience with them.

"Another reason for declining your invitation is the possibility of construing my presence at your partisan campaign rally, by some, as an indorsement of your propaganda. It is of course the duty of the governor to be fair to all classes, and to oppose any program which is apt to result in a division of our State into classes. Such arraying of class against class would be welcomed by the enemies of our Republic, for such a course will tend to defeat our Nation in this war, and will eventually mean the dissolution of our form of government and the undermining of the economic and political freedom of our people. He who, in normal times, needlessly arrays class against class is most often the ambitious demagogue, but any individual who will do so when our Nation is in a life and death struggle is knowingly or unknowingly a traitor to his State and to his country.

"In declining to speak at your party's rally I wish to say, further, that for me there are during this war but two parties—one composed of the loyalists and the other of the disloyalists. The only party whose cause I shall strive at this time to advance is the party composed of those Americans who, heart and soul, are loyal to their country. The only issue that to me is paramount at this time is the winning of this war, and that can not be done 'if our house is to be divided against itself' through false accusations on the part of political agitators, such as those who head your organization.

OPPOSES ANTIWAR AGITATORS.

"The only party and politicians whom I am in this campaign going to oppose are that party and those politicians who for party purposes, by innuendo or otherwise, are discouraging our people by claiming this is a war begun by the rich, or that the burdens of the conflict will fall more heavily on one class than another, or make statements which in some other way will lengthen the conflict by creating dissatisfaction at home and thus indirectly cause the death of additional thousands, if not millions, of our fellow citizens on European battlefields.

"We all agree that war profiteers should be dealt with as drastically as it is possible to deal with them, but it can not be said this is 'a rich man's war,' for those who have gained most from it would have made greater profit if the United States had not entered it.

"I hold no brief for any class, but to make the farmers or laboring men believe their sons are discriminated against in this war, as implied in your statement of principles, is treasonable conduct, for the rich man's sons are conscripted proportionately to a greater extent than the sons of the farmers and laborers.

FARMERS MOST FAVORED.

"This is apparent because of the exemption of those needed to support their dependents and the exemption allowed because of agricultural and industrial pursuits. Up to this date about 5 per cent of the male population of this country has been called, and 90 per cent of the war taxation has come from business profits and income, falling mostly on those best able to pay it. If anyone for money reasons would strive to continue this war or make unreasonable profit through the carrying on of the same, such an individual is as much of a traitor to his country, but no more of a traitor, than he who would use this time to divide our forces through the creation of class hatred and factional discontent.

BIG BUSINESS ATTACKED.

"Your leaders are continually attacking what you term 'big business.' Personally I am as strongly opposed as anyone to what is known as government by 'big business.' I would be equally opposed to a government by any particular industrial class. The public official who would allow himself to be controlled by the self-appointed guardians of some certain element of society would thereby render himself unfit to hold public office.

"If I, as governor of this State, would permit myself to be put in a position where I could be compelled to cater to any particular set of men, or where I could not be fair to organized or unorganized labor, to farmers' organizations or any other organizations, to big business or little business, I would be unworthy of the confidence of the voters of our Commonwealth, who can freely or secretly exercise their right of franchise without the payment of $16 to unscrupulous schemers for the privilege of voting or being told how to vote.

DOUBTS SINCERITY OF PURPOSE.

"Knowing as I do the political ambition of your organization, and the false charges that some of its leaders and agents have made through your official newspapers against honest and patriotic public officials, I can not believe that back of the invitation you have sent me is any sincerity of purpose. The failure on the part of anyone to turn over the State government to those of your officers who have assumed the organization of the alleged nonpartisan league and the control of the millions of dollars collected from its members will undoubtedly create opposition, but I know that such men, pretending to be friends of some particular class and deceiving some well-intentioned people, can not long continue their policy of deception, for the patriotic farmers in the country and the loyal laboring men in the city know that their true friends are among those who strive for the maintenance of law, order, and justice, and especially in this, the most serious hour of our history, for that unity of the American people essential to the successful termination of the war."

To the foregoing it will be illuminating to add this additional report of the Townley bankruptcy proceedings. It is from one of the St. Paul papers of a day or two ago:

LAWS RULING NONPARTISANS KEPT SECRET—CONSTITUTION AND BY-LAWS REFUSED IN BANKRUPTCY HEARING; UNCERTAIN THAT THEY EXIST—HEAD DRAWS OWN CHECKS—PERSONAL ACCOUNT OF PRESIDENT IN MANY BANKS, IS TESTIMONY—SOME BOOKS DESTROYED.

[By Larry Laurence.]

As long as the good right arm of A. C. Townley does not become paralyzed, his authority for personally expending the funds of the farmers in the Nonpartisan League would seem to be secure. For the "good of the cause" Townley can draw a check for any amount against the funds of the league and spend it how and where he will, it was brought out in bankruptcy hearing before Referee Gideon S. Ives in the St. Paul court yesterday.

Deposition by Mrs. Blanche Staake, formerly of Dilworth, Minn., declared that during the summer of 1916 at Detroit Lake Mrs. Townley had said that she had deposited for her husband in her own name $61,000, to prevent his creditors from obtaining money due them. Mrs. Townley denied this and the statements of other depositions presented.

BY-LAWS A MYSTERY.

If there are any by-laws or constitution setting forth the purposes and limitations of the organization known as the Nonpartisan League, the whereabouts of this document or documents is made a mystery by officials and attorneys of the league, according to yesterday's evidence.

Thomas M. Keyes, who admitted he is supposed to be the custodian of all documents, said he did not know if such documents existed. Attorneys refused to produce them in court.

TOWNLEY'S ACCOUNT.

Accounts of the Nonpartisan Publishing Co. are kept with the accounts of the Nonpartisan League, and Mr. O'Leary, the personal secretary to Mr. Townley, is one of the directors of the Consumers' Store Co., creating a zigzig line leading to the head of the organization. No papers are known to exist that set forth the power or limitations of authority of Townley or accrediting him with any specific duties, and if they do exist, attorneys for the league say they will not be produced.

Thomas M. Keyes, cashier of the Nonpartisan League, treasurer with the league exchange and former treasurer pro tempore of the United Stores Co., yesterday outlined for the first time the system by which the league maintains a "Townley account," subject exclusively to Townley's ideas on expenditures for "the good of the cause."

WHERE IS AUTHORITY?

The testimony of Mr. Keyes regarding Townley's authority to disburse the funds follows, the questions being asked by Attorney Frank Murphy, of Minot, N. Dak., seeking to discover what funds Townley may have had that are subject to the demand of creditors whom he owes $79,000:

Q. Then you say there are articles of association in existence.—A. There were.

Q. You do not know where they are now?—A. I do not know.

Q. Your counsel has just informed you they are in existence and he has them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Although the general records are supposed to be in your custody?—A. Yes.

AUTHORITY DOUBTFUL.

Q. You know of no other records or files or documents of the Nonpartisan League that would show the power and authority of Mr. Townley with respect to the disbursement of the funds of the league?—A. No, sir; no.

Q. No document has ever been in your possession dealing with that matter?—A. No.

Q. You refuse to produce the records and documents dealing with the power and authority, if there is any, given to Mr. Townley with respect to the handling of funds of the Nonpartisan League?

Mr. LEMPKE. We refuse to produce the articles of association for political reasons, which has no bearing on Mr. Townley's affairs.

RECORDS ARE REFUSED.

Q. Have you any records in regard to what his authority is in respect to the league?

Mr. MANAHAN. That is immaterial as to whether he has any funds.

Q. But you will not produce them, Mr. Lempke, if you have any?—A. No.

Q. Have you got any; will you answer that?—A. I decline to answer.

Q. Mr. Keyes, do you sign all the checks of the Nonpartisan Leauge?—A. I countersign them.

Q. And they are signed by Mr. Townley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are merely an employee of that organization?—A. Yes.

Mr. BAER. Will the gentleman yield? I want to tell the origin of this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BAER. When I came down here to Washington I came from one of the greatest wheat-producing countries in the world. I came from what is known as the bread basket of the world, and I wanted to specialize in food production. I went to see Mr. Hoover to find out what I could do to help increase the food supply, and Mr. Hoover is the man who suggested this measure.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am inclined to think the gentleman is not so much influenced by Mr. Hoover as he is by the president of the Nonpartisan League.

Mr. BAER. And Mr. Hoover said Congress could make appropriations to make advances to the farmers, against crops and animals.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can not yield further. I have tried to compliment the gentleman by saying that he is the first representative of his organization in this House, and he has had so much influence here with the members of the Agricultural Committee that they adopted his language, his methods, and his quotations in their report. Did the gentleman from North Dakota quote Lord Rhonnda about the needs of the allies? Yes; and the Committee on Agriculture adopted the language of Lord Rhonnda. Did the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER] quote the language of David Lubin, of Rome, on the necessities of agriculture in the United States? Yes. Look in the report of the Committee on Agriculture and you will find that our usually careful Committee on Agriculture adopted what the gentleman from North Dakota said was said by David Lubin, of Rome.

Mr. BAER again rose.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; I can not yield. Did Herbert Hoover say anything to the gentleman from North Dakota, and did the gentleman from North Dakota say it to the Committee on Agriculture? Yes. Look in the report of the Committee on Agriculture and you will find there the exact language of the gentleman from North Dakota. All these things the Committee on Agriculture accepted from the representative of the Nonpartisan League. They swallowed his bait, hook, line, and sinker, and they have brought his bill into the House somewhat modified and sugar-coated for the benefit of both parties. But did the gentleman of North Dakota [Mr. BAER] tell the Committee on Agriculture what the Secretary of Agriculture said about his $50,000,000 free-seed bill for indigent farmers? Not a word.

Mr. BAER. Can the gentleman tell what the Secretary of Agriculture said?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the Committee on Agriculture say what the Secretary of Agriculture said? Can they quote anything the Secretary of Agriculture said in support of this bill?

Mr. BAER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; I challenge any one of the Committee on Agriculture to say what the Secretary of Agriculture, who had large appropriations for the purchase of seeds for the farmer, said. I challenge them to quote him in one single word or line indorsing this socialistic proposition of the gentleman from North Dakota which you gentlemen propose to swallow.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. The Secretary of Agriculture was against the proposition and so stated.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There you have the testimony of an honest man. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HOWARD. And a member of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. An honest man and a member of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. BAER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No. Now let the brilliant chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. LEVER] place his hand on his heart and declare before high heaven that these boys of ours over yonder in the trenches must be supported by this $10,000,000 grab bill. I summon the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG] as a witness to the fact that the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States says that this matter of seed is already provided for, and that we do not need to give seed away to men who have nothing to pay for the seed. Boiled down, what is the proposition of the bill? Every honest farmer, every hard-working farmer, every farmer who has got property and character enough to get loans from a bank, or anybody else who will trust him, can get all the money he wants for seed; but any farmer who has been shiftless, who has not been thrifty, who has not saved up, who has not built a home, who has not got any of the tractors that my eloquent friend from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] was referring to, can go to the United States Treasury and get $450 on his promise to pay it some day. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And to show that the disease is contagious, Mr. Chairman, I insert, under leave granted, a dispatch from this evening's Washington Star showing that the Russian reds would also like to have the American taxpayers furnish them seed on similar terms:

RUSS PAPERS TELL HOW UNITED STATES CAN HELP—COULD ARRANGE CREDIT ON FAVORABLE TERMS TO PEOPLE, THEY EXPLAIN.

Petrograd, Russia, March 23.—Semiofficial newspapers, commenting on several cables received by the soviet government from America, expressing sympathy with Russia and offering detachments to the red army, say that America could render more substantial help, which would be greatly appreciated. Having spent more than 50,000,000,000 rubles ($25,000,000,000) in an unfortunate war, Russia is unable to buy the necessary goods with cash, and especially to pay in gold.

America, they say, could meet the needs of the Russian people by arranging a credit on favorable terms. With such credit goods and supplies Russia's political and military organizations would soon become stronger, the country would quickly revive, and be enabled to acquire the wealth by which it could fully pay America for the assistance rendered.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. DEWALT. It is an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DEWALT. I defer to the chairman of the committee for five minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], always interesting, always vigorous, usually wrong [laughter], has made a terrific assault upon this bill and upon the committee which is responsible for reporting it favorably to the House. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls upon the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture to put his hand upon his heart and give to this committee of the whole any testimony to the effect that the Secretary of Agriculture was favorable to the proposition now under consideration. The gentleman from Pennsylvania did not quite say that. The gentleman from Pennsylvania very shrewdly asked me to show any testimony upon the part of the Secretary of Agriculture that he favored the original proposition introduced by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER]. That, of course, is a trick of one long used to the game. I say that in no spirit of criticism to my genial friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I referred to the $50,000,000 Baer bill.

Mr. LEVER. I want to give testimony of the Secretary of Agriculture on the bill that we are considering. We are not considering the $50,000,000 appropriation bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not reported as the bill of the gentleman from North Dakota by the committee?

Mr. LEVER. It is a substitute bill for the bill of the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is not the name of the gentleman from North Dakota attached to the bill?

Mr. LEVER. Now, I want to read a letter to me dated March 20, 1918, which has already been read into the RECORD by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY]. It is as follows:

MARCH 20, 1918.

DEAR MR. LEVER: As you know, when the Secretary recently appeared before the Committee on Agriculture he stated that he would be sympathetic with any plan that could be devised and operated on a business basis for assisting farmers in the spring-wheat areas who are unable to secure credit for the purchase of seed. The Secretary, as you know, is attending a series of war conferences which are being held in the South under the auspices of the Committee on Public Information. I have called his attention to the bill (H. R. 7795) which was reported favorably by the Committee on Agriculture on March 8, and I have received word from him that he believes the plan proposed would be workable, and also that he favors the new measure and urges its immediate passage.

That is what the Secretary of Agriculture said.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. When the Secretary was before our committee with the original Baer bill before it calling for $50,000,000 appropriation, and that part of it which authorized the expenditure of the money in selling seed wheat on time to the farmers, did not the Secretary oppose it and say that that was not good business, and have his remarks ever been printed?

Mr. LEVER. No; and the gentleman from Texas knows why; because they were taken in executive session at the request of the committee and of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Was it not further understood that they were to be edited, and the parts permissible to be printed were to be printed, and now the Secretary takes backwater and we have not the testimony printed before the House?

Mr. LEVER. I will say that the Secretary of Agriculture has just returned to Washington. I had a talk with his secretary the other day about these notes. He tells me that the Secretary has not had time to look them over, much less to revise them. As I recollect it, the Secretary stated before the committee that if it would give him a workable plan he would be in favor of it as a means of increasing the acreage of wheat to the limit.

Now, the trouble with the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Pennsylvania is that they are obsessed with the name of the bill. There has not been a single argument presented by the leaders of this body—and I say it deliberately without fear of contradiction—against this bill except that it happens to originate in a particular way. As far as I am concerned, I have been here 16 long years in this body—I do not know how long I will be here—but I say this to you, that if I were the worst partisan in Congress I would bury my partisanship in order that my country's life and honor might be saved. [Applause.]

I may say further to you, my friends—and I am sorry the gentleman is not on the floor, but I think I can say it without violating any confidence—that a greater man in this country than the Secretary of Agriculture has indorsed this bill. I believe that at the proper time I shall be able to read into the RECORD, if this picayunish opposition continues, a letter from no less a man, no less a distinguished patriot, than the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. The chairman and other gentlemen on the committee have been quoting the Secretary of Agriculture this afternoon.

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. I have always been told that a chairman had to have two qualifications—to know his bill and to have patience.

Mr. LEVER. I hope I have both.

Mr. LAZARO. I know the gentleman has both, and the question I want to ask is if, in his judgment, this is a good bill?

Mr. LEVER. I say unhesitatingly, and I have said it in the gentleman's absence on matters of importance, that the only reason that would make me support the bill is that the time may come when there is great danger of breaking the bread line between this country and our allies and our fighting forces at the front, or inaugurating a bread line in our own country, and if I thought I could prevent it by an increase of the wheat production by 1,000,000 bushels by the expenditure of $7,500,000, it would be worth the expenditure—yes; if it were $7,500,000,000, as far as I am concerned. [Applause.] I am in favor of this bill.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, this bill would have no place in this House if it were not for the fact that we should strain every nerve to raise every pound of food possible. It is difficult for those who have never had any practical experience in a new country, a country that is just being developed, to understand the conditions that exist in such a country at that time.

Some years ago I had an experience in North Dakota, and I do not know that the conditions there then were such that the failure of the crop was an extremely serious matter. The banks were unable to finance the farmer. Those of us who have spent our lives in countries where money can be had and where security can be given may not be able to understand that the banks in a new country, where their resources are limited, can not finance the farming community. I believe that the Representatives who have spoken on this bill have endeavored to present the facts. I believe there are localities where settlers have gone who are not the owners of the land, but who have simply filed their claims and have invested their all in the purchase of farm machinery and farm stock, and I know that a failure for them would put them out of business. If it be true, as has been stated, that the probabilities are that we will be able to raise in the State of Montana alone thirty or forty million bushels of wheat if we pass this bill that we otherwise would not raise, I believe that alone is sufficient reason why it should be passed.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KREIDER. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. An even more important bread grain in Montana at this time is rye, and I have offered an amendment to include rye among the cereals that may be purchased under this bill. That is the cereal the production of which can be very largely increased, most largely increased, in that Northwest section.

Mr. KREIDER. I thank the gentleman for his information. What I was going to say was this: Along about 1890, 1891, or 1892 I was largely interested in farming wheat in North Dakota, and I know that bankers and banks there were absolutely helpless after two failures of the crop to supply the necessary seed for the farmers. I am told that counties in Montana have passed laws or ordinances authorizing the borrowing of $10,000 to lend the farmers with which to purchase wheat. That is an inadequate sum. They will require more money; and I see no reason, if it be true, as we are told it is true and have reason to believe that it is true, that we should get all of the wheat we can to the allies and our soldiers abroad, I see no reason why men should get on the floor here and denounce this bill as a graft bill when they have passed bills here that would make this bill look like 30 cents.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has given us his experience as a wheat farmer. With wheat at $5 a bushel for seed, and with a limit of $450, is it not important that the matter should be left in the discretion of the Secretary, and that amount raised so that the real farmers can get the seed?

Mr. KREIDER. Primarily this bill is designed to assist the beginners who have approximately 160 acres of land.

By unanimous consent Mr. KREIDER was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DEWALT: Page 4, line 6, strike out "$450" and insert "$600" in lieu thereof.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose in any argument that I intend to make to accuse anyone of insincerity. I desire to give to everyone on the floor of this House the same credit for sincerity that I would request for myself in regard to any measure. Nor would I, on the other hand, say that this is a matter of partisanship, and therefore I disagree with my good friend and colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. It seems to me that the only question before us is this: Is this really a good bill? There, again, I beg leave to pass a remark in correction of one of the statements of the chairman of this committee. If this is not a good bill, even though the President of the United States might countersign the same, it should not be passed, and I resent, for the President, the intimation that he would favor legislation on partisan grounds, whether good or bad. I take the broad ground that when I came to Congress I did not resign my manhood, and I take the further stable ground that I did not resign my intellectual power, and I did not give that into the care and keeping of anyone except my God and myself. [Applause.]

Therefore the plain question here is, Is this a good bill? And if it is we ought to vote for it, and if it is not we ought to vote against it. What is the fault in this proposition? In the first place, it is a regular Pandora's box. It seeks to give to everyone in a particular locality $450 for the purchase of seed. If this be a Pandora's box, I want it opened wider. I had intended in proper time, but I was excluded by limitation of debate, to offer the very wise, the potent, and far-reaching amendment that it should include buckwheat. Why buckwheat? I come from the great State of Pennsylvania. Alongside of the boundaries of Pennsylvania is the great State of New York. The grand hills of Pennsylvania and New York in the fall of the year are clad with the fleecy white of the ripened buckwheat. This buckwheat goes into the making of buckwheat cakes, and therefore we should have buckwheat for our soldiers from Pennsylvania and New York, because there are more in the draft from Pennsylvania and New York than from any other two States in the Union because of population. But I am not satisfied with buckwheat. I want also to include sorghum, because buckwheat cakes are not good unless we have sorghum.

Then, more than that, I desire that the southern people shall be taken care of in this matter, for we are to have lots of colored troops who will be charged with the defense of this Nation, and the Lord knows and the negro thinks that there is nothing better than "possum fat and 'lasses," and so I intend to include molasses before I get through with this. Just see how ridiculous the proposition is. If the men from a restricted district are to be given money to purchase seed, then why not say that every man who raises sheep in a certain restricted district shall be given $450 for the purpose of raising sheep, in order that we may have the wool supply increased, because that is also necessary for the clothing of the people who are at the front. Let us go further. Let us say that every man who raises cattle shall get $450, because we need hides to make boots, and the soldiers must wear boots or shoes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, it reduces itself to an absurdity, and that is what it is.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, this bill is intended to increase the food supply of the country. Whether it will accomplish that purpose or not we do not know, but it is intended in good faith for that purpose. I have offered an amendment to include rye among the cereals that may be purchased, because of the fact that in the northwestern mountain section of the country the largest possible increase of production of bread-making cereal can be secured through the raising of spring rye.

It is the one absolutely sure crop in all that subhumid section, and if we are to assist the farmers of that section in the matter of seed we should certainly furnish them with seed rye as well as wheat. The bill therefore ought to be perfected by including rye among the cereals that may be purchased and sold to farmers.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I recognize the importance of aiding and encouraging agriculture. It is the greatest industry in the United States and one of the most important at the present time. It occurs to me that to increase the products and yield of the farm, if it can be done legitimately and in a way that is upright, would be quite the proper thing to do as a war measure. Now, I remember Congress voted the President of the United States the authority to use the Army and Navy and all the resources of our Republic for the winning of the war. I have heard the chairman of the committee say that this is a patriotic measure, a war measure, and an emergency measure, and I want to say that what he said about that appeals to me.

If this will aid in putting down or winning the war, then I am in favor of it. But I want to say that under the war powers given to our Commander in Chief, the President of the United States can buy and take over every ounce of seed wheat and every other crop there is in the United States. He can hire men to put it in. He can hire it cut. He can do that to-day outside of this bill just as well as he can send men into the forest to cut timber. I have read something of the testimony in this case, and may I say the more I looked into it the more complicated it and its origin became to me. I read how the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] came before the committee and said that they had had no rain down there for a year and a half and they wanted this bill in order to aid them. Then I read about that bobtailed moth or some kind of a blight and the drought up there in North Dakota or Minnesota, and I find that they wanted this bill up there to aid them because they have had a failure of crops. Then I read from the reports that Minnesota had 66,000,000 bushels, North Dakota 61,000,000 bushels, and South Dakota 47,000,000 bushels of spring wheat last year—1917.

I was over in the Senate this morning and I heard a joint resolution from South Dakota, passed by the Legislature, both Senate and House, of South Dakota, stating that they did not want any of this aid and they did not approve of this "punk" talk that is going on down here in Congress, as far as that State is concerned. I heard the lady Congresswoman [Miss RANKIN] from Montana proudly reciting how much wheat they raised out there in Montana year after year, until I thought that was the greatest wheat-raising State in the world. It is not a shortage of seed. It is but an assistance and aid to the farmer that is wanted in the spring-wheat region because of crop failure. Now, if we are going to render aid to the farmers, let us begin right. Up in my State we have a patriotic governor, a modest, plain, splendid business man. He took the money in his pocket, and when the boys from Michigan and Wisconsin in the cantonment at Camp Custer were without rubbers and were catching cold and threatened with pneumonia and it seemed that the Government could not get rubbers, the governor went down to Chicago and the next day sent back 17,000 pairs of rubbers for the boys. [Applause.] That was no Indian gift.

He is not asking that we have any spring wheat; he is not asking to have them replaced. Our Federal reserve banks will allow the farmer to put his note in the bank for six months and that will be sufficient time to grow the wheat. Our National and State banks up in Michigan will loan money to any honest farmer for the purchase of seed or for buying young stock, and they are not too particular about any security, either. Up in our State we are expending $870,000 this spring for farm tractors—1,000 of them. Seed corn is now being shipped into Michigan by the carload from South Dakota and sold for $5 per bushel in order to aid the farmers to plant their crops. Michigan is a wonderful State, and if you gentlemen in those States into which the blight and rust comes and in which droughts last for a year and a half will settle and do your farming there you will avoid all that trouble. I invite you to come and live in Michigan, with its grand schools and church spires piercing the blue vault of heaven. It is one of Uncle Sam's best and greatest of States. It has the oldest agricultural college and the greatest university and schoolhouses on nearly every four corners; where the fields are veritable gardens and the people are prosperous.

Mr. VARE. Is the gentleman going to vote for the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I can hardly tell; I want to see what the bill looks like when we get through with it. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, if the intent and purpose of this bill is all that is claimed for it, then it ought to receive the unanimous vote of this body. We appropriate money by the billions to aid in winning the war. I am glad we are able to do so. And I for one want to do everything possible to win. This contest has settled down to one between the United States and Germany. I am both for my country and winning the war. To me there is no semblance of a doubt as to the outcome if only our allies can hold out until we can develop our strength on a war footing. If England and France can withstand the attack of the entire forces of our enemies in solid mass, then it must follow that when our Army is equipped and added to the forces of our allies we must win. No better fighting men ever fought in battle than the American soldier. He is not excelled in courage, intelligence, or endurance when put to the test. Already he has proven his prowess to the enemy; and, as stated by Paul Jones, "We have not commenced to fight yet."

And may I add to those of us who will not be called on to bear the brunt of battle that it is our duty to encourage and render every possible aid not only to our soldiers but to our country as well. We should never be found wanting in our support at any time. There is one thing each and all of us can do, and that is to support and sustain the morale of our Army. We should not be too quick at every turn of misfortune or when everything is not going to please us to criticize and say, "I told you so." We have a splendid chance now of winning while our allies are fighting.

Some cry "Peace!" "Peace!" There can be no peace at the present time. All this peace talk is utter nonsense just now. It is even worse than nonsense. All the talk about peace hurts now. All the peace we could get now would be the peace that would go with unconditional and abject surrender. Peace talk now is encouraging to the enemy. It is near treason and must be stopped, if no other way than by bullets. Look at Russia and what Germany did to that country. We are richer than all the central powers put together. Our forefathers fought for our beloved Republic, with its opportunities and benefits for a home for us as free men. In 1823 President Monroe declared that neither North nor South America should thereafter be open to European colonization. President Cleveland in 1895 reaffirmed and sustained the Monroe doctrine in settling the Venezuelan boundary. Dewey did not hesitate to challenge and defy Germany at Hongkong in 1898, when he told the German commodore prince, brother of the Kaiser, in command of the German fleet, that if he interfered at Manila he must take the consequences. Let us not relinquish. Let us encourage our Army while in the fight. Let us encourage our allies. The great stay-at-home army must understand it has a task to perform in supporting and sustaining those in the field. Let us be sure that we are helping and not knocking. We set out to lick Germany. We can do it. It will take time, but we will do it. And in the name of our homes and our country let us stand together like one man and exert every effort and every means to do it. Let us catch every spy and impose the penalty of a traitor on him. We ought to have commenced that before now. If this bill will aid in winning the war, let us vote for it. The chairman of the committee said it was a war measure. But while we are at war can not the same thing be and is not the same thing said of every bill. This bill limits the loan to $450 to any one farmer. The Government lets the money through the bank or county agent and has security on the growing crop. If some law could be passed by which a farmer could get a short-time loan in every part of the country to put in and harvest his crops, I am sure it would aid production.

Mr. Chairman, agriculture is the greatest of all American industries. We have a population estimated at 110,000,000, one-third of whom reside in the country, and are actively engaged in agriculture. This Congress is composed of 435 Members, all of whom are interested in the question of agriculture, but perhaps not more than 30 of whom either reside on farms or are directly engaged in farming or make that their business when at home. Agriculture is likewise the most scientific of all industries. It can not be wholly controlled by human endeavor or any human invention. It is dependent on the elements. It must have sunshine; it must have rain; and these are not affected by human ingenuity. The crops are destroyed by frosts and storms; they are subject to pests and insects. The farmer has an endless task to cultivate and secure his crops. His is no sinecure. Turn the clock forward or turn the clock backward, it makes no difference to him; his work is from sun to sun, and eight hours labor a day would leave to him a half holiday.

The farmer is urged to plant more crops in order to feed those who raise no crops, who live in the cities, and are not engaged in agriculture. The farmer is patriotic. He must supply the food to feed the Army and his sons to fight the battles. "Back to the farm" was a familiar slogan before war was declared. I, for one, know that a young man will not remain on a farm merely as a matter of sentiment, when he can do better in the city, or at some other kind of work. Neither do I blame a young man for bettering his conditions. The social life in the city is attractive. There are many opportunities for the young man in town which do not come to him on the farm. This does not mean, however, that farm life is not agreeable and most enjoyable.

For the purpose of inducing the farmer to raise more wheat the President has fixed the price of wheat at $2.20 per bushel for the year 1918. We raised 417,347,000 bushels winter wheat and 250,359,000 bushels spring wheat, making a total of 667,706,000 bushels wheat in the year 1917. It is hoped by fixing the price of wheat that there will be increase enough to make our production of wheat this year 1,000,000,000 bushels.

When the price of wheat was reduced by the President to $2.20 a bushel, the price to the farmer dropped on the same day 45 cents per bushel, while the price of bread remained the same. This was a clear loss to the farmer.

An increase of $1 per bushel for wheat only adds 1½ cents to a 16-ounce loaf of bread; 4½ bushels of wheat will make a barrel of flour. The bran and middlings pays the grinding, and a barrel of flour will make three hundred 16-ounce loaves of bread.

The average yield of wheat in Michigan last year was 12 bushels per acre. It cost $23 to plow the ground, furnish the seed and fertilizer, harvest, do the thrashing, marketing, and pay interest of 5 per cent upon the fair value of the land, with nothing for the wear and tear or loss on implements. Anyone thinking this is too much, let him figure it up and see; and then if the profit is too large in his estimate, he ought to buy a farm and try farming for a while.

It is splendid of those who never lived on a farm to tell the farmers to raise more wheat and farm products. Did you ever hear of a farmer telling the manufacturer to make more implements, cloth, automobiles, or furniture? Last year the farmer was told to raise more potatoes. The farmer did so. Now, the market has failed him. The farmer is asked now to raise more breadstuff. He is patriotic. He will do his best. But as one interested in farming may I suggest for the farmers to ask the Government to produce and supply more coal. Nor would I limit it to the request of the farmer. I hope every coal man will make a like request upon the Government and miners for more coal. Then there is the municipal coal yards and the chambers of commerce. They can all help to get coal. We ought to commence now. Last year we were told to wait until fall. Let us not wait this year. As an emergency matter affecting our homes, let us not delay getting in our coal or planting every acre of land possible to crops, and we will be strengthened in winning the war. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on this amendment and this section is now concluded. The vote is on the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], which the Clerk will report.

The amendment was reported.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote now is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT], which the Clerk will report.

The amendment was again reported.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], which the Clerk will report.

The amendment was again reported.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], which the Clerk will report.

The amendment was again reported.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 63.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the vote just taken disclosed the presence of a quorum—37 and 63.

The CHAIRMAN (after counting). One hundred and twenty-four gentlemen are present—a quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Those in favor of taking the vote by tellers will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Not a sufficient number have risen. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to provide for and secure the voluntary mobilization and distribution of farm labor for the production and harvesting of agricultural crops for the year 1918, and to advance railroad fares and other actual traveling expenses for the transportation of such labor, upon such terms and conditions and subject to such regulations as he shall prescribe. For carrying out the purposes of this section there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500,000, available immediately.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEVENSON: Page 4, line 22, after the word "immediately," strike out the period, insert a semicolon, and add the following:

"Provided, That agricultural labor actually engaged in agriculture and needed for cultivating or harvesting crops where engaged shall not be mobilized for transportation hereunder, nor shall agricultural labor be removed from any State in violation of its laws."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, if my colleague will permit, I will say that I consulted members of the Committee on Agriculture and submitted to them this amendment that the gentleman submitted to me, and there is no objection to its adoption.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does the mobilization plan of farm labor contemplate the moving of farm hands north from California or Washington, say, and then to Montana, for instance?

Mr. LEVER. They are not engaged in farm labor of that kind.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I thought that was the mobilization plan.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] is recognized.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes. What is the question?

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the gentleman explain a little the reference to the removal of farm labor in violation of the laws of the several States?

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to interfere with the speech of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] at all, or take his time, but I desire to offer at the proper time a motion to strike this entire section from the bill. I want to know just when that motion should be made. Is it in order now?

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will send it to the Clerk's desk it will be submitted at the proper time.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, in response to the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK], just propounded to me, about what we mean by the part of the amendment which provides that they shall not remove labor from any State in violation of its laws, I will state that you will find in a great many of the States that labor solicitors are designated as "immigrant agents," and they are prohibited from operating in a great many of the States in certain seasons of the year when labor is engaged, and when it would break contracts to take it away; and they are prohibited from operating at all without any licenses almost all the year in a good many respects. We do not want to put the Secretary of Agriculture and his agents in the position of violating those laws, and therefore that provision should be inserted here.

Then as to the other, the provision is that laborers shall not be removed when engaged in agriculture and needed in cultivating and harvesting the crops where manifestly it would be a disastrous and foolish thing after crops were begun and had partly been made and completed, but not gathered, to remove the labor away from there, because there is a scarcity of farm labor everywhere, and in the South in particular.

Everybody knows that our labor is largely colored labor, and a proposition in midsummer to give them a free ride to Kansas or Montana or anywhere else would denude the cotton and corn farms of their labor in less than 48 hours. A colored man likes to ride, and especially ride free, and if you were to rig up a train half a mile long and put on the timetable the statement that its first stop was at Hades, and that all colored people could ride free, it would be crowded to the doors. They will go, no matter where they are going, and even if they think they will never come back; and if you remove them from where they are taking in a crop, that crop will be a loss, and they may never come back.

Mr. VARE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. VARE. I can not understand why you want to decry the negroes of your community and at the same time say that their labor is so important.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am not decrying the negroes, but I am decrying the inducements to take them away at the time when our crops require attention. We think a great deal more about the colored man than many communities do where there are not so many of them, and we do not propose to vote for a measure here which provides that the Secretary of Agriculture and his agents can take them away from us at the time when our crops are at the most critical stage, and when it would be most destructive to the agricultural interests of the South.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I did not quite catch the language of the amendment as it was read. As I understand it, it would not prevent that sort of labor going voluntarily?

Mr. STEVENSON. No. It provides against their being mobilized; those who are engaged in agriculture and who are needed where they are engaged for the purpose of cultivating and harvesting a crop

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. ELSTON. I heard the gentleman's reference to that part of his amendment which says that the provision shall not operate if in violation of State laws.

Mr. STEVENSON. No. That is not the amendment. The amendment provides that they shall not transport labor out of a State where it is, under those circumstances, contrary to the laws of the State to transport it.

Mr. ELSTON. In explanation of that the gentleman said some States have laws against soliciting labor.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; soliciting labor and especially removing labor.

Mr. ELSTON. Under that provision no solicitation of labor under this act would be made at all if the provisions of State laws provided against that kind of thing?

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman does not understand the amendment. It provides that there shall be no soliciting or removing of agricultural labor from a State in violation of any law against it.

Mr. ELSTON. Agricultural labor is all this bill refers to, is it not?

Mr. STEVENSON. You heard the statistics quoted here yesterday showing that there is a shortage of agricultural labor in every State and community in the Union, and you can not help the situation by removing agricultural labor from one place to another. The proposition, as I understand it, is to develop agricultural labor by gathering up the unemployed in the cities and the unemployed everywhere and getting them mobilized and marshaled into the agricultural ranks, where they can be trained to become agricultural laborers.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In view of the argument of the gentleman from South Carolina, I want to ask him if he thinks the Secretary of Agriculture would take farm labor from South Carolina in a way to injure the agriculture of South Carolina?

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not know whether he would or not, but I found out a good while ago, in my experience in the State legislature, that if you make it plain in legislation that people can not do what you do not want them to do they will not do it, but if you do not make it plain that they can not do it they may try to do it, and the demoralization of our people because of the fear that they may do it and the knowledge of the fact that they can do it is almost as bad.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What laws have you in South Carolina to prevent the shipping away or taking out of labor?

Mr. STEVENSON. There is a law against soliciting and removing agricultural labor by any agent, either from the State or anywhere else, at a time when it is injurious to the agricultural interests, and there are similar laws in every southern State and in practically all the agricultural States.

Mr. HOWARD. I desire to be recognized in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. LEVER. Before the gentleman proceeds, let us see if we can not limit this debate. I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 35 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina to control the time?

Mr. LEVER. No; the Chair to control the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to know then who desire to occupy time?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, in view of the large number of gentlemen who have indicated their desire to speak I will withdraw my request temporarily.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this provision ought to stay in this bill without any amendment or else this whole section ought to go out, one of the two. If you can not pick up farm labor in one community that is already mobilized and move it from one State to another, then the whole section is not worth a thrip. That is the whole wisdom of the provision, and if that is not its intent, then it does not amount to a row of pins one way or the other. The amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] prohibits that. In the State of Georgia, for instance, we have a statute which provides that you can not entice farm labor even from one farm to another, and if you do it you commit a misdemeanor.

Mr. VARE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VARE. Do the farm laborers vote in the gentleman's State?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes; the farm laborers vote in Georgia. And if it will be any relief to the gentleman's conscience or his mind, I will say to him that the intelligence of the people of my State is about as good as that of the people of the gentleman's State.

Now, if you can confine the transfer of labor to the State, then this section is not worth the paper it is written on. If you can not pick up farm labor in Oklahoma and take it over into Nebraska to help harvest the wheat crop at the time when it is needed there, then what is this section intended for? The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] gets up here and says that in a few minutes he is going to read a letter from a very distinguished citizen of this country, whom we all honor and love, in support of this bill, and yet the gentleman emasculates the very purposes of the bill by agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

If the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina prevails, and if this section remains in this bill, then it is the most vicious section that I have ever seen. The purpose of the section is so that you can pick up large bodies of agricultural labor and transport them from one State to another, and that the Government of the United States can advance the railroad fare to do it to save the grain crop of the Nation. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] by his amendment will tie the hands of the Government in gathering the grain crop. Now, if there is a shortage of labor, and you are going to permit these people to go into your State and offer free trips and free meals on this "joy ride" to the farm laborers of this country, the truth of the business is that one-third of the labor of this country will be riding on the railroad trains all the time when they could be engaged in gathering the crops and planting other crops. I say this is the greatest legislative monstrosity that I have ever seen in my life, and instead of being a benefit to the farmers you are injuring them. And when the world is on fire and American boys and French boys and English boys are dying in Europe this very minute, we are here fiddling around with a puny little seed bill that does not amount to a hill of beans, and we have been occupying the time of the American Congress with it for two long days. It makes me sick. Talk about doing something! Why do you not do something that amounts to something? The gophers will eat up all this seed out there in the deserts of Montana if you send it there. It is a perfect monstrosity, and I am disgusted with this debate and these patriotic appeals that are being made in support of it, when it does not amount to a bawbee, and every man supporting it knows that it does not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. RUBEY) there were—ayes 24, noes 54.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, strike out all of section 2.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take the time of the committee for more than a minute or two. Attention has been called already to conditions that exist with respect to the labor supply in certain sections of our country. If you at this time of year hold out the mere suggestion that anybody has the authority to invite the labor on the farms in my section of the country to go joy riding on a train to the western part of the country at the expense of the Government, you will demoralize conditions in a way that will do forty times more harm than we can hope to overcome by any good to result from this bill. I would say to the friends of this bill, as one who yet reserves decision as to how he will vote on this measure—I will say to you most interested in the bill that if you hope to see it pass it would be the part of wisdom to adopt this amendment and cut out this section of the bill. There are some States, as was said by the gentleman from Georgia, that have statutes penalizing the practice of enticing away labor. I am not informed whether that is true in all of the States in his section of the country, but there is such a statute in Alabama. I dare say it is not the case in all the States to be affected.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Department of Labor and the Agricultural Department now has in every State of this Union representatives of the Department of Agriculture and the industrial end of labor, and they are scientifically and intelligently gathering all the surplus labor to put in places where they belong. They are doing it in the gentleman's State and in mine this minute.

Mr. STEAGALL. I am not informed that there is being carried on any interference with farm labor throughout the country. If it is, it has not been called to my attention, and I think I represent a section that would be the first to suffer. It is all right to resort to such methods to secure labor peculiarly fitted for work in shipbuilding or other activities indispensable to successful conduct of the war, but not to take laborers from one farm to remove them to another.

Mr. HOWARD. That is the object, to keep your section and mine from suffering by proper cooperation of work.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does not the gentleman think that if we appropriate enough money and invite labor to travel at the expense of the Government we are asking the I. W. W. to the successful conduct of the war, but not to take laborers from

Mr. STEAGALL. I do not know how it would work in that connection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That would be the effect of it.

Mr. STEAGALL. I know what labor conditions are in my part of the country, and I know what it means to invite the negroes of that section to change employment and to take trips across the country at the expense of the Government. I don't think the Secretary of Agriculture would desire to interfere in such fashion. But to give any one power to do so would necessarily disturb conditions.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of opposing the proposition.

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri, a member of the committee, has a preferential right.

Mr. WELLING. I will yield in favor of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RUBEY. If the Chair and the House will agree to allow me five minutes after the gentleman from Utah concludes, I would be glad to have him speak now.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I would like to have a few minutes to favor the striking out of the section.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no limitation of time.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the time for debate on this paragraph may be extended, and after the gentleman from Utah has five minutes I may proceed for five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Reserving the right to object, I want three minutes.

Mr. DYER. I want three minutes.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto shall conclude in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto shall conclude in 30 minutes. If the Chair is to control the time the Chair will have to take the names of Members who are to have the time.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that we need to play politics any longer; we are going to pass this bill this evening or we are going to quit. I object.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina makes a point of no quorum, and the Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and thirteen Members present, a quorum.

Mr. RUBEY. Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I want every gentleman on the floor who is opposed to this section to give me his attention, and certainly you can do that for the period of five minutes. Let us discuss this for a moment, and let us see what the proposition is upon which we are about to vote. Under the law which we passed last summer we made an appropriation of $2,000,000, in which was included a proposition to mobilize the labor of this country. Two hundred thousand dollars of that two million was set aside for that purpose. The President of the United States, from the large emergency appropriation given to him, set aside $800,000 for the same purpose. That $800,000, added to the $200,000, made available a million dollars to be used for the purpose of looking after the labor situation throughout the country. That money was placed at the disposal of the Secretary of Labor and the Secretary of Agriculture, and they have cooperated in its expenditure and in formulating plans for the work. With that money they have been organizing their forces and mobilizing the labor of this country.

They are doing it now. Under the provisions of section 2 of this bill we are simply appropriating $2,500,000 to let them go right on with the work that they are now doing. That is all there is to it. We have in this country now the voluntary mobilization of labor. It is a voluntary proposition from beginning to end. This section provides for the voluntary mobilization of labor. The amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina a moment ago, which was defeated, should have been adopted—not that it is necessary, because it is not absolutely necessary. Everyone knows, or should know, that the Secretary of Agriculture is not going down into your State or my State or into any other State and take agricultural labor from work in which it is employed and take it somewhere else. He is not doing that now and he is not going to do it in the future. Under the provisions of this section that sort of thing will not be done.

I have here a statement from the Department of Agriculture. I will insert it in the RECORD for the information of the House. I wish that I had time to read it from beginning to end. This statement sets forth, in brief, what is being done and what has been done since the law was enacted last summer. It is dated March 28, which is to-day, and was furnished me this morning from the Department of Agriculture. It says:

MEMORANDUM FOR MR. HARRISON.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF FARM MANAGEMENT,
Washington, D. C., March 28, 1918.

Immediately upon a request that this office take up for the Department of Agriculture a study of farm-labor conditions and practical methods of meeting the situation, we detailed a number of men from the regular staff of the office for field work in States from which the most urgent requests for help had been received. These men immediately began the work of establishing suitable organizations for handling the situation, particularly with reference to gaining correct information as to the actual needs of farmers for labor, and information as to the extent and nature of available sources of labor for farm work. With the approval of the food-production bill by the President in August, we were provided with emergency funds to carry on our farm-labor work and to extend our facilities of service in that direction. We immediately began the appointment of farm-help specialists upon the joint recommendation of the extension service and State council of defense in the States concerned. The country as a whole was divided into four general sections, with a supervising farm-help specialist appointed in charge of each section. To date 38 farm-help specialists have been appointed, some of them in charge of two States. Appointments are now pending in the other States.

Our farm-help specialists have taken up the work in the most active manner. The organization for handling the farm-labor problem includes, first, the county agricultural agents and the farm-bureau men or community committee men in each county. In every State the services of these men have been gladly given in cooperation with our farm-help specialists in meeting the labor situation. The total force of men in the extension organizations, including the farm-bureau men, is more than 100,000 for the whole country. Our farm-help specialists are also receiving the cooperation of the State and county councils of defense, State commissioners of agriculture, State commissioners of labor, in States supplied with such officials, and of farmers' and business men's organizations of all kinds. The Department of Agriculture has a standing agreement with the Department of Labor by which the latter department cooperates with us in supplying help requested from their employment offices.

Our farm-help specialists have been actively engaged during the past two months in effecting an organization for taking a farm labor and crop census, which is now in progress in 46 States, with reports received from 2 States. In connection with this survey, in which more than 6,000,000 farms were visited, the public-school systems were utilized cooperatively to the fullest extent. Moreover, in one State the city school children took a complete survey of available farm labor. All farm-help specialists are now actively engaged in the program of bringing about an intimate business cooperation between the town and country. In Kansas our farm-help specialist has found 50,000 city residents with previous farm experience willing to work in the harvest field if their services are required. Similar results are being secured in Pennsylvania, New York, South Dakota, Utah, and elsewhere.

I want to read from that statement what has been done in one State, the State of Kansas:

The farm-help specialists are now actively engaged in the program of bringing about an intimate business cooperation between the town and the country. In Kansas our farm-help specialist has found 50,000 city residents with previous farm experience—

They are not men who have never been on a farm, but there are 50,000 of them in the State of Kansas who have had previous farm experience—willing to work in the harvest fields if their services are required. Similar results are being secured in Pennsylvania, New York, South Dakota, Utah, and elsewhere.

In every State in this Union to-day they are getting together the information, they are finding the men who have had farm experience. They are getting them, not from the farms where they are now at work, but from the cities and the villages.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. RUBEY. I sincerely hope that the amendment to strike out section 2 of this bill will not prevail.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer—a perfecting amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate upon this amendment has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] to strike out the section.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. STEAGALL) there were—ayes 35, noes 73.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAGSDALE: Page 4, line 19, after the word "prescribed," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this amendment be now closed. If the Members will indulge me for a moment. I move that all debate on this amendment be now closed. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that all debate on this particular amendment be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAGSDALE].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, upon that I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

Mr. HOWARD and Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. COX. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Utah rise?

Mr. WELLING. To move to strike out the last word.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the gentleman from Indiana comes too late. [Cries of "No!"]

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 8, noes 62.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Chairman, I offer the pro forma amendment to strike out the last word of section 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah.

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Chairman, I had not thought of discussing this bill and expected to be content with voting for it after it had been perfected by the Committee of the Whole House. Some statements were made here yesterday, however, in general debate which it seems to me ought to be answered.

It has been contended that this bill was a "raid upon the Treasury"; that it was designed to aid some particular small section of the country as against other sections; that it was vicious class legislation; and that it was recognizing an organization of farmers who were the least worthy representatives of their class.

I do not belong to the Nonpartisan League referred to. It has no standing in the State of Utah, which in part I have the honor to represent. I am as much opposed as any man here to the organization of farmers as a class to work against other elements in our political life as a class. I represent farmers who work out their problems through the regular channels of our political organizations, and I shall not want to come here and represent them if they array themselves in one political group to fight other elements in our national life. I fear, however, that much of the debate here yesterday was calculated to bring about that very result.

Food is the most important single element in the war. You can not train men or fight them without it; you can not build a battle plane or launch a boat unless your workers eat. Every arm of allied power would drop palsied and useless within a week if the ceaseless stream of food from the American farm was suddenly stopped.

The American farmer knows this as well as any other man in the world. You have sent his son to the trenches while he has enlisted at home to win this war. He manifests the same degree of patriotism and devotion that he has shown in every past struggle for human liberty.

Every consideration of self-interest has been appealed to. Our boys from the farms are in the trenches with your boys from the city, and every farmer feels that the protection and care of these boys—your boy and his boy alike—is largely in his keeping.

The men who serve here from these agricultural States represent these farmers, and it is fair to assume that they have the same degree of patriotism and intelligence in pointing out the needs of agriculture in America as you possess in calling attention to the needs of its commerce, or its munitions, or its shipping, or its manufactories. They would be false to their duty if they failed to do it, and I apprehend they will not shrink from that duty because of any charge of sectionalism or of class interest.

But in a large sense this legislation is less important to Montana and Utah and the Dakotas than it is to Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia, and New York.

The farmers of the West in asking for this relief were not thinking primarily of their own interests or their own profits. Indeed the element of profit has already been taken from him by legislation fixing the price of wheat and sugar. Every intelligent man to-day knows that there is little profit to the farmer in either crop.

You have fixed the price of the output of these western farms, but you have left the farmer a victim of the Harvester Trust and the other combines which multiply the prices of the equipment he must have to grow his crop and to move it to the markets of the world.

It would be futile to attempt, within the narrow limits of this debate, to show this in detail; but one single item in connection with the price of wheat will illustrate the entire question. Wheat and beets are the chief agricultural crops of my district and of my State. The farmer realizes $1.80 per bushel net for his wheat. This wheat reaches the market in sacks manufactured in Calcutta. It costs him, in normal times, to sack his grain about 4 cents per bushel. Wholesale dealers are now distributing the sacks for the 1918 wheat crop to retail dealers. They are quoting a price on these sacks of 32 cents each. It will cost these farmers 16 cents per bushel to sack their grain this year, as against 4 cents before the war. What is true of sacks is true of binder twine, labor, and farm machinery.

The price of wheat was not fixed to help the western farmers. Immediately after the price was fixed wheat dropped 40 cents per bushel. The price was fixed in the interest of the consumers of wheat here and throughout the allied world.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WELLING. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I would like to know when wheat was reduced and fell 40 cents a bushel whether the price of bread followed it down?

Mr. WELLING. I am not prepared to discuss that problem. It is a digression I do not care to go into.

Any stimulation this bill can possibly give to the production of wheat in the West is not a benefit to the West, where the wheat is grown. It is a benefit, primarily, to the congested centers of the East and to the war industries of the Nation. The men who stand here pleading for this pittance are not thinking of local self-interest. They are working to supply our allies and our armies and our industrial life with a product more vital at this moment than men, or guns, or ships. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WELLING. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WELLING. This Congress will lose all sense of justice and proportion if it fails to recognize this. We vote billions of dollars to stimulate railroad efficiency and protect stock investments in railroad and other securities. We have justified cost plus contracts at the instigation of the hogs at Hog Island and elsewhere. We have poured advance payments into the laps of contractors to speed up production in every line of war activity. The farmers of America have approved this action as an economic necessity. They will feel that the worst sort of class discrimination has been practiced against them if this meager assistance is not granted freely.

I think the relief asked for in this bill will not reach the farmers of my State or benefit them. There are but few men in Utah upon our farms who are so improvident as to be without seed at this late day. Few men in my State will be willing to mortgage their crop to get a loan of $100 for seed. The banks of Utah and its Council of National Defense have anticipated this need and made every provision to meet it. The money provided in this bill will, in my judgment, never, to any extent, be taken from the Treasury of the United States. But, if the wheat farmers of the West can be made to feel, by favorable action upon this bill, that they are being considered and recognized, it will in every way assist them to meet with fortitude the additional burdens of this colossal conflict.

If gentlemen really comprehended the serious and grave problem of food shortage in America to-day, I think they would pause before taking a single additional farmer for the military service of the Nation. Not because he is unwilling to serve; not because he is less patriotic; not because every fiber of his nature is not beating true to the instincts of patriotism in this war. But because the highest form of service, the truest patriotism, and the loftiest ideals of humanity can be best served by the devoted efforts of these valiant men who work in the silent and unrewarded fields where no bugle blows and no crosses for heroic service are distributed. Alone beneath the stars at night he is fighting as faithfully as any man who ever faced a foreign foe.

At home last fall I saw and talked with hundreds of these men whose unremitting toil had added to the Nation's life and wealth. There was no word of criticism. They assumed that all were working and serving alike to sustain the Nation in the supreme crisis of this war. With insufficient help they toiled, not 8 hours but 12 and 14 hours a day, to make up for the absence of their sons. Every man was willing to have his own burdens multiplied in order to help out in the conflict.

It will be a sad day for America if this class of its citizenship should lose faith in the justice of her institutions or the righteousness of her laws.

You may have your Industrial Workers of the World, your foreign element, striking in factories and mines; there may be agitators who can temporarily organize an inconsiderable element of these farmers themselves against their own best interests, but the American farmer is still the greatest bulwark of American liberty to-day. He is quite as patriotic and loyal as any man who stands behind and supports the flag of this great land. He serves with less thought of profit and greater love of liberty than any other element in our population. He has consecrated himself, his boys, and his all to the cause of human liberty in this war. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this section and all amendments thereto shall close in five minutes.

Mr. NORTON. I have an amendment.

Mr. LEVER. In 20 minutes. The gentleman from Maryland, the gentleman from North Dakota, the gentleman from South Dakota, and the gentleman from Kansas. I wonder if we can not agree——

Mr. DILLON. Suppose the gentleman from Michigan gives three minutes to each Member who has a bona fide amendment.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Dakota may have three minutes, the gentleman from North Dakota may have three minutes——

Mr. NORTON. I have an amendment, and I want five minutes, but I will try to finish in three.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman from North Dakota I am going to move to rise as soon as we pass this section.

Mr. NORTON. I have not spoken to-day.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Maryland takes three minutes—I withdraw that—the gentleman from Kansas takes three minutes; the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] takes three minutes. I ask unanimous consent that debate may close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be closed in 20 minutes, the time to be parceled out by the gentleman from South Carolina. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman if it is his purpose to rise after the 20 minutes is exhausted and if he will now ask unanimous consent to do that; otherwise I shall not agree to this 20 minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Let me say in response to the gentleman from Texas it is my purpose to rise——

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I will ask the gentleman to make that request and see if the committee is willing to do it.

Mr. LEVER. I want to make a statement; I am sure the committee will take my word. It is my purpose to ask the committee to rise after this section 2 is passed and section 3 is read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. NORTON. Now, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina has control of the time.

Mr. NORTON. I have an amendment which I ask to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NORTON: Page 4, line 22, after the word "of," strike out "$2,500,000" and insert "$3,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. LEVER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the amendment that I propose provides for an increase in the amount to be given the Secretary of Agriculture to mobilize farm labor.

Unlike several of my good friends who have discussed this bill to-day, I do not believe that in passing this bill, or in enacting this proposed legislation, the Congress would be doing any more than it should do for the agricultural interests of the country.

I want to call the attention of the members of the committee to a cartoon which I hold in my hand, by Herbert Johnson. This cartoon appeared a short time ago in the Saturday Evening Post. I wish I could show this cartoon to each Member of the House at close range. The cartoon pictures an old farmer sitting in an outside office room waiting his turn to see the man in the private office. On the other side of the door from the farmer, and in the private office, are a number of business men, manufacturers, merchants, and men representing the so-called business interests of the country. These men are holding a conference with a representative of the President of the United States. It appears this representative may be a member of the Council of National Defense. The cartoonist pictures this representative of the President as saying to the business men with whom he is conferring: "The Government will help you get labor, advance you money, buy your products, assure you a good profit." In the outside office room, where the farmer is sitting, on the wall are a number of big placards. One of these placards reads:

We must have food! Society ladies will volunteer to help on the farms.

Another reads:

America must feed the world! Boy Scouts and school children replace farm laborers.

Another reads:

Food supply of first importance! Two million trained men taken from farms for other industries and Army.

The old farmer reading these placards as he waits and having overheard what the representative of the President has told the business men to whom he has given audience muses to himself and says, "Why don't he say that to me."

This cartoon has been the inspiration for a little verse by Mr. M. C. Miller, of Jamestown, N. Dak. It is very apropos to the discussion of this bill. I want to read it to you. I believe members of the committee will not only enjoy it but will also appreciate and be impressed by its logic and by the force of the argument it carries:

WHY DON'T HE SAY THAT TO ME?

The farmer sat in the anteroom,
Awaiting his turn to see
The man our President chose to meet
Production's emergency.
He heard him tell the industrials:
"We'll furnish cash and supplies
And liberal profit also grant
If to these demands you rise."
Then the farmer mused: "I can not see
Just why he doesn't say that to me.

"To subdue the wastes and till the soil
I have scrimped and worked and slaved;
Three poor years and interest on loans
Have taken all I have saved.
Now, without cash and badly in debt,
I long to answer your call,
And give you, Woodrow, what you wish—
A victory crop in the fall.
But how to do this I can not see
Unless you decide to say that to me.

"I'll do my best with the bit I have,
The limit I'll go with you,
But I long to treble last year's crop
And bring a real bumper through.
I'd like to produce till you cried 'Enough,'
I'd like to block roads and trails
With solid trains to the great seaboard
Of wheat on your State-owned rails.
This I could do, these results you'd see,
If you would only say that to me."

[Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON].

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, I have sent up an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DILLON: Page 4, line 19, after the word "prescribe," in line 19, insert:

"Provided, Well-known and reputed criminals and vagrant classes of alleged laborers shall not be transported from one State to another."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that. It is not germane to this bill.

Mr. DILLON. It is a limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Dakota desire to be heard?

Mr. DILLON. Yes. It is a limitation upon this bill. It seems to me we have the right to restrict the kind of laborers that are going to be imposed on the people. It seems to me it needs no argument. It is a limitation.

I will ask the gentleman to withhold his point of order anyway. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, recently I had a letter from one of my farmer constituents, stating that he had entered into a contract with a farm laborer in which he agreed to pay for one year's labor on his farm at the rate of $104 a month.

The farmers in my district are well able to pay for farm labor, but they want honest labor. In my State, our assessment roll shows $2,400 for every man, woman, and child. Every man, woman, and child has on the average $261 in the bank.

We are able to pay for our farm labor, but we want efficient labor. We have had some experience during harvest times in the past when the freight trains would come in from the East. There would be upon the tops of every freight train many honest, efficient laborers, and at the same time there were floaters, gamblers, and criminals from all parts of the country. Our jails were filled with criminals. I want to say to this committee we want to reserve our calabooses and our jails for our own citizens. [Applause.] We usually, in many of the towns, are compelled to have extra police to maintain order against the criminal classes that float in upon these occasions. In some instances citizens have organized and refused to allow them within the gates of the city. Many of them will not labor, will not work, will not toil. There are frequently robberies and larcenies and murders committed by some of these criminal classes. We ask you to protect these great farming sections of these States against the gambling and criminal classes. There ought to be a thorough examination made before any free rides shall be granted to the criminal classes. [Applause.]

The farmers of my State want an honest market and efficient farm labor. If they can get it, they will produce the food products. The people of my State are able to take care of local conditions in so far as seed is concerned. In those sections of the country where they have had a shortage of crops the aid provided in this bill is badly needed; it will help in increasing production and will help to win the war. To show the position taken by our State legislature in session last week I append the joint resolution passed by the legislature of my State:

The following concurrent resolution has been adopted by the Legislature of the State of South Dakota:

"Be it resolved by the Senate of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota assembled in extraordinary session at the State Capital, the House of Representatives concurring:

"That whereas there has been a bill introduced in the Congress of the United States (H. R. 7795) to appropriate money for the relief of farmers in procuring seed grain and feed for stock in certain enumerated Northwestern States, of which South Dakota is specifically named as one needing such Government aid;

"And whereas South Dakota is now honestly advertising the prosperity of the State: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the legislature now in extraordinary session, with representatives present from all sections of the State, singly and collectively, declare that to the best of their knowledge and belief the farmers of South Dakota are not asking for Federal aid to procure seed and feed; and that the State is amply able and willing to aid, if necessary, any farmer who needs aid and that the few individual or isolated cases that may exist, if any, can and will be taken care of either by township or county aid. And, further, that the advertising South Dakota has received through H. R. 7795 has done her a great injustice, as South Dakota has never been more prosperous than now, as proven by competent authority; be it further

"Resolved, That engrossed copies of this resolution be prepared by the Secretary of the Senate and delivered by United States mail to the Secretary of the Senate of the United States; to the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States; to the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States; and to the Senators and Representatives of South Dakota now serving in the United States Senate and House of Representatives."

W. H. MCMASTER,
President of the Senate.
W. N. VAN CAMP,
Secretary of the Senate.
A. C. ROBERTS,
Speaker of the House.
W. GARDNER,
Chief Clerk of the House.

I ask for a vote on my amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. LEVER. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 25.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LEVER. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, there has been a very strong effort by some distinguished members of this committee to stampede the committee into defeating this bill. However, in my judgment, the time that we have spent here upon it has been well spent, because it has been shown that the majority of the members of this committee are willing to look beyond and ahead of their own personal interests, and the majority of them are willing to forget the fact that this legislation does not give their own particular portions of the country any special benefit. I have supported this bill because I feel that it is needed to help win this war. The district I represent can not in any special way be benefited by it, because it is located a long way from this section. Other gentlemen here have supported the bill patriotically, led by the splendid chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. [Applause.] I want to say that whatever may have been said here by gentlemen, mostly by distinguished Democrats on the other side, in criticizing him has been said without avail, because Republicans and Democrats alike in this committee know that in the chairman of the Agricultural Committee we have a man who stands first and last for his country against party and against politics. [Applause.] He is an able chairman of this committee, and the fact that he has been able to lead us through the stampede that has been organized against this bill is an evidence of the fact not only that he is strong and popular with the members of this committee, but also an evidence of the fact that this bill has merit, that it is needed; and the fact that some gentlemen desire to defeat it because they are afraid of losing some of their cheap labor, afraid that it will be drawn to fields where it will receive more pay, is not going to defeat the bill. The right of the people of this country to go where they can go and get the best wages has been the law of the Nation in the past, and I hope that this bill, written into law, will establish for all time to come the fact that men shall not be held in servitude in any section of this country, but that the right guaranteed them by the Constitution to go freely from one part of the country to another will be enforced to the end of the history of this country. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I ask to trespass upon your time briefly to call attention to the fact that the report of the Committee on Agriculture on the pending bill contains this statement:

> The Committee on Agriculture recognizes that the farm-labor problem is the most serious one that confronts the American farmer to-day.

In that particular I agree with the committee, and it may be of interest to you to know what we are doing up in Michigan in relation to that. I believe we will secure labor upon the farm when we are ready to compete with the wages that are paid to the laboring man in the cities, factories, and elsewhere. I read from the Detroit Free Press of March 26, the day before yesterday. This is one of the leading papers in the State of Michigan, circulating throughout the United States, and has this to say:

HELP FOR FARMERS BEING RECRUITED—VACATIONISTS, IN ADDITION TO BOYS, SOUGHT FOR WAR WORK.

To make sure there will be ample labor to cultivate and harvest crops, the United States Public Service Reserve started Monday a State-wide campaign here to enroll men who can give part time to the raising of an adequate food supply.

The campaign, according to J. T. Lynn, State director, has nothing to do with the boys' reserve. It is an entirely different movement to supplement the other endeavors in increasing the food supply by utilizing labor that would not otherwise be put to farm work.

"There is available a host of men," said Mr. Flynn, "who will be able and glad to devote a part of their time this summer to farm work, if the country needs them. College students, professional men, clerks, and other employees who have vacations should be willing to give them this year to productive work out of doors.

"Men who heretofore have worked at farming are sought especially. Already employers in many communities are getting together and agreeing to give up some of their men for limited periods to work on neighboring farms."

It is expected to raise an emergency force of 500,000 men throughout the United States who can give from one to two days to a month on neighboring farms. A special card has been prepared for the enrollment. It will have questions as to the time a recruit can give, between what dates and in what locality, and what the previous experience has been.

The local headquarters are at 43 Washington Boulevard, in charge of William B. Wreford.

This is one solution of the great problem of farm labor. It shows what Michigan is doing to solve the question. The action taken by this State can be taken by others. It is a question of organization not only for men but women and boys as well. Now is a time when everyone is called on to do his duty, and with sufficient help the solution of farm labor and production of sufficient food will be easy. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk proceed with the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> SEC. 3. That, in carrying out the purposes of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate with the Secretary of Labor or any other Federal, State, county, or municipal department, agency, or officer, or with any person or with any association of farmers, board of trade, chamber of commerce, or similar organization.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LEVER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the committee substitute for H. R. 7795, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SOLDIER'S AND SAILORS' INSURANCE—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 419).

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on S. J. Res. 133, authorizing the granting of insurance under the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended by the act approved October 6, 1917, on application by a person other than the person to be insured.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls up the conference report. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 133) authorizing the granting of insurance under the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended by the act approved October 6, 1917, on application by a person other than the person to be insured, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House, and agree to the same.

T. W. SIMS,
SAM RAYBURN,
S. E. WINSLOW,
Managers on the part of the House.
JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
HOKE SMITH,
REED SMOOT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. RAYBURN. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that.

Mr. NORTON. I withdraw the point temporarily.

Mr. RAYBURN. The only thing this does is to allow the relatives of the men who are captured and in German prisons to take out insurance for them. The time expires April 12, and I hope the gentleman will not insist on his point.

Mr. NORTON. Does the bill permit anyone other than the soldier to make this application for insurance unless the soldier is a prisoner of war?

Mr. RAYBURN. Not at all, unless he is a prisoner in the hands of the enemy.

Mr. NORTON. It does not permit the relative of a soldier to take out insurance for him——

Mr. RAYBURN. Oh, yes.

Mr. NORTON. If he is not captured?

Mr. RAYBURN. Oh, no; not at all. It allows anybody in the permitted class of beneficiaries to take out insurance for any man who before the 12th of April is a prisoner in the hands of the enemy.

Mr. NORTON. The 12th of April of this year?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand, the conference report accepts the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. RAYBURN. The Senate receded absolutely from its amendment.

Mr. NORTON. I withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

TRAINING OF MEN ABOVE MILITARY AGE.

Mr. TILSON. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of physical training in the Army and Navy, and especially of men above military age.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 3401. An act to authorize the President to reduce temporarily the course of instruction at the United States Naval Academy; and

S. 3404. An act to authorize the President to drop from the rolls any naval or Marine Corps officer absent without leave for three months, or who has been convicted of any offense punishable by confinement in the penitentiary by the civil authorities, and prohibiting such officer's reappointment.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. MORGAN, Mr. MCFADDEN, Mr. RAGSDALE, and Mr. SMITH of Michigan were given leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly, at 6 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m., the House adjourned until Friday, March 29, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of War, transmitting with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Ashley River, S.
